

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

---

BATES HALL.

---

NOT TO BE TAKEN AWAY.

Form No. 174 3-1-'56-5M.

No. 6153.27 E

v. 13
1917

FR M THE
ROBERT C. BILLINGS FUND

THE
BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

THIRTEENTH
ANNUAL CUMULATION

REVIEWS OF 1917 BOOKS

EDITED BY MARGARET JACKSON
AND MARY KATHARINE REELY

THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY
NEW YORK
1918

Gen Ref

Billing fund

no. 61530

100

6153.29 E

1200
3000

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

Vol. XIII

February, 1918

No. 12

PUBLISHED MONTHLY BY

THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY

New York City ..... 958-964 University Avenue

Entered as second class matter, November 13, 1917 at the Post Office at New York, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

One year - - - - -	$10.00
Single numbers - - - - -	1.00
Semi-annual cumulation (August) - - - - -	2.00
Annual cumulated number, bound (February) - - - - -	5.00

TERMS OF ADVERTISING

Combined rate for Book Review Digest, Cumulative Book Index and Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature—$35 per page per month; two of these publications $30; one of these publications $25 per page per month. Smaller space and contract rates furnished upon request.

Many minds and hands have contributed to the success of the Book Review Digest in the year 1917. Descriptive notes have been written by Margaret Jackson, Corinne Bacon, Justina Leavitt Wilson and Mary Katharine Reely. Classification numbers have been assigned by Corinne Bacon. The editorship has been divided between Margaret Jackson and Mary Katharine Reely, Miss Jackson leaving at the end of October to assume new duties on the staff of the New York Public Library School. Thruout the year the tasks of assembling material, preparing copy, and meeting the exacting demands of proof and press work have been carried on by Pauline H. Rich and Alice Sterling, and, on the business side, the correspondence which keeps us in touch with advertisers, publishers and subscribers has been ably handled by Frances Sanville. Credit for the supplementary List of Documents published with each issue goes to Adelaide R. Hasse and Edna B. Gearhart of the New York Public Library. For the Quarterly List of New Technical Books, to the Applied Science Reference Department of Pratt Institute Free Library, Brooklyn.

Who reads reviews? Much thought, scholarship and wit goes to their writing. Is a corresponding measure of appreciation given to the reading?

At first thought it might be assumed that it is the business of the Digest to discourage the reading of reviews, but we should vigorously deny any such accusation. The excerpts which we carefully cull and bring together for purposes of contrast and comparison are meant to serve as guide posts only; to serve as guides to the busy persons who make books their business. But we should be sorry to think that we were in any way detracting from the enjoyment of those to whom books should be a pleasure. We should be glad to feel that even the rushed, overworked librarian to whom our publication is a "tool" might occasionally find her curiosity so piqued by our judiciously selected quotation that she would turn back to the pages of the Nation or the Dial or the New Republic or the Spectator to read the review as a whole. It has pleased us to be told this year that in two of the larger libraries of the country the Digest is kept on file in the periodical room. From the testimony of these two libraries it appears that reviews are read and that demands for them come to the librarian. "Where can I find a review of _____," and the Digest is referred to for answer. This public use of the Digest gives sanction to a new practice which we have somewhat tentatively adopted this year, that of starring (*) certain reviews. An asterisk so used means, generally speaking, Here is something worth reading. It may mean, if the book is a serious work of information, that the reviewer, also an expert on the subject of the book, throws further light on it; it may mean, in case of a work of literature, Here is an excellent piece of literary criticism, worth your reading for its own sake.

Signs of any kind are so seldom noticed that we call special attention to this one, and, even tho we know that prefaces are so seldom read, we trust that the notice will come to the attention of some one who will find this feature useful.

We should like to feel that the Digest itself, with its interesting assemblage of contrasting opinions, would be of value to the reading public if it were occasionally handed out over the desk to inquiring readers. Indeed one flattering friend has advised us to issue a special edition in larger type for sale on the news stands! But altho this course hardly seems practicable, we believe that in its present form, the Digest might be of some general interest and that if it were made more accessible it might act as an influence in the formation of critical taste. Even the inveterate reader of fiction might be helped by it, and to the more thoughtful it would serve as a guide to a course of reading in literary criticism.

Publications from which Digests of Reviews are Made

- Am. Econ. R.—American Economic Review. $5. American Economic Association, Ithaca, N. Y.
 Am. Hist. R.—American Historical Review. $4. Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Ave., New York.
 Am. J. Soc.—American Journal of Sociology. $2. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Am. J. Theol.—American Journal of Theology. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 A. L. A. Bkl.—A. L. A. Booklist. $1. A. L. A. Publishing Board, 78 E. Washington St., Chicago, Ill.
 Am. Pol. Sci. R.—American Political Science Review. $3. American Political Science Ass'n, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.
 Ann. Am. Acad.—Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. $6. 36th St. and Woodland Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.
 Astrophys. J.—Astrophysical Journal. $5. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Ath.—Athenæum. $4. Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E. C., London.
 Atlan.—Atlantic Monthly. $4. Atlantic Monthly Company, 3 Park St., Boston, Mass.
 Bib. World.—Biblical World. $2. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Bookm.—Bookman. $3. Dodd, Mead & Co., 4th Ave. & 30th St., New York.
 Bot. Gaz.—Botanical Gazette. $7. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Cath. World.—Catholic World. $3. 120-122 W. 60th St., New York.
 Class. J.—Classical Journal. $2.50. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Class. Philol.—Classical Philology. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Dial.—Dial. $3. 608 S. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
 Educ. R.—Educational Review. $3. Educational Review Pub. Co., Columbia Univ., N. Y.
 Elec. World.—Electrical World. $3. McGraw-Hill Company, Inc., 10th Ave. at 36th St., New York.
 El. School J.—Elementary School Journal (continuing Elementary School Teacher). $1.50. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Engin. News-Rec.—Engineering News-Record. $5. McGraw-Hill Company, Inc., 10th Ave. at 36th St., New York.
 Eng. Hist. R.—English Historical Review. $6. Longmans, Green & Co., 39 Paternoster Row, London, E. C.
 Forum.—Forum. $2.50. Forum Publishing Co., 286 Fifth Ave., New York.
 Hibbert J.—Hibbert Journal. $2.50. Sherman, French & Co., 6 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.
 Ind.—Independent. $4. 119 W. 40th St., New York.
 Int. J. Ethics.—International Journal of Ethics. $2.50. Prof. James S. Tufts, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
 Int. Studio.—International Studio. $5. John Lane Co., 116-120 West 32d St., New York.
 J. Geol.—Journal of Geology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 J. Philos.—Journal of Philosophy, Psychology and Scientific Methods. $3. Sub-Station 84, New York.
 J. Pol. Econ.—Journal of Political Economy. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Lit. D.—Literary Digest. $3. Frnk & Wagnalls Co., 354-360 Fourth Ave., New York.
 Nation.—Nation. $4. P. O. Box 794, New York.
 Nature.—Nature. $7.75. Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Ave., New York.
 New Repub.—New Republic. $4. Republic Publishing Co., Inc., 421 W. 21st St., New York.
 N. Y. Times.—New York Times Book Review. $1. Times Square, New York.
 No. Am.—North American Review. $4. North American Review Pub. Co., 171 Madison Ave., New York.
 Outlook.—Outlook. $4. Outlook Co., 381 4th Ave., New York.
 Pol. Sci. Q.—Political Science Quarterly. $5 (including supplement). Academy of Political Science, Columbia Univ., New York.
 Pub. W.—Publishers' Weekly. $5. 241 W. 37th St., New York.
 R. of Rs.—American Review of Reviews. $3. Review of Reviews Co., 30 Irving Place, New York.
 Sat. R.—Saturday Review. $8. 10 King St., Covent Garden, London, W. C.
 School R.—School Review. $1.50. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Science, n. s.—Science (new series). $5. Science Press, Sub-Station 84, New York.
 Spec.—Spectator. $8. 1 Wellington St., Strand, London, W. C.
 Springfield Republican.—Springfield Republican. $10. The Republican, Springfield, Mass.
 Survey.—Survey. $3. Survey Associates, Inc., 112 E. 19th St., New York.
 The Times [London] Lit. Sup.—The Times Literary Supplement. $2.10. The Times, North American office, 30 Church St., New York.
 Yale R., n. s.—Yale Review (new series). $2.50. Yale Publishing Ass'n, 120 High St., New Haven, Conn.

In addition to the above list the Book Review Digest frequently quotes from Henry Turner Bailey's reviews in the School Arts Magazine; Boston Transcript; New York Call; Cleveland Open Shelf; N. Y. Best Books; N. Y. Libraries; N. Y. City Branch Library News; New York Public Library New Technical Books (a selected list, published quarterly); Pittsburgh Monthly Bulletin; Pratt Institute Quarterly Book List; St. Louis Monthly Bulletin; Wisconsin Library Bulletin (Book Selection Dept.), and the Quarterly List of New Technical and Industrial Books chosen by the Pratt Institute Library.

OTHER ABBREVIATIONS:

- Abbreviations of publishers' names will be found in the Publishers' Directory at the end of the Annual, 1916 number.
 An asterisk (*) before the price indicates those books sold at a limited discount and commonly known as net books.
 The figures following publisher's name represent the class number and Library of Congress card number.
 The descriptive note is separated from critical notices of a book by a dash.
 The plus and minus signs preceding the names of the magazine indicate the degrees of favor or disfavor of the entire review.
 An asterisk (*) before the plus or minus sign indicates that the review contains useful information about the book.
 In the reference to a magazine, the first number refers to the volume, the next to the page, the letters to the date and the last figures to the number of words in the review.

Book Review Digest

Devoted to the Valuation of Current Literature

Reviews of 1917 Books

ABBOTT, EDITH, and BRECKINRIDGE, SOPHONISBA PRESTON. Truancy and non-attendance in the Chicago schools. *$2
Univ. of Chicago press 379.2 17-3577

"Truancy and non-attendance in the Chicago schools' carries the tale of public education—the most important subject that we as a people can be engaged in—through its vivid history in the second city in the United States, from the establishment of our free schools to the present day, indeed it may be said, to the last authentic news on the topic in the present day. . . . Beginning with a picturesque survey of the struggle for the 'free-school' principle (1818-55), the chronicle continues with a relation of the main events of the struggle for the compulsory principle (1855-83) 'when the first compulsory law was passed,' and closes with a record of the various activities characterizing the period, still continuing, 'of struggle for the perfection of the compulsory law.'"—Dial

"This book should be carefully read by every administrative officer in charge of the enforcement of school attendance or child labor laws, and also by every person who contemplates the difficult task of drafting such legislation. Practically every feature of the system recommended for Illinois is in effect in one or more other states." H. L. Sumner

+ Am Econ R 7:409 Je '17 750w

Reviewed by E. L. Talbert

+ Am J Soc 22:839 My '17 370w

"A clear, logical and interesting study, illustrated with the case histories of many children, of value to social workers and specially to educators. A companion volume to 'The delinquent child in the home' (Booklist 9:9 '12)."

+ A L A Bkl 13:374 Je '17

+ Cleveland p108 S '17 30w

"Of especial interest for two reasons. Because it forms a striking comment on a characteristic American weakness—our failure to realize—our inability to follow up with sustained attention or even with intelligent curiosity the vital social experiments made, or perhaps one should say the vital social experiments mentioned as mandatory, by our statute-books. It is of interest also because of its description of our inability to correlate juvenile laws whose joint efficiency should guarantee a child a fair opportunity for education." Edith Wyatt

+ Dial 62:310 Ap 5 '17 1650w

Educ R 54:94 Je '17 50w

"By far the most extensive study of the kind that has yet been made for any American city.

The recommendations are reasonable and conservative. . . . The book is therefore written from the social worker's sympathetic point of view rather than from the frequently more circumscribed, and usually somewhat different, point of view of the professional school man. It is a model of rigorous scientific study of the questions involved that ought to be of large suggestiveness to other cities in their making of similar studies." J. F. Bobbitt

+ El School J 17:771 Je '17 550w

"It is likely that the book will result in an important improvement of the child labor law in Illinois." J. H. T.

+ Int J Ethics 27:535 J1 '17 100w

"The question of how to make compulsory education laws and child labor laws jointly effective is so important that light upon it is to be welcomed from every quarter. The experience of Illinois with such legislation is that of one of the most advanced states; it is described by two experienced workers in the Chicago School of civics and philanthropy in a manner that goes well outside the field suggested by the title."

+ Nation 104:438 Ap 12 '17 230w

Pittsburgh 22:691 O '17 90w

Pratt p15 O '17 40w

"A story competently told with adequate documentation, not essentially different from that which could be presented for most parts of the country during the same periods. The accomplishment of this book is to take public schooling out of its antiquated and still somewhat academic atmosphere, and out of the outworn but persistent habits and concepts of the earlier American community, to present it in the light of the social background in which it belongs today, and compel the reader to realize that the education of the children of our great cities demands consistent thinking and courageous following up of its implications and honest common sense in administration." G. H. Mead

+ Survey 38:369 J1 28 '17 1350w

ABBOTT, ELEANOR HALLOWELL (MRS FORDYCE COBURN). Stinky receiver. II
*$1 (4c) Century 17-7926

A middle-aged woman who is tired of spending her wealth on people who receive grudgingly, a young doctor and a beautiful and radiant young girl who rejoices in the name of Solvei Kjelland, are the characters in this little story. The rich woman is ill. The young doctor is trying to cure her. The rich woman is offered one wish. This is what she wished: "That the last mail of the day may never leave me utterly letterless; and that I may always be expecting a package by express!" The story was published as a serial in the Woman's Home Companion.

A L A Bkl 13:353 My '17

"The story is possible but we cannot escape from the feeling that it is wildly improbable. The young doctor is the one real character in a world of phantoms. . . . Although it possesses a certain amount of charm in the telling it lacks conviction."

+ Boston Transcript p13 Ap 7 '17 280w

+ Ind 90:594 Je 30 '17 40w

"It is a gay and sweet little story, unusual in its beginning, happy in the way it ends, entertaining and sympathetic throughout the progress of its pretty romance. It is full of laughter, and it has touches, especially in unexpected bits here and there about the older woman, of tenderness."

+ N Y Times 22:99 Mr 18 '17 270w

+ Springfd Republican p19 Mr 25 '17 250w

ABBOTT, GEORGE FREDERICK. Turkey, Greece and the great powers; a study in friendship and hate. maps *$3 (3c) McBride 949 17-7959

The two parts of this book are quite distinct. In part 1 chapters devoted to France and the Turks, Russia and the Turks, England and the Turks, and The Germanic powers and Turkey are followed by a discussion of Turkey's choice in the present war. "While the practical statesman must deplore the effects of that choice," says the author, "the philosophical onlooker will derive a certain cold satisfaction from its perfect logicity. The capricious hand of chance had nothing to do with it. It all came about in strict accordance with the law of causation. Each side reaped precisely what it had sown." The treatment of Greece and the powers in part 2 is similar. The historical relationship of Greece to each of the great powers at war is studied at some length in order that her position and attitude at the present time may be understood. The policy of the Allies toward Greece since the beginning of the war is characterized as stupid and blundering, producing an effect exactly opposite from that desired. Mr Abbott was a war correspondent in the Turkish-Italian war and published a book on "The holy war in Tripoli." He is also author of "Turkey in transition."

"Very readable, it gives a better understanding of the Near East problem. Many references and a page list of source material."

+ A L A Bkl 14:16 O '17

"The last chapter, 'The moral suasion of Greece,' is an excellent study of popular sentiment." C. H. P. Thurston

+ Bookm 46:233 N '17 40w

"The author is more convincing in his historical statements, for which he invariably cites his authorities, than he is in his judgments of contemporary policies. The book is certainly a valuable contribution to a better understanding of the Near East problem. There are two maps; one of Turkey in Europe at its zenith, published about 1680, and the other is of the Balkans today."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 My 2 '17 730w

+ Dial 63:164 Ag 30 '17 420w

N Y Br Lib News 4:91 Je '17

Pittsburgh 22:821 D '17 60w

"So far as it professes to be a historical examination of the relations between Turkey and Greece and the great powers the book is defective and badly planned. . . . Mr Abbott brought to his task much familiarity with Balkan countries, an incisive style, and an evident capacity for laborious research. Yet the result is to some extent disappointing, for the book lacks balance and perspective. . . . Yet, with all its faults, some sections of it serve a very useful purpose, and it is worth reading."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p51 F 1 '17 1350w

ABBOTT, GRACE. Immigrant and the community. *$1.50 (2c) Century 325.7 17-13469

Our policy toward the immigrant has been one of laissez-faire. Miss Abbott's purpose in this book is to show how, as a result, both the immigrant and the community have suffered, and to point out means for his protection and better adjustment to American life. The book is based in part on lectures given before the Chicago School of civics and philanthropy and consists of chapters on: The journey of the immigrant; The problem of finding a first "job"; The special problems of the immigrant girl; Protection against exploitation; The immigrant in the courts; The immigrant and the public health; The immigrant and the poverty problem; The immigrant and industrial democracy; The education of the immigrant; The immigrant in politics; The immigrant and American internationalism; The immigrant's place in a social program. The author is a resident of Hull House and director of the Immigrants' protective league of Chicago. Judge Julian W. Mack writes an introduction for the work.

"No other existing book treats so fully or so well the problem of the woman immigrant. Admirable example of settlement house method and viewpoint. As a work of reference, particularly in statistics, needs to be used with caution."

+ A L A Bkl 13:426 JI '17

"Miss Abbott has been able to put her evidence into readable form, to appeal to our common humanity and yet reveal that she is not blind to the problems involved. The volume is to be highly commended to all who are interested in immigration, and particularly to those who want to know the extent of our own failure to safeguard newcomers and help in their readjustment to our life." C. K.

+ Ann Am Acad 74:302 N '17 210w

"Miss Abbott's plea is for adjustment rather than assimilation. In this respect she disagrees with the textbook writers, and perhaps with most staunch Americans. She believes that the immigrant brings a contribution to America which should be preserved. One of the most interesting of her many pertinent suggestions regarding immigrant adjustment is that we organize more carefully the potentialities for the development of an international understanding through immigration into this country and return migration." L. L. Bernard

+ Dial 63:205 S 13 '17 1150w

+ Ind 91:186 Ag 4 '17 180w

"It is not Grace Abbott's facts, but her inferences, that will produce two opinions about her volume. . . . The entire responsibility for the stranger within our gates she places squarely upon our shoulders. Perhaps, so long as we admit him, that position is arguable, but Miss Abbott will not allow us to lighten the burden by restricting immigration. . . . Yet it might be urged that the immigrant himself would profit by a slower infiltration, which would prevent the growth of the huge foreign colonies which have hindered as well as aided his advance, and have created a special problem for a democracy already pretty well loaded up."

Nation 104:763 Je 25 '17 400w

"The book fails in just one point. After piling on a tremendous indictment—an indictment that every American should read and ponder—there is no great general lesson drawn. These questions press for reply: What drives these hordes here? Should they continue to come? Should we let them in? If they have a right to come, then these further questions appear to need answer." W. M. Feigenbaum

+ — N Y Call p14 JI 15 '17 500w

"Authoritative, incisive. The book cuts far below the surface alike of censure and of complacency. It offers the kind of information which, now perhaps as never before, every American needs."

+ N Y Times 22:160 Ap 29 '17 600w

Pratt p10 O '17 30w

"Miss Abbott is director of the Immigrants' protective league of Chicago, and has worked for the Massachusetts immigration commission. Her study of the problem has included visits to some of the most important European homes of the immigrant, notably, Galicia, Croatia and the Slovak districts of Hungary and Bohemia. It is from her own experiences and knowledge of the question that she has drawn in writing a discussion that is illuminating in its choice of incidents and sound in its suggestive conclusions."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 My 16 '17 600w

"The only disappointing chapter of the book is that which deals with the immigrant and the public health." B. L.

+ — Survey 38:372 JI 28 '17 1200w

+ W Y Lib Bul 13:153 My '17 70w

ABDULLAH, ACHMED. Bucking the tiger. *$1.35 (2½c) Shores 17-15283

"Ritchie Macdonald finds himself 'dead broke.' . . . Unable to borrow any money in Spokane, he evolves an original scheme to lift from him, and from the little group of men with whom he foregathers, the common burden of dead-brokenness. 'There's just one way, and I've pointed it out to you. We chip in—all of us—all but one—we buy a heavy life insurance for that one. He kills himself at the end of a year, and we divide the money.' The adventurers agree and gamble to decide who shall be the one sacrificed. The lot falls to Mac himself. He sees to it that it does. Another clause has meanwhile been added to the agreement, whereby the prospective suicide is to be provided by his confrères with sufficient money to make this last year of his life one long enjoyment. . . . Mac at once takes up quarters in the leading hotel of Spokane. . . . Now enters the little manicurist, Emily Steeves. And soon Mac finds that the idea of suicide is growing less and less alluring. He becomes identified with certain large life insurance interests. Makes money rapidly. A plot is formed to discredit him. But he circumvents this plot, and gets out of the fulfillment of the suicide pact exactly as Emily declares he must, 'without paying blackmail and without welsching.'"—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 22 '17 360w
N Y Br Lib News 4:86 Je '17

"A slangy, but broadly amusing tale."
Spring'fd Republican p19 Je 10 '17 150w

ABT, ISAAC ARTHUR. Baby's food; recipes for the preparation of food for infants and children. *$1.25 Saunders 613.22 17-19828

The author, who is professor of diseases of children in the Northwestern university medical school, says in his foreword: "Young mothers, nurses, and caretakers frequently ask the physician for minute directions for the preparation of foods for infants and older children. I have attempted to collect from various sources recipes for the preparation of the most commonly employed foods. I undertook to do this primarily for my own convenience in prescribing for patients and meeting the repeated demand. I claim no originality in regard to the recipes, and acknowledge my indebtedness to various sources for information." He appends a list of authorities in English and German and refers to practical help given by various women dietitians. In addition to the recipes, which are grouped by class and indexed, the book contains tables of Mineral constituents of the food, Caloric value of various foods, Diet lists (for children up to five years), Baths and packs, Tables of measurements, etc.

"A good collection of recipes. . . For the intelligent mother."

+ A L A Bkl 14:79 D '17

"A most useful book for mothers, and one that will save many doctor's bills."

+ R of Rs 56:555 N '17 40w

ACADEMY OF POLITICAL SCIENCE. Labor disputes and public service corporations; ed. by H: Raymond Mussey. (Proceedings, v. 7, no. 1) pa $1.50 Acad. of political science 331.1 17-26392

"This is a valuable survey of American, Canadian, and Australian experience in governmental mediation and arbitration, with statements of the attitude of the labor unions toward compulsory arbitration, mediation, and conciliation."—R of Rs

Am Econ R 7:411 Je '17 130w

A L A Bkl 13:375 Je '17

"The book is divided into four sections: (1) Government mediation and arbitration, (2) Trade unions and compulsory arbitration, (3) Trade unions and mediation and conciliation, (4) Recent aspects of labor disputes. The fourth section discusses arbitration of recent labor disputes and also the Adamson act, from the employees', employers' and public viewpoints."

Engin N 77:435 Mr 15 '17 90w

+ R of Rs 55:443 Ap '17 30w

ACHARYA, ANANDA. Brahmadarsanam; or, Intuition of the absolute. il *$1.25 (2½c) Macmillan 181 17-24840

An untechnical introduction to Hindu philosophy by Ananda Acharya. The author discusses the six systems of Hindu philosophy all of which differ from the philosophies of the rest of the world by presupposing that the soul is ultimate reality. His analysis leads up to a tabulation of the four states of our psychic life, viz. (1) waking, in which we are conscious of the outward universe; (2) dreaming, in which we are conscious of the inward universe; (3) dreamlessness, in which we are unconscious of the inward and outward universe; (4) Turiya, in which we are self-conscious in the absolute sense. The four states correspond to (1) conquest of the objective world of sense and emotion; (2) conquest of the subjective world of intellect and reason; (3) conquest of the subtle world in which the first two lie in seed form; (4) freedom in the identity of self with God, and the attainment of the absolute. His doctrine of error, expounded at some length and consisting in thinking of non-existence as existence, suggests the Christian science idea. The study is stimulating and inspirational.

"Unqualified approval can scarcely be the meed of an author who professes to be scientific yet has no notion of history and no clear sense of the value of definition. These faults vitiate the 'Brahmadarsanam.' Despite these defects, the 'general reader' will learn a good deal from the Acharya's book, and his exposition, albeit rather too flowery and poetical, of Hindu monism is, on the whole, to be approved."

+ Nation 106:97 Ja 24 '18 300w

+ Natl Republic 13:132 D 1 '17 130w

"Sri Ananda Acharya is an excellent writer. He has a faculty for making the most abstract and profound subject absorbing and entertaining. His method is direct, concise, yet vivid and human."

+ N Y Times 22:498 N 25 '17 220w

"Brief and popular exposition of Hindu philosophical doctrine presented to us by a Hindu in terms which are not exposed to the suspicion of western or of Christian prejudice. His book is well worth reading. But we must repeat the caution that its teaching may mislead those who are unfamiliar with the phraseology and development of western speculation."

+ Spec 119:357 O 6 '17 1000w

"Satisfactory to such as it satisfies. And others will take refuge in 'common sense.' Perhaps the better, or best, attitude is to welcome the book as offering an exposition of the Vedānta school of philosophy not readily to be found elsewhere in such clear and full detail."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p484 O 11 '17 950w

ACKERMAN, CARL WILLIAM. Germany, the next republic? il *$1.50 (3c) Doran 940.91 17-17989

In his preface the author makes the following somewhat surprising statement: "I believe that the United States by two years of patience and note writing, has done more to accomplish the destruction of militarism and to encourage freedom of thought in Germany than the Allies did during nearly three years of fighting." He was in Germany as correspondent for the United press from March 1915 to the breaking off of diplomatic relations and he watched the progress of thought in Germany during that time. President Wilson's notes started the people to thinking, but as the thinking did not go far enough, a crushing military defeat is now looked to as the only hope for a democracy in Germany. Contents: Mobilization of public opinion; "Pirates sink another neutral ship"; The gulf between Kiel and Berlin; The hate campaign against America; The downfall of von Tirpitz and von Falkenhayn; The period of new orientation; The bubbling economic volcano; The peace drive of December 12th; The Bernhardt of the seas; The outlawed nation; The United States at war; President Wilson. Among the illustrations are a number of interesting German cartoons.

A L A Bkl 14:17 O '17

Reviewed by C. H. P. Thurston

+ BookM 46:289 N '17 20w
Cleveland p102 S '17 50w

ACKERMAN, CARL WILLIAM—Continued

"We knew very little of Germany before the war, and we know practically nothing of what has been going on in that country since August, 1914. Our conception of the whole war is confined to some trite phrase, such as 'democracy against autocracy.' . . . In view of this deplorable situation, it is fortunate that Mr Ackerman has written this book; it is a book that every American, and especially every American liberal, should find of the greatest value." Ward Swain

+ Dial 63:104 Ag 16 '17 2750w

+ Ind 91:473 S 22 '17 300w

+ Lit D 55:34 S 29 '17 609w

"When the more impartial post-bellum histories of the war are written, volumes like Mr Ackerman's will have become invaluable source-books. And this solely because of the facts presented, not because of any insight. To disagree with Mr Ackerman's interpretation of his facts does not necessarily imply that one maintains the opposed or pacifistic view. It means rather a criticism of his plausibility. So many flagrant inconsistencies appear in the book because, I believe, his viewpoint towards our entrance into the war is the result of a reasoned rather than a felt conviction. To reconcile his early statement that Wilson's two years of diplomatic patience and appeal to public opinion did more to liberalize Germany than all of England's and France's attacks in the field with his later statement that only a crushing military victory for the Allies will free Germany of her autocratic rulers—such a task would require more dialectical skill than Mr Ackerman possesses." H. S.

+ — — New Repub 13:129 D 1 '17 1950w

"The author, who stayed in Germany during the last two years of the war and whose dispatches to the American press betrayed a keen insight in German public affairs, offers mainly a description of the internal struggle between the Bethmann-Hollweg and the Tirpitz factions and its reaction upon American foreign policy. While in general his judgment is reliable, his description of Bethmann-Hollweg as leading the democratic forces can hardly be called well-chosen." J. Koettgen

+ N Y Call p14 J1 8 '17 889w

"One of the most illuminating phases of his book is the view he gives of the discussion and division of opinion among the people and in the government itself as to submarine warfare."

+ N Y Times 22:306 Ag 19 '17 350w

+ Pittsburgh 22:679 O '17 80w

"The earlier chapters are by far the most interesting. The last two chapters—on the United States at war, and President Wilson descend to journalistic and add nothing to the book." Frank Pitt

+ — Pub W 92:816 S 15 '17 520w

+ R of Rs 56:549 N '17 100w

"Whatever may be said of the value of this evidence, the portions of Mr Ackerman's book that deal with Germany, though containing little that is new, are of interest to the American public; the chapters on America's entrance into the war, with long quotations from speeches and editorials, make the most obvious sort of padding."

+ — Spring'd Republican p17 J1 1 '17 750w

"For the serious student of affairs the importance of the book lies in the large mass of information which it contains as to the struggle which was going on all the time in Germany between the two great parties, the Pan-Germans and the party of comparative moderation which centered round the Foreign office."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p3 Ja 3 '18 1100w

ACTON, JOHN EMERICH EDWARD DAL-

2 BERG-ACTON, 1st baron. Selections from the correspondence of the first Lord Acton; ed. with an introd. by J. Neville Figgis and Reginald Vere Laurence. 2v v 1 *$5 Longmans 17-31664

v 1 The editors have made selections from Lord Acton's correspondence with Cardinal Newman, Lady Blennerhassett, W. E. Gladstone and others. This collection constitutes volume 1 and is to be followed by a second volume devoted to correspondence with Döllinger. The letters have been arranged in three groups: Early letters; Ecclesiastical correspondence; General correspondence. Groups 2 and 3 are then subdivided. The editors say, "Out of a large mass of letters we have chosen those which throw most light on Acton's development."

"A liberal Catholic, a lover of freedom, enunciator of the maxim that 'liberty depends on the division of power,' and an opponent of capital punishment, Acton was in advance of much of the opinion of his time. For this reason, if there were no others, the correspondence is worthy of attentive study."

+ Ath p597 N '17 180w

"The importance of these letters is due essentially to the fact that they relate to Lord Acton rather than to Lord Acton's times and contemporaries." W. S. B.

— Boston Transcript p10 D 8 '17 700w

"Though he knew too many men as well as books to be dull, the lovers of personalities and gossip biographers are warned off. On the other hand, those who wish to understand something of the beginnings of continental liberalism in church and state will find so much instruction in Lord Acton's letters that they will be well repaid for the attentive reading which they demand."

— Sat R 124:333 O 27 '17 1250w

"This new volume of Acton's own correspondence is welcome in so far as it throws light on his elusive personality, but it must be added that the letters are not often as interesting as we had hoped. For our part, we should have preferred a strictly chronological order for the Acton-Gladstone correspondence, which would then have illustrated clearly the long and intimate friendship existing between these two eminent men. As it is, we are carried backward and forward, from one topic to another. His editors have diligently annotated the text, and their biographical references are valuable. But the book is, like Acton's other writings, not at all easy to read."

+ — Spec 119:117 O 20 '17 2150w

"Apart from the notes and the index it cannot be said that the editors have done their work particularly well. Their worst sin is their method of arrangement. . . . This sounds like order, but in fact produces chaos."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p188 O 11 '17 1900w

ADAMS, ARTHUR BARTO. Marketing perishable farm products. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) no *$1.50 Longmans 338 16-14602

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"In thus stating the problem it seems that the author must realize that he is dealing with a question of the distribution of wealth; that is, with the method of its apportionment among those who produce and handle farm products. But he considers marketing as entirely a part of production. In his review of the present system of marketing and in his analysis of its cost he dwells only upon activities which are mechanically necessary to put goods in the hands of the consumer. . . . Mr Adams goes farther in recommending government aid than many authorities—Mr Weld, for instance, in his work on 'The marketing of farm products'; but not so far as Mr Elwood Mead, who has the Australian and European situation in mind." W. R. Camp

Am Econ R 7:125 Mr '17 1350w

"The author has produced a valuable work. It is analytical, not dogmatic, keeps in view the facts, and is constructive. It overturns preconceived opinions and demolishes the positions of some writers and many agitators. The reader of the work has the sense of dealing with something substantial and trustworthy and feels that he has secured a much better foundation for judging the case of the much maligned marketing or middleman system." J: M. Gillette

+ Am J Soc 22:559 Ja '17 650w

"The book is valuable in pointing out definite defects and discussing corrective measures. It does not contribute much that is new to the solution of the problem." N. D. H.

+ Ann Am Acad 70:325 Mr '17 180w

Reviewed by C. L. King
Survey 37:585 F '17 280w

ADAMS, FRANKLIN PIERCE. Weights and measures. *$1 Doubleday 817 17-29489

A new book of verses, selected from the author's contributions to newspapers and magazines. Mr Adams parodies Amy Lowell, Sara Teasdale, Edgar Lee Masters, and Horace, and writes on The indignant captain of industry, The patriotic merchant prince, and other modern themes. "Don't tell me what you dreamt last night" is inspired by Freud, and "Strange cases" relates a series of tales with surprising conclusions—surprising because not unusual.

+ A L A Bkl 14:119 Ja '18

+ Cleveland p134 D '17 100w

"Besides his funniness, which depends as much on his assumptions of intimacy as on a gentle irony, Mr Adams is felicitous in his use of exacting metres and involved rhyme-schemes. Most choice is his use of slang in paraphrasing Latin."

+ Dial 63:528 N 22 '17 420w

"As any one might know by mention of 'F. P. A.' as the author, this is a delightful book. It is so full of a number of things!"

+ N Y Times 22:485 N 18 '17 320w

ADAMS, JOHN DUNCAN. Carpentry for beginners. il *$1.50 Moffat 684 17-24720

"John D. Adams has gathered together his articles on carpentry which have previously been printed in magazines, and they now appear in book form under the title 'Carpentry for beginners.' Beginning with the simplest of articles which the average small boy can make, the author proceeds to describe others, more difficult, some of which would be a credit to a cabinet maker. . . . For those who do not care to undertake the laborious task of getting out their own stock, each article has its mill bill. This enables the builder to have all material cut and planed, leaving only the putting together and finishing to be done."—Springf'd Republican

+ A L A Bkl 14:79 D '17

"The photographs, drawings and descriptions are so clear that with patience one should turn out very creditable pieces of furniture granting that one has the necessary knack."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 D 1 '17 130w

ADAMS, JOSEPH QUINCY. Shakespearean playhouses. il *$3.50 (4½c) Houghton 792 17-24578

A history of seventeen regular and five temporary English theaters which takes advantage of the findings of later scholars. The writer, who is assistant professor of English in Cornell university, has examined original sources first hand and offers his own interpretation of historical evidences. The audience sought includes college and university students of Shakespeare or of the Elizabethan drama; all persons interested in English literature; and those interested in the history of the theater. The illustrations and maps are note-worthy for their value as a pictorial history of English theaters from their beginning to the restoration. The bibliography, tho "not intended to be exhaustive, is fairly complete."

"A good reference book."

+ A L A Bkl 14:82 D '17

"Its material is drawn from a first-hand examination of original sources and from an independent examination of the historical evidences. It is to be regretted, however, that in reproducing old documents he has chosen to modernize their spelling and punctuation, and that he has thought it necessary to change dates from the old style chronology to the new." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p10 N 28 '17 630w

"Since the present cannot be understood without a thorough knowledge of the past, Mr Adams's scholarly account of 'Shakespearean playhouses' is an important factor in any study of contemporary development. Mr Adams's book will be welcomed by all students of the theatre, whether of its contemporary or historical phases."

+ N Y Times 22:578 D 30 '17 170w

ADAMS, SAMUEL HOPKINS. Our square and the people in it. il *$1.50 (2c) Houghton 17-29518

"Walled in by slums stands our square, a valiant green space, far on the flank of the great city," writes the author in a foreword. He has told a series of stories of the people of the square, the little sculptor, the doctor, the Scotch tailor and others. The stories deal with matters of every day life but are told from the point of view of a romanticist. Contents: Our square; The chair that whispered; MacLachan of our square; The great peacemaker; Orpheus, who made music in our square; "Tazmun"; The meanest man in our square; Paula of the housetop; The little red doctor of our square. Some of these are reprinted from magazines.

A L A Bkl 14:129 Ja '18

"It would not be altogether candid to say that their truth to life impresses one as he reads these pleasant chapters. That there is no evil under the sun which true love may not remedy might well be the motto of each essay."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 26 '17 240w

"The author's style, stimulating and capricious as it always is, sets heart-strings to vibrating and brings tears close to the surface."

+ Lit D 55:51 D 29 '17 180w

"They are pleasant stories. . . and if they make one feel that they belong to some enchanted dreamland rather than in and around a New York east side park, they are, nevertheless, agreeable and entertaining."

+ N Y Times 22:458 N 11 '17 900w

"The stories are luminous with a delicate humor and wholly free from the vulgarity which sometimes characterizes stories in or about the slums."

+ Outlook 117:510 N 28 '17 170w

ADLER, ALFRED. Neurotic constitution; outlines of a comparative individualistic psychology and psychotherapy; auth. English tr. by Bernard Glueck and J: E. Lind. *$3 Moffat 130 17-4718

"Dr Adler, starting as a pupil of Freud, has now been disowned by the master because of the diminished emphasis laid by Adler on the sexual element. The neuroses grow, according to Adler, from a sense of inferiority, due itself to some actual or imagined bodily infirmity. The neurotic individual, even as a child, feels himself inferior and his position and outlook insecure; this feeling, not acquiesced in, leads to a self-assertion (the 'masculine protest') that seeks fictitious and strained means of expression, while at the same time shrinking from the real tests of life."—Survey

"The book is not pleasant reading, and one has, all through, the impression that Adler is trying very hard to defend himself in a position, which really does not need such valiant efforts, to gain the fulfillment of his own craving for security." Wilfrid Lay

Bookm 45:199 Ap '17 1250w

"Furnishes many suggestions of therapeutic value. . . . Any person, whether neurotic or not, would be much interested in and benefited by a reading of Dr Adler's work."

+ N Y Times 22:272 J1 22 '17 250w

"The neurotic constitution' prompts the observation that if all the studies of Freud and his

ADLER, ALFRED—Continued
method are to be translated for the American public they should at least be put into intelligible English."

Springfd Republican p6 F 20 '17 110w

Reviewed by R. S. Woodworth
Survey 38:361 J1 21 '17 130w

AIKEN, CONRAD POTTER. Jig of Forslin.
*$1.25 Four seas co. 811 A17-1323

"The jig of Forslin is a much more ambitious effort than 'Turns and movies.' . . . Its theme, as explained in the preface, is 'the process of vicarious wish fulfillment by which civilized man enriches his circumscribed life and obtains emotional balance. It is an exploration of his emotional and mental hinterland, his fairyland of impossible illusions and dreams.' Forslin, alone in his hall bedroom, dreams himself by turns a murderer, a juggler, the lover now of a woman of the street, now of a great queen, now of a lamia. He ranges through all periods, all climes. The sound of music binds his dreams together."—N Y Times

"The poem as a whole is unlike anything else. The sensibilities will be offended, the coarseness of the picturesque novel is introduced, and yet there are sections of mystical beauty and lyrical intensity. It will arouse discussion, and rightfully so, because, whatever one may say of form and method, there is little or no artifice in the substance. As a poet Mr Aiken gains immeasurably with this poem." W. S. B.

Boston Transcript p9 D 20 '16 1300w

"The author has not quite completed the dramatization of his narratives. They are poignant as stories of other men and women, as dramatic monologs, if you will, but in spite of painstaking efforts on Mr Aiken's part their vicarious significance in Forslin's life does not really emerge from the fluid mixture."

+ — Ind 89:366 F 26 '17 150w

"The author has not tempered the rashness of his colors, but, by substituting vision for reality, he has in a manner lowered the gas, and, in the restful though morbid twilight, effects are more poetical and less repulsive. Mr Aiken employs many verse-forms, including free verse. He is a born metrist." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 105:215 S 6 '17 290w

"The evident purpose is to render man's vicarious satisfaction of the tabooed impulses. The thing will be done some day, but it will take a greater knowledge of life and man and Freud than this poet seems to possess." Clement Wood

— N Y Call p15 Ja 5 '18 130w

"The jig of Forslin, no less than 'Turns and movies,' is a poem of youth, but of youth imaginative, not sensuous."

+ N Y Times 22:55 F 13 '17 350w

"To the persons who like the newer schools of verse and enjoy the study of the processes of the mind, and to all poets, one heartily commends 'The jig of Forslin,' a most extraordinary novel in verse."

+ R of Rs 55:211 F '17 120w

"With a refreshing sense of relief, the reader in search of something new comes upon the work of a new poet who deserves the term in a descriptive sense as well. Such a writer is Conrad Aiken, one of the youngest of contemporary poets, a graduate of Harvard in the class of 1911, and already the author of two volumes of verse."

+ Springfd Republican p17 Mr 18 '17 1100w

AIKENS, CHARLOTTE ALBINA. Home nurse's handbook of practical nursing. 2d ed, thoroughly rev II *$1.50 (1½c) Saunders 610.7 17-7826

The first edition was published in 1912. Changes in the new edition consist of minor revisions and additions. "Of the additions, the most important are the notes on the care of premature babies, infantile paralysis, tuberculosis patients, aged patients, and patients af-licted with chronic diseases of the heart and kidneys, and on the prevention of mental diseases—all of which have their beginnings, and in most cases their endings, in the home."

A L A Bkl 13:361 My '17

AIINGER, ARTHUR CAMPBELL. Memories of Eton sixty years ago; with contributions from Neville Gerald Lyttelton and J. Murray. II *9s Murray, London 373 (Eng ed 17-13276)

"The author finds a reason for the presentation of another book on Eton in the fact that many of the events of the years from 1850 to 1860 show the passing of the old order and the birth of the new. Not only to old Etonians, but also to the general reader, this volume of memories clinging around the ancient school, its inner life, the discipline, manners, and customs of far-off days, and the picturesque buildings, some of which are no more, will be of great interest."—Ath

"The illustrations are very attractive."

+ Ath p104 F '17 90w

"To the old English public schoolboy, these reminiscences of sixty years ago will call up many vivid recollections; to the old American schoolboy they will prove no less delightful by their contrasts between the educational systems and methods of the two countries." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 12 '18 1250w

"He has fulfilled his task, obviously a labour of love, in a manner that calls for unstinted praise at the hands not only of those who owe to Eton the educational and moral training which has fitted them for the battle of life, but of all Englishmen who are justly proud of this, one of her greatest institutions."

+ Library World 19:271 Ap '17 430w

"Mr Ainger writes always with the urbanity which is the special charm of the Etonian. Never unkind, as is the way of some stylists more careful of effect than of the truth, he speaks out when criticism is needed."

+ Sat R 123:sup5 Mr 31 '17 950w

"It is even scrappy; but does that matter if every scrap is a pleasure? Inserted between the chapters are seventeen of his school songs and other verses, and Johnson's 'Boating song,' which, with Mr Ainger's 'Carmin' and 'Vale,' is known all the world over."

+ Spec 118:440 Ap 14 '17 720w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p89 F 22 '17 800w

AKSAKOV, SERGIEI, TIMOFIEEVICH. Russian gentleman; tr. from the Russian by J. D. Duft. *$2.25 (2½c) Longmans (Eng ed 17-22678)

Serge Aksakoff was a Russian writer who lived from 1790 to 1859. He is the author of two autobiographical works, one of which "Years of childhood" was published in English last year. The other, "Recollections," is promised for future publication. The present work is pre-autobiographical. It deals with matters before the author's time and ends with the year of his birth. "Family history" is its more exact title. The translator's preface says, "A Russian gentleman seems a suitable title for this book, because the whole scene, in which a multitude of characters appear, is entirely dominated and permeated by the tremendous personality of Aksakoff's grandfather, Stepan Mihailovitch. Plain and rough in his appearance and habits, but proud of his long descent; hardly able to read or write, but full of natural intelligence; capable of furious anger . . . but equally capable of steadfast and even chivalrous affection; a born leader of men and the very incarnation of truth, honour, and honesty—Stepan Mihailovitch is more like a Homeric hero than a man of modern times."

A L A Bkl 14:57 N '17

+ Ath p256 My '17 50w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 30 '17 420w

"The hot-tempered but strictly honorable country squire of eighty years ago is splendidly portrayed. The picture of the times in which he lived, however, is the picture of a nightmare."

+ — Ind 92:56 O 6 '17 130w

"It is accepted in Russia as a faithful picture of the conditions which prevailed in the district of Orenburg under Catherine the Great."

+ Pittsburgh 22:619 O '17 50w

Pratt p47 O '17 30w

"Mr Duff, who has already given us an excellent rendering of Aksakoff's 'Years of childhood,' has added to our indebtedness by this translation of what is generally admitted to be his masterpiece, 'Family life,' under the title of 'A Russian gentleman,'"

+ Spec 118:565 My 19 '17 1750w

"Half-imaginary memoirs is the best description we could give of this book. As for its merit, it is simply this, that every page of it is interesting with a quiet but intense interest."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p187 Ap 19 '17 1350w

AKSAKOV, SERGIEI TIMOFIEEVICH. Russian schoolboy; tr. from the Russian by J. D. Duff. *$2.25 (2½c) Longmans 18-1741

"A Russian gentleman," "Years of childhood," and "A Russian schoolboy" are the three volumes of Aksakoff's recollections, named in chronological order. The second however, which appeared in English translation in 1916, was written later than the other two, having been published within a short time of the author's death. The book, which begins with a touching account of a little boy's homesick longings for his mother, covers the years from 1799 to 1807, and consists of four long chapters: My first term at school; A year in the country; My return to school; Life at college. An appendix contains a sketch, "Butterfly-collecting, an episode of college life," which was the author's last piece of writing.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 2 '18 450w

"This completes Mr Duff's translation of the memoirs of one of the most striking and individual among Russian writers."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p530 N 1 '17 40w

"When we consider the rare merit of these books we can scarcely thank the translator sufficiently. Ignorant as we are of the works of Aksakoff, it would be rash to say that this autobiography is the most characteristic of them; and yet one feels certain that there was something especially congenial to him in the recollection of childhood. He is not, we think, quite so happy in the present volume because he passes a little beyond the scope of childhood. . . . Aksakoff's peculiar gift lay in his power of living back into the childish soul."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p539 N 8 '17 1950w

ALDEN, RAYMOND MACDONALD. Alfred Tennyson: how to know him. il *$1.50 Bobbs 821 17-25767

The author is professor of English in Leland Stanford Jr. university. "Professor Alden adopts the method of copious quotation intermingled with commentary and exposition. He gives us the meagrest details of Tennyson's life and then only as his doings and his writings are interwoven." (Boston Transcript) He takes up "all the important briefer poems of Tennyson" with the text; gives "some account of the general character and structure of the great works which are too extensive to be represented by giving their full text"; but does not include the dramas. One chapter is given to "the relations of our age to the Victorians, as illustrated by the poetry of Tennyson."

"A sound interpretation."

+ A L A Bkl 14:84 D '17

"Like its predecessors in the same series, Professor Alden's 'Tennyson: how to know him,' is better than its title. And like its predecessors, it is all the better because it does not fulfill the implications of its title. . . . Professor Alden interprets the poet and his work with a sound judgment. . . . But his style is, we regret to say, frequently far from impeccable." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 29 '17 1400w

+ Cleveland p133 D '17 100w

+ Ind 92:64 O 6 '17 100w

"As an American interpreter of Tennyson, Professor Alden labors under the disadvantage of remoteness from the poet's environment and also from his modes of thought. This remoteness from Tennyson's world leads his interpreter into misconception. He misses the point of 'The northern farmer,' . . . On the whole, Professor Alden is on the side of the angels, and defends this Victorian archangel against the attacks of the little cliques, the faddists and the Philistines. He might, however, make fewer concessions to the enemy."

+ — Nation 105:603 N 29 '17 1000w

"A teacher who renounces much of Tennyson, and whose admiration of what is left is strong and contagious—such is Mr Alden." P. L.

+ — New Repub 13:24 N 3 '17 1250w

ALDIS, HARRY GIDNEY. Printed book. (Cambridge manuals of science and literature) il *45c (1c) Putnam 655 17-8491

"The scope of the present volume is limited to a brief outline of the origin and development of the printed book of the western world, printed for the most part on paper, occasionally on vellum, and more rarely on other material. In point of time the subject falls within the last five hundred years." (Intro.) Contents: The advent of printing; The spread of the art; The fifteenth-century book; The scholar-printers of the sixteenth century; English books, 1500-1800; The modern book; The construction of a book; Illustrations; Bookbinding and book-bindings; The handling and mishandling of books. The volume has several interesting illustrations, a bibliography and an index.

A L A Bkl 14:44 N '17

"There is an excellent chapter on modern presses."

+ Cleveland p112 S '17 20w

N Y Br Lib News 4:59 Ap '17

"Interesting little book."

+ Pittsburgh 22:667 O '17 20w

Pratt p22 J1 '17 10w

ALDON, ADAIR. Island of Appledore. il *$1.25 (3c) Macmillan 17-28795

Appledore island lies off the New England coast, and it is here that Billy Wentworth, who had never seen salt water before, comes to spend a summer with an aunt. He had not wanted to come at all and he has made up his mind not to like the Atlantic ocean. But that mood cannot last, and he is shortly asking old Captain Sausby to teach him all about boats. Billy has use for his new knowledge, and some very real adventures lie before him, for this is the time of the European war and German spies are at work along the Atlantic coast. In the end Billy enlists in the navy.

A L A Bkl 14:100 D '17

+ Ind 92:448 D 1 '17 20w

"A capital story for boys."

+ Outlook 117:432 N 14 '17 10w

"Any one who knows Appledore as one of the Isles of Shoals will recognize in a moment that Adair Aldon has taken liberties with the scenery. The author admits it, claiming a novelist's license, and then proceeds to write a stirring tale."

+ Spring'd Republican p17 D 8 '17 190w

ALDRICH, DARRAGH. Enchanted hearts. il *$1.35 (1½c) Doubleday 17-25127

A story which is as wholesome for grown-ups as it is enchanting to younger readers. Little Comfort, the heroine, sleeping or waking, inhabits her castle of dreams where she is Fairy-godmother. "That," she says, "is what I truly am; but of course my business is peeling potatoes and things and washing dishes. I wait on tables, too, mostly—when I am not making beds." In the boarding house where she wields alternately her fairy wand and the paring knife is her Princess who writes stories. Fairy-godmother observes that when the fat envelope comes back, gloom prevails. Her work is to hunt up a Prince who can save the Princess. Success seems to come readily after a visit to the rooms of a rich, bored young man whom the wand transforms. But the uncertain days that follow, days during which Fairy-godmother tests and even doubts the magic of her wand, ripen her childish wisdom. She never gives up, and the end makes her dreams all come true.

ALDRICH, DARRAGH—Continued

"A good story of its kind."

+ A L A Bkl 14:34 D '17

"The Pollyannas and Little Sir Galahads have made so vivid an impression on our present day fiction that we probably shall not lose their influence for some time to come. We can forgive that influence, however, when it gives us a character as lovable as Fairy godmother in 'Enchanted hearts.'"

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 24 '17 300w

"There is a spirit of reality, spontaneous joy, and spiritual faith in the book which excites and maintains interest. It even disarms criticism when some reason disapproves of excessive flights of fancy."

+ Lit D 55:18 D 29 '17 250w

ALDRICH, MILDRED. On the edge of the war zone. H *$1.25 Small 940.91 17-24665

Miss Aldrich's letters published under the title of "A hilltop on the Marne" covered the period between June 3 and September 8, 1914. The first letter in the present volume, also written from the little house near Huiry on the Marne, is dated September 16, 1914, and the last April 8, 1917. The book pictures for us both the spirit of the French nation and the happenings in one little corner of France, "from the battle of the Marne to the entrance of the Stars and Stripes." (Sub-title)

+ A L A Bkl 14:51 N '17

"Miss Aldrich has seen little more than the smoke of distant conflict, but she has lived in the very heart of France during all its struggle. These quiet letters, quite devoid of thrilling incident, are the essence of the home life of these memorable three years and to the reader who knows nothing of the technical art of war they are far more interesting than detailed accounts of battles." E. A. G.

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 8 '17 1650w

"The reader will appreciate and share the writer's evident affection for the French peasant and find especially interesting her account of supplying books to the poilus and of work with the American base hospital in the neighborhood."

+ Cleveland p118 N '17 70w

"Has nothing quite so thrilling to relate as the earlier book, but it lacks neither interesting incidents nor charm of style."

+ Ind 92:61 O 6 '17 30w

"Every one knows that Miss Aldrich can write and that she has a very human, observant eye, and a unique understanding of the French mind under the stress of the war. Her new book is packed with incidents and observations of the pathos and beauty of the French spirit."

+ Lit D 55:38 D 8 '17 150w

"A quiet record of one woman's experiences and reactions more illuminating than many volumes of vague generalizations." E. P. Wyck-off

+ Pub W 92:1387 O 20 '17 350w

"Full of vital, soul-stirring experience."

+ R of Rs 56:142 O '17 70w

ALEXANDER, PHILIP FREDERICK. Earliest 2 voyages round the world, 1519-1617. (Cambridge travel books) H *75c Putnam 910.4

"In the century, 1519-1617, covered by this travel-book there were six voyages round the world—one Spanish, led by a Portuguese, Magellan; two English, led by Drake and Cavendish; and three Dutch, led by Van Noort, Speilbergen, and Le Maire and Schouten. Mr Alexander includes in this volume Pigafetta's account of the Magellan expedition; Francis Pretty's narratives of Drake's piratical voyage, and of Cavendish's first voyage; and an account of Le Maire and Schouten's discovery of the route round Cape Horn. There are numerous illustrations, including a sixteenth-century map of Drake's voyage corrected by the great navigator; a dozen pages of useful notes; a brief introduction to the narratives; and a table of important dates in the history of discovery."—Nature

"As a contemporary source book, which maintains the atmosphere of the great days of the early voyages, this compilation will prove extremely useful and stimulating."

+ Nature 98:333 Ja 18 '17 150w

N Y Br Lib News 4:134 S '17 30w

"As an introduction to Hakluyt and the publications of the Hakluyt society, nothing could be better. As a school text-book, nothing could be more attractive."

+ Spec 118:110 Ja 27 '17 110w

ALEXINSKY, GREGOR. Russia and Europe; tr. from the manuscript by Bernard Miall. *$3 Scribner 947 17-5551

"A previous work of the author's on modern Russia was devoted to the distinguishing facts of Russian life as contrasted with the life of western Europe. And now he discloses how Russia has 'Europeanized herself' and sums up the effects of European influences on the great Slav empire, past and present. . . . We read that it is through the foreigner's money and his novel forms of exploitation that the old state of things in Russia has been subject to a profound upheaval. Coming to the present war, the author says that all the democrats in Russia recognize in it the cause of liberty, external and internal. They see in the fraternity of Russia and the western nations a force tending to democratize and Europeanize their country. And they believe their country will achieve its own liberty when it reaches the end of the road leading to victory over the external oppressor."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 13:344 My '17

"This writer, who has been a member of the Duma, knows his Russian intimately. . . . Interesting chapters are devoted to 'The Europeanization of the state' and 'Ideals.' The influence of western ideas upon philosophy and social movements is set forth in an attractive way. . . . Mr. Alexinsky's book should help to calm the fears of those who have been led to believe that great Russia will, sooner or later, decide to throw in her lot with Germany and Austria."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 10 '17 400w

N Y Br Lib News 4:77 My '17

+ N Y Times 22:84 Mr 11 '17 750w

+ Outlook 116:74 My 9 '17 80w

Pittsburgh 22:677 O '17 20w

Spec 118:342 Mr 17 '17 140w

"Mr Bernard Miall has done well in the essential matter of making the book read almost as though it were written in English; but he is open to reproach for certain defects apparently due to carelessness. The book badly needs an index, and no indication is given of what system of transliteration has been followed. He is curiously reckless with the centuries."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p50 F 1 '17 850w

ALEXINSKY, TATIANA. With the Russian wounded; tr. by Gilbert Cannan; with an introd. by Gregor Alexinsky. *2s 6d Unwin, T. Fisher, London 940.91

"The author is the wife of Gregor Alexinsky, who played so revolutionary a rôle in the second Duma that he was exiled to Paris. On the outbreak of the war, Mrs. Alexinsky, who shares her husband's internationalist hopes, went to Russia primarily to discover if it really was a people's war. Several months as a nurse in a hospital train finally destroyed her early scepticism. 'All wars are not the same,' her patients would say to her, 'but ours is a just war.' Other ideas, however, received confirmation. There was a touching, dull wonder at the stupidity of a world which made wars necessary—even the most ignorant peasants expressed that. . . . If there was likewise a determination to fight this war 'to a finish,' it was only because the men believed it was the one sure way to end future conflicts."—New Repub

- + New Repub 9:307 Ja 13 '17 400w
- + N Y Times 22:140 Ap 15 '17 400w
- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p539 N 9 '16 70w

ALFORD, LEON PRATT, ed. Manufacture of artillery ammunition. il *$6 McGraw 623.45 17-5988

Papers reprinted from the American Machinist. "The material splits up into sections on shrapnel, high-explosive shells, cartridge cases and fuses. In each field the manufacturing methods are disclosed for a variety of sizes; production data are given for each kind and size of ammunition shown."—Engin News-Rec

- / + A L A Bkl 13:431 Jl '17

"The appendix includes some timely suggestions, based on twenty-six months' experience of the allied nations, for the standardization and procurement of machine tools by the United States government."

- + Bul N Y Public Library 21:482 Jl '17 100w

"An up-to-date text on munitions manufacture has been earnestly desired by the Council of national defense and by every manufacturer who may have to turn his plant into an arsenal. The most obvious way to secure such a book was to reprint the papers that have appeared in the American Machinist since the onset of the European war. The contact with munitions manufacture is coming at so many points that this work will be needed by great numbers of industrial engineers who will not themselves bear the direct responsibility of manufacture."

- + Engin News-Rec 78:360 My 17 '17 130w

"Admirable work—complete, practical, and carefully illustrated."

- + N Y P L New Tech Bks p11 Ap '17 100w

"A very interesting and valuable book."

- + Pittsburgh 22:443 My '17 6w (Reprinted from Iron Trade Review p732 Mr 29 '17)

Pittsburgh 22:521 Je '17

"Contains 699 illustrations."

- + Pratt p18 Jl '17 30w

ALINGTON, CYRIL ARGENTINE. Shrewsbury fables. *75c Longmans 170

"'Shrewsbury fables' are addresses given in the chapel of Shrewsbury school by the former headmaster, Cyril Alington, who last year succeeded Dr Lyttelton as headmaster of Eton. . . . Dr Alington's early addresses are on simple and practical questions of religion and ethics, and since the war have mainly to do with service of the country in the army. The last address, however, is a pleasant homily on the quest of glory and its transitoriness."—Springf'd Republican

- N Y Br Lib News 4:93 Je '17 20w

"We confess to a certain degree of dismay that an eminent head master, among whose functions is, presumably, that of educating the taste of his pupils, should hold up so bizarre a style of composition for their imitation, for boys are essentially imitative. . . . Of the moral and religious lessons which Dr Alington desires to enforce in the garb of fable we would speak with all respect and appreciation. . . . Apart from this one lapse [concerning Milton] from good taste and wisdom, it is the form, and not the matter, of these discourses that we do not like."

- + — Sat R 123:390 Ap 28 '17 820w

"There are not a few passages which in their delivery must have provoked smiles, for Mr Alington is not afraid of humour, even of a freakish kind; but, as a set-off, there is a great deal that is profoundly serious and touching. We are reminded at times of Bunyan and again of Plato, but the touch and the illustrations are essentially modern and admirably suited to the boy audience."

- + Spec 118:236 F 24 '17 1900w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ap 20 '17 220w

"If anyone strange to the public school system of England and its ideals were to need a short cut to the understanding of them, he might do worse than begin with Mr Alington's 'Fables.'"

- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p103 Mr 1 '17 620w

ALLEN, GEORGE HENRY; WHITEHEAD, HENRY C., and CHADWICK, FRENCH ENSOR. Great war. 5v v 2-3 il ea $5 Barrie 940.91 (Eng ed 15-19225)

"A comprehensive popular history . . . to be sold by subscription." (Springfield Republican) "Volume 1 treats of: Causes of and motives for the war; Volume 2. The mobilization of the moral and physical forces; Volume 3. The original German plan and its culmination. There is a 'Chronological table' at the end of each volume." (Pittsburgh) Volume 1 was run in the Digest in 1915.

"The preceding volume dealt with the causes of the war. This one concerns the manner in which the conflict was begun, the last conversations of diplomats and statesmen, etc. . . . There is something finely dramatic in his account of the memorable sessions of the Reichstag and the House of commons. . . . The second part of the volume most readers will find of less interest. There is lengthy statement of the military organization of the warring powers and also of their naval strength. . . . It cannot be said that the author displays improper prejudice for the Teutonic allies, but prolonged acquaintance with the German people has brought him thoroughly under the glamour of their achievements and their greatness. The German army is the exemplar and the pattern. . . . There is lack of clear, trenchant, lucid generalization, and especially of interpretation, while the statistical comparisons might be better made in tables than by the narrative form in which they are expounded. In the third part there is a chapter on the mobilization of financial resources, interesting and especially good as regards Great Britain and Germany." E: R. Turner

- + — Am Hist R 22:864 Jl '17 1400w (Review of v 2)

Am Pol Sci R 11:594 Ag '17 50w (Review of v 2)

"The book is written in a terse and lucid style, and its logical plan, combined with its clear and judicial manner of treatment, makes it a work of much popular appeal, although the painstaking care of the authors to make it comprehensive and accurate in its use of facts gives it scholarly authoritativeness."

- + N Y Times 22:282 Jl 29 '17 220w (Review of v 2)

Pittsburgh 22:49 Ja '17 30w (Review of v 1-3)

"The publishers have done their part well by providing a volume which, if somewhat too large for comfortable reading, is handsomely printed and generously illustrated. . . . 'The great war,' so far as issued, provides a full, clear, authentic view of the beginning of the conflict, and, while the work is intended for the general reader, historical students will find it useful for reference."

- + Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 27 '17 220w (Review of v 2)

ALLEN, H. WARNER. Unbroken line. il *$2 Dutton 940.91 (Eng ed 17-1330)

"An illustrated survey of the French trenches from Switzerland to the North sea, by one of the British newspaper correspondents with the French armies in the field during the years 1915-16." (R of Rs) "Under Mr Allen's guidance,

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

ALLEN, H. WARNER—Continued

we are able to take a personally conducted tour along the line and remark the idiosyncrasies of its several sections. Except in the case of the defence of Nancy and the Somme offensive, he attempts no consecutive narrative of the fighting, but contents himself with illustrating military geography with graphic anecdotes of heroism and ingenuity. . . . The book is brought up to date by a chapter describing the first ten weeks or so of the battle of the Somme—or rather of that part of the battle assigned to the French troops." (The Times [London] Lit Sup)

"Mr Allen had opportunities for observation accorded to perhaps no other press correspondent save Frederick Palmer. And the story he tells of his journey from Switzerland to the Channel along the 'Wall of civilization' is one of high inspiration and encouragement." F. B.
+ Boston Transcript p7 Ap 28 '17 700w

"Among the illustrations are many official photographs reproduced by permission of the French government."

R of Rs 55:551 My '17 40w

"The reader derives a clear impression of the daily life and the temper of the French soldiers."
+ Spec 118:105 Ja 27 '17 350w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p530 N 9 '16 650w

ALLEN, WILLIAM HARVEY. Self-surveys by colleges and universities; with a referendum to college and university presidents. (Educational survey ser.) il $3 World bk. co. 378 17-29342

"To make it easier for American democracy to understand, and to shape for democracy's ends, the higher education upon which it spends a half-billion dollars yearly, is one purpose of this book," says the foreword. The work consists of "first-aid tests that will help a trustee, president, professor, parent, or student act as business doctor or efficiency engineer to his own college." The author is an ardent advocate of the self-survey in preference to the survey by outside experts. He says, "The study of higher education which is most needed today is study by colleges themselves of themselves, and by each college of itself." Contents: The survey movement in higher education; Procedure for a cooperative college survey; Relation of trustees to president and faculty; Executive and business efficiency; Faculty government; Extra-curricular activities of students; Course of study; Instructional efficiency; Relation with college communities. Various "exhibits." Including the faculty questionnaire of the University of Wisconsin, are given in the appendix.

+ El School J 18:393 Ja '18 600w

+ School R 26:64 Ja '18 420w

ALLEN, WILLIAM HARVEY, and PEARSE, CARROLL GARDNER. Self-surveys by teacher-training schools. (Educational survey ser.) il $2.25 World bk. co. 370.73 17-29341

In this work the authors advocate the plan of educational survey that was employed in a study of the eight normal schools of Wisconsin. This survey was carried out by the State board of public affairs, and in his introduction President Carroll G. Pearse, of the Milwaukee normal school, points out some of its advantages: "The study was neither framed nor carried on by any foundation or other private agency, nor was it conducted by a distant bureau, whose knowledge of the study and findings and whose influence on the methods of work and conclusions drawn could not be only nominal. The survey was cooperative. . . . The survey was not hurried. . . . The study was made by men who were familiar with the problems to be studied. . . . The study was not only cooperative but also immediately and continuingly constructive." Contents: Reasons for self-surveys; Pathfinding by Wisconsin's normal schools; Steps in making a self-survey; Making self-surveys build as they go; Administration problems; Course-of-study problems; Supervision problems; Classroom instruction; Training department's training; Extra-curricular activities of students; Technique of reporting surveys; General needs of teacher-training schools; Exhibits.

+ El School J 18:393 Ja '18 600w

"It cannot be doubted that this book in the hands of normal schools and college administrators will provide a powerful impetus for improvement of present methods of administering higher official work in this country."

+ School R 26:64 Ja '18 330w

ALLEN, WILLIAM HARVEY. Universal training for citizenship and public service. il $1.50 (3c) Macmillan 323 17-27906

Dr Allen who is director of the Institute for public service in New York believes that one of the great problems for all countries after the war will be how, while removing war's wreckage, to guarantee the permanence of its benefits and to direct its momentum towards rebuilding what war has torn down. The purpose of his book is to formulate for lay students of public affairs certain minimum aims and steps which are within the reach of the general public. "In addition to listing minimum essentials that are necessary in training privates for citizenship, it discusses briefly other minimum essentials of training which citizens should require for drillmasters, for entering and remaining in public and semi-public service, and for the professions. Three other chapters indicate the country's need for specialized training for parenthood, for public spirited use of special gifts and for creative imagination and devoted attention to the country's up-building after the war." (Publishers' note)

"The somewhat arid title of this book scarcely suggests to the reader its really inspiring appeal. Replete with the latest ideas as to civic work, its discussion of the problems of citizenship that confronts us now, and will confront us after the war, is terse, vigorous, and helpful to a high degree."

+ Outlook 118:66 Ja 9 '18 60w

ALTSCHUL, CHARLES. American revolution in our school text-books; with an introd. by James T. Shotwell. *$1 Doran 973.07 17-25472

"The object of this informal study is . . . to determine whether we are justified in thinking that the history text-books in use more than twenty years ago may have had a definite prejudicial influence on the minds of a considerable part of our population, and if so, to what extent the text-books in use at present promise a different result." (Preface) "Applying a rather rigid formula, Mr Altschul praises (by implication) the school books that show the political conditions in England prior to the Revolution and indicate that the action of the British government was not supported by the people at large. He condemns (by implication) those that do not dwell on British political conditions prior to the Revolution and that do not enumerate and honor the eminent Englishmen who espoused the American cause." (Springfield Republican)

"Drawing his data from some ninety-three text-books, he establishes some significant results. The book is a compilation with a moral which Professor Shotwell draws in his excellent introduction." C. H. Van Tyne

+ Am Hist R 23:403 Ja '18 600w

A L A BkI 14 87 D '17

"Should be purchased by school superintendents from Portland, Me., to Portland, Ore., and used as a guide for the elimination of antiquated rubbish and the acquisition of such rare but procurable text-books as tell the story of our struggle with England in a presentation that is fair to both countries."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 10 '17 330w

"We heartily recommend this whole book to the American public for perusal and thoughtful consideration. But in pointing out the significance of such a study as this, we must by no means lose sight of Mr Altschul's fair-mindedness, his modesty, the complete absence from his book of anything that approaches the dogmatic. Nor should any mistake be permitted as to the object of his criticism; as we have said, he is not criticising American research, but American elementary school textbooks and it is not their accuracy with which he finds fault. He does not quarrel with the truth of their facts, but with their incompleteness—an incompleteness that makes for superficiality and prejudice, and that is responsible for an impression that is inaccurate, however correct the statement of narrow fact may be."

+ N Y Times 22:399 O 11 '17 1850w

R of Rs 57:104 Ja '18 90w

Spec 119:772 D 29 '17 550w

"Mr Altschul seems to favor a method of teaching history which should be deliberately friendly to the English, as the teaching of the past has been, it seems, deliberately unfriendly. But what is wanted is the truth—a critical, rather than sentimental view—and it is just a matter of common-sense pedagogy to determine at what age a child can adopt a critical view."

+ — Springf'd Republican p8 S 28 '17 600w

ALTSHELER, JOSEPH ALEXANDER. Rulers of the lakes. (French and Indian war ser.) il *$1.35 Appleton 17-24207

"This is a book for boys, full of Indian warfare, treachery, intrigue, skirmishes, narrow escapes, and portraying American history from the time of Braddock's defeat at Fort Duquesne to the Colonists' success at Lake George. The principal characters are young Robert Lennox and his Indian friend Tayoga, who make the journey through the wilderness, in the face of terrible danger, to warn Fort Refuge, and afterward do scout duty and hard fighting at Lake George and Lake Champlain." (Lit D) "While it is linked up with the two preceding volumes, 'The hunters of the hills' and 'The shadow of the north,' by means of a common set of characters, the story is complete in itself, and may be enjoyed and understood independently of its companion tales." (Springf'd Republican)

"Not important but readable."

+ — A L A Bkl 14:172 F '18

"Gives a picture of Iroquois life and warfare that is historically true."

+ Ind 92:449 D 1 '17 40w

"The description of life in the wilderness, of the intrigue and cunning necessary in dealing with the French and Indians, of repeated encounters where ultimate success depends on quick wit and wily cleverness, makes fascinating reading for youth."

+ Lit D 55:38 O 27 '17 160w

"Mr Altschuler draws some very vivid pictures of the struggle between the forces contending for the North American dominion; but the individual efforts of the daring trio will occasion the reader the livelier interest."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 S 23 '17 260w

ALVORD, CLARENCE WALWORTH. Mississippi valley in British politics. 2v *$10 Clark, A. H. 973.2 16-23066

"In an exhaustive two volume study of 'The Mississippi valley in British politics,' Clarence Walworth Alvord recounts the various attempts made by the British government to settle and develop the vast territory between the Appalachian barrier and the Mississippi which came into its hands as a result of the Treaty of Paris in 1769. In the opinion of the author the failure of the British to solve the problem of governing and settling this region was one of the leading causes of the American Revolution, and a far more important one than the riots and patriotic demonstrations in Boston and other cities on the Atlantic coast which bulk so large in our histories."—Ind

"Able as is the political narrative yet the most interesting, illuminating chapters are those which discuss the rival capitalistic enterprises of land speculation and the fur trade (the only two lines open in the West to moneyed men), and the political manoeuvring of each for the right to exploit the great interior in its own interests." A. C. Ford

+ Am Econ R 7:332 Je '17 800w

"Professor Alvord has himself published a study of the proclamation of 1763. . . . And twenty years ago Professor Coffin gave us an excellent history of the Quebec act of 1774. But hitherto no one has attempted a comprehensive study of the many problems involved in the possession of the western territory, or of the British policy of dealing with these problems during the whole period from the Peace of Paris to the opening of the Revolution. . . . The results of Professor Alvord's labor constitute an important contribution to the literature of the American Revolution." Carl Becker

* + Am Hist R 22:671 Ap '17 1600w

"Professor Alvord's volumes will prove of interest to at least four groups of persons: students of the history and problems of colonial administration; . . . persons interested in British political history; . . . persons who seek a corrective on that treatment of pre-revolutionary American history which fixes the attention upon the performances of the 'madding crowd' of New York and Boston, to the exclusion of things transmontane. . . . Finally, for students of western history the work has much illuminating interpretation." F. A. Ogg

* + Am Pol Sci R 11:349 My '17 650w

"These volumes contain a detailed, but rather dull and dryas dust narrative of the story of British misgovernment of North America in the eighteenth century. Ample bibliographies are included, as well as a good index."

+ Ath p51 Ja '17 30w

"Professor Alvord makes out an excellent case, and in the two large volumes which contain the elaboration of his theory, he has brought to light a mass of historical material of surpassing interest and value, if not absolutely convincing. . . . But apart from this question, these two volumes have a value of their own as a study of the development of the Mississippi valley which we have not found matched in any other similar compass. The historian, the economist, the student of affairs, will alike find in them material of incalculable value. The style is one to attract the reader, and the copious footnotes and citations afford opportunity to pursue the study of the subject still further." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 27 '16 1850w

"A splendid bibliography and a good index complete this scholarly inquiry."

+ Cath World 106:119 O '17 1900w

"There are few readers on this side of the Atlantic who will not have much to learn from Mr Alvord's learned and thoughtful volumes. They are accompanied by some useful maps." H. E. Egerton

+ Eng Hist R 32:299 Ap '17 950w

Ind 89:232 F 5 '17 250w

"All that Professor Alvord has here written of the actual attempts to settle the western territory, of land-schemes and land-grants, of the activities of promoters, and of the migrations of restless wanderers and pioneers is of the greatest interest and value. . . . If the fact be recognized that in this work we are dealing with only one aspect of a great and difficult problem, and are not to look on what it contains as a study of causes culminating in the American revolution, then we can freely accord to it the praise that it justly deserves."

+ Natlon 104:579 My 10 '17 1850w

Pittsburg 22:323 Ap '17

"To most readers these volumes will give a wholly new conception of the attitude of Great Britain towards its American possessions during the decade preceding the Revolution. From public and private documents never before published, Professor Alvord shows that the ministry at London was far more deeply concerned than has generally been supposed with the fate of its western possessions in America."

+ R of Rs 55:107 Ja '17 140w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

AMERICAN HIGHWAY ASSOCIATION. Good roads year-book, 1917. 6th annual ed $2 Am. highway assn. 625.7 (12-14988)

"The 'Good roads year book' for 1917 of the American highway association carefully summarizes, as usual, the progress of the last year in the improvement of roads in the commonwealths, our insular possessions, and Alaska. A new departure is to be found in two hundred pages devoted to papers upon those simple and non-technical features of highway construction and maintenance which a commissioner entrusted with the expenditure of road funds should know. There has been a demand for this from local road officials who have found that most of the treatises on roads are more useful to engineers than to the uninitiated. The American highway association has entered upon this work with enthusiasm, enlisting some fifty experts in it. The result is a veritable brief reference-book upon rural road building, applicable to the whole country."—Nation

+ Nation 105:268 S 6 '17 170w

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS. City planning progress in the United States, 1917. il $2 Am. inst. of architects 710 17-15450

"Valuable service has been rendered by the production of this survey of city-planning effort—and lack of effort—in 233 cities and towns of the United States. Information obtained from authentic published reports or from signed reports by responsible authorities is presented for every city and town of 25,000 or less (1916 census estimates) and for some smaller places. The review for each city and town is a readable account of local city-planning activities, whether private, semi-public or public. Maps and halftones are freely used. A 'Summary' of four pages is devoted chiefly to progress at home and abroad in various lines during 1917. This is followed by four pages of city-planning references, by Theodora Kimball, Harvard university." (Engin News-Rec) The compilation has been made by the Committee on town planning of the American Institute of architects under the editorship of George B. Ford, city planner, to Newark and Jersey City, author of "Comprehensive city planning," etc., assisted by Ralph F. Warner.

"In the revised and extended edition promised early in 1919 it is to be hoped that an attempt will be made to bring out clearly for each city just what has been accomplished in the realization of the reports and plans reviewed. Where nothing has been done, it would perhaps help the cause, both locally and generally, to say so instead of leaving the reader to draw his own conclusions. The need for more definiteness may well be illustrated by the case of Hartford, Conn."

+ Engin News-Rec 78:603 Je 21 '17 350w

AMERICAN POLITICAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION. Teaching of government; report by the Committee on instruction, C. Groves Haines, chairman. *$1.10 Macmillan 353 16-23033

The report of a committee appointed in 1911 to investigate this subject. "Besides a very suggestive section on 'Recent progress in the teaching of government,' there are parts devoted to a report on the teaching of civics in secondary schools, the course of study, report on the teaching of political science in colleges and universities, and an appendix containing the report of state committees on the teaching of civics in elementary and secondary schools. . . . The section on the course of study contains suggestions as to the subject-matter and methods of approach to the study of government in both the elementary and the secondary schools, and rather complete bibliographies on methods of teaching and books for both texts and references." (School R)

A L A Bkl 13:287 Ap '17

"Teachers of government have waited long and patiently for this book. In some respects the book is likely to prove of service. On the other hand, its value is greatly impaired by the lack of orderliness in arrangement, by the inclusion of much that is of neither present-day interest nor usefulness, and by the complacent contempt for accuracy in matters of detail which the volume shows all too plainly. Within the twenty-odd pages of the bibliography, in fact, one may find excellent examples of nearly everything that a good bibliographer ought not to do."

* — + Nation 104:314 Mr 15 '17 750w

"The report is of considerable value and is well worth a careful perusal by civics teachers in both junior and senior high schools."

+ School R 25:293 Ap '17 450w

AMES, JOSEPH BUSHNELL. Under boy scout colors. il *$1.35 (2c) Century 17-25246

Dale Tompkins, a newsboy out of school hours, has faithfully studied the boy scout handbook in the hope of some day becoming a real scout. A sudden emergency, in which a little boy's life is at stake, finds Dale with the necessary knowledge and skill at his command. At many other times in the course of the story, the value of boy scout training is put to the test and in the final chapter the team work of the entire troop is called for in a crisis. The story has appeared serially in St Nicholas, and has been "approved by the Boy scouts of America."

+ A L A Bkl 14:135 Ja '18

"A good and wholesome tale of its kind." J: Walcott

+ Bookm 46:498 D '17 190w

Lit D 55:59 D 8 '17 50w

ANDERSON, BENJAMIN MCALESTER. Value of money. *$2.25 Macmillan 332 17-14066

"Those economists who are thinking vitally are using money as their approach to economic theorizing. Professor Anderson is among these. This book aims to show money as a function rather than an instrument of modern business life. Because it is functional, it is dynamic, changing under the influence of complex social forces and in turn being a factor in the change of these social forces. In a word, the author applies the concept of social value which he has outlined in a former treatise to the problem of money value. This necessitates the refutation of the quantity theory of money, marginal utility and other fundamental principles of orthodox analysis." (Survey) The author is assistant professor of economics at Harvard university.

+ A L A Bkl 14:112 Ja '18

"An important and rather technical discussion."

+ Ind 92:487 D 8 '17 20w

"Seldom does a book developing such novelties show such signs of patient study. Almost too much attention has been given to details and to defense of his differences with the defenders of the orthodox ideas on these subjects."

+ — N Y Times 22:298 Ag 12 '17 1100w

"The book shows patient study and very thorough acquaintance with the literature of the subject. It will surely stimulate interest and discussion. It is a contribution to a slowly forming body of opinion which would rewrite economic theory in terms of a sounder social psychology." H. F. Grady

+ Survey 39:74 O 20 '17 250w

ANDERSON, ISABEL (PERKINS) (MRS LARZ ANDERSON). Odd corners. il *$2.50 (3c) Dodd 910 17-28483

Traveling in the unusual way means necessarily getting a view of things from an unaccustomed angle. House-boating, for instance, on inland waters from New York to Key West promises something new in the way of travel sensations. The writer's zig zag journeyings take her across the southern states to California, down into Mexico, across to the gulf, thence to Spain and Morocco, on to India, back to England, over the firds of Norway into Russia, across Siberia to Japan and thence to China. The chapters on China give glimpses of court life, tell of visits to famous temples in Peking, to mounds and tombs of the ancestors, and intimately describe sensations that natives, streets, and buildings produce upon the tourist in Hankow, Nankin and Shanghai.

A L A Bkl 14:125 Ja '18

"This last journey [to Mexico] was undertaken while Diaz still ruled and her observations are superficial and woolly from the point of view of the private car in which she traveled."

+ N Y Times 22:579 D 30 '17 130w

St Louis 15:430 D '17 10w

"When the wife of a member of the American diplomatic corps undertakes to tell the reading public of some of the corners of the world she has seen, there is always a promise of something out of the ordinary. And when such a writer brings to the task the enthusiasm and freshness that belong to the writings of Mrs Larz Anderson, the promise is usually more than fulfilled."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 N 16 '17 400w

ANDERSON, ISABEL (PERKINS) (MRS LARZ ANDERSON). Spell of the Hawaiian Islands and the Philippines. (Spell ser.) il *$2.50 Page 919.69 16-23396

"Out of her personal observations and many historic sources Mrs Anderson has gathered the material for the writing of her third book of travel. . . . She has gathered into her latest volume a vast fund of information about our Pacific possessions. She writes about the land and its people, about the historic and political conditions, and she introduces her readers to the great scenic beauty of these islands, and to the quaint customs of their inhabitants. . . . No less entertaining than her sketches of Hawaiian life are her descriptions of the Philippines, and they are all visualized by a series of excellently reproduced photographic illustrations."—Boston Transcript

"It has two good maps, one of the Hawaiian Islands, and one of the Philippines."

+ A L A Bkl 13:263 Mr '17

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 25 '16 250w

+ Dial 62:150 F 22 '17 230w

ANDERSON, PAUL LEWIS. Pictorial photography; its principles and practice. il *$2.50 Lippincott 770 17-21825

"That there is a school of real photography in this country is evidenced in Mr Anderson's 'Pictorial photography,' a handbook devoted almost wholly to the obtaining of beautiful, artistic effects in pictures made through the purely mechanical means of a camera and its accessories. . . . 'Pictorial photography' is divided into five parts, Apparatus, Negative modification, Printing methods, Color and Miscellaneous. Its closing chapter on motion picture photography is a sane criticism of the admirable features and the faults of that important department of modern work with the camera."—Boston Transcript

+ A L A Bkl 14:47 N '17

"The illustrations in this book are revelations. They are free from the sharp decisiveness of the photograph we have known as a type, are rich in shadow and an occasional blur of mystery that lifts the product to a plane that is in essentials artistic."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 22 '17 180w

Cleveland p136 D '17 10w

"A helpful manual, broad in scope but not too technical for the comprehension of the amateur."

+ Ind 92:345 N 17 '17 120w

Pittsburgh 22:651 O '17 30w

"This volume comes with a distinct field of usefulness, and will find the welcome it deserves from all who realize the finer possibilities of lens work. . . . But with all his intimate and extraordinarily well-digested knowledge of technical possibilities, Mr Anderson persistently keeps before the mind of the reader, who is also a photographer, that there is something more needed to produce the perfect picture than merely perfection of technique and taste in composition." G. I. Colbron

+ Pub W 92:815 S 15 '17 500w

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD. Marching men. *$1.50 (2c) Lane 17-24209

This is not a novel of war, but of labor. "Beaut" McGregor, son of a miner, "huge, graceless of body, indolent of mind, untrained, uneducated, hating the world," saw his fellow-countrymen as "a vast, disorganized, undisciplined army, leaderless, uninspired, going in route-step along the road to they know not what end," and the idea came to him to teach these men to march rhythmically, shoulder to shoulder, until they should become "one giant body," and a brain should grow in the giant they had made. As a boy McGregor worked in his mother's bakery and afterwards in a stable in the mining town where he was brought up. Then he went to Chicago where he worked his way up in an apple warehouse, studied law, and won a reputation by defending a man wrongly accused of murder. This success gave him a chance to leave his class, but his sense of solidarity with the working-class prevailed, and he continued to struggle to "make an armv out of labor by progress from the mere rhythm of marching to a rhythm of like-mindedness in society." (New Repub) Three women influenced his life—the undertaker's daughter in the mining town; Edith, the milliner who gave him her savings that he might study, and Margaret, daughter of a rich man and worker in a settlement.

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

BookM 46:338 N '17 140w

"Naturally all brief characterizations are unfair, but I suppose 'Marching men' might be described as a paean to order and (quite incidentally, I hope) a naked and somewhat febrile celebration of force. It is, in fact, too insistently, too stridently and remorselessly dedicated to the main theme to make a wholly satisfactory novel. . . . Mr Anderson's is surely the last word of anti-intellectualism; for the men who follow McGregor do not know why they are marching or whither. . . . Marching satisfies a deep disposition. Very well, let them march, and trust to luck that the collectivist mind will emerge. To present a programme would be only to repeat the old intellectualist fallacy of the socialists and the organizers. . . . Mr Anderson has the skill to make you feel the thick press of life in great cities." G: B. Donlin

+ Dial 63:274 S 27 '17 1650w

Nation 105:403 O 11 '17 600w

"The sensational and spectacular scheme by which this Pennsylvania miner aspires to evoke the solidarity of labor hardly succeeds in escaping the ludicrous. But 'Marching men' is not a literal novel. It has, indeed, its large element of the caveman piffle that played such a part in the romanticizations of Jack London, but outside this puerility, this day-dream of the male egoist, there is a great deal of inspiring symbolism in 'Marching men.' . . . The chief fact about 'Marching men' is not its rhetoric, its grandiloquence. It is its apprehension of the great fictional theme of our generation, industrial America." F. H.

+ New Repub 12:249 S 29 '17 1500w

"Back of the new volume is a big idea, a strong purpose, a white light. It is obviously propaganda, interesting because it makes you thoughtful about the struggle that is going on here in Chicago and in all the labor centers of the land. . . . Mr Anderson's novel, while it compels one to read it to the end, is weak in many places. It savors too much of a preaching, and in the handling of the final chapters falls a bit flat." J: N: Beffel

+ N Y Call p14 N 11 '17 950w

"A disappointing book. For in the very beginning of it the descriptions of Coal Creek, the miners, and Norman McGregor's hatred alike of the place and of the people, are sufficiently well done to lead the reader to expect a novel of possibly a trifle more than average interest and average merit."

+ N Y Times 22:442 O 28 '17 260w

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD—Continued

Pittsburgh 22:748 N '17 50w

"Mr Anderson writes with an earnestness that cannot fail to awaken respect. Tho his characters occasionally—by no means always—sound a little more than human, his appreciation of the perversities of the social order—or disorder—and his sincere seeking for 'the wherefore of the why,' gain for this comparatively new author a sympathetic response." Doris Webb

+ — Pub W 92:1372 O 20 '17 350w

ANDREA, JOHANN VALENTIN. Christianopolis; tr., with an historical introd., by Felix Emil Held. (Germanic literature and culture) il *$1.25 Oxford 321.07 16-14590

"Christianopolis, a translation from the Latin of Johann Valentin Andreae, portraying 'an ideal state of the seventeenth century,' is an important addition to utopian literature in the English language. Professor Held's valuable introduction connects Christianopolis with the other utopias—Plato's, More's, Campanella's City of the sun, Francis Bacon's New Atlantis, Samuel Gott's Solyma—and with seventeenth century educational reforms. The text ranges quaintly over many of the rough realities and the fine ideals with which every people is still struggling."—Survey

"The Latin original of this utopian sketch is very rare. It is just 270 years since Robert Boyle, in a letter to Samuel Hartlib, expressed the wish that an English version of it might be made. Such a version has now been made, and well made, by Assistant Professor Held of Miami University."

+ Educ R 53:423 Ap '17 100w

"The introduction gives a conspectus of the literature on the whole subject, and will be useful for reference. It summarizes opinions, corrects errors, and rectifies ill-founded judgments. Dr Held doubtless overestimates his author, but the things for which Andreae may be regarded as noteworthy are properly specified, and a fair degree of probability is made out for the theses here propounded."

+ Nation 101:375 Mr 29 '17 230w

"Dr Held's translation of 'Christianopolis' is not only accurate, but it reads easily." C. A. Williams

+ School R 24:710 N '16 180w

+ Survey 37:586 F 17 '17 180w

"The matter of his pages is admirable, but the manner it deserves is lacking. It is as the socialist who so long ago saw that the social question is a moral and religious one, as the promoter of educational and scientific reform, that he is important."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p311 JI 19 '17 1350w

ANDREIEFF, LEONID NIKOLAEVICH. Confessions of a little man during great days; tr. from the Russian by R. S. Towns.-md. *$1.35 Knopf 17-26393

"The book is just the quite shameless confession of a little clerk who gets no nearer the war than Petrograd, a futile, stupid, fussy, egoistic, but affectionate, sensitive, and somehow lovable little man of forty-five, with but one heroic quality, his honesty—at least to himself; he does not spare himself when he writes the diary that no one is to see. . . . He wins your sympathy, from a fellow-feeling, and he keeps it, even when he is worrying about himself and his miserable digestion and his neglected state while his fine wife goes nursing, even when the smallness of his life makes him most ridiculous. . . . Again when he decides to go to the front and serve with the ambulance you believe that he will go and somehow play his little part."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Registers his revolt against war, his gradual patriotic awakening and finally his desire to help. Will appeal to many Americans now entering upon similar experiences."

+ A L A Bkl 13:418 JI '17

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 26 '17 220w

"Andreyev's genius for analysis attains an intensity at times that is fairly hypnotic. . . . But the analysis is not all. There are moments of great poetic freshness—pages of lyric beauty with accents exultant or despairing, as in the vivid pictures of springtime in Petrograd, or the moonlit city, still and mysterious and fearful, or the scene in the depot where the wounded soldiers arrive."

+ Dial 62:527 Je 14 '17 280w

Pratt p50 O '17 20w

"This diary of a non-combatant increasingly touched by war is one of the most remarkable books the war has produced."

+ Sat R 123:207 Mr 3 '17 720w

"There is no purpose or propaganda here. All Andreyeff wants is to be honest, and he leaves you to make what you like of it. . . . This honesty is what makes the book so absorbing, that and two other things; first, the extraordinary skill with which, in the simplest words, Andreyeff creates his little man and the splendid wife and the jolly children and the rest; and secondly, the fact that Ilya Petrovitch Dementev is a universal type. Even a brief, terrible description of how some women were tortured by Turks—Andreyeff's one lapse into the ghastly—cannot altogether dismay you, for even here there is more pity than horror."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p92 F 22 '17 950w

ANESAKI, MASA HARU. Nichiren, the Buddhist prophet. il *$1.25 Harvard univ. press 294 16-17131

"This study is a kind of foreword to the author's forthcoming work on the 'Religious and moral development of the Japanese.' The teachings and influence of Nichiren have played a large part in the present religious attitude of the Japanese nation. He has been called the 'Nietzsche of Japan.' . . . His teachings, which unified religion and ethics, rescued pure Buddhism from the contamination of spurious beliefs and restored it to the purity of its original high ideals and to the worship of one Buddha (Buddha Sakya-muni), the Lord of the universe. To the restored purity of the Buddhist faith can be traced—at least in part—the great vitality of the Japanese nation."—R of Rs

"This sketch, written under the inspiration of Professor Royce and his own experiences as professor of Japanese literature and life at Harvard, will help to an understanding of Japan."

+ A L A Bkl 13:196 F '17

Dial 63:111 O 25 '17 200w

+ Int J Ethics 27:403 Ap '17 70w

"Though he never converted the rulers of the land he gathered a considerable following and founded a sect which is to-day enjoying a notable revival. Nichiren, moreover, was not only a preacher, but a writer of real power, and Dr Anesaki has wisely given us many extracts from the 'prophet's' essays and letters."

+ Nation 101:24 Ja 4 '17 400w

"This brief, clear exposition of Nichiren's personality and teachings is a distinct contribution to the literature of religious psychology and a clearly cut portrait of a man western scholars will indeed be glad to know."

+ R of Rs 55:105 Ja '17 270w

"The author is professor of the science of religion at the Imperial university of Tokio."

+ St Louis 15:94 Mr '17 15w

"Undoubtedly the most complete history of the thoughts and acts of this remarkable man that has ever been published in the English language."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 JI 8 '17 330w

ANNUAL of new poetry, 1917. *5s Constable & co., London $21.05

"Thirty pages, and more, of this volume are occupied by 'dramatic reveries' from Mr Gibson's 'Livelihood.' Seven other poets are included. Two, Mr Davies and Mr Drinkwater, furnish barely twenty pages between them.

There remain Mr Sturge Moore and Mr R. C. Trevelyan, who contribute each a single long poem, Mr Robert Frost, Mr Gordon Bottomley, and Mr Edward Eastaway."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Ath p309 Je '17 80w

"Perhaps the most interesting contributions to this volume are those by Edward Eastaway [Edward Thomas], whose poetic impulse was stimulated by the example of Robert Frost . . . and who now lies dead on a French battlefield." E: Garnett

Atlan 120:373 S '17 210w

"Mr Trevelyan's drama is pretty enough but has none of the wit and brilliancy of his best work. . . . Mr Gordon Bottomley contributes several beautiful little poems, all full of the pressure of life and death and of the greatness of to-day as coming out of yesterday and travelling to to-morrow. . . . Mr Frost's poems are just little bits of fact or incident which he has observed, sometimes more or less interesting, sometimes defiantly commonplace. . . . Mr Eastaway is a real poet, with the truth in him. . . . He has no instinct of selection. Several of his pieces here are not so much poems as notes out of which poems might have been made. But he has real imagination."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p151 Mr 29 '17 2000w

APUKHTIN, ALEKSIEI NIKOLAEVICH. From death to life; tr. from the original by R. Frank and E. Huybers. il 60c R. Frank, 15 E. 40th st., N.Y. 17-15469

"This first volume in the Gems of Russian literature series is a little book of sixty-odd pages containing a novelette by A. Apukhtin, Russian poet and novelist, who died in middle age a quarter of a century ago. The novelette might be called an essay in reincarnation, for it chronicles in the first person the thoughts and emotions of a man, a member of the Russian nobility, from the moment of his death until, on the day of his funeral, his individuality enters life again in the new-born infant of his wife's maid. This brief shadow time is filled with intimations of previous existences which waver in and out through the dead man's consciousness of what is going on around him, and it is ended by a passionate longing for life which fills him as his soul is born again into the body of the infant just entering the world."—N Y Times

"The extravagance of the central idea in no way detracts from one's enjoyment of the piece. The prose is simple and direct—and the images are poetic."

+ Dial 63:282 S 27 '17 150w

"Such a trifle might seem memorable if stumbled on or more humbly presented, but for the first of a number of Gems of Russian literature it is scarce more glowing than artful glass."

+ New Repub 13:192 D 15 '17 160w

"The eerie conceit is told with such simplicity and sincerity that it carries the air of absolute truth."

+ N Y Times 22:260 JI 8 '17 300w

ARCHER, WILLIAM, comp. Gems (?) of German thought. *$1.25 Doubleday 940.91 17-15965

Extracts from over eighty books and pamphlets, of which the full titles and dates of publication are given in every instance, showing "the dominant characteristics of German mentality," and arranged under the headings: "Deutschland über alles"; German ambitions; War-worship; Ruthlessness; Machiavellism; England, France, and Belgium—especially England. Mr Archer states in his introduction that the great majority of the quotations are taken direct from the original sources, and adds that "it will be found by anyone who puts the matter to the test that in no case is there any unfairness in taking these brief extracts out of their context. The context is almost always an aggravating rather than an extenuating circumstance." There is an "Index of books and pamphlets from which quotations are made,"

and an "Index of authors," with brief notes placing the different writers in the public life of Germany.

A L A Bkl 14:17 O '17

Ath p411 Ag '17 70w

Reviewed by H. M. Kallen

Dial 63:264 S 27 '17 1300w

Nation 105:153 Ag 9 '17 330w

"Mr Archer has done an important service, as ingenious as it is real, to the cause of truth and of sober realization of the fundamental causes of the great world war by the compilation of this volume."

+ N Y Times 22:247 JI 1 '17 870w

R of Rs 56:325 S '17 140w

"It is unnecessary to insist upon Mr Archer's qualifications for the task. As a literary and dramatic critic he has always been distinguished for independence, honesty, and a remarkable freedom from all insular bias. . . . And his knowledge of continental literature is based upon first-hand acquaintance with the originals. The method he has adopted in this book is what might be expected from so well equipped and conscientious a writer."

+ Spec 118:672 Je 16 '17 1700w

"They are meant to amuse us—as they do, except when we stop to reflect that a certain blindness in the German mind, which they exemplify, and which is much more a lack of humor than of humanity, has been a trait that helped to make the war possible."

Springf'd Republican p17 JI 1 '17 520w

ARCHER, WILLIAM. God and Mr Wells; a critical examination of "God, the invisible king." *$1 Knopf (*1s 9d Watts & co., London) 201 17-24674

"Mr Archer is concerned about what the men of the future may think of Mr Wells, and accordingly writes what is certainly a witty and exhilarating, and the publisher calls a 'complete and crushing,' rejoinder. . . . The critic's point of view is that of the grave and respectful rationalist, who believes in the tendency of human progress towards good, but declines to be persuaded, by what he regards as 'a mere system of nomenclature,' into the belief that Mr Wells has found a new religion, a new God—in other words, the 'key to the mystery of existence.'"—Ath

"As a literary effort, Mr Archer's book is clearer, more humorous, and much more convincing than the book that evoked it. We say this without intending any adjudication on the issues at stake."

Ath p406 Ag '17 130w

Reviewed by W: L. Phelps

* Bookm 46:723 F '18 950w

"Not much is left of Mr Wells's glowingly imaginative creation after Mr Archer has devoted a hundred searching pages to its consideration but a large number of brightly colored shreds and tatters. Mr Archer has enjoyed himself very much in the making of them and the reader has equally enjoyed the process. But Mr Archer has not been simply destructive. As he goes along, and in a score or more of pages at the end, he modestly outlines a basis for man's attitude toward the mystery of the universe and of himself that is austere almost to grimness but is simple, manful, and reasonable."

+ N Y Times 22:368 S 30 '17 750w

Pittsburgh 22:769 N '17 80w

"In the latter part of his book Mr Archer extends his criticism from Mr Wells's theology to Christian theology, and then he strikes us as no less ineffectual, because no less ignorant, and considerably less amusing, than Mr Wells when similarly engaged."

— Spec 118:92 JI 28 '17 550w

"Mr Archer is, it seems, an agnostic, and the destructive force of his Scottish intellect makes havoc with Mr Wells's confident and bustling attempt to discover a God in the universe."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 O 1 '17 910w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

ARMSTRONG, HAMILTON FISH, ed. Book of New York verse. il $2.50 Putnam 811.08

An anthology of New York verse, fittingly introduced and concluded with selections from Walt Whitman and celebrating both the ancient glories and the modern beauties of the city. The early poems in the collection are arranged in order of events. We have: Verrazano in New York harbour; Hudson's last voyage; Epitaph for Peter Stuyvesant; When Broadway was a country road, etc. The later poems are arranged loosely by locality: Central park; Brooklyn bridge; Washington square; Broadway. Among the modern poets represented are Sara Teasdale, Chester Firkins, Dana Burnet, Ruth Comfort Mitchell, James Oppenheim, and Edward Arlington Robinson. There are over sixty illustrations, many of them from interesting old prints.

+ — New Repub 13:322 Ja 12 '18 210w

"In spite of its considerable bulk, this book of New York verse is hardly ever monotonous. The whole possession of the city's past is suggested in the earlier pages, and no reader will leave them without a keen appreciation of Manhattan nomenclature."

+ N Y Times 23:6 Ja 6 '18 620w

ARNDT, WALTER TALLMADGE. Emancipation of the American city. *$1.50 (2½c)
Duffield 352 17-18177

"Home rule appears to the author to be the first step toward a solution of the many problems of the modern city. Not only is the achievement of this step necessary to enable the city to direct its affairs in its own interest, but it is indispensable to the training of its citizens in moral self-direction. Concentration of business and political responsibility through commission government (or its equivalent), the short ballot, separation of local from national political issues, the substitution of independent for partisan tickets, an adequate and irreplaceable civil service, the regulation and curtailment of public-utility franchises, the rationalization and standardization of the finance methods of the city within the limits at least of solvency—these are some of the most important reforms explained and urged." (Dial) There are several appendices dealing with city charters, preferential voting, etc., and a two page bibliography.

"In not a few paragraphs the language, whether of criticism or of praise, is stronger than a dispassionate analysis of the facts would support. Nevertheless the book will make an effective appeal to those who like to drink their potions of reform propaganda with some ginger mixed in it."

+ — Am Pol Sci R 11:789 N '17 150w

"Careful and illuminating study of the principles underlying home rule."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 3 '17 120w

"The viewpoint of the author is decidedly sane and progressive, and the book may be trusted to hold the interest of the average reader."

+ Dial 63:276 S 27 '17 200w

"One of the best recent studies and discussions of American municipal government in the present age of reform."

+ Ind 92:108 O 13 '17 100w

"It might be said that Mr Arndt has made available in the most readable way all the best thought of the intelligent business class and their unconscious academic allies on municipal government reform. . . . Here, it seems to me, lies the value of the book for us. It is a compact and handy guide to recent useful political inventions, some of which it will pay us well to appropriate for our own purpose. There is, however, abundant evidence in this work of an utter failure to understand the heaviest burdens to which our cities have fallen heir." Evans Clark

+ — N Y Call p15 O 11 '17 1150w

"One would have welcomed a more detailed account of the beginnings of municipal reform in this country, with some comment on the pioneers of the movement."

+ — R of Rs 56:327 S '17 160w

"The best field for the book is probably among those newly enfranchised women who desire a simple, straightforward account of current reform efforts as an aid in understanding public questions." R. S. Childs
+ Survey 39:370 D 29 '17 180w

ARNOLD, SARAH LOUISE. Story of the Sargent industrial school at Beacon, New York, 1891-1916. il Sarah L. Arnold, Simmons college, Boston 640.7 A17-1514

An intimate account of the founding, growth and success of the Sargent industrial school at Beacon-on-Hudson. To establish a home school for girls, without an institutional aspect, where culture and refinement abound, where house-keeping and home-making are efficiently taught, where the community spirit is nourished—this was the original hope of the founder. She began her work in 1878 and from that time to the present has trained more than ten thousand girls. The program provides courses in sewing, dressmaking, embroidery, cooking, house-keeping, laundry work, physical training, singing and drawing. The influence of the school upon the community is a valuable aspect of Mrs Sargent's success.

ARNOLD, THOMAS JACKSON. Early life and letters of General Thomas J. Jackson, "Stonewall" Jackson. il *$2 Reveil 17-241

"From earliest childhood, Mr Arnold (who is a nephew of General Jackson) tells us, his memory is very clear as to the personal appearance of General Jackson, 'and from that time forward I knew him quite well as a boy would know a man.' . . . In later years, Mr Arnold knew intimately General Jackson's boyhood companions, and from them gathered much unpublished interesting information. In addition, he recently came into possession of more than one hundred letters from General Jackson's private correspondence. Of all this material he has made good, judicious use, producing what seems to the reader to be a new, and certainly a true portrait of the famous Confederate chieftain."—Lit D

"These evidences of Jackson's growth and inner life are both enlightening and characteristic, although it must be said that they do not materially qualify the picture we have in Dabney's 'Life and campaigns' or Henderson's remarkable portrait of more recent years. Mr Arnold has done his part of the work well and acceptably, without parade or undue hero-worship." W. E. Dodd

+ — Am Hist R 23:113 Ja '18 1150w

A L A Bkl 13:398 Je '17

Boston Transcript p8 Ja 31 '17 470w

"The domestic qualities of Stonewall Jackson are traced in a biography by his widow, the military qualities, in the standard biography by Henderson. Neither Mrs Jackson nor Henderson, however, was fully or accurately informed about the early life of the great soldier. Information regarding these formative years has been gathered carefully by Mr Thomas J. Arnold, Jackson's nephew, and is now published. . . . For those who would become thoroughly acquainted with either the exact details of Jackson's life, or the fulness of his character, an acquaintance with Mr Arnold's work is indispensable."

+ Dial 62:250 Mr 22 '17 250w

"A somewhat new and very personal view of the Confederate leader."

+ Ind 89:121 Mr 5 '17 160w

+ Lit D 54:260 F 3 '17 850w

R of Rs 55:216 F '17 80w

ARONOVICI, CAROL. Social survey. (Bu. for social research of the Seybert inst. of Philadelphia) il $1.25 (2½c) Harper press, 1012 Chancellor st., Philadelphia 309.1 16-1751S

This work has been developed from a pamphlet that was published as Bulletin no. 20 of the department of social and public service of the American Unitarian association. Parts of the book have also appeared in newspapers and magazines. Its purpose is to suggest lines of inquiry for those contemplating a local survey.

Contents: The meaning of the survey; General considerations; Character of the community; The city plan; Local government; Suffrage; Industry; Health; Leisure; Education; Welfare agencies; Crime; Statistical facts and the survey; Social legislation and the survey; The facts and the people; A social program. A list of Social agencies of national scope is given in an appendix and there is a bibliography of thirty-six pages.

"The volume gives evidence of rather hasty composition. Its workmanship is distinctly inferior to the grade which the writer has maintained in special articles. Current platitudes too frequently appear as substitutes for clear thinking. . . . The book gives little or no evidence of any utilization of the numerous reports of social surveys. A noticeable deficiency is the absence of even a brief résumé of the social survey movement. The merits, rather than the deficiencies, of the book are likely to impress the majority of its readers. The section on housing is an exceptionally good piece of work. Well-selected charts provide striking illustrations. . . . The bibliography is of service not only for its representative enumeration of surveys, but also for the classified selection of books. There is, however, no acknowledgment of the author's evident indebtedness to the 'Bibliography of the social survey,' published by the Department of surveys and exhibits of the Russell Sage foundation." E. W. Burgess

Am Econ R 7:424 Jc '17 420w

"Based on the author's wide experience as director of the Bureau for social research, Philadelphia, this book furnishes a good, usable text for civic clubs and classes or communities which are contemplating a survey."

+ A L A Bkl 13:243 Mr '17

"Closes with an excellent bibliography."

+ Cleveland p37 Mr '17 60w

"A useful introduction to the subject for the general reader, as well as a convenient manual of reference in regard to the important surveys already completed. The work is characterized throughout by an active appreciation of the value of facts as a guide to conduct, and of the value of vision in guiding research."

+ Ind 90:217 Ap 28 '17 120w

"It is not a handbook for social surveyors, but it is a first-rate introduction for the average citizen to the problems of his community." R. E. Park

+ J Pol Econ 25:752 Jl '17 270w

N Y Br Lib News 4:8 Ja '17 50w

Pittsburgh 22:131 F '17 90w

St Louis 14:428 D '16

ARTSYBASHEV, MIKHAIL PETROVICH. Tales of the revolution; tr. by Percy Pinkerton. *$1.50 (1½c) Huebsch 17-26653

There are five stories in this book: Sheviriof; The blood-stain; Morning shadows; Pasha Tumanof; The doctor. All are stories of men and women who sacrificed themselves for the revolution. It appears a hopeless cause, in which a few helpless individuals hurl themselves in futile rebellion against an invincible power, but the stories, dark as they are, will be read with a different feeling now, when it is known that the sacrifice was not in vain.

A L A Bkl 14:25 O '17

"Characterized for the most part by a grim realism."

Ath p253 My '17 10w

"This writer never lays himself open to criticism on the ground of inconsistency or of producing horror merely for horror's sake. The emotions that he describes are justified by the situations which produce them, and these in turn by his characters, who are undoubtedly real to his experience. . . . Personally we read him with mingled feelings—a deep admiration for his power and a feeling of the futility of its expenditure." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 11 '17 400w

"Artzibashev was a very young man when he wrote some of the stories in 'Tales of the revolution,' but they show little sign of immaturity.

. . . We may not like the Russia he shows us, we may even profess to disbelieve in its existence, yet he himself is the best proof that it does exist. It is a Russia that we must take into account in the present crisis, and in spite of Artzibashev's black pessimism, by no means as a factor altogether evil. For it is an honest and a straightforward and an unsentimental Russia, and even in its hopelessness it keeps on striving."

+ N Y Times 22:219 Jl 1 '17 80w

ASH, SHOLOM. Mottke, the vagabond (Mottke's game); tr. and ed. by Isaac Goldberg. *$1.50 (1½c) Luce, J. W. 17-30731

This novel, translated from the Yiddish, is a story of life in a Jewish village in Russian Poland and in the underworld of Warsaw. Mottke is born into an overcrowded household. His mother, who gave birth to a child each year, earned her living and that of her family by nursing other people's children, her own being left to survive or die, as it happened. Mottke, who early shows a tenacious grasp on life, survives, to grow up an unkempt, unlettered lad, the terror of his village. At fourteen he had experienced all the sensations of life—except murder. And that follows not long after. In turn Mottke is a blower in a glass factory, a member of a troupe of wandering acrobats, and keeper of a brothel. He is torn between his love for two women, is moved to reform himself for the sake of one of them, is betrayed by her, and in the face of the other's efforts to save him, gives himself up to defeat.

"The story has the usual characteristic of Russian literature, frankness, but also a certain wide humanity which makes it distinctive. In the great conflict of passions running through the book decency inevitably triumphs. The descriptions of Jewish life, told in nervous, vivid style are arresting." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 22 '17 780w

"The people throughout are well drawn, and the realism with which the life of the underworld is given makes it at once more pitiful and less alluring than most authors dare to present it. It is a sordid enough story, as far as its scenes go. Thieves, vagabonds, outcasts figure in it very largely. But they are not stereotyped, and therefore they have those moving qualities which belong to life in all its confusion of beauty and misery."

+ N Y Times 22:570 D 23 '17 1000w

ASHBEE, CHARLES ROBERT. American league to enforce peace; with an introd. by G. Lowes Dickinson. *2s 6d Allen & Unwin, London 341.1 17-24821

"Mr Ashbee, who was one of the few Englishmen present at the inauguration of the American League to enforce peace, interprets in this book the tendencies of modern American opinion; and emphasizes the significance of that movement, which passed almost unnoticed in England until President Wilson's speech in June, 1916. Like Mr Brailsford and others, he considers the adhesion of America to a League of nations would bring this project into the sphere of practical politics; and he is alive to the value of the United States as a counterweight in the European league; for the United States, within its own borders, is solving by fusion some problems of nationality."—Int J Ethics

+ Ath p256 My '17 90w

Int J Ethics 27:539 Jl '17 100w

"If Mr Ashbee does not later prove a true prophet, he has at any rate written a stimulating and incisive analysis of recent American public opinion towards international problems."

+ New Repub 13:sup16 N 17 '17 170w

Spec 118:568 My 19 '17 80w

ASHLEY, ROSCOE LEWIS. New civics; a textbook for secondary schools. il *$1.20 Macmillan 353 17-11359

"Part 1 is devoted to the topic, 'The citizen and society,' and contains chapters on citizenship, the education of the citizen, the American nation, civic organization, and the American

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

ASHLEY, ROSCOE LEWIS—Continued
home and family. Part 2 deals with 'Government and the citizen' and is made up of a chapter on each of the following topics: suffrage and elections, other means of popular control, civil liberty and public welfare, public finance, city government, state and country government, the national constitution, and the national government. Part 3 is on the general topic, 'Some public activities.' Public health and welfare, labor and industry, commerce, other business activities, territories and public land, and foreign relations are the subjects considered. The appendix contains an outline of a course on civic problems. . . . At the end of each chapter there is a list of general references on the material considered in the chapter, a series of topics for special consideration with exact references on each, a group of studies which contain material for brief daily reports, and, finally, a number of questions based, for the most part, on the text. Besides the foregoing aids the book contains some sixty-four well-selected illustrations and eight maps and charts.—School R

"Equipped with excellent notes and teaching aids. The book has been recommended to teachers of citizenship for adults in the extension department of the Cleveland schools."
+ Cleveland p135 D '17 90w

"If books like this could be placed in every school it is no rash prediction that the electorate of the next generation would view political issues more sanely and thoughtfully than this."
+ Ind 91:235 Ag 11 '17 70w

"Singularity free from any partisanship. Written as a text for high schools, it may well serve as a handy reference to the general reader."
A. D.

+ St Louis 15:322 S '17 21w

"From the standpoint of teaching aids the book has much to commend it. . . . There is also an abundance of marginal notes as well as footnotes. On the whole the book is a decided improvement over the traditional text on civics."
+ School R 25:532 S '17 280w

ASHLEY, W. B., comp. Church advertising; its why and how; papers delivered before the Church advertising section of the twelfth annual convention of the Associated advertising clubs of the world. il *$1 (4c)
Lippincott 260 17-19521

"A series of lively discussions of church advertising and publicity methods by authorities on the subject, who presented their views at the first national conference on church advertising held in Philadelphia in June, 1916. Seemingly nothing has been omitted in the way of church advertising, from the out-of-door devices, steeples, bulletins, etc., to moving pictures and newspaper publicity."—R of Rs

+ Ind 91:293 Ag 25 '17 100w

+ N Y Br Lib News 4:125 Ag '17

+ R of Rs 56:331 S '17 90w

"This volume gives many useful suggestions for the church which is looking for ideas. Hesitating churches will likewise get inspiration. Tell the world about the gospel and do it in the 20th century way—advertising. That seems to be the burden of these exhortations."
+ Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 1 '17 250w

ASHMUN, MARGARET ELIZA. Heart of Isabel Carleton. il *$1.25 (2c) Macmillan 17-25745

A sequel to "Isabel Carleton's year," one of last season's popular books for girls. The early scenes of the story are laid in London in the fall of 1914. Isabel and her cousin, Mrs. Everard, who have been traveling on the continent, reach England just as war is declared. The second part of the story takes her back to Jefferson. She is joyfully received by her family and enters the state university with every promise for a bright future. But there is a dark cloud in her sky, for between herself and Rodney Fox, always her best and most understanding friend, there seems to be a barrier.

But this situation is adjusted and Isabel is further made happy by the opportunity to do a service in memory of her friend, Molly Ramsay, whose death had been the tragic incident of the year before.

"Distinguished by its wholesome simplicity and its emphasis on natural interests and companionships. Not as sentimental as its title."
+ A L A Bkl 14:135 Ja '18

+ N Y Times 22:547 D 9 '17 70w

"An agreeable story for girls."

+ Outlook 117:432 N 14 '17 20w

+ Springf'd Republican p13 D 16 '17 140w

ASHTON, HELEN. Marshdikes. *$1.40 Brentano's

"Marshdikes is the house on the coast of England where Michael and Celia Diittany have made their home, and where they each do their writing. In different ways each has a sincere fondness for Francis Harland and a deep desire to bring more happiness into his life, as well as to give him some real interest in existence. For this reason they invite him to Marshdikes, hoping that this intimate glimpse of their own happiness may bring him nearer to falling in love with Michael's young half-sister Letty, who imagines herself tremendously in love with Harland. Through a series of clever chapters, Francis evades their efforts, always fearful of where they may lead him and always content with his rather superficial life. The way in which Celia gains her end, only to discover at last that she has made a mistake, is cleverly managed."—Boston Transcript

"A certain gift of brilliant dialogue is the largest attraction of this novel by a new writer."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 18 '17 320w

"The story, which begins simply as a gay and sparkling tale, becomes more serious as it proceeds."
+ N Y Times 22:137 Ap 15 '17 250w

ATHERTON, MRS GERTRUDE FRANKLIN (HORN). Living present. il *$1.50 (2½c) Stokes 940.91 17-18157

Mrs Atherton spent several months in France in 1916 studying the work of French women. She devotes the major part of her book to the work they are doing to help win the war and to the changes that the war seems to be making in French life, especially in the re-action of the French woman to life. The last five chapters, under the caption "Feminism in peace and war," discuss the present and probable future status of woman in the United States as well as in Europe.

A L A Bkl 14:17 O '17

"One gets a feeling of impressions caught at lightning speed and given out all the more personally for not having been mulled over and reasoned out." Edna Kenton

+ Bookm 46:343 N '17 830w

"A distinctly valuable sociological contribution as well as a vivid record of contemporary women." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 11 '17 920w

"The second part of the present volume is worthless; but the first part where the author states facts, and does not attempt to philosophize, is interesting and even inspiring."
+ Cath World 106:124 O '17 570w

"Strongly tinged with Mrs Atherton's personality and feminist views, the book is readable and provocative of thought."
+ Cleveland p118 N '17 50w

"Mrs Atherton's book, we believe, would have been more delightful, had she confined herself to portraiture and narrative, instead of under-taking, rather superficially, an abstract discussion of values."
+ Dial 63:166 Ag 30 '17 400w

Ind 91:352 S 1 '17 60w

+ Lit D 55:48 D 1 '17 200w

"Her book is a curious although intriguing jumble of prejudice, keen, swift insight, merciless observation and a good deal of perhaps unconscious snobbery. Only Mrs Atherton could have written it without misgivings."

+ — New Repub 12:310 O 13 '17 450w

"She writes with frank and astonishing one-sidedness." C. W.

— N Y Call p14 Ag 26 '17 180w

+ N Y Times 22:254 J1 8 '17 950w

"Of some of the ideas she strikes out, one can say only that they show ability, not that they are inherently sound. The notion, for example, that there is among woman an instinctive tendency toward a return to the primeval matriarchate, though none too seriously advanced, is yet advanced with more seriousness than it probably deserves. Inherently sound ideas are, however, not lacking."

+ — No Am 266:635 O '17 950w

+ Outlook 116:592 Ag 15 '17 90w

+ Pittsburgh 22:679 O '17 40w

"Her speculations as to the bearing of the war on the future course of feminism in France are also provocatively stimulating."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p579 N 29 '17 770w

ATKINSON, ELEANOR (STACKHOUSE) (MRS FRANCIS BLAKE ATKINSON). Hearts undaunted; a romance of four frontiers. il *$1.30 (2c) Harper 17-31031

This story follows the forward movement of the frontier from northern New York to Chicago. The heroine, Eleanor Lytle, spends her childhood as a captive among the Indians. As a little girl of three, she attracts the attention of Chief Cornplanter, who kidnaps her and makes her an honored member of his tribe. She is grown to young womanhood before she is returned to her sorrowing mother. To make up to her for the years of suffering, Eleanor marries the man who is her mother's choice, but later, after his death, she marries one she loves and goes westward with him, as a pioneer to the new frontier.

"Of limited appeal."

+ — A L A Bkl 14:163 F '18

"Despite its interest, and the fact that it is based on historic truth, the book does lack the element of realism. It is glossed over with sentimentality; heroism and nobility are unrelieved by any mere human failing. It is, however, much more entertaining than the average romance, and the stressed historic note gives it an added interest."

+ — N Y Times 22:500 N 25 '17 400w

ATWOOD, ALBERT WILLIAM. How to get ahead; saving money and making it work. *$1.25 (2c) Bobbs 331.84 17-6557

"The purpose of this book is to help young men and women of moderate earning capacity to save and invest money. Incidentally its aim is to show the advantages of thrift. The main purpose is the practical one of explaining actual, workable methods of saving and investment." (Introd.) The author writes on: Money—its use and abuse; Real and unreal wants; Personal finance; Family finance; Saving on small wages; Making money work; Owning a home; Different kinds of desirable investments, etc.

"Author is a lecturer on finance at New York university."

+ A L A Bkl 13:329 My '17

"There is not much in recognition of those ideals of life which are higher than money making and money saving. But there are a few reminders that many wage-earners are failing to make the most of their opportunities."

Boston Transcript p6 Je 27 '17 350w

+ Ind 90:517 Je 16 '17 40w

N Y Br Lib News 4:43 Mr '17

Pittsburgh 22:689 O '17 40w

+ St Louis 15:135 My '17 30w

St Louis 15:347 S '17

AUMONIER, STACY. Friends, and other stories. *$1 (2½c) Century 17-23334

"Stacy Aumonier, author of 'Olga Bardel,' is an Englishman well known in London as a landscape painter as well as a writer. This book contains three of his short stories, of which 'The friends,' which gives title to the volume, appeared in the Century Magazine. . . . The other two, 'The packet' and 'In the way of business,' are similar in theme and treatment. . . . All three deal with business men in London, salesmen and department managers of furniture or dry goods houses, and the central theme of all of them is the immense amount of alcohol these men consume by way of facilitating the conduct of their affairs. . . . One of the stories, 'In the way of business,' deals with the business career of a hard-working, upright, morally fastidious man who does not like alcoholic drinks and to whom they are physically ruinous. The story tells how, notwithstanding his struggles, he cannot make a living for his family until, little by little, he comes round to the methods of the others, and what happened to him afterward."—N Y Times

"The initial story is by far the best of the three. . . . There is no air of preaching about it, no attempt to draw a moral. It is just a story told with such fine realism, such artistic and impressive selection and arrangement of incidents that it becomes wholly convincing."

+ N Y Times 22:336 S 9 '17 470w

AUSTIN, FRANK EUGENE. Examples in battery engineering. il $1.25 Austin, F. E., Hanover, N.H. 621.3 17-20028

"'Battery engineering' is quite distinct from the subject of the chemistry, or chemical reactions accompanying the operation of batteries. The latter subject is not given extensive consideration in this book; it being deemed expedient to devote the discussion to those features that are of importance in the efficient industrial operation of any and all types or kinds of cells and batteries. . . . The arrangement of the subject matter in lessons under important subject headings adapts the book for use as a textbook, while the discussion of the application of theory to practice renders the book useful to electricians, operators of submarines, and of automobiles." (Preface) The author is a professor in the Thayer school of civil engineering connected with Dartmouth college.

AUSTIN, FRANK EUGENE. Preliminary mathematics. $1.20 Austin, F. E., Hanover, N.H. 512 17-11117

"This book is designed by its author, a professor in the Thayer school of civil engineering connected with Dartmouth college, to serve as a connecting link between the study of arithmetic and the study of algebra. "The subject matter up to page 77 is suitable for pupils in the eighth grade and below, while the remaining portion of the text will prove of assistance to pupils in the high schools. . . . Many points are explained herein that are passed over in ordinary text books. The chief object of this book is to show how to solve problems." (Preface)

"Useful to one who has not had the advantages of school and wishes to take up arithmetic and algebra by himself."

+ Pittsburgh 22:443 My '17 100w (Reprinted from Telephone p46 Ap 7 '17)

Railway Mechanical Engineer p175 Ap '17

AUSTIN, MARY (HUNTER) (MRS STAFFORD W. AUSTIN). The ford. il *$1.50 (1c) Houghton 17-11466

California is at once the scene and the theme of this novel. Steven Brent, one of those men who have an instinctive feeling for the soil, who are meant to be its tillers, has nurtured his ranch, Las Palomitas, till it is on the point of paying, when he yields to the persuasions of his wife and the promises held out by the speculators and goes into oil. But men of his calibre are not built for speculation. Financial failure and the wife's death come together. The story thereafter is concerned with the two

AUSTIN, MARY—Continued

Brent children, Anne and Kenneth, whose dream it is to buy back Las Palomitas. In the end it is Anne who accomplishes it, for Anne proves to have the business sense that those two lovers of the soil for its own sake, Kenneth and his father, lack. Anne is the new woman at her best.

"Well written and more interesting for its atmosphere and character drawing than for its plot."

+ A L A Bkl 13:448 J1 '17

"A story of fine feeling and (to use a wooden term) exceptional workmanship. Its four women might be taken as a microcosm of the modern world of women." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:412 Je '17 550w

"The great social and commercial plot behind these children is strongly handled and conveys more than any other American fiction since Frank Norris of what Mrs Austin calls the 'epic quality of the west.'" J. Macy

+ Dial 63:112 Ag 16 '17 380w

"The story is interesting, and yet it disappoints us in some way not easy to describe. There is a vagueness which allows the mind of the reader to wander and his interest to flag. . . . Words cloud the plot and befog the issue."

+ Lit D 54:1858 Je 16 '17 180w

"In this book is a substance worthy of Mrs Austin's rich and finished style."

+ Natlon 104:601 My 17 '17 680w

"Brooding deep beneath the ferocious animosities of capitalist and homesteader, Mary Austin has wrought in her still pastoral something of almost Biblical beauty. Some few novels of the year may offer as good construction; fewer as clear, racy diction; none a more satisfying picture than little dripping Kenneth with the drowned lamb in his arms." T. L. Mygatt

+ N Y Call p14 J1 '17 600w

+ N Y Times 22:157 Ap 22 '17 650w

"Industrial conditions, business intrigue, social reactions, and the temperaments of individuals are all constantly involved among the motives of this remarkable tale, and all are treated with knowledge, with insight, and with feeling. It is one's final impression, however, that the story as a whole fails to attain a quite sufficient unity and strength. . . . The reader is roused as by an impassioned plea; he is stimulated to the point of being ready to change his whole outlook upon life and yet in the end he cannot tell whether the thing that has so impressed him is Providence or the brute forces of life or the spirit of California. . . . One must marvel at the degree of success which Mrs Austin has attained in treating a broad and complex theme both comprehensively and minutely, both psychologically and epically."

+ No Am 296:132 J1 '17 1050w

"The description is clear and strong in its picture of industrial conditions. There are also charm and romance in the life of the young people. The plot and development are not as closely woven as one could wish."

+ Outlook 116:32 My 2 '17 50w

"Stands without a peer among recent books of fiction as a thoroughly characteristic portrayal of a typically American community of the West."

+ R of Rs 55:663 Je '17 470w

+ Springf'd Republican p15 J1 22 '17 500w

AYDELOTTE, FRANK, ed. English and engineering. *$1.50 McGraw 620.7 17-4321

A collection of essays for the use of English classes in engineering colleges. "A quotation from the introduction is the fullest explanation of Professor Aydelotte's endeavor, and an index of the pedagogic value of his work: 'To train the student to write by first training him to think—to stimulate his thought by directing his attention to problems of his own profession and of his own education and to the illumination of them which he can find in literature; these two tasks may be performed together—better together than separately—and with that double aim in view this collection has been made.'" (Engin Rec)

A L A Bkl 13:340 My '17

"An admirable collection of essays with a breadth and keenness of selection that certifies the right of its compiler to occupy the chair of English in one of our greatest engineering schools. Also a most commendable introduction whose ideas are unassailable and remarkably illustrated. . . . In no sense can it be taken as a handbook. It needs the attention of the class to make its somewhat hidden gold to glisten. To any except those who know writing and its methods, the collection of essays would prove a bewilderment."

+ Engin Rec 75:275 F 17 '17 450w

"If this book is designed for use in a course in freshman composition, it has too limited a scope, if it is to be used for the specific purpose indicated above, as a part of a broader programme, it is an admirable volume."

Natlon 104:547 My 3 '17 400w

N Y Br Lib News 4:61 Ap '17

Pittsburgh 22:204 Mr '17

"Collection of selected essays, some by famous authors and some by others of lesser note. . . . A most interesting collection of good writings that any man will profit by reading, and it should find a welcome on the shelf of every technical man who aspires, as he should, to evaluate the place that his profession occupies in the affairs of the world." D. S. Kimball + Pittsburgh 22:332 Ap '17 60w (reprinted from American Machinist p440 Mr 8 '17)

"The author is professor of English in the Massachusetts institute of technology."

St Louis 15:117 Ap '17 12w

AYDELOTTE, FRANK, Oxford stamp, and 2 other essays. *$1.20 Oxford 378 18-390

"A group of essays forming the 'educational creed of an American Oxonian' is brought together in this volume whose writer is Professor Frank Aydelotte of the Massachusetts Institute of technology, and they are the fruits of his residence and study at the English university as a Rhodes scholar. 'The holder of one of these appointments,' he says, 'who on his return from Oxford engages in university teaching in this country, inevitably makes comparisons, and looks at many of our educational problems from a new point of view. Much in the work and atmosphere of an English university is strikingly different from the adaptations of German university methods which have prevailed in our higher education for half a century. In the hope that this point of view may interest students of our educational problems, these essays are put together.' Among their titles are 'The Oxford stamp,' 'Spectators and sport,' 'The religion of punch,' 'A challenge to Rhodes scholars,' 'English as humane letters,' and 'Robert Louis Stevenson darkening counsel.'"—Boston Transcript

"Rarely before has the complex English college system and the unique English college life been described so clearly and so briefly." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 29 '17 950w

AYSCOUGH, JOHN, pseud. (BP. FRANCIS BROWNING, DREW BICKERSTAFFE, DREW). French windows. *$1.50 Longmans 940.91 17-24699

The author of this book, the chapters of which originally appeared in the Month, an English periodical, was for the first eighteen months of the war attached to the British expeditionary force as chaplain to a field ambulance. The book does not describe military operations, but consists mainly of conversations with various French and British soldiers. Though John Ayscough is known as a writer of highly imaginative fiction, he assures us that every character and episode in these pages is taken from life, and that his first-hand impressions have not been retouched.

"It sounds like a contradiction of terms to speak of a charming war book; yet this is exactly what John Ayscough's new volume is—a book of the war, written in the very heat of the war and out of its turbulent heart, throbbing with its deepest feelings, and yet charming beyond words. Whatever of self-revelation the soldier himself in this war may write, we can never again quite so penetratingly see into it as John Ayscough makes us see."

+ Cath World 106:683 F '18 210w

Cleveland p85 J1 '17 60w

"The book is always sympathetic, often heart-breaking, almost always tender, and not easy to forget."

+ N Y Times 22:558 D 16 '17 430w

"Episodes and characters are drawn from reality and each conversation is a portrait and a history."

+ Pittsburgh 22:679 O '17 70w

"Some of the conversations are of so intimate a character that it almost seems indecent to have recorded them. Humour and pathos jostle one another in these fugitive pages. John Ayscough seems to realize that if things are tragic enough they are funny. Insight and understanding are in this book, and, in spite of a tendency to occasional gush and rhapsody, it has a value of its own. It reveals the simple greatness of the English soldier."

+ Sat R 123:sup6 My 19 '17 100w

"The point of view is that of a man of fifty-six, a Roman Catholic priest singularly devoid of any sectarian bias; one who, though not French, loves every field of France as if he had been born on it, and speaks her language fluently, if not idiomatically; a lover of his kind, 'half priest and half poet'; and above all a thinker who looks at everything 'sub specie æternitatis', and even in the darkest hours remains undismayed and unshaken in his faith. . . . This is a book which differs from most war books by reason of its aim. It shows that amid all that makes for brutalization and misery and despair in modern warfare, there are exultations as well as agonies, and that man's soul remains unconquerable."

+ Spec 118:61 J1 21 '17 1650w

"Mr Ayscough evidently inspires affection in the young soldiers with whom he lives; he betrays his natural pleasure thereat, with undeniable egotism and he records far too categorically the terms in which that affection is conveyed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p197 Ap 26 '17 320w

AZAN, PAUL JEAN LOUIS. War of positions; with a preface by Brigadier General Joseph E. Kuhn, U.S.A.; tr. at Harvard university. *$1.25 Harvard univ. press 355 17-22880

"The author of this little book is one of the group of officers sent over here by the French government to assist in the training of officers for our new American army. As chief of the military mission which was sent to the Officers' reserve training camp at Harvard, he worked there all spring and summer, arousing the greatest of enthusiasm among the hundreds of men who were in training under him. . . . The same principles of warfare which he expounded to his pupils there he has explained in this book. . . . In part one the author considers the present war, its general characteristics, the different forms of warfare it has developed, the fronts, attrition, principles of offensive and defensive, the rôle of a high command in an offensive, the functions of the different arms of the service. The second part deals with 'Positions,' their organization, trench duties and relief, while the third and fourth parts develop the principles of attack on a position and defense of a position."—N Y Times

A L A Bki 14:75 D '17

"While written primarily for the instruction of American officers who are going abroad it is full of interest for the student of military history or for any intelligent reader."

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:789 N '17 170w

"The book ought to be of the greatest value to all officers and non-coms of the new American armies and of their privates as well. In his capacity as director of officers' schools in France, Colonel Azan has trained a large part of the French officers up to and including the rank of major. He has, therefore, learned how to teach."

+ N Y Times 22:453 N 4 '17 450w

St Louis 15:417 D '17 20w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p571 N 22 '17 50w

B

BACHELLER, IRVING ADDISON. Light in the clearing; a tale of the north country in the time of Silas Wright. il *$1.50 (1c) Bobbs 17-11215

A story of northern New York state in the first half of the nineteenth century. Much of it is woven about the career of Silas Wright, an early governor of the state. It is told in the first person, however, by Barton Baynes, a boy who came under Wright's protection early in his career and who was inspired by the older man's encouragement and example. The early chapters, telling of Barton's boyhood, spent with stern-faced Aunt Deel and big-hearted Uncle Peabody, give a good picture of the life of the times.

+ A L A Bki 13:401 Je '17

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:408 Je '17 650w

"Readers Mr Bacheller will have for his latest novel, and plenty of them, but it will not be long in passing into the dim obscurity of contemporary fiction. It is thoroughly out of date. It is not even a good example of the desirable things of the past, of those departed forms of fiction whose death we sometimes regret. It is distinctly the survival of the unfittest. Yet it is entertaining in its way." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 14 '17 1350w

+ Cath World 105:554 J1 '17 100w

"Told with simplicity, kindly humor, and genuine understanding."

+ Dial 62:483 My 31 '17 200w

"Excellent as are Mr Bacheller's other works—'Eben Holden,' 'D'ri and I,' and the ever-popular 'Keeping up with Lizzie'—none of them equals this story of the forties, either in artistic finish or in breadth of spirit. It is a book we would like every American girl and boy to read."

+ Ind 90:380 My 26 '17 150w

"The book is amusing and certainly uplifting in its influence, but sometimes a trifle artificial."

+ Lit D 54:1856 Je 16 '17 210w

"The light in the clearing' takes us, yet again, upon a sentimental journey, in a very good sense of the term, into the past. . . . Mr Bacheller has the knack of making one's throat swell with simple, homeselt emotion for the golden rule and other tritenesses which, for the most part, we are ready enough to abandon to the movies, literary and other."

+ Nation 104:581 My 10 '17 560w

"Very different in method and purpose from any of his previous stories, Mr Bacheller's new novel must be accounted, at the outset, as quite the most important piece of fiction he has put forth."

+ N Y Times 22:125 Ap 8 '17 850w

"The light in the clearing' is an exact complement to 'Eben Holden,' as unmistakably good, less idyllic, but stronger. The two together would seem in themselves to assure their author a considerable and permanent place in American literature."

+ No Am 205:947 Je '17 1200w

"Sturdy American ideals are wholesomely offered to admiration and emulation."

+ Outlook 116:32 My 2 '17 50w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BACHELLER, IRVING ADDISON—Continued

"It is a story of simple, homespun life, full of wide, out-door freedom, and the healing, balsamic breath of a cleaner, younger world." F: T. Cooper

+ Pub W 91:1316 Ap 21 '17 550w

"While the story is episodic, it is skillfully knit, and the reader's attention never relaxes until the final page is turned. The book will have a host of contented readers."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 My 13 '17 650w

"The continual exaltation of commonplace virtues makes it a wholesome but somewhat tiresome story."

+ — Wis Lib Bul 13:221 Jl '17 40w

BACON, CORINNE, comp. Children's catalog of thirty-five hundred books; a guide to the best reading for boys and girls. (Standard catalog ser.) *$6 Wilson, H. W. 028.5

17-17986

The first edition of the Children's catalog, a 1,000-title list, was noted in the Digest in 1916. The 3,500-title list includes a few books in French and German; also a few 1916 books published too late for inclusion in the 2,000-title list. 700 volumes have been analyzed. "The editor has been fortunate in securing the advice and cooperation of Miss Agnes Cowing, of the Pratt institute free library; Miss Alice I. Hazeltine, of the St Louis public library; Miss Hatch, of the Cleveland public library, and of the staff of the Carnegie library of Pittsburgh. . . . The numbers in parentheses after titles indicate approximately the grades for which the books are suitable, and have been taken for the most part from various library lists. Two of the collaborators also made suggestions as to grading." (Preface) The 1,000 list, buckram bound, sells for $2; the 2,000 list, for $4; the 3,500 list for $6. These catalogs are also issued in paper covers printed on light-weight paper for quantity use. These are for sale exclusively to those who have previously purchased at least one bound copy. They are sold in lots of ten or more at 15c, 25c, and 40c per copy.

A L A Bkl 13:272 Mr '17

"This compilation, by one whose work in other lines gives assurance of more than usual merit, is based on many selected lists, and is the result of the advice and co-operation of children's librarians and others familiar with literature for children."

Bul of Bibliography 9:112 Ja '17 170w

"All workers with boys and girls, and especially those who have to do with school and public libraries will be grateful to the compiler for the infinite pains she has taken to make sure of a wise selection of really good, wholesome books for young people. Parents will do well to consult the catalog in the public library which they patronize. It goes without saying that every public library will make available this unsurpassed list, without which no library can be said to be properly equipped." F. H. P.

+ Education 36:660 Je '17 140w

"The author and publisher of this important book has done a great service to teachers in every grade of the elementary school. As the title indicates, the list is large enough to include the best in all of the more important fields of knowledge."

+ El School J 18:77 S '17 350w

"A most valuable bibliography of elementary-school children's books and books about such books."

+ English Journal (Chicago) 6:207 Mr '17 20w

"It is needless to say the advice is trustworthy and of immense value to librarians, teachers and book purchasers."

+ Ind 91:297 Ag 25 '17 60w

"Every school and every home needs it in order to buy books intelligently."

+ Journal of Education 85:702 Je 21 '17 120w

"The catalog containing 2,000 titles and analyticals for 447 volumes has been practically tested in our children's room and found to answer most of the demands, although for large collections the 3,500 list now [April, 1917] in preparation will of course be more satisfactory. . . . The questions now asked by school children demand indexes that will lead directly to up-to-date reliable facts. How well this demand has been met may be judged by a few titles taken at random from the 2,000 catalog. . . . The profession owes a debt of gratitude to Miss Bacon for supplying so indispensable a tool that will lessen the present duplication of effort and promote greater efficiency." N. M. De Laughter

+ Public Libraries 22:148 Ap '17 400w

"The list will be useful to librarians for selection and for cataloging. The subject headings conform in the main to Miss Mann's 'Subject headings for use in dictionary catalogs of juvenile books.' It will be useful at the librarian's desk if checked with books in the library and used as a printed catalog. . . . Extra copies would be useful for the public, for special use of teachers, or for catalogers."

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:13 Ja '17 270w

BACON, CORINNE, comp. Prison reform. *$1.25 (1c) Wilson, H. W. 365 17-4496

This volume in the Handbook series is designed to give the reader a general knowledge of prison reform in the United States. The material of the book, a selection of the best articles from the literature on the subject, is arranged under nine headings: History of prison reform; Conditions and methods in prisons and reformatories; Sing Sing and Warden Osborne; Psychopathic clinics and classification of prisoners; Convict labor; Indeterminate sentence; Probation and parole; Jails; Centralized control of penal institutions. The bibliography, which is unusually full, follows a similar arrangement. A paper on "The prison of the future" has been written for the volume by Thomas Mott Osborne.

A L A Bkl 13:288 Ap '17

Cath World 105:835 S '17 140w

"There is an excellent bibliography."

+ Cleveland p39 Mr '17 80w

"A timely and much-needed work."

+ Ind 89:362 F 26 '17 20w

"It is a compilation of over 90 articles by students and experts covering almost the entire field of penology. . . . In addition to the 300 pages devoted to the various aspects of reform within the walls, there is a valuable bibliography of 24 pages, listing books, pamphlets, reports, periodicals and many articles dealing with the general subject. . . . We take pleasure in commending this book to all students and readers of penological problems."

Journal of Prison Discipline and Philanthropy n s 56:43 Mr '17 140w

Springf'd Republican p15 Jl 15 '17 180w

Reviewed by Philip Klein

Survey 38:16 Ap 14 '17 120w

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:59 F '17 60w

BACON, GEORGE WASHINGTON. Keeping young and well; annotated by W: T. Fernie. *$1 (3c) Clode, E: J. 613 17-24633

The author of "Health and longevity" packs these new chapters full of valuable matter which aims at a maximum of utility with a minimum of words. A long study of personal hygiene and a life-long practice of what the writer preaches give authority to his undertaking. Contents: Health hints for the home; Bodily organs and their functions; Our food, and errors in diet; The drink habit; Light, pure air and ventilation; Respiration and deep breathing; Cheerfulness and happiness; Exercise and rest; Sound sleep and its benefits; Vital energy—conserved or wasted; A long and healthy life; Fifty maxims and rules for the aged; Colds: causes, prevention, remedies; One hundred ailments—cause, prevention and home remedies; Our foods and their medicinal values; Medical glossary.

BADLEY, JOHN HADEN. Education after the war. *$1.25 Longmans 375

(Eng ed E17-671)

"The author has been for many years a leader in British education, especially in the Workers' educational association, but he is best known for the demonstration school which he has maintained for twenty-four years at Petersfield in Hampshire. . . . Mr J. H. Badley was trained at Rugby, at Cambridge and in Germany. He was interested with Cecil Reddie and Edward Carpenter in the opening of Abbotsholme, but turned from this work to the establishment of his old experimental school primarily because of his interest in coeducation. . . . The book contains a careful consideration of the needs of each stage of life from the nursery up. The differentiation of workers and professional groups is well thought out. The plan for training for national service gives consideration to the claims of militarism."—Springf'd Republican

"Mr Badley rightly says that all subjects will be equally narrowing in their influence if the value of any kind of work be judged by the direct help it will give to the earning of an income. He proposes that special work required for professional training should be begun during the last two years of the suggested longer school course, with the object of relieving the university of much of the preliminary work which now usually occupies the first year of its course. Stress is laid upon the value of research to university students."

+ Ath p355 J1 '17 200w

"Of especial interest to Americans are the plans for training for national service. A positive program is given in detail but possibly of equal importance is the very clear showing of what is not essential to this training." F. A. Manny

+ Educ R 54:191 S '17 600w

"America has much to learn from what he offers."

+ Ind 91:296 Ag 25 '17 100w

"Those who have followed the author's work will not be surprised to find the outline and details of this post-war program suggestive at many points for American needs."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 22 '17 400w

BAGWELL, RICHARD. Ireland under the Stuarts and during the interregnum. 3v v 3 *$5 Longmans $41.5

v 3 1660-1690.

"There are now six stately volumes written by Mr Bagwell, and in them he narrates the fortunes of his native land from the days of the Tudors to the fall of the Stuarts at the battle of the Boyne. . . . In the larger part of the present book he has no other historian to fear, for he is the first to describe the reign of Charles II at any length or with any proper sense of the importance of its opening years. . . . From measures to men there is an easy transition. The historian is quite at home in drawing the characters of men like Lord Robartes, Lord Berkeley, Essex, and Clarendon, who were the real governors of the country. . . . Another prominent man is Tyrconnel, and a consideration of his strange career introduces quite naturally the revolution in Ireland. . . . In the concluding chapters Mr Bagwell has a short account of the three churches and the social state of the country from the restoration to the revolution." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) For volumes 1 and 2 of this history, consult Digest annual volume for 1909.

"The first adequate account of Ireland during the restoration. That, in a sense, is the chief contribution of this present volume. . . . From his pages are eliminated that passion which has made most Irish history all politics, and that memory of wrongs which has made most Irish politics all history." W. C. Abbott

+ Am Hist R 22:645 Ap '17 1000w (Review of v 3)

"Though Irish by birth, Mr Bagwell is probably of Anglo-Irish stock. In politics he is a Unionist of the more positive type. This fact is, of course, sufficient to render his work unacceptable to a large part of the reading public in Ireland; for in spite of his almost painful effort to do justice to both sides in the controversies of Britain, it is quite clear that Mr Bagwell regards the union of Ireland with England as one that is necessary to both countries. Critics generally have, however, found much to praise in Mr Bagwell's histories. His evident fairness, his judicial attitude, his restraint in drawing conclusions and in framing statements have been remarked upon by many reviewers. For his literary style there is very little to be said; it is clear but prosy and bald."

L. M. Larson

+ Dial 62:354 Ap 19 '17 1600w (Review of v 3)

"The first two volumes of 'Ireland under the Tudors' appeared in 1885. It was hailed in this Review as inaugurating 'a new departure in Irish historiography,' by its 'judicial tone' and its unprejudiced method of treating the political and ecclesiastical controversies of the sixteenth century. At the same time the complaint was made that 'he crowded his canvas with too many facts to enable the student to realize quite distinctly the salient features of his subject.' The present volume deserves the same praise, but is not open to similar criticism. Mr Bagwell's six volumes (including in the total the three on 'Ireland under the Tudors') are a monument of well-directed industry, and he has gained in mastery of his materials as his work proceeded." C. H. Firth

* + Eng Hist R 32:296 Ap '17 500w (Review of v 3)

"Ireland, more, almost, than any other land, demands the candor of impartiality in those who would narrate its history. To have achieved this with such splendid thoroughness is Mr Bagwell's peculiar triumph. The period under consideration is one of the most crucial in all Irish history. . . . To read intelligently the history of the nineteenth century in Ireland one must understand and appreciate the results of this distribution of territory in the seventeenth. . . . The book is provided with helpful notes and a useful index."

* + Nation 105:128 Ag 2 '17 330w (Review of v 3)

"He does not describe the war after the Boyne, perhaps because Dr Murray has done this so thoroughly in his recent book. The chapters on social conditions and the churches are excellent but very brief. Dr Bagwell is reserved to a fault, but his history—the work of a whole generation—is the best and almost the only impartial account of Tudor and Stuart Ireland."

+ Spec 117:sup533 N 4 '16 130w (Review of v 3)

"Since the death of W. E. H. Lecky, Mr Richard Bagwell is the foremost Irish historian. . . . No one could adequately review a book like that lying before us, and hope to do full justice to its many-sidedness. All we can say is that we have been steadily using its two predecessors in the course of our work on the Stuart period and that the more we use them the more we admire them."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p496 O 19 '16 1700w (Review of v 3)

BAILEY, EDGAR HENRY SUMMERFIELD. Text-book of sanitary and applied chemistry; or, The chemistry of water, air and food. 4th ed rev *$1.60 Macmillan 660

17-13814

"Prof. E. H. S. Bailey's 'Sanitary and applied chemistry' appears this year—the eleventh since its first publication—in a fourth, revised edition. Its persistence in recurring editions is testimony to the place it has won for itself in our colleges. Designed for students who have already had a course in general chemistry, it deals with the most important applications of chemistry to the life of the household, without attempting to cover the whole field of what may be called 'chemistry in daily life.' An important feature of the book is the introduction of directions for performing many well-chosen illustrative experiments. In this latest edition, the text has been corrected and much of it rewritten and brought down to date; and chapters on Textiles and on Poison and their anti-

BAILEY, E. H. S.—Continued
dotes have been added, increasing the contents by about sixty pages over the last previous edition of 1913. A good index enhances the working value of the text."—Nation

"The chapters on the Purification of water and Sewerage have been revised and brought up to date. . . . There is no bibliography in this edition."

A L A Bkl 13:455 J1 '17

"It is not only an excellent textbook, but is written in such a clear style that it should prove valuable to housewives wishing a work of general information and reference on their everyday problems."

+ Ind 91:264 Ag 18 '17 50w

+ Nation 105:275 S 6 '17 160w

St Louis 15:393 N '17 20w

"Throughout the text there are distributed 197 well selected experiments which will greatly help to fix important facts in the student's mind." W. P. Mason

+ Science n s 46:540 N 30 '17 100w

BAILEY, HENRY CHRISTOPHER. Highwayman. *$1.50 Dutton (Eng ed 15-19412)

"The hero of 'The highwayman' is of the type that the Baroness Orczy delights in drawing—imperturbable, expressionless, of an ironical turn of mind, and possessed of depths which a woman's charm alone can stir. In the generation of Harry Boyce these qualities cried out for adventure and romance, for it was also the generation of the 'good' Queen Anne, of the Pretender, and of the great Duke of Marlborough. With all these did our hero have dealings, but more especially was he lured by the charms of the wayward Alison, whom fate and the impulse of a moment had given him to wife."—Dial

"We should have been glad to see more of the historical characters introduced by Mr Bailey, for he succeeded in creating a fascinating illusion of their presence and speech. Praise is due to the excellent style of the novel, which is undoubtedly the work of an accomplished and conscientious draftsman."

+ Ath 1915.2:174 S 11 200w

"His wit is more after the manner of Fielding or of Wycherley than of the later and the modern historical sentimentalists. 'The highwayman' is a good brisk story for those not too squeamish."

Dial 62:403 My 3 '17 120w

"Piquancy is the chosen note, and the performer thoroughly enjoys being piquant. . . . There is great play of wit in these pages, as well as the play of swords; the author especially loves, and liberally presents, the naughtiness of polite humor in the reign of Queen Anne."

Nation 104:460 Ap 19 '17 200w

+ N Y Times 22:136 Ap 15 '17 250w

"An over-mannered and not altogether agreeable tale of Queen Anne's time."

— Outlook 115:622 Ap 4 '17 10w

"A story most spirited, as is always Mr Bailey's work, of the open road."

+ Spec 115:513 O 16 '15 20w

BAILEY, LIBERTY HYDE. Standard encyclopedia of horticulture. 6v v 6 il *$6 Macmillan 634 (14-616s)

v 6 "The last volume extends from S through Z. In addition there is a complete index to the six volumes, a finding list of binomials, a cultivator's guide and a supplement of additional species which have been introduced to cultivation in this country since the first volumes were prepared. The list of collaborators contains the names of the most prominent men in horticulture and allied sciences in this country."—Spring'd Republican

"It is to be expected that the nomenclature of this work will be adopted so far as possible by all nurserymen and landscape architects, so that there will be some uniformity. A finding-list is intended to accompany volume six, giving the various more important common and botanical names of plants, with a reference to the name under which the plant appears in the cyclopaedia. A committee of the American society of landscape architects, the Ornamental growers association, and other bodies interested, is now working upon the subject of the standardization of the names of plants, and the finding-list will have the benefit of their labors to the date of its publication."

Landscape Architecture 7:100 Ja '17 230w

N Y Times 22:165 Ap 29 '17 80w

"The sixth volume in every way upholds the high standard set by the preceding volumes. . . . The cyclopaedia is a work containing items of interest to the practical man as well as the scientist. Every group of plants is treated from both the practical side and the botanical viewpoint. . . . It is of interest to the florist, market gardener, nurseryman, botanist, landscapist and all lovers of plant life. . . . While there are many changes in nomenclature, they are such as have been recommended by the highest authorities in the country."

+ + Spring'd Republican p15 J1 22 '17 220w

BAILEY, TEMPLE. Mistress Anne. il *$1.35 (2c) Penn 17-11213

"Mistress" Anne Warfield was a young Maryland school-teacher with clear ideals and a belief in the dignity of work. She was also the granddaughter of Cynthia Warfield, an aristocrat of the older South. So when the quiet of the little southern village was invaded by a popular novelist, a New York doctor and his mother (who, however, were of the South), and some brilliant society women, Anne's innate good breeding overcame her inexperience and comparative poverty and she found her place among them. The scene changes from the quiet Maryland riverside to fashionable New York and three love-stories run to a comfortable conclusion.

+ A L A Bkl 13:448 J1 '17

"It is written in the same vein as its successful predecessor, 'Contrary Mary,' but is neither so quaint nor so touching nor so piquant as the earlier book."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 9 '17 170w

N J Lib Bul p7 Ap '17 20w

+ N Y Times 22:250 J1 1 '17 250w

— Ontario Library Review 1:116 My '17 150w

+ Outlook 116:116 My 16 '17 20w

"Even more praise-worthy than the story itself is the atmosphere of the book. . . . Avoiding the flip-pant optimism, which has of late been so heavily exploited, Miss Bailey employs a more sane and convincing treatment." Joseph Mosher

+ Pub W 91:1319 Ap 21 '17 420w

"While it is primarily a wholesome love story, beneath the surface is a call to service in the great army that work for public weal. Anne Warfield is one of the most delightful heroines of the year's novels."

+ R of Rs 56:102 J1 '17 70w

"The author pictures the loyalty of southern folk to their ancestral homes and their spirit of noblesse oblige."

+ Spring'd Republican p19 Je 10 '17 330w

BAIN, FRANCIS WILLIAM. Livery of Eve. il *$1.50 (5½c) Putnam 17-14951

Another fairy tale in imitation of the Hindu. The tale is told by the Moony-crested god to the Daughter of the Snow, and at the end of it he propounds a conundrum. The tale is of Aparajitā, whose beauty was such that the only rival she had to fear was her own reflection in the pool, and of Kāmarūpa, the barber, who was unrivaled for ugliness, and of Keshawa, the king, who cared nothing for women, altho he un-faithfully attracted their love. To gain her own ends, Aparajitā makes use of the spell by means of which the soul may enter another body. The soul of the handsome king takes on the ugly body of the barber, and the ugly one finds himself enshrined in the body of the king. The conundrum at the end has to do with the old problem of women's wiles.

"No other European writer gives us such a sense of being absolutely at home with the Pundits. Kipling, in comparison with the author of 'A digit of the moon' or 'A draught of the blue' or 'Ashes of a god,' seems to be a Cockney interloper."

+ Dial 63:163 Ag 30 '17 370w

N Y Br Lib News 4:123 Ag '17

"We assure those who have read 'A digit of the moon' and 'The ashes of a god' with amusement and joy, that they will find equal pleasure in 'The livery of Eve.'"

+ R of Rs 56:102 Jl '17 150w

"Mr Bain shows us, with all his wonted mastery of picturesque simile and phrase, that the old Hindu spirit and imagination survive, after countless generations of foreign rule. He displays a Hindu literature, subtly blended with and purified by western poetic sentiment and western ethics. . . . He has been more successful than most in creating in western minds the atmosphere of Indian romance."

+ Spec 118:567 My 19 '17 1250w

"While rich in local color, the book is not by a great deal so rich as 'A digit of the moon.' One looks almost in vain for the telling phrases, the subtly cultivated rhythms which in the first work brought the exotic beauty of tropic nights and days home to us."

Springf'd Republican p15 Jl 15 '17 250w

"We do not wish to justice to this book if we do not read it aloud, for each syllable has been hammered into place and is taking thrust and strain as in poetry."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p223 My 10 '17 1450w

BAINVILLE, JACQUES. Italy and the war; tr. by Bernard Miall. *$1 (1½c) Doran 945 (Eng ed 17-26484)

The author's purpose is "to show Italy as the war has revealed her." He says, "The Italian state is one of the most original and one of the most vigorous elements of modern Europe, and one of the richest in future promise. The war came at one of the most favourable moments of its growth and evolution. Italy was able to seize upon this moment, and to-morrow, we believe, she will count in the world for more than she counted yesterday." He writes of: Italian opinions and intentions; The adaptations of the House of Savoy; The nationalist tradition; Italy is no longer the country of the dead; The Quirinal and the Vatican; From the Triple alliance to the Quadruple entente; The historic month in Italy; The future. The author is a Frenchman who has seen long service as a correspondent in Italy.

A L A Bkl 13:442 Jl '17

"M. Bainville's work is of peculiar interest, and gives some idea of inner Italy, as well as of the motives which led to her intervention in the war."

+ Ath p36 Ja '17 100w

Boston Transcript p6 My 29 '17 300w

Reviewed by H. J. Laski

+ Dial 63:15 Je 28 '17 30w

+ Lit D 55:36 S 15 '17 450w

"For us, his book is admirably informative."

+ N Y Times 22:179 My 6 '17 750w

Pratt p44 O '17 20w

R of Rs 55:551 My '17 70w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 24 '17 430w

BAIRNSFATHER, BRUCE. Bullets and billets. il *$1.50 (3c) Putnam 940.91 17-3729

Bruce Bairnsfather is a cartoonist whose drawings picture the humor of trench life. In this book he has written of the early days of the war, illustrating the account with some of his own sketches. Modern warfare appears to be a muddy business, but the good humor of the author-artist and his pals seemed to be proof against all physical discomforts.

+ A L A Bkl 13:393 Je '17

"Among the trivial books growing out of the war, this one found its place abroad and it will amuse a certain (or uncertain) number here."

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 14 '17 70w

Reviewed by P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 62:306 Ap 5 '17 170w

"Unfortunately for us our officer-author gets him a man servant shortly after the book begins and moves out of the picturesque mud—had he seen less of his own class and more of his men this might indeed have been a book to rival 'Kitchener's mob.'" Robert Lynd

+ Pub W 91:213 Ja 20 '17 200w

"This volume is not in the least literary, but it bubbles over with laughter and a very human enjoyment of rare comforts. . . . It is well illustrated, too."

+ Sat R 122:580 D 16 '16 450w

"The drawings of Captain Bairnsfather have become so much of an institution in the army that they scarcely need an introduction. Personally we are not convinced that some type might not have been found equally comic yet standing less questionably for all that the war means to a democracy that goes forth to fight. . . . The book before us shows how much Captain Bairnsfather has in him. His jokes are spontaneous, and, when he tries, they fit the drawings perfectly. He has, moreover, firmness and a power to charm when he pleases."

+ Spec 118:239 F 24 '17 150w

+ Springf'd Republican p19 Mr 25 '17 300w

"Here we have an army officer who invariably depicts his men (to whom his book is dedicated) as the very type which the army is anxious to suppress. . . . It is not with Captain Bairnsfather's humour that we quarrel, for his situations are invariably amusing. It is because he standardizes—almost idealizes—a degraded type of face."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p621 D 21 '16 450w

Wis Lib Bul 13:123 Ap '17 80w

BAKER, HARRY TORSEY. Contemporary short story; a practical manual. $1.25 (11c) Heath 808.3 17-1356

"In the course of six chapters the author outlines in a lively manner the essentials of the American short story from both the editor's and the reader's point of view, drawing largely for his material upon his own personal editorial experience. . . . 'This volume,' he says, 'accordingly aims to teach promiscuous young authors, whether in or out of college, how to write stories that shall be marketable as well as artistic. It attempts to state succinctly, and as clearly as may be, some fundamental principles of short-story writing. . . . Each chapter is followed by a series of suggestive questions for beginners in fiction, and at the end of his book are printed lists of American fiction magazines, books on the short story, and titles of representative short stories by English and American writers.'"—Boston Transcript

"The chief criticism has been that he forgets the ideals of the masters and preaches 'popularity and financial success at all hazards.'"

A L A Bkl 13:301 Ap '17

"Its author's qualifications for his task are set forth after his name in these words: 'Instructor in English in the University of Illinois, formerly special reader of fiction manuscripts, International magazine company, publishers of Good Housekeeping, Harper's Bazar, etc.' . . . It is obvious again and again, as we turn the pages of Mr Baker's book, that his knowledge of what sort of short story will be profitable runs far in advance of his critical faculty." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 20 '17 650w

"Mr Baker's drawback is that he has only one market in mind—the market represented by the American magazines that pay highest. 'It pays, therefore,' he writes 'to find out in advance what American editors dislike' . . . But what is required is another standard altogether, not the raising of the commercial standard. A few editors might be induced to consider what discriminating minds approve of.'" M. M. Colum

Dial 62:347 Ap 19 '17 500w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BAKER, HARRY TORSEY—Continued

"Brief and 'snappy' book on manuscript salesmanship. . . . If the author had only refrained from occasional references to art and artistry his little volume would have been wholly justifiable. For there is no reason in the world why short-story writers should not ply their trade for money. . . . Only, when they do so, they should stop talking about art."

Nation 104:548 My 3 '17 420w

— New Repub 10:108 F 24 '17 1350w

"There is a really illuminating chapter on 'How magazines differ,' followed by a description of a magazine office from the inside."

+ N Y Times 22:162 Ap 22 '17 500w

"A commonsense little volume that should find an audience despite the fact that it is an addition to a long list of books whose excellence varies with their number."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 16 '17 260w

BAKER, ORIN CLARKSON. Travelers' aid society in America; principles and methods. *$1 (6½c) Funk 910.2 17-14808

This little book, published under the auspices of the Travelers' aid society of New York city at the close of the thirtieth anniversary of active travelers' aid work there, deals with the "protection from danger and prevention of crime for travelers, especially young women, girls and boys traveling alone." (Sub-title) The appendix gives instructions to agents.

BAKER, RAY STANNARD (DAVID GRAYSON, pseud.). Great possessions. il *$1.30 (3c) Doubleday 17-28078

A slender volume which nevertheless can lure one for a brief respite away from the strident noises of a care-troubled world into a realm where loafing with one's soul is encouraged. It is another adventure in contentment, Grayson leading the way this time to the country where he points out the well-flavored things of garden and field—the smells, sights, sounds, touches and tastes, two of which, the sense of taste and the sense of smell, having been shabbily treated, he thinks, in the amiable rivalry of the senses. Other essays in the group delve down to the wealth of love to be found in the hearts of humble men.

"Pleasant essays in the author's familiar vein."

+ A L A Bkl 14:84 D '17

Reviewed by A. M. Chase

+ Bookm 46:336 N '17 250w

+ Cleveland p132 D '17 40w

"A fitting successor to 'The friendly road' and 'Adventures in contentment.' A word should be said for Thomas Fogarty's delightful drawings, which are entirely in harmony with the text."

+ Lit D 55:43 D 8 '17 110w

"What we dislike chiefly, perhaps, is the complacency of his mellow hieratic chant, with its double appeal to those who incline to go 'back to the land,' and to those who are determined to be 'glad,' according to the current fashion (in fiction)."

— + Nation 106:118 Ja 21 '18 510w

Outlook 117:387 N 7 '17 40w

+ Pittsburgh 22:801 D '17 20w

"It is a privilege to come in contact with the type of mind here represented. He is eminently restful, and his attitude promotes a readjustment of values." F: T. Cooper

+ Pub W 92:1379 O 20 '17 450w

"It is a delightful book; rich in its wisdom, redolent of nature, and bespeaking a love for humble things and men of gentle will."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 18 '17 370w

BAKSHY, ALEKSANDR. Path of the modern Russian stage, and other essays. il *7s 6d Palmer & Hayward, London 792

(Eng ed 17-17074)

"In these essays the author is largely concerned with the problem of representational versus presentational stage performances. Should illusion be carried to its furthest limits? Should the play be represented, as at the Moscow art theatre, as 'an independent entity existing side by side with' the observing audience? Or should it be presented through the medium of the stage? Other matters dealt with are the advantages and disadvantages of ensemble-acting, and long-run plays. The concluding essay treats of 'The kinematograph as art.'"—Ath

Ath p541 N '16 70w

"Valuable is the author's essay on living space and the theatre, and his criticism of Mr Gordon Craig's theories. But abstraction seems pushed to the point where words become abstracted from meaning in the essay on a poet-philosopher of modern Russia, the whole sustained in the Nietzschean jargon of the mythic opposition between Dionysus and Apollo. In more than one sentence the old opposition of the classic and romantic spirit is all that is implied."

+ — Int Studio 61:99 Ap '17 250w

"The impression left by Mr Bakshy's very interesting book, which is full of suggestive remarks and illuminating criticism, is that there is very little future for naturalism."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p487 O 12 '16 1300w

BANCROFT, GRIFFING. Interlopers. il *$1.50 Bancroft co., 156 5th av., N.Y. 17-20421

"A study of the 'yellow peril,' as the subtle and irresistible absorption of California by the Japanese, whom the law has excluded from citizenship, but has failed to keep off the land. . . . The central figure of the story is that of a young eastern-bred doctor, who makes himself an outcast among the ranchers in Eden valley by being friendly with the Japanese. In the event, he wins his lady and reestablishes himself in the world by discovering a serum for Asiatic cholera. But he does not solve, or even help to solve, the problem of the Californian and his Japanese rival. Not all the white man's law and gospel can dislodge the yellow man when he has once set foot in Eden valley—

an interloper destined in no long time to be acknowledged as master of the premises. The Jap, in fact, is the luster pioneer, and with a backing of oriental gold and oriental cunning more than a match for the western-born."—Nation

"Though as a novelist Mr Bancroft still has something to acquire in coordinating the scenes of a story and in making his characters appealing, the book takes on a certain reality from the author's extensive and affectionate knowledge of the country, and from his not altogether unsuccessful attempt to weave an interesting tale around his comment on the conditions introduced by the Japanese settlements. It is this last element that will make the book worth reading as evidence in a problem that is not without its possibilities as an international question." F. I.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 S 8 '17 750w

"The matter of the story is better than its manner; the characters have an air of struggling against the language the author puts into their mouths; for he makes them all talk like a book. The action is impeded by various dissertations on fruit-ranching, Japanese customs, or Asiatic cholera—very interesting in themselves."

Nation 105:247 S 6 '17 320w

"The plot is merely a thread on which the author has hung a rather interesting essay on the Japanese in California."

+ N Y Times 22:303 Ag 19 '17 350w

BANCROFT, HUBERT HOWE. In these latter days. $2 Blakely-Oswald co., 124 Polk st., Chicago 304 17-25254

Mr Bancroft is a historian with a long list of volumes to his credit. He has for some time made his home in California, so it is natural that many of the papers in this new book should deal with the problems of the Pacific coast, notably with questions of Asiatic immigration. "Contents: A problem in evolution; Apocalyptic; Infelicities of possession; Germany and Japan; The still small voice; Life's complex ways; The psychology of lying; China and the United States; The autocracy of labor; Municipal rule and misrule; The declination of law; Fallacies and fantasies; The economics of education; The mysterious history of the spirit creation; Spiritual and rational development; Ab ovo; As others see us; Spirit worship of today; The new religion; The war in Europe; Crystallized civilization; Why a world industrial centre at San Francisco bay? Revival of citizenship; The initiative; Assurances for the future." (Pittsburgh)

Boston Transcript p9 O 20 '17 40w

N Y Times 22:581 D 30 '17 60w

Pittsburgh 22:687 O '17 90w

"This work of Mr Bancroft's reveals the author's pungency and individuality of mind, but reveals also signs of age. Mr Bancroft is eighty-five. Considering this fact, it is easy to understand his overwrought denunciations of current American life."

— + Springf'd Republican p6 O 2 '17 270w

BANG, JACOB PETER. Hurrah and hallelujah; a documentation; from the Danish by Jessie Bröchner; with an introd. by Ralph Connor. *$1 (2c) Doran 940.91 17-10428

Dr Bang, of the University of Copenhagen, has collected excerpts from German poems, sermons, etc. His title is taken from a book of poems issued by a German pastor. His purpose is "to show, on the one hand, to what a pitch the contempt and hatred for things foreign has been carried, and, on the other hand, how widely the overestimation, not to say the worship, of things German has spread in Germany." There are chapters on German prophets, German war poetry, The war in sermons, Speeches by German professors, etc. The book was prepared for publication in 1915.

A L A Bkl 13:393 Je '17

Dial 62:256 Mr 22 '17 130w

Reviewed by H. M. Kallen

Dial 63:263 S 27 '17 1100w

"We do not know among modern books any one volume which will give to the English reader in so brief a form so clear a reflection of the militaristic spirit which seems to possess, not only the military leaders, but the teachers of every description in Germany."

Outlook 116:305 Je 20 '17 100w

"Those who have any lingering doubts as to the wisdom of the present course taken by the government will find in 'Hurrah and hallelujah,' a collection of documents edited by Dr J. P. Bang, of the University of Copenhagen, a terrific arraignment of Germany out of the mouths of her own poets, prophets, professors, and teachers."

+ R of Rs 55:552 My '17 130w

"Prof. Bang, in his chapter on 'The trend of German thought,' makes the absurd mistake—or else the translation does—of classifying Nietzsche with Treitschke and Bernhardt as prophets of German world-power. Otherwise his observations are apparently correct. . . . The numerous examples cited give the book its value."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 2 '17 950w

"Dr Bang, who is a professor of the University of Copenhagen, and himself a distinguished theologian, has done well to publish this book."

. . . It is a valuable supplement to Professor Nippold's book on German Chauvinism, which appeared shortly before the war, and to the similar collections made by Mr Alexander Gray in his three pamphlets, 'The new Leviathan,' 'The upright sheaf,' and 'The true pastime.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p630 D 28 '16 1200w

BANGS, JOHN KENDRICK. Half hours with the Idiot. *$1.25 (5c) Little 817 17-14182

"Readers of Bangs are familiar with the boarding house of Mrs Pedagog for single gentlemen, where the Idiot, the Doctor, the Poet, the Bibliomaniac, and Mr Brief, the lawyer, assemble daily for refreshments. Over the waffles each morning the Idiot discourses of some theme of timely interest, like Christmas shopping, the income tax, medical conservatism, etc."—Springf'd Republican

A L A Bkl 13:439 J1 '17

"Not quite so spontaneous in their humor as the breakfast-table talks in 'Coffee and repar-tee.'"

+ — Cleveland p104 S '17 50w

"Mr Bangs gives no intimation in this volume that his humor is in danger of going stale or ceasing. It is in his usual style, only more so, which is good enough for most of us."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Je 24 '17 160w

BARBEE, LINDSEY. Let's pretend. ll 75c Denison 812 17-19694

A book of fairy plays for children, provided with notes on costume and properties, stage directions, etc. Contents: 'The little pink lady; The ever-ever land; When the toys awake; The forest of every day; A Christmas tree joke; "If don't-believe is changed into believe." In some of the plays the number of characters is large, making them suitable for school entertainments where many children take part.

+ Ind 92:444 D 1 '17 30w

"A book of delightful children's plays. . . . They are merry and whimsical and carry their little sermons unobtrusively."

+ R of Rs 56:444 O '17 40w

"The value of these plays is increased by practical directions for costuming, by stage directions and by other helps to production."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 20 '17 80w

BARBER, CHARLES H. Besieged in Kut and after. *6s Blackwood, London 940.91

"Major Barber records his journey from Basra up to Kut, then the return of the army from Ctesiphon, the long-drawn siege, the hopes and disappointments, the surrender, life as a prisoner in Baghdad, his exchange, and the passage down the river again to the familiar lower reaches—familiar, but already transformed by the preparations for the new advance—and then the farewell to 'the desert land where we had left only two good years of our life, measured by the standard of time, but a good ten by those of our feelings.' What those feelings were it is easy to guess, though the author wraps them all in their wonderful natural cover of the soldier's courage and helpfulness and kindness."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

+ Sat R 124:312 O 20 '17 250w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p371 Ag 2 '17 130w

"Major Barber's book is a little epic. . . . And it is none the less an epic for being in form an impersonal and matter-of-fact record of daily events. The sub-title might be 'Endurance.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p374 Ag 9 '17 780w

BARBER, FREDERIC DELOS, and others. First course in general science. ll *$1.25 Holt 502 16-17507

"This book is written for the American school child. It opens with the statement that 'the primary function of first-year general science is to give, as far as possible, a rational, orderly, scientific understanding of the pupil's environment to the end that he may, to some extent, correctly interpret that environment and be master of it.' It must be justified by its own intrinsic value as a training for life's work." Setting out with this idea, the authors take the various phenomena with which the child is likely to be confronted, and deal with them in a manner calculated to arouse his interest."—Nature

"It covers somewhat the same field as Caldwell and Eikenberry (Booklist 11:299 Mr '15), but is, perhaps, more technical, fuller on physical science, heat, light, ventilation, and refrigeration, and contains less on biology and physical geography, has problems and exercises as well as more illustrations. "A revision and enlargement of the author's 'Elements of physical science,' published in 1906."

BARBER, F. D.—Continued

+ A L A Bkl 13:379 Je '17
+ Ind 91:264 Ag 18 '17 120w

"Its facts in regard to physics and vital phenomena are carefully stated, and the many applications of elementary principles to human welfare are ingeniously and clearly presented."

+ Nation 104:560 My 3 '17 150w

"Probably the best use of the book is as a teacher's guide to give him 'copy' which he can work up and adapt to his own class."

+ Nature 98:348 Ja 4 '17 400w

BARBER, HERBERT LEE. Story of the automobile; its history and development from 1760 to 1917; with an analysis of the standing and prospects of the automobile industry. il *$1.50 (2½c) Munson 629.2 17-16907

As one reads the sub-title of this book he wonders what Franklin had to do with the automobile. Specifically, the author accords Franklin, as the discoverer of electricity, the credit for the electrical automobile, and, in a more general way, shows that in his teachings of frugality and thrift he laid the cornerstone, 150 years ago, on which the superstructure of the automobile business has been erected. The 250 pages tell a concise story of the mechanical and commercial evolution of the automobile, its popularity and its democratization by Henry Ford. What will particularly interest makers and dealers is the analysis of the industry from a financial and investment standpoint, contributed by the Business Bourse International, Inc.

BARBUSSE, HENRI. Under fire; the story of a squad; tr. by Fitzwater Wray. *$1.50 (1½c) Dutton 940.91 17-23984

This book was first published in France, December, 1916, under the title, "Le feu," and received the prize offered by the Académie Goncourt of Paris for the best book of the year. It has had a wide sale in France. The author is a French soldier who does not hesitate to relate the grim and sickening details of life at the front. He quotes a fellow-soldier as saying: "If you make the common soldiers talk in your book, are you going to make them talk like they do talk, or shall you put it all straight—into pretty talk?" And Mr Barbusse answers that he will not "put it all into pretty talk." He has kept his word. The book is "not a chronicle, still less a diary, but combines pictures of men in masses, and of individual types, moralisings, impressions, observations, episodes, into a sort of epic of army life from the point of view of a private soldier." (Bookm) And the soldier's point of view on the war seems to be that while war has turned him and his fellows into "incredibly pitiful wretches, and savages as well, brutes, robbers, and dirty devils," that, because they are fighting "for progress, not for a country; against error, not against a country," they must fight on until the spirit of war is slain, and, "there'll no longer be the things done in the face of heaven by thirty millions of men who don't want to do them."

+ A L A Bkl 14:59 N '17

"Its realism is carried to the extent that some passages are more than merely painful to the reader; they are repellent. There is so much insistence upon the dirt, the vermin, the stench, and the sordidness in the battle zones, and so wrapped in a charnel-house atmosphere are many pages, that we think the artistry of the book has suffered in consequence. However, it is, we repeat, a remarkable production; and it must be admitted that this tale of soldiering in its grimmest and grimmest aspects is well worth reading."

+ Ath p470 S '17 170w

"The sub-title, the 'Life of a squad,' is somewhat misleading. There is much more than the life of a squad in this brilliant and varied narrative, which records or divines wide areas of experience." F. M. Colby

+ Bookm 46:90 S '17 1250w

"In contrast to his book, the others seem like documents, or pious memorial volumes, or collections of extracts from the average war articles in the magazines. Whether this difference will appeal to those who read it only in the present English version it is hard to say, for the translator has come down upon it rather heavily." C. M. Francis

+ — Bookm 46:451 D '17 150w

"But a short time ago it would have been thought impossible that the war's abominations could be restated with such force and vividness as to make them appear almost new to us, yet this is what has been accomplished here by a master hand exercising extraordinary gifts of expression with unrestricted freedom. The book is an achievement that will endure. If it reaches the huge sales here that are recorded of it in France, much credit will be due to the translator, who has done his work extremely well."

+ Cath World 106:409 D '17 850w

"He is magnificently indifferent to the curious editorial taboo which results in the frigid brevity of the war dispatch and the inhuman abstractions of Mr Frank H. Simonds. To a man tremendously in earnest who wanted to make those at home see and feel the war—yes and smell it too—any squeamishness would naturally be a simple irrelevance. It would not be thought of, and M. Barbusse hasn't thought of it. The result is a book of terrific impact, a horrible and fascinating document that brings one nearer to the desolation and despair of No Man's Land than anything else I have read." G. B. Donlin

+ Dial 63:455 N 8 '17 1550w

"Barbusse has the essentially French ability of creating atmosphere. The action moves in vivid patches and flashes of color against a gray background of mud and drizzling rain."

+ Ind 92:561 D 22 '17 630w

"It is unnecessary to have been at the front to judge of M. Barbusse's veracity. It is a book that is no more to be questioned than the diary of Captain Scott or the deathless pages of Tolstoy." F. H.

+ New Repub 12:358 O 27 '17 1700w

"'Under fire' is an example of genre art, crude often, as Rodin's casts are crude, as Millet's paintings are crude. . . . The greatest chapter in the book is the last called 'The dawn.'" B. H.

+ N Y Call p14 N 25 '17 1550w

"M. Barbusse has succeeded in giving an unforgettable impression of the war as it exists, and in offering us a new point of view from which to consider it and its fighters."

+ N Y Times 22:360 S 23 '17 700w

+ Pittsburgh 22:651 O '17 60w

+ Pittsburgh 22:748 N '17 70w

"Makes most other war books—barring perhaps Hugh's letters from the trenches in 'Mr Britling' and Donald Hankey's 'Student in arms,' first series—seem flat and soulless—merely pictorial, a kind of motion picture. We laugh with Empey in 'Over the top,' but here one doesn't read to laugh." Robert Lynd

+ Pub W 93:213 Ja 19 '18 600w

BARCLAY, FLORENCE LOUISA (CHARLES-WORTH) (MRS CHARLES W. BARCLAY). White ladies of Worcester. *$1.50 (1½c) Putnam 17-29023

A novel which views such mediaeval matters as cloisters, feudal pomp and chivalry in the light of our twentieth century breadth of view. The hero possesses all the qualities of the knight of chivalry. Its heroine is a cloistered maiden who humbly relinquishes her religious vows for love. But here is the modern note. The Bishop of Worcester not only brings the lovers together but in so doing voices the following sentiment: "Methinks these nunneries would serve a better purpose were they schools from which to send women forth into the world to be good wives and mothers, rather than storehouses filled with sad samples of nature's great purposes deliberately unfulfilled." The setting and atmosphere are true to the twelfth century.

A L A Bkl 11:120 Ja '18

"The book, which is overloaded with sentiment, does not carry conviction."

— Ath p679 D '17 90w

"Except for an occasional 'methlnks,' and incidental allusions to palfreys and battlements, the cumbersome trappings of mediaevalism, the battles, the conclaves, the obsolete language, are absent from the book. It is rather in the substance of the story that the spirit of an earlier day is felt." Joseph Mosher

+ Pub W 92:1375 O 20 '17 450w

"The story has an excellent plot, and is told with commendable restraint, and without the cloying sentimentality and wearisome artificialities characterizing so many of the author's stories heretofore."

+ Springf'd Republican p11 Ja 27 '18 300w

"A pleasing, sentimental romance. . . . The whole is too obviously conceived in a modern spirit: we feel the mediaevalism is but stage scenery and the sentiments those of the twentieth century."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p530 N 1 '17 280w

BARKER, ERNEST. Ireland in the last fifty years (1866-1916). pa *1s 6d Oxford 941.5 (Eng ed 17-14126)

"The author begins with a survey of the period to which his book relates, and proceeds to discuss the Irish church and education, the agrarian question, and the government of Ireland. The latter part of the book deals with Ireland to-day. Mr Barker regards the rebellion of 1916 as 'a rebellion of those extremists who have, during the last fifty years, found their enemies no less in the Home rule party of Ireland than in the British government.'"—Ath

Ath p203 Ap '17 70w

"This well-written pamphlet gives a dispassionate account of Irish affairs during the last half-century. . . . We must demur to Mr Barker's suggestion that the Unionist party has accepted Home rule. He should have explained more clearly the position of protestant Ulster, which is imperfectly appreciated by those who do not know Ireland and her history."

+ — Spec 118:210 F 17 '17 90w

"Nor does he stop with the Church and Land acts—he goes on to discuss in some detail the whole agrarian problem in Ireland as the long series of Land acts has left it, with a peasantry relieved of 'landlordism' and turning to a variety of boards, departments, and associations for help and guidance in the new problems that confront them. This is the really valuable part of Mr Barker's book, and it can be heartily recommended to all who wish to understand the present economic situation in Ireland."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p44 Ja 25 '17 650w

BARKER, GRANVILLE. Three short plays. 2 *$1 Little 822 17-30424

"Rococo," the first of the three plays, written in 1912, is a farce-comedy with scene laid in an English vicarage, "Vote by ballot," dated 1914, is a comedy of English politics. The third "Farewell to the theatre," written in 1916, is a conversation between two persons, a man and a woman, the second of whom is leaving the stage after a long career.

"These plays are tempered with the thin, keen edge of Barker's fastidious intellectualism. . . . In this trifling ['Farewell to the theatre'], hardly a play, Barker is more the poet, or the symbolist, of 'Souls on Fifth' than the dramatist."

+ R of Rs 57:109 Ja '18 190w

BARKER, HARRY. Public utility rates. *$4 McGraw 658 17-10566

"A discussion of the principles and practice underlying charges for water, gas, electricity, communication and transportation services." (Sub-title) "After eight years of collection, comparative analysis and study the author has brought to fruition his effort to present 'a comprehensive discussion of (1) such corporation and municipal activities as affect service and rates, (2) the trend of public opinion and court and commission decisions, and (3) the most important engineering and economic problems involved. This he has done 'in the hope' that the mere presentation, in one volume, of the diverse phases of rate making may be of service in provoking thought—in spite of the inherent shortcomings of the text." (Engin News-Rec)

"Perhaps the most orderly and generally comprehensive of the many engineering treatises on valuation and rate making. . . . The discussion is carefully balanced, and it offers many excellent criticisms and suggestions. The author appears public-spirited, with possibly an over-confidence that his own state of mind is that of public service corporation officials. If space permitted, many minor points might be profitably discussed or criticized." J: Bauer

+ Am Econ R 7:636 S '17 140w

"In its good style and thoroughly readable quality, the book reflects the author's experience as an editor of one of the most successful technical weeklies (Engineering News). Though it treats a highly technical subject, it does so in a manner to command the interest of the reader, introducing him with a brief and pertinent historic sketch to a logical presentation of the subject, adding breadth and perspective by a discriminating analysis of the essential differences in the rate-making problem of different utilities. Its chief value lies in the comparison of the differences in the nature and past solutions of the problem. . . . It should be particularly helpful to the young student."

* + Engin News-Rec 79:322 Ag 16 '17 1450w
N Y Br Lib News 4:90 Je '17

"What is needed to save the observer from being swamped with facts in decisions and froth in partisan theories is just such a clear and unbiased analysis as Mr Barker's work. . . . The volume is the result of painstaking editorial observation over a period of eight years. . . . Where there are two sides to a question each is given a fair statement."

+ Pittsburgh 22:444 My '17 60w (Reprinted from Municipal Journal p539 Ap 12 '17)

Pratt p27 O '17

St Louis 15:171 Je '17

BARKER, W. H., and SINCLAIR, CECILIA, eds. West African folk-tales. il *7s 6d Harrap & co., London 398.2

These thirty-six tales are "based upon the folk-lore of the natives of the Gold coast." (Ath) "The subject-matter has been obtained largely from native school teachers. . . . Different versions of the same story have been collated, spurious additions discovered and discarded, and the common framework isolated and established. We are told that all the material thus collected will be available eventually for the use of the student of folk-lore; but in the meantime the authors have contented themselves with trying to interest a different and wider public in the subject by retelling the original basic stories as simply and directly as possible. . . . [The book includes] the primitive version of a classic story which the negro slaves took with them across the Atlantic, and which emerged from the mouth of 'Uncle Remus' . . . as the immortal adventure of Brer Rabbit and the Tar Baby." (Spec)

"A curious feature of the Gold coast folk-stories is the number of Anansi or spider tales."

+ Ath p463 S '17 150w

"The tales are mostly of the explanatory 'Just-So' type which Kipling popularized, and although they have none of Kipling's wonderful power of personification or triumph of linguistic invention in the telling, they are quite as ingenious and convincing in substance. . . . The illustrations are delicately and imaginatively drawn, and exactly right to convey the spirit of the letterpress and to stimulate the curiosity of a child."

+ Spec 119:247 S 8 '17 800w

BARKER, W. H., and SINCLAIR, C.—Continued
 "These West African stories do not 'grip' as some others of their kind succeed in doing. . . . They are not as dramatic as some, nor are they so surprising. . . . The human element is lacking to them also; they throw little light on the manners and customs of the story-teller and his friends. . . . A word may be said in appreciation of the illustrations. Their white outline on black ground is most effective."
 — + The Times [London] Lit Sup p388 Ag 16 '17 960w

BARNARD'S Lincoln, the gift of Mr and Mrs Charles P. Taft to the city of Cincinnati, il *50c (6½c) Stewart & Kidd 17-21909

The most interesting contribution to this little volume is that of the sculptor, George Grey Barnard, who tells what the statue means to him and what he tried to make it express to others.—"Lincoln, the song of democracy written by God." In addition the book presents various documents connected with the unveiling of the statue in Cincinnati: a poem by Dr Lyman Whitney Allen, the presentation address of William Howard Taft, and the speech of acceptance by George Fuchta, mayor of the city. There are five illustrations from photographs, and one from an etching by E. T. Hurley.

Ind 92:384 N 24 '17 400w
 N Y Times 22:476 N 18 '17 580w

"Mr Taft's address is a broad and true appreciation of Lincoln's character."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 18 '17 650w

BARNES, JOHN BRYSON (O. N. E., pseud.).
 Elements of military sketching and map reading, 3d ed rev il *75c (5c) Van Nostrand 623.71 17-14002

"The publication of this book was undertaken with a view of providing a textbook suitable for beginners in the subject of military sketching. To the original book has been added chapters on map reading and landscape sketching." (Preface) The book is illustrated with diagrams and sketches accompanying the text and folding maps are provided in a pocket at the end.

N Y P L New Tech Bks p13 Jl '17

BARNETT, GEORGE ERNEST, and MCCABE, DAVID ALOYSIUS. Mediation, investigation, and arbitration in industrial disputes. *$1.25 (6c) Appleton 331.1 16-23810

"The book is based on a study of the activities of the American national and state agencies of mediation and arbitration. The elements of weakness in the present system are analyzed, and the necessary conditions for the successful working of such systems are set forth. After giving due consideration to the experience of other countries in dealing with the problem of industrial disputes, particularly to the Canadian experience under the law for the compulsory investigation of such disputes, the authors present a plan for the reorganization of the existing systems."—N Y Call

Reviewed by E. L. Earp
 + Am J Soc 23:559 Ja '18 300w

"Authoritative study. Useful for debates."
 + A L A Bkl 14:5 O '17

"The attitude of the authors is impartial and practical, and the treatment of the subject is scholarly. It might be wished that the results of the last three years be included in the book. The appendices contain the Newlands act and the recommendations of the Industrial commission on mediation, arbitration, etc." J. T. Y.
 + Ann Am Acad 71:230 My '17 200w

Engin N 77:108 Ja 18 '17 130w

+ Ind 89:508 Mr 19 '17 150w

N Y Call p14 D 10 '16 80w

"This volume is one of rather more than ordinary value. . . . As a historical study and book of reference, trade unionists and Socialists should find this book a valuable addition to their material on the highly important and timely subjects of which it treats." C. M. W.

+ N Y Call p14 Mr 18 '17 300w

"The book is timely and useful, particularly in its tendency to convince the unions that they are too successful for their own interests in some respects. Partisanship may win a battle or two, but fairness is needed to win the campaign for public sympathy and support."

+ N Y Times 22:270 Jl 22 '17 620w

Pratt p11 O '17 10w

"The authors of this book, who hold chairs, respectively, at Johns Hopkins and Princeton, submitted a report in June, 1915, to the United States Commission on industrial relations. The present volume is based on that report but illustrated material has been added and the statements have been brought down to date. In this form it is the best available discussion of the subject in English."

+ R of Rs 55:220 F '17 60w

St Louis 15:47 F '17

"The classifications in the book are admirably arranged, and its conclusions and recommendations are clearly set forth. It is somewhat unfortunate, however, that a book dealing with such an important problem does not contain more vitality. On the whole, the monograph is to be heartily recommended to everyone interested in social readjustments for its careful analysis and its timely suggestions." H. W. Laidler

+ — Survey 39:45 O 13 '17 740w

BARR, MRS AMELIA EDITH (HUDDLESTON). Christine, a Fife fisher girl, il *$1.50 (1½c) Appleton 17-22293

The scene is laid in the little fishing village of Culrairie, Scotland, some seventy years ago. Christine's parents are hard-working, upright, shrewd, deeply religious fisher-folk, whose great ambition is to educate their son, Neil, as a dominie. With the help of Christine, who is intellectually the abler of the two, Neil prepares for the university, but chooses the law instead of the church, and while taking from his parents and Christine all that they can give, grows more and more forgetful and neglectful of them. The tragedy of the ungrateful son is balanced by the love story of the dutiful daughter, whose chief admirers are Angus Ballister, a gentleman, and Cluny Macpherson, a fisherman. The end of the story leaves her not only a happy wife, but a successful authoress.

A L A Bkl 14:129 Ja '18

"A love story of characteristic sweetness and charm." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 16:310 N '17 40w

"Age can not wither nor custom stale Mrs Barr's infinite variety. Her writing days have spanned many generations yet no more vigorous character has been given novel readers this year than her Christine."

— Boston Transcript p7 O 3 '17 270w

"One carries away from this story a pleasant impression of fresh breezes, of a people strong and upright and generally goodhearted. 'Christine, a Fife fisher girl' is a novel which will be warmly welcomed by Mrs Barr's many admirers."

+ N Y Times 22:333 S 9 '17 700w

"As heretofore, the story betrays a high moral tone, which makes her novels well-nigh unique among the light fiction of the present day."

+ Springf'd Republican p13 D 16 '17 220w

BARR, MRS AMELIA EDITH (HUDDLESTON). Joan, il *$1.50 Appleton 17-3151

"Mrs Barr has gone to the mining region of Yorkshire for her latest novel, and has drawn a clear and convincing picture of the mining folk and the industry. A very different affair is Yorkshire mining from mining here in America, and in a foreword Mrs Barr explains the root of this difference. It lies chiefly in the fact that the miners in England are sons of the soil, men who have grown to maturity in the neighborhood in which they work, and who have followed their fathers 'down pit.' . . . There is plenty of romance in the new story by a born writer of love stories, Joan being a winsome lass, with spirit and courage and beauty. Her fate is a man some years older than herself, and there is wealth and splendor, too, and many happy occurrences. Each character is well visualized; there is a human directness in Mrs Barr's writing that becomes more pronounced as time passes."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 13:401 Je '17
Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '17 500w

"Pleasing in its freshness and sincerity and especially interesting as the work of an author in her eighty-sixth year, who in this book is depicting the scenes with which she was familiar in her girlhood."

+ Cleveland p33 Mr '17 70w
+ N Y Times 22:59 F 18 '17 650w

BARRETT, SIR WILLIAM FLETCHER. On the threshold of the unseen. 2d rev ed *$2.50 Dutton (*6s 6d Kegan Paul, London) 134 17-29365

"Sir William Barrett, who was for many years professor of experimental physics in the Royal college of science for Ireland, was one of the principal founders of the Psychical research society in 1882, and his interest in and close attention to the subject has been continuous for over forty years. In 1908 he published a book (written many years previously) containing his critical investigations under the title 'On the threshold of a new world of thought.' His present publication is in the nature of a new edition of that work, including fresh evidence (obtained independently of any professional mediums) as to survival after death. The book is in six parts. It opens with general matter on psychical research and the objections of science and of religion. Part 2 discusses 'the physical phenomena'—rappings, levitations, &c. . . . Canons of evidence, mediumship, the subliminal self, &c., are then discussed. Part 4 collects particulars of apparitions, automatic writing, and other evidence of survival. Part 5 deals with clairvoyance, trance phenomena; considers difficulties; and advances various corrections and suggestions; and in Part 6 the deeper aspects of the matter are explored—the lesson of philosophy in the interpretation of nature; the mystery of personality; reincarnation; the implications of telepathy." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) Sir William Barrett is also the author of the volume on "Psychical research" in the Home university library.

Ath p406 Ag '17 50w

"It seems impossible for any reasonable man to dispute the case for further study, philosophical and scientific, of the evidence so far collected, and admirably presented in the volume here reviewed." T. W. Rolleston

+ Hibbert J 16:172 O '17 1700w

"The author has passed the psalmist's warning milepost of threescore and ten, but his handling of evidential matter and his discussions in this volume show that his mind is still keen and fresh and has lost none of its habitual scientific method and temper. . . . He discusses most interestingly his idea of an unseen world evolving in harmony with our own. This idea, it is apparent, is closely akin to that of a finite, evolving God which has been developed by philosophical writers from Kant down to William James and has just had forceful presentation by H. G. Wells. But Sir William nowhere intimates perception of the kinship of the two ideas."

+ N Y Times 22:281 J1 29 '17 1150w

"What is of most immediate interest at the present moment is his account of certain very recent personal experiments conducted with well-known amateurs."

+ Spec 118:612 Je 2 '17 1150w

"The present short volume presents evidence and considerations on the spiritualist side with a welcome absence alike of credulity and of rhetoric."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p251 My 24 '17 300w

"The chief interest of this book, primarily a clear and temperate presentation of the case for scientific spiritualism, is its suggestion that there is such a thing as a scientific spirituality. . . . It is another matter when we can feel that the slow patient gropings of science are inspired by a spiritual aim. . . . It is this that Sir William Barrett, like Sir Oliver Lodge, does not neglect. He keeps the reader aware that psychical research is the beginning of an attempt to test an intuition of reality. This is a real meeting ground for discussion."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p280 Je 14 '17 950w

BARRIE, ROBERT. My log. II *$2 Franklin press 17-22077

"Robert Barrie was fortunate in having a father able to give him advantages in youth that many never attain to. When he was nearing the age of twenty-one he had his heart set on a bigger boat than those he had been sailing, and 'the governor' had the $2000 ready for it, but asked the boy to go around the world instead. He accepted on condition that his brother of seventeen should go with him, and that trip, which lasted well past a year, is the main part of 'My log,' written thirty years later for a birthday gift to 'the governor.' . . . Paris bulks large in the later chapters, the Paris of the studios."—Springf'd Republican

"He brings back a life, seemingly as far removed from us today as that of the mohen age. A life whose freedom from wars and rumors of wars seems now well-nigh incredible. Of those mohen days Mr Barrie is delightfully reminiscent, rambling along from one subject to another, in the friendliest of ways which renders negligible any 'barrier of limit,' and makes the reader a 'comrade of the road.'"

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 12 '17 450w

"The book has its entertaining aspects, but as a whole belongs to the class of autobiographies which are more interesting to the author's own personal friends and to himself than to the public at large."

+ Outlook 117:64 S 12 '17 40w

"Mr Barrie is a good raconteur and while his father and friends will appreciate the book more than anyone else, it has merit and style; and its make-up is such as one might expect in a gift from one maker of fine books to another."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 O 11 '17 180w

BARRON, CLARENCE WALKER. Mexican problem. II *$1 (4c) Houghton 917.2

17-20844

Mr Barron, for ten years reporter on the Boston Transcript, is now manager of the Wall Street Journal, Boston News Bureau and Philadelphia News Bureau. He is also the author of "The audacious war" and "Twenty-eight essays on the Federal reserve act." He went to Mexico to study the oil situation and found in that situation the solution of the Mexican problem, which he had "failed to find in railroad, agricultural or mining development." The result of his observations is embodied in this book, the greater part of which "is devoted to an account of the development of the oil industry in Mexico, to its various conflicting interests, and to the influence and work of Edward Doheny, the man who 'has always stood by' and who is as much concerned with the social as with the commercial problem of Mexico." (Boston Transcript) There are a number of illustrations from photographs, and, at the end, a map showing the lands of the Mexican petroleum company. The preface is by Talcott Williams.

Am Econ R 7:840 D '17 30w

A L A Bkl 14:52 N '17

Am Pol Sci R 11:794 N '17 40w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 15 '17 450w

Cath World 106:392 D '17 200w

Cleveland p123 N '17 40w

BARRON, CLARENCE WALKER—Continued

"Granting that all the facts are so stated by Mr Barron, that he is not far out of the way in his deductions, and that his little book is worthy of attention, he but touches the surface of the Mexican problem as it exists to-day."

— + Dial 63:400 O 25 '17 450w

"Mr Barron writes himself down as 100 per cent plutocratic, and even Prussian in his outlook upon life. . . . Mexico is a great country. Mr Barron looks at it only as a means of getting oil for American and foreign capitalism. Mexico has been in disorder for years. He wants tranquility. And he has written this book as a means of arousing American public opinion to consent to intervention in the unhappy nation to the south." W: M. Feigenbaum

— N Y Call p15 S 30 '17 480w

"Mr Talcott Williams's preface is only some twenty-five pages in length, but it compacts the thought and experience of a lifetime by a man with peculiar opportunities for a just judgment upon conditions like Mexico's. . . . Both Mr Barron and Mr Williams draw an attractive picture of the Mexican people."

* N Y Times 22:305 Ag 19 '17 '1350w

"Supplies fresh and valuable information on the petroleum industry in the Tampico-Tuxpan oil fields."

+ Pittsburgh 22:759 N '17 60w

"This book supplies fresh and valuable information concerning one major economic interest in Mexico—petroleum. But quite outside its purview lie four others—agriculture, mines, rubber, henequen. It surveys with some degree of intimacy five to ten thousand square miles of territory. Mexico has over 750,000. No reader of the volume can afford to forget these limitations. Within them it is an excellent piece of work. . . . Mr Barron is sympathetic in his attitude toward the Mexican people . . . but rather sharp with the Mexican government. He is also impatient with Washington." G. B. Winton

+ Survey 38:551 S 22 '17 410w

BARROW, GEORGE ALEXANDER. Validity of the religious experience. *$1.50 (2c) Sherman, French & co. 201 17-13311

As a preliminary study in the philosophy of religion, the author makes an examination of religious experience. He accepts religious experience as a fact, as something which happens. He says, "In raising the question of validity, whatever we may mean, we do not mean to question the fact of its existence of what its existence includes. We do not ask whether any given case of religion is or is not a true religious experience. We are concerned only with the form of the religious experience and the questions we ask are questions of possibility and of implication. Our analysis is therefore to be an analysis of concepts." The book consists of seven lectures delivered originally at Harvard university. Contents: The problem of a philosophy of religion; Religion real and unique; The source of religion; The test of religion; Human and superhuman; Personality; A foundation for theology.

"His work will satisfy the scholar, but it is too ponderous and heavy for the average reader. If his thesis could be set forth in half the words an in more popular style it would insure itself of wider reading." G. F.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 S 19 '17 470w

"The effort, unusual in these days, to determine the real by analysis of the mere form of experience, produces here, as it has so often done, abstractness of treatment and dryness of style." G: A. Coe

— + Educ R 54:523 D '17 400w

N Y Br Lib News 4:117 Ag '17

BARRY, WILLIAM FRANCIS. World's debate: an historical defence of the Allies. *$1.25 Doran 940.9

"The peace of Westphalia, the execution of Charles I, Washington, Napoleon, the Vatican council, not to speak of the real protagonists, Bismarck and the German emperor, the Boer war, Queen Victoria, and President Wilson all contribute to Dr Barry's picture of 'The world's debate,' which we need not say is the debate between civilization and kultur, between the Catholic Christian ideal of France and England and the heathenism of Prussia." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) The author says, "Autocracy in its assault on democracy was my subject; but my hope was to prove by facts and history two things: first that absolute power is doomed . . . and, in the second place, that democracy and Christianity ought to recognize each other as by origin and spirit of the same nature." (The Times [London] Lit Sup Ag 23 '17)

"The whole method of handling bears the stamp of originality. When the historian combines with scientific exactness the imagination of the poet and the vision of the preacher he holds a powerful weapon with which to drive home truth." A. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '17 750w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p407 Ag 23 '17 50w

"Dr Barry is a pleasant guide; often rambling and discursive, with no very deep display of learning, he gives us his interpretations of the moral of modern history, and from time to time illustrates his story by the personal reminiscences which make the book resemble a pleasant conversation."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p411 Ag 30 '17 850w

BARTLETT, FREDERICK ORIN. Triflers. il *$1.40 (2c) Houghton 17-10201

A man and a woman, Americans, who meet by chance in Paris, decide in a most common-sense and business-like way to marry. They have known one another for ten years although they have seen little of one another. The serious responsibilities of marriage are distasteful to both of them, but the marriage they agree upon is to have no responsibilities. Marjory, for her part, desires freedom. The working out of the experiment is the theme of the story. Their meeting with an old lover of Marjory's induces the two triflers to look at life seriously. By this time too they have fallen deeply in love with one another.

"Brightly written and entertaining in its way."

+ A L A Bkl 13:401 Je '17

"Having begun with an arbitrary and improbable, if not impossible, situation, the author is at some pains to motivate fully the rest of his tale. He has succeeded in tracing real character development, and has subordinated circumstances to it in a large measure." R. W.

+ — Boston Transcript p8 Ap 14 '17 440w

"Mr Bartlett has so much skill and charm, his style is so clear and pleasing that some day he will surely write a less trifling book."

— + Dial 62:528 Je 14 '17 100w

Nation 105:16 J1 5 '17 130w

+ N Y Times 22:214 Je 3 '17 280w

"A somewhat improbable romance. . . . The book is hardly on the level with Mr Bartlett's 'Wall street girl,' which was notably original and true to life."

— + Outlook 115:710 Ap 18 '17 80w

"The reader is not denied a happy ending, but the suspension of interest coincides with the interjection of the false note."

— + Spring'd Republican p17 My 6 '17 280w

BARTLEY, MRS NALBRO ISADORA. Paradise auction. il *$1.50 (1c) Small 17-23973

The influence of one gracious and beautiful woman on the lives of four young people is the central theme of this story. "Darly," so called from her son's childish name for her, had been a famous English actress in her youth, but she had given up the stage and had come to a small American city in order to give her child a simple and wholesome bringing up. His playmates from childhood, Paul and Natalie Kail and Molly Brene look up to Darly as Jack himself does. Paul and Molly marry early but Natalie, who loves Jack, and Darly, his mother, suffer together the pain of seeing him marry a shallow, flippant little parasite who is destined to make marriage a mockery. It seems for a time that the mother's life of sacrifice has been in vain; but it has not, and not only Jack, but the others as well, find, even after her death, that their destinies are shaped by her ideals.

A L A Bkl 14:25 O '17

"We follow the separate destinies with an interest which does not wane through a long story."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 18 '17 300w

"It is a rather futile and exhausted subject, handled in a manner that is skilful, though lamentably typical of modern magazine fiction."

— + Dial 64:78 Ja 17 '18 60w

+ Ind 91:188 Ag 4 '17 70w

"Though the novel is much too long, it holds the reader's interest fairly well. The people are real with a possible exception of the somewhat too remarkable and admirable Darly."

+ — N Y Times 22:222 Je 10 '17 430w

"The characters move without artificial stimulus. This is particularly true in the cases of the actress-mother and the son's parasitic wife. The dialog is spontaneous."

+ — Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 26 '17 500w

BARTON, BRUCE. More power to you. *$1 (2½c) Century 170 17-23552

Fifty editorials from Every Week which are really sermonettes. They are tiny doses of American idealism offered to business men who are in danger of sacrificing home life, friends, books, even dreams on the altar of business success. The writer shows that many a man has, as a by-product of his building, strengthened the character and lifted the ideals of hundreds of his associates, and helped in the regeneration of entire communities. There is some good advice concerning how to achieve that by-product.

A L A Bkl 14:38 N '17

"Mr Barton has the honest American respect for material 'progress' and business 'success.' But he is not sentimental on the one hand or materialistic on the other. . . . 'More power to you' is a stimulating, vigorous, wholesome little book."

+ N Y Times 22:347 S 16 '17 400w

St Louis 15:386 N '17 20w

"It is a little book that bids us stop for a moment and examine our rushing world. It is a book of simple aphorisms phrased so cleverly that the advice is often concealed for the moment by the sugar coating."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 4 '17 160w

BARTON, GEORGE AARON. Religions of the world. (Handbooks of ethics and religion) *$1.50 Univ. of Chicago press 209 17-20653

The author is professor of biblical literature and Semitic languages in Bryn Mawr college, Pennsylvania. The book "opens with an outline of primitive religions, and then, having stated the main elements of religion in Babylon and Egypt, goes on to deal with the religion of the ancient Hebrews, Judaism, and Mohammedanism. The next section of the book is concerned with Zoroastrianism, from which it passes to the religions of India, China, and Japan. Chapters on the religions of Greece and Rome follow, and the book closes with a section on Christianity." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "At the close of each chapter supplementary readings are given. These are divided into two classes, one for extended work, and one for those who have but a limited time to give to the subject. At the end of the volume there are lists of books on special subjects for the teacher, topics for study, and an 'outline of a book to be written by the student.' There is a good index." (Boston Transcript)

+ A L A Bkl 14:148 F '18

"The volume is meant to be a textbook, and as such it is admirable."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 15 '17 480w

"His work is colored throughout by the conviction of the Protestants that man is saved by faith alone; his book is little more than a summary of the views which various peoples have entertained in regard to God, the soul, immortality, and so on."

— Dial 64:74 Ja 17 '18 850w

Ind 91:293 Ag 25 '17 90w

"An admirable text-book for the study of comparative religions. Without being controversial it is animated throughout by the characteristic spirit which recognizes that pagan religions are the product of the soul's quest after God."

+ Outlook 117:309 O 24 '17 60w

"A terse, well-written text-book packed with the facts concerning the great religions of the world."

+ R of Rs 56:329 S '17 80w

"Valuable to all who want a concise and accurate survey of the ideals and growths of the religious systems of the world. . . . The book fills a real need in the popular religious literature of the day."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 17 '17 300w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p408 Ag 23 '17 180w

BARTON, GEORGE EDWARD. Re-education. *$1 (7c) Houghton 362 17-31277

A fearless analysis of the institutional system of the United States by a business man and for business men. The writer believes that there are some fundamental weaknesses or fallacies in our present system of dealing with education, sin, insanity and disease. He bases objections to the existing institutional system on the failure to do more than prevent, during the period of incarceration, the act of which the prisoner or patient has been guilty. He would build up a system of re-education which would make producers of inmates of institutions with an increase of efficiency. The thought underlying the inquiry and arraignment emanates from the best social theory of the day.

BASHFORD, HENRY HOWARTH. Songs out of school. (New poetry ser.) *75c Houghton 821

There is a note of quiet happiness in this small book of poems. Even "The vision of spring, 1916," the one piece in the book that touches on the world tragedy, speaks with the voice of hope. Other poems are, The high road, Little April, Litany in spring, Lullabies at Bethlehem, Cradle songs, River songs.

"A small collection of verses, most of which appeared in the Spectator, the Nation, the Outlook, and Country Life."

+ A L A Bkl 13:389 Je '17

+ Ath p478 O '16 30w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 21 '17 140w

"There are serious and elegant poems which comport themselves becomingly, but the zest of the book lies in the pattering and twittering verses which in five or six instances overleap that elusive but difficult barrier that divides mere attractiveness from authentic charm." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 104:710 Je 14 '17 180w

"The difference between a minor and a sub-minor poet is something to be felt rather than explained, yet there is a definite line between. . . . Mr Jeffers is a conventional minor poet; Mr Arensberg is an unconventional one; we catch, out of the corner of our eye, a glint of wings, spite of the manifest failures of each. Mr Bashford, on the other hand, without a failure to his credit, is distinctly a sub-minor. . . . The trouble with his verses is that they lack something vital, a distinctiveness, a tang, the scent of personality."

N Y Times 22:257 Jl 8 '17 180w

+ Outlook 115:116 Ja 17 '17 180w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BASSETT, JOHN SPENCER. Middle group of American historians. *$2 (2½c) Macmillan 928 17-2031

The "middle period" of which the author writes is not exactly defined. Its beginning is placed at some time following the close of the War of 1812, its ending at the time when the scientific spirit gained dominance over the patriotic school of historical writing. 1884, the year of the founding of the American historical association, is suggested as the closing date of the period. The author's purpose is to treat of the men who were writing history during this time, Jared Sparks, George Bancroft, Prescott, Motley, and Peter Force. There is an introductory chapter on Early progress of history in the United States, and a concluding chapter on The historians and their publishers.

"His chapters on Sparks and Bancroft make the largest contribution of fresh material, for many unpublished passages are drawn from the Sparks manuscripts in the Harvard college library, and still more from the Bancroft manuscripts in the keeping of the Massachusetts historical society." M. A. DeW. Howe

+ Am Hist R 22:879 J1 '17 650w

A L A Bkl 13:304 Ap '17

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 24 '17 120w

"A distinguishing characteristic of the work is that it has to do with historians rather than with history; the author is far more interested in the men themselves and in their activities than he is in the books they wrote. . . . The book is itself a piece of careful research rather than a contribution to historical criticism or the history of ideas; and taken for what it is, it will be found, by professional historians at least, and one would think by a rather wide reading public as well, a very useful book and an extremely interesting one." Carl Becker

+ Dial 62:301 Ap 5 '17 1800w

Eng Hist R 32:460 J1 '17 70w

+ Lit D 54:2000 Je 30 '17 430w

"The book is eminently readable and is valuable for its appreciation, sympathetic and yet critical, of the men who made this middle period a golden age of historical writing in the United States."

+ Nation 104:631 My 24 '17 900w

+ N Y Times 22:143 Ap 15 '17 450w

Pittsburgh 22:209 Mr '17

St Louis 15:119 Ap '17 50w

+ Spec 118:417 Ap 7 '17 130w

"Offered as the understudy of a more elaborate work which the author hopes to produce if the future favors."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Je 21 '17 720w

BASSETT, LEE EMERSON. Handbook of oral reading. *$1.60 Houghton 808.5 17-2317

"This book is the outgrowth of several years of classroom instruction and practice based on the theory that effective oral expression is the result of clear thinking." (Preface) The first of the three parts into which the book is divided is devoted to the problem of thought-getting and to the modulations of the voice that serve to make meaning clear to others. Part 2 is devoted to the problem of the imaginative and emotional response to thought. The technical problems of tone production are treated in part 3. The book is well supplied with illustrative material. The author is associate professor of English at Leland Stanford Junior university.

"Sensible ideas, well expressed. Everts' 'The speaking voice' (A L A Catalog 1904-1911) will be sufficient in the average library."

+ A L A Bkl 13:389 Je '17

Cleveland p122 N '17 50w

"Good selections, a clear statement of principles, and a full outline for teachers."

+ Ind 91:231 Ag 11 '17 30w

St Louis 15:183 Je '17 10w

"The high-school teacher of public speaking will be interested in this book, which sets forth very forcibly the principles of natural oral expression. . . . The book might be more attractive to the high-school student if more of the selections were from contemporary literature." E. F. Geyer and R. L. Lyman

+ — School R 25:608 O '17 100w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ap 25 '17 150w

BASSETT, SARA WARE. Story of sugar. il *75c (2½c) Penn 17-16751

Uniform with the stories of cotton, gold and silver, lumber, wool, iron, leather and glass. It is written for boys and girls from seven to twelve and has a thread of plot upon which hang bits of true information about the history and manufacture of sugar. A real sugaring-off in the maple woods, a visit to a sugar refinery, and another to a candy factory are narrated with emphasis on the processes that children can readily grasp. The sport and adventure intermingled are wholesome, the sort that live boys and girls have a big appetite for.

+ Outlook 117:574 D 5 '17 60w

+ Springf'd Republican p15 D 1 '17 100w

BASSETT, SARA WARE. Wayfarers at the Angel's. *$1.25 (3¼c) Doran 17-28601

This is another Cape Cod story by the author of "The taming of Zenas Henry." A wooden angel, long ago a ship's figurehead, guards the door of the "straggling house on the bluff, half buried in vines and flowers," which is the home of three bachelors; John Bartlett, retired captain of the life-saving station; Timothy Talbot, with his Civil war relics and his seven pairs of shoes, which he wears in unvarying rotation, and David Furber, the happy-go-lucky sailor lad whom the life-savers have rescued from a foundering barque, and who after being wrecked twelve times, has now elected to stay ashore. Into this household comes Ann, who is "better'n a trained nurse, she's a born one," to nurse David through a fever, and life becomes a different thing to all three men. It also changes greatly for Ann, whom one of the three persuades to stay with him always as "angel of the grey house—a sight better one than that wooden image over the door."

"The little tale is slight, but rather pleasant. There are some amusing bits, and only one disagreeable character in the book, all the rest being virtuous to a degree."

+ N Y Times 22:442 O 28 '17 150w

"Sara Ware Bassett writes another buoyant 'Cape' story which nowise infringes upon the rights and prerogatives of Mr Lincoln."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 D 23 '17 290w

BASSETT, WILBUR. Wander-ships; folk-stories of the sea, with notes upon their origin. *$1.50 Open ct. 398.2 17-27992

"The book under the above title—'Wander-ships'—is a small collection of some of the stories about wonderful and strange ships that have been reported as sailing the seas, from and to no port or haven. . . . To further emphasize the stories, for the benefit of the student of such literature, copious notes on the various tales are appended. . . . The volume is something of an encyclopædia on the subject of ghostly craft and vessels, the origin and voyages of which are lost in the shades of earliest tradition."—Boston Transcript

"The several tales are interesting, whether the reader is or is not familiar with such 'yarns,' and the volume is a distinct contribution to the literature of the sea."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 5 '18 280w

"The work is a very unusual one, but will be a source of delight to those who love to dig down into fundamentals, for even if the superstitions of past ages are taken as the subject, the work is in itself essentially a scientific one." J. W.

+ N Y Call p14 D 29 '17 800w

Outlook 118:31 Ja 2 '18 70w

BATCHELDER, ROGER. Watching and waiting on the border. il *$1.25 (3c) Houghton 355.7 17-13927

The author writes of his experience on the Mexican border with one of the Massachusetts regiments of the National guard. His first purpose is to answer the many questions asked him since his return: "Was it hot down there?" "What are the Mexicans like?" and so on. His second is "to show, by narrating the story of the mobilization and the subsequent service of the National guard, how pitifully incompetent and unprepared it was and is, to form the reserve military force of the United States." The book has an introduction by E. Alexander Powell.

A L A Bkl 14:17 O '17
Cleveland p116 S '17 40w

"While Private Batchelder is frankly outspoken in discussing these questions, he writes with the good sense and judgment born of experience. As a record of personal service in what may fairly be termed a hard country physically, his book is well worth reading by every recruit as a helpful guide to his duty and conduct."

+ Ind 91:108 JI 21 '17 300w
N Y Br Lib News 4:102 JI '17
Pittsburgh 22:684 O '17 40w
Pratt p45 O '17 40w

"To those interested in military life with just a dash of adventure thrown in there is an especial appeal in 'Watching and waiting on the border.'"

+ Spring'd Republican p15 Ag 26 '17 130w

BAYLEY, WILLIAM SHIRLEY. Descriptive mineralogy. il *$3.50 Appleton 549 17-21365

This work, prepared as a textbook for students, is designed to give "a comprehensive view of modern mineralogy rather than a detailed knowledge of many minerals." The author says, "It does not pretend to furnish a complete discussion of the mineral kingdom, nor a means of determining the nature of any mineral that may be met with. The chapters devoted to the process of determinative mineralogy are brief, and the familiar 'key to the determination of species' is omitted. In place of the latter is a simple guide to the descriptions of minerals to be found in the body of the text." The three parts of the book are devoted to: General chemical mineralogy; Descriptive mineralogy, and Determinative mineralogy. Lists of minerals are given in appendices; also a list of references. Hintze's "Handbuch der Mineralogie" has been drawn on for matter in the text, and "Mineral resources of the United States" has been used as a basis for the statistics. The author is professor of geology in the University of Illinois.

+ Pittsburgh 22:814 D '17 80w

BAYLISS, WILLIAM MADDOCK. Physiology of food and economy in diet. *65c Longmans 613.2 Agr17-520

"The physiology of food and economy in diet" is a rather academic manual which has arisen, Professor Bayliss tells us, from a course of lectures given at University college, London, in November, 1916. . . . After a brief résumé of the problem as a whole, Professor Bayliss studies the uses of food, the classes of foodstuffs, the question of quantity, accessory factors, digestibility, alcohol, vegetarianism, exercise, the value of cooking, characteristics of certain articles of diet, and possibilities of economy. As a general summary of his directions, he concludes with the aphorism, "Take care of the calories and the protein will take care of itself."—N Y Times

"The American reader will perhaps turn with especial interest to the study of the work of the Commission for relief in Belgium as an example of good food ministration and control."

+ N Y Times 22:395 O 14 '17 150w
Pratt p19 O '17
St Louis 15:327 S '17 10w

"In a hundred pages he presents in clear, concise and fascinating language the fundamental principles of nutrition. Bayliss, though noted for his work on the secretory glands and not recognized as an expert on nutrition, has nevertheless written with the appreciative touch characteristic of the master mind." Graham Lusk

+ Science n s 46:18 JI 6 '17 50w
+ Spec 118:520 My 5 '17 150w

BAYONET training manual used by the British forces. (Van Nostrand's military manuals) il *30c Van Nostrand 355

This pocket manual is a reprint of material which appeared in the Infantry Journal for May, 1917. The copyright is held by the United States Infantry association. The preface states that the instructions are from the latest British training manual (1916), and that they are based on experience in accordance with which the forces are now being trained.

BEACH, HARLAN PAGE. Renaissant Latin America. il $1 (2c) Missionary educ. movement 266 16-22287

"An outline and interpretation of the Congress on Christian work in Latin America, held at Panama, February 10-19, 1916." The author has prepared a condensed account of the congress, quoting as largely as was consistent with his purpose from speeches and reports. Contents: The story of the Congress; Re-discovering Latin America; Interpretation, message, method; Latin Americans and education; Leaves for the healing of nations; The upbuilding of womanhood; The Latin evangelical churches; The home fulcrum; Unity's fraternal program; Congressional addresses; Aftermath and estimates.

"The volume is interesting from beginning to end and for the busy reader meets an urgent need." J. W. M.

+ Am J Theol 21:480 JI '17 90w

"Much suggestive and stirring material is contained in this condensed review of Christian work."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 3 '17 300w

"The exchange of ideas was noteworthy as delegates were present from nearly all over the world, and from these workers Dr Beach has collected a most interesting fund of facts."

+ Ind 90:257 My 5 '17 60w

"While the enthusiasm of the author for the South Americans carries him perhaps a little too far, yet the book is well worth reading."

+ Spring'd Republican p17 Ap 8 '17 140w

BEACH, REX ELLINGWOOD. Laughing Bill Hyde, and other stories. il *$1.35 (1c) Harper 17-30123

The title story is a tale of Alaska, so is the one following, "The north wind's malice." Among the others, several are stories of business, one is a newspaper story. Some of the titles are: His stock in trade; With bridges burned; With interest to date; The cub reporter; Out of the night; The real and the make-believe; Running Elk; The moon, the maid, and the winged shoes; Flesh. The book is printed without table of contents.

"He excels in one kind of fiction which is purely American: the business story."

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 22 '17 300w

"There is nothing particularly original or striking in any of these tales, but many of them will no doubt furnish amusement for an idle hour. They are written in Mr Beach's well-known and rather agreeable style."

+ — N Y Times 22:516 D 2 '17 800w

BEALS, MRS KATHARINE (MCMILLAN). Flower lore and legend. *$1.25 Holt 716.2 17-23777

The author has brought together a store of miscellaneous information—myth, legend, and fancy, with quotations from poetry,—connected with thirty-five of our common flowers. Chapters are given to the snowdrop, arbutus, crocus, narcissus, dandelion, violet, pansy, mignonette, buttercup, etc.

BEALS, MRS KATHARINE—Continued

A L A Bkl 14:75 D '17

BEAN, C. E. W. Letters from France. II *5s
 Cassell & co., London 940.91

"Mr Bean, war correspondent for the Commonwealth of Australia, has not attempted to narrate the full story of the Australian imperial force, but gives graphic accounts of the first impressions of some of the Australians in France, of their life in the trenches and in billets, of the share of the Australians in the Somme advance and in the fighting at Pozières, and of their bravery at Mouquet Farm."—Ath

Ath p420 Ag '17 120w

"The simple, easy style of these letters shows us clearly what the Australians have done in France."

+ Sat R 123:552 Je 16 '17 1050w

"It is a wonderful story, and it is told with great spirit. Mr Bean warns his readers that the Australian troops hate to be called 'Anzacs,' just as they hate being called 'Colonials.'"

+ Spec 118:675 Je 16 '17 120w

BEARD, FREDERICA, comp. Prayers for use in home, school and Sunday school. *60c
 Doran 248 17-24844

The author has assembled a number of prayers for children and young people. In those for little people she appeals to the child's natural love of rhythm and repetition. Those for older boys and girls are drawn from many sources and are characterized by a spirit of reverence. They are arranged in four groups: Prayers for little children; Prayers for boys and girls; Prayers for young people; For use on special occasions.

"A beautiful collection."

+ A L A Bkl 14:73 D '17

"Tho not many are adapted to use in public schools, in private schools, in the home and Sunday school, they would provide splendid suggestive training."

+ Ind 91:354 S 1 '17 60w

Ind 92:449 D 1 '17 30w

BEAUFORT, J. M. DE. Behind the German veil; a record of a journalistic war pilgrimage. II *$2 (2c) Dodd 940.91 17-14977

Before going to Germany in 1914 as the representative of a London newspaper, the author had spent three years in journalistic work in New York, and he acknowledges a debt of gratitude to his American training. He is a Hollander by birth and parentage and as a boy was sent to school in Germany. His sympathies, even before starting on his mission to Germany, were strongly pro-Ally. He says, "I started on my mission and entered Germany with as far as possible an open mind. I could not honestly say at that time that I hated the Germans; I merely had no use for them." All his experiences within the German empire intensified his feeling. The book consists of four parts: General impressions; My trip to the eastern front and visit to Hindenburg; An incognito visit to the fleet and Germany's naval harbours; Interviews.

"He relates his experiences and impressions in journalistic and entertaining fashion."

+ A L A Bkl 14:17 O '17

"The style in which the book is written is not attractive, but the matter is undeniably of interest."

+ Ath p204 Ap '17 170w

"The material is interesting but the writer dilates rather too freely on his own shrewdness and 'nerve.'"

+ Cleveland p101 S '17 60w

"If there is anything 'Behind the German veil' which is particularly worth disclosing, it has not been revealed by J. M. de Beaufort."

— Nation 106:70 Ja 17 '18 160w

"Offers some of the most interesting first-hand accounts that have come out of Germany. . . . Mr de Beaufort writes vivaciously, although somewhat garrulously, and his book is full of interesting matter of much importance for Americans if they would understand the German spirit. He was in Europe as the correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph."

+ N Y Times 22:215 Je 3 '17 600w

Pittsburgh 22:680 O '17 20w

+ R of Rs 56:107 J1 '17 90w

BEAVERBROOK, WILLIAM MAXWELL AITKEN, 1st baron. Canada in Flanders. maps *1s 3d Hodder & Stoughton, London 940.91

The second volume of the official story of the Canadian expeditionary force covers the period between September, 1915, and July, 1916. For an account of the first volume consult the Digest annual, 1916, under Aitken, Sir William Maxwell—the name of Lord Beaverbrook before he was raised to the peerage.

"The descriptions of the dash and vigour of the Canadian troops are graphic and inspiring."

+ Ath p253 My '17 70w

St Louis 15:417 D '17 20w

"Lord Beaverbrook's second volume concerning the Canadians, which is written by him as the Canadian 'Eyewitness,' contains a most readable and workmanlike account of the long and bitter struggles first at St Eloi and then at Hooze, in the Ypres Salient, which ended a fortnight before the battle of the Somme began."

+ Spec 118:675 Je 16 '17 120w

"It is difficult to conceive of anything more likely to stimulate zeal and efficiency than volumes of this kind. The general public cannot master an official dispatch, so long after the event, without considerable explanatory notes and plans. The whole scheme of the volumes at present issued is to present a coherent account of an action as a whole, and at the same time to signalize individual acts of gallantry."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p110 Mr 8 '17 600w

BECHHOFFER, C. E., ed. Russian anthology in English. *$1.50 Dutton 891.7 A17-1637

"Translated extracts in verse and prose from twenty-five authors (of whom only one, Volynsky, is new to English readers), with some ballads and folk songs."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

A L A Bkl 14:119 Ja '18

"This collection of extracts from Russian verse, drama, and prose is too fragmentary to be satisfying. In some of the examples, such as the excerpt from 'The Idiot' by Dostoevsky, the absence of context makes for obscurity and a sense of incompleteness. Other examples are enjoyable, such as Gogol's idyllic 'Old-world gentle-folk,' 'The death of Ivan' by Alexis Tolstoy, Pushkin's poem 'The three sisters,' Leo Tolstoy's thoughtful criticism of Maupassant, and the slyly humorous sketch by Chekhov, 'A work of art.' Many prominent modern Russian authors are represented, though we miss the names of Gorky, Grigorovitch, Artsbashev, and Sologub."

+ Ath p360 J1 '17 100w

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 3 '17 230w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p214 My 5 '17 20w

BECKLEY, ZOE, and GOLLOMB, JOSEPH, comps. Songs for courage. *$1 Barse & Hopkins 821.08 17-15993

Courage is one of "the subjects made prominent by the war" to which librarians are officially advised to give special attention in book selection. In this collection of over 100 titles we find the old favorites, such as Henley's "Invictus," Sill's "Opportunity," Matthew Arnold's "Self-dependence," together with the work of more recent writers.

Cleveland p121 N '17 50w

"Many old favorites are here. . . . There are also many unworthy verses. The inferior verse far outranks the worthy. And it is surprising to note how many of the poems of revolutionary courage are missing." Clement Wood
+ — N Y Call p14 Je 24 '17 120w

BEECROFT, WILLEY INGRAHAM, comp.
Who's who among the wild flowers and ferns. new and combined ed il *$1.50 Moffat 582 A17-406

"The outstanding feature of the work and the one which commends it to the ordinary student, is that a person need not be a botanist to use Mr Beecroft's guide." (Spring'd Republican) "The flowers are classified by colors, as in most volumes of the kind, and under the name of each flower ample description is detailed for identification. There are blank pages for notes." (Boston Transcript)

A L A Bkl 13:361 My '17

+ Boston Transcript p13 Ap 7 '17 150w

"The inclusiveness of 'Who's who among the wild flowers and ferns' will rightly make it a popular guide."

+ Ind 91:109 J1 21 '17 40w

"While scientific and accurate, it is entirely untechnical."

+ Spring'd Republican p17 Ag 29 '17 130w

BEER, GEORGE LOUIS. English-speaking peoples; their future relations and joint international obligations. 2d ed *$1.50 (2c) Macmillan 327.73 17-17291

Mr Beer was formerly lecturer in European history at Columbia university, and is the author of "The old colonial system, 1660-1754," etc. He recalls in his preface Admiral Mahan's essay of 1894 entitled "Possibilities of an Anglo-American re-union," and goes on to say: "What in 1894 was unripe and academic, has today become urgent and practical." A series of notes is appended which furnish a running bibliography to easily accessible and non-technical literature. Some of the material in the book appeared originally in the Political Quarterly, New Republic, and elsewhere.

+ Am Econ R 7:840 D '17 60w

+ A L A Bkl 14:112 Ja '18

Ath p463 S '17 60w

"Valuable as the author's opinions are, it is no discourtesy to him to say that the facts, figures, and references appended to the book in some forty pages of 'Notes' are in some respects even more valuable; for facts on these contentious subjects are often ignored and sometimes very difficult to get at, and Mr Beer has a genius for relevant documentation."

+ Ath p505 O '17 1600w

Cleveland p138 D '17 60w

"Mr Beer's argument is logical and forceful. He has scrupulous regard for the facts of history and economics; his views are the outcome of a lifetime of study of British imperial and colonial affairs and of international politics. Many, perhaps most, of his readers will shrink from his conclusions. But no one will be justified in withholding from this book the tribute of candid and thoughtful consideration." F: A. Ogg

+ Dial 63:520 N 22 '17 1100w

Ind 92:60 O 6 '17 70w

Reviewed by Sinclair Kennedy
J Pol Econ 26:101 Ja '18 470w

"The valuable references and notes are sure to be of immediate help to every thoughtful reader interested in this absorbing and timely question."

+ Lit D 55:45 O 13 '17 300w

"The volume is easily one of the most weighty pieces of writing about the war that has yet appeared in this country, and should be widely read."

+ Nation 105:322 S 20 '17 560w

N Y Br Lib News 4:133 S '17 30w

"A factor of the first importance in the molding of public opinion in this country. . . . In three remarkably thoughtful concluding chapters Mr Beer discusses the predominant factors in the unity of English-speaking peoples, the economic possibilities in co-operation, and the community of Anglo-American policy toward China and Latin America. The chapter on the growing economic interdependence of the world is, in particular, closely reasoned."

+ N Y Times 22:356 S 23 '17 1200w

"Without necessarily giving full credence to ideas that are indeed but tentatively advanced, one may affirm that 'The English-speaking peoples' is a statesmanlike book. In its grasp of the ends to be wished for, in its perception of present realities, and in the caution of its conclusions, Mr Beer's book differs essentially and completely both from those forecasts of the future which are more or less frankly utopian and from the desperately opportunistic proposals which the present world-crisis has called forth from certain would-be practical idealists. Although his style is of the plainest (in both senses of the word), the author possesses an unusual power of extracting fundamental truths from a great mass of conflicting facts. . . . The book will prove valuable for its broad and illuminating criticisms of such general ideas as that of nationality, and of such programmes or proposals as pan-Americanism and the League to enforce peace."

+ + No Am 206:478 S '17 950w

Outlook 117:64 S 12 '17 150w

"He states his arguments cogently, but without heat, and fortifies every position he takes up with a full reference to facts and authorities. We regret only that in the effort to be at once condensed and accurate he has allowed his style to become, at times, so abstruse and technical as to prevent his volume from appealing to the widest possible public."

+ — Spec 119:sup472 N 3 '17 800w

"We are bound to demur to his too facile assumption of the abandonment of free trade by Great Britain." R: Roberts

Survey 38:549 S 22 '17 650w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p395 Ag 16 '17 50w

"It is one of the best, most original, and judicious attempts to construct out of the political anarchy of these times new organizations. . . . Mr Beer modestly describes his book as a livre de circonstance dealing with an unpredictable future. It is in reality a valuable addition to political science. . . . This book, with its earnest appeal for support to a permanent, loosely knit association between Great Britain and the United States, is to be welcomed by every one who has at heart the ideals which these two countries represent."

+ + The Times [London] Lit Sup p422 S 6 '17 620w

"The book is the work of a scholar, and it is, as scholars say, thoroughly documented. But it is not primarily addressed to scholars, and it is not a dry-as-dust performance. It is addressed to thinking people who are ready to consider seriously and with care the duty of the nation in this great crisis, and it abounds with fresh suggestions and arguments which are bound to excite interest and open new channels of thought." G. B. Adams

+ Yale R ns 7:416 Ja '18 1200w

BEERS, HENRY AUGUSTIN. Two twilights. *$1 Badger, R: G. 811 17-25112

"This volume includes selections from two early books of verse, long out of print, a few pieces from 'The Ways of Yale'; and a handful of poems contributed of late years to the magazines and not heretofore collected." (Preface) The author has been professor of English literature in Yale university since 1880.

BEITH, JOHN HAY (IAN HAY, pseud.). All in it; "K (1)" carries on. *$1.50 (2½c) Houghton 940.91 17-29361

This is the continuation of "The first hundred thousand," promised us by Captain Beith. "The first hundred thousand" closed with the battle of Loos. The present narrative follows certain friends of ours from the scene of that costly but valuable experience, through a win-campaign in the neighbourhood of Ypres and Ploegsteert, to profitable participation in the battle of the Somme." (Author's note) Captain (now major) Wagstaffe and Private (now corporal) Mucklewame reappear in this volume.

BEITH, JOHN HAY—Continued

"Told with the same humorous turns and descriptions that made the first book so readable."
+ A L A Bkl 14:88 D '17

"Bit by bit Major Beith pieces together the tale of the fighter in the present war. He does not minimize its horrors, but he does not over-emphasize them. Through his entire story runs an undercurrent of optimism." E. F. E.
+ Boston Transcript p8 N 7 '17 1500w

Cleveland p130 D '17 60w
Ind 93:128 Ja 19 '18 50w

"Ian Hay's own narrative is full of the brightest humor, not untouched with an equally bright cynicism. . . . And yet it would be a grave mistake to assume that because he writes brightly, and often humorously, Major Beith's is a 'light' book. It is far from that. . . . In 'All in it' the heroism is present always. The terrible things are not glossed over."
+ N Y Times 22:462 N 11 '17 750w

+ Outlook 117:520 N 28 '17 100w
+ Springf'd Republican p11 Ja 27 '18 580w

BEITH, JOHN HAY (IAN HAY, pseud.). Getting together. *50c (6½c) Doubleday; Houghton 940.91 17-6208

In this little book, Captain Beith, who has been lecturing in the United States, attempts to bring Briton and American to an understanding of one another. He answers some of the questions that have been put to him: How about that blockade? What are you opening our mails for? Would you welcome American intervention? etc.

"Appeared in the Outlook, F 7 '17."

+ A L A Bkl 13:315 My '17
+ Cath World 105:843 S '17 180w
+ Cleveland p102 S '17 50w

"A sincere and fine-spirited effort to explain misunderstandings between the citizens of Britain and the United States."

+ N Y Times 22:45 F 11 '17 800w

Reviewed by Joseph Mosher

Pub W 91:593 F 17 '17 350w

"His brief account of the voluntary help rendered by America to the Allies before she came into the war will surprise many people. . . . His manly and sensible little book should do good."
+ Spec 118:678 Je 16 '17 140w

"Ian Hay's little essay in Anglo-American propagandism will not increase his literary reputation. . . . There is no need of a presentation of the case of the Allies to intelligent Americans, and this book is not so conceived as to win over old-fashioned Yankees who entertain animosity toward Great Britain. The softness of the language defeats its own purpose."
— + Springf'd Republican p15 Mr 4 '17 400w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p203 Ap 26 '17 220w

BEITH, JOHN HAY (IAN HAY, pseud.). Oppressed English. *50c (6½c) Doubleday 941.5 17-18156

The author of "The first hundred thousand" and "Getting together," a Scotsman, has some witty and practical things to say on the world attitude toward the "English" as distinct from the "British" people. He writes: "In the war of to-day, for instance, whenever anything particularly unpleasant or unpopular has to be done—such as holding up neutral mails, or establishing a blacklist of neutral firms trading with the enemy—upon whom does the odium fall? Upon 'England'; never upon France, and only occasionally upon Great Britain. . . . On the other hand, . . . a victory gained by English boys from Devon or Yorkshire appears as a British victory, pure and simple." The fourth and fifth chapters make clear some of the answers to: "Why can't you people settle the Irish question?"—the claims of the Nationalists, the Unionists, and of the Sinn Fein being put side by side for study by outsiders.

"Good-natured, humorous, but very lucid explanation of the Irish question."

+ A L A Bkl 14:18 O '17
+ Cleveland p131 D '17 70w

"As is apt to be the case with a book of this kind, Mr Hay's desire to make his humorous periods leads him sometimes to sacrifice the exact truth. He exaggerates the idiosyncrasies of the Englishman to make his satire carry over. Once you have forgiven that, however, you find the little book pleasant reading."
+ Dial 63:461 N 8 '17 190w

"The Irish rebellion was not made in Germany. It was made in England, and not a little part of it was made by just such under-heads as Captain Beith, with their inaccurate talk of beneficences that were never really conferred and freedom that never existed." F. H.
— New Repub 13:188 D 15 '17 1400w

"As a specimen of dry Scotch humor carrying with it a large volume of matter for serious consideration, Mr Hay's little book is unrivalled in its way, though it is, perhaps, not exactly the 'sense of humour' that is likely to appeal to ardent Irish patriots. . . . The book contains much matter of considerable interest to Americans, for the author has much more than an ordinary grasp of the psychology of the peoples he deals with in this little volume." J. W.
+ N Y Call p14 Jl 15 '17 650w

Pittsburgh 22:674 O '17 70w

Pratt p46 O '17 20w

St Louis 15:379 O '17 10w

"An amusing comment on British characteristics."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 O 4 '17 300w

BEITH, JOHN HAY (IAN HAY, pseud.). "Pip"; a romance of youth. *$1.50 (2c) Houghton 17-9709

A happy story of irresponsible youth. Half the book is taken up with the school-day adventures of the young hero. Pip is a vallant cricketer and when he leaves school he becomes something of a nation-wide figure. The death of his father sends him into the world to earn his living. He does so for a time as a chauffeur. There is a girl in the story, of course. Pip met her first as a friend of his sister's, when she was sixteen. She is older and so is he when the book closes, ending with a golf match that decides an important matter for Pip.

+ A L A Bkl 13:354 My '17

"Up to the outbreak of the war Ian Hay was known in this country as the author of six books, all of them fiction. . . . Prior to these, however, he had written another book. Its title is 'Pip' . . . Its understanding of childhood, youth and early manhood is keen, its ability to make the most of the zest of delicate comedy is complete." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 17 '17 1500w

+ Lit D 54:1089 Ap 14 '17 200w

"Captain Beith writes with genial humor, and his account of the making of Pip into a man, and a man who is a thorough Englishman, is likely to bring many a smile to the face of his reader. Having been, in the days before the war, a schoolmaster himself he knows much about the life of British schools and the character of the men who conduct them."
+ N Y Times 22:93 Mr 18 '17 500w

+ Outlook 115:622 Ap 4 '17 60w

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 22 '17 250w

"As a school story it is inferior to 'David Blaize,' and the detailed descriptions of cricket contests are beyond the American reader, but it is nevertheless a story of decided interest."
+ Wis Lib Bul 13:126 Ap '17 50w

BELL, ARCHIE. Trip to Lotus land. il $2.50
(4c) Lane 915.2 17-30747

The author outlines a six-weeks' itinerary for the tourist to Japan, and states that his purpose is to convey to the reader something of the joys that such a tour holds for a traveler. He says that the book is not a guide book. "Mr Terry's 'Japanese empire' and the excellent publications of the Imperial Japanese government railways" supply that need, and his pleasant narrative account of his own travels will serve to supplement them. Yokohama, Kamakura, Miyashita, Tokyo, Nagoya, Kyoto, Kobe, Nagasaki and Nikko are among the points visited. There are over fifty illustrations.

Reviewed by A. M. Chase

+ Bookm 46:335 N '17 40w

"Both instructive and entertaining."

+ Lit D 56:40 Ja 12 '18 170w

+ N Y Times 22:579 D 30 '17 100w

"[Fulfills its purpose] admirably both in text and illustrations."

+ Outlook 117:615 D 12 '17 60w

+ R of Rs 57:219 F '18 50w

BELL, FREDERICK MCKELVEY. First Canadians in France; the chronicle of a military hospital in the war zone. il $1.35 (2½c) Doran 940.91 17-28775

Colonel Bell, attached, as medical director, to the first contingent of Canadian troops overseas, was detailed to found a Canadian hospital near Boulogne. He chronicles the progress of that undertaking among the heterogeneous lot of men whom "the hammer of time," with many a nasty knock, welded together. The quality that made Colonel Bell the one force that held the boys together is responsible for the grip the book gets on the reader. It is a simple recital of every day routine, without central theme or plot, told in a realistic, colloquial, normal, human fashion with an eye keen to every humorous incident that livened camp monotony.

"The writer confesses to a flavor of romancing in his story, but the reader will not feel like criticising this or seeking too closely the line between fact and imagination."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 10 '17 400w

"Clever characterization, and many amusing anecdotes."

+ Cleveland p130 D '17 30w

+ Ind 93:128 Ja 19 '18 170w

"Certainly, this excellent book should be read. It is so human."

+ N Y Times 22:448 N 4 '17 700w

Outlook 117:387 N 7 '17 30w

BELL, JOHN JOY. Kiddies. $1.50 (2½c) Stokes

A collection of seventeen stories about children by this well known Scottish humorist, author of "Wee Macgregor." That young hero appears in several of the stories. Among the titles are: Habakkuk; Little boy; Some advantages of being an aunt; The good fairy; Mr Logie's heart; An early engagement; Silk stocking and suèdes; The ugly uncle.

"The stories are canny and full of dry humor and quaint pathos."

+ Ind 92:604 D 29 '17 200w

N Y Br Lib News 4:63 Ap '17 50w

"The humorous tales are, generally speaking, the best, the serious and pathetic ones being somewhat conventional and oversentimental."

+ N Y Times 22:500 N 25 '17 240w

+ Outlook 117:475 N 21 '17 20w

BELL, JOHN JOY. Till the clock stops. $1.35 (2c) Duffield 17-5450

The clock, with its diamond-studded pendulum, stood in a secluded house in Scotland. It was guaranteed to go for a year and a day after the pendulum was set in motion—that being done on the death of its owner Christopher Craig. It was in some way to watch over the green box full of diamonds and the other fortune reserved for Christopher's nephew, Alan Craig, supposedly lost in the Arctic. Its enemy was Bullard, London member of a South African mining syndicate, who knew of the existence of the diamonds and its guardians were a dense green liquid with which the case was partly filled, placed over the ominous word "Dangerous," Caw, the faithful servant of the dead man, and Marjorie Handyside, the daughter of a doctor and neighbor. How these and others played their respective parts, and the surprise in store for all when the clock stopped make a thrilling tale. The writer is the author of "Wee MacGregor."

A L A Bkl 13:401 Je '17

"The story is well planned, and full of excitement and suspense up to the last chapter."

+ Ath p101 F '17 30w

+ N Y Times 22:110 Mr 25 '17 250w

Outlook 115:668 Ap 11 '17 20w

"A melodrama full of alarms and surprises."

Spec 118:241 F 24 '17 7w

+ Springfd Republican p17 Ap 8 '17 210w

"Mr J. J. Bell may have had the cinematograph in mind in writing 'Till the clock stops.' Hidden diamonds form the mainspring of the story, and propel it forward mechanically through its allotted span; and one can imagine the pistol shots, explosions, and so forth which arise out of the search for them being reduced to a series of highly effective pictures."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p44 Ja 25 '17 20w

BELL, JOHN KEBLE (KEBLE HOWARD, pseud.). Gay life. $1.30 (2c) Lane 17-6536

A happy and wholesome story of theatrical life. The author has written it to counteract some of the sensational ideas that prevail concerning the stage. Jilly Nipchin is an attractive and impudent little Cockney who determines to put her twin gifts, mimicry and an agility in turning handspings, to use on the stage. Her family is in need, and Jilly chooses this way of helping them. The story follows her progress with a traveling company in the provinces, in the music halls, in a repertory company, and finally takes her to America. The hero, Ed Chauncey, the world's greatest equilibrist, is as worthy in his way as is Jilly.

+ Ath p44 Ag '17 90w

"The wholesome story shows a thorough knowledge of the external life of the stage, but not very deep understanding of universal human nature. The author is a theatrical manager and producer, and the editor of the Sketch, a semi-theatrical publication."

Cleveland p63 My '17 70w

"The thorough knowledge of the stage and of all things stagey which the author obviously possesses apparently does not include the capacity for understanding the forces that underlie the struggles and the successes of its workers. 'The gay life' is superficial, occasionally clever, and of feeing value."

— Dial 62:247 Mr 22 '17 110w

+ Ind 90:84 Ap 7 '17 100w

"The novel is clever, amusing and graphic in its account of stage life, though developed in a somewhat jerky manner. The theme recalls certain of Leonard Merrick's delightful tales, and of course this story suffers from the comparison, but it is an entertaining piece of work, with an attractive, very human heroine and several interesting and well-drawn characters."

+ N Y Times 22:69 F 25 '17 350w

"The book on the whole is pleasant reading."

+ Spec 119:169 Ag 18 '17 30w

"Mr Howard weaves a colorless romance into the narrative, but Jilly's adventures and high spirits hold the attention without outside aid."

+ Springfd Republican p17 D 9 '17 220w

BELL, JOHN KEBLE—Continued

"It is a jolly tale, an amusing tale, a good-natured tale. There is general truth in portions of his book, which the tale as a whole lacks."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p334 J1
12 '17 500w

BELL, JOHN KEBLE (KEBLE HOWARD, pseud.), Smiths in war time. *$1.40 (2½c) Lane 17-30282

This story, by the author of "The Smiths of Surbiton," "The Smiths of Valley View," etc. is written in a lighter vein than most of the novels dealing with England in war-time. It tells us how Mr Smith, aged seventy-three, and his devoted wife, tried to help their country; how they rented their pleasant villa at Surbiton and attempted to live in a cottage; how they decided to dismiss Edith, one of the three maids who kept them so comfortable; how Mr Smith tried to observe a meatless day and fell into temptation; how he tried to drill for home service; and how "young George," the Smith's idolized grandson, was "reported missing" but returned in safety by aeroplane to his anxious relatives.

"The book is written with a thoroughly delightful mixture of humor and pathos; if we laugh at Mr Smith, it is very tenderly, and we are all the fonder of him for his whimsies and absurdities, just as his wise, sweet wife was. They are people we are glad to know, quiet, simple, human, 'ordinary,' and very lovable people, with something big and fine in them underneath it all."

+ N Y Times 22:475 N 18 '17 550w

"A charming story; an epitome of the spirit that is making the sacrifices and upholding the nation's determination that the sacrifices shall not be in vain."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 D 23 '17 300w

BELL, RALPH W. Canada in war-paint. il 2 *$1.25 Dutton 940.91 17-13337

"'Canada in war paint' is a series of sketches, mostly of the humorous type, of the Canadian forces across the water. Its author, Capt. Ralph W. Bell, dedicates its pages to the 'officers, N. C. O.'s and men of the 1st Canadian Infantry battalion, Ontario regiment,' of which he is a member. He has striven to portray types rather than individuals, or as he himself puts it in the preface to give 'vignettes of things as they struck me at the time, and later.'—Springf'd Republican

"Among the brightest and most cheerful of the war stories from the men at the front is this crisp and relishing offering. Only a small portion is devoted to the rough and cruel side."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 10 '17 L50w

"Captain Bell writes light-heartedly, and makes the best of the everyday events of life in the war zone, in the somewhat fragmentary jottings which he calls 'Canada in war paint,' but there is pathos, too, intermingled with the humor of his book."

+ Sat R 123:556 Je 16 '17 310w

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 28 '17 130w

BELLAMY, FRANCIS R. Balance. il *$1.35 (1c) Doubleday 17-4706

The author has told the true story of S. Sydney Tappan, playwright, who in the later days of his fame was made the subject of an adulatory biography. To the author, the hero is always Sammy Tappan, never S. Sydney. He was always Sammy to Carrie Schroeder too. When Sammy went to New York to win fame, Carrie remained at home in Melchester, but because she was a modern young woman, requiring a purpose in life, she went into a settlement. In the settlement Carrie came face to face with reality. She learned many things, one of them that men do not throw dynamite for the fun of it. From this background she goes to see Sammy's first play, his brilliant, shallow and suggestive "Lady in the Iron skin." The shock of this play to her newly awakened social conscience and the hopelessly diverging viewpoint which it discloses leads to the break between her and Sammy. It is not bridged until Sammy, thru suffering and defeat and personal contact with the monster, Poverty, learns to see things as she does and to use his talent for better ends.

"Above and beyond the story itself, it is the fine spirit of humanity pervading the book that makes it notable. It is free from didacticism and sermonizing; it presents no programme, but it is lighted with the flame of a great conviction and charged with human sympathy and emotion." J. T. Gerould

+ Bellman 22:160 F 10 '17 600w

"The book is full of charm and as a whole rings true." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:95 Mr '17 550w

"If his first novel is any index of those to come, he is an author who bids fair to make his mark in American fiction."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 24 '17 300w

"You will rarely find in the writers of this country such poise, and justifiable assurance, and true sense of proportion. . . . The finest thing about this exceptional novel is the masterly way in which the author has evolved his characters through the actions and incidents rendered inevitable by those characters themselves. It is this conviction of truth that remains to exhilarate, long after the story has been finished." Ruth McIntire

+ Dial 62:102 F 8 '17 1150w

"The story is logical and true to life."

+ Ind 90:256 My 5 '17 190w

+ Nation 104:270 Mr 8 '17 350w

"Mr Bellamy has, indeed, a decided gift for character drawing, and most of his people are clearly sketched, definitely individualized. . . . 'The balance' is a first novel, and the plot is not always well handled."

+ — N Y Times 22:24 Ja 21 '17 500w

"Mr Bellamy has something serious to say, and at the same time he writes a story which will probably attract a large market." Joseph Mosher

+ Pub W 91:207 Ja 20 '17 450w

+ Springf'd Republican p15 F 18 '17 500w

BEMAN, LAMAR TANEY, comp. Selected articles on prohibition of the liquor traffic. (Debaters' handbook ser.) 2d and rev ed *$1.25 (1c) Wilson, H. W. 178 17-12265

A second edition of the debaters' handbook on Prohibition containing new material. The first edition was published in 1915, since which time prohibition has made great gains. Among the new reprints are articles for the affirmative by Arthur Capper and William J. Bryan and articles for the negative by John Koren and Rev. J. A. Homan.

A L A Bkl 13:456 J1 '17

BENAVENTE Y MARTINEZ, JACINTO.

Plays: tr. from the Spanish, with an introd., by J. Garrett Underhill; authorized ed. *$1.50 Scribner 862 17-14040

"The plays chosen are not the best known. But they are well selected to show the author's wide range. They are all recent and illustrative of Benavente's latest manner. The first, 'His widow's husband,' is a farcical depiction of social and political life in a provincial town. 'The bonds of interest' is an ingenious, modern adaptation of the old Italian comedy of masks. Crispin, Harlequin, Columbine, and Pantaloon discourse airily on important themes. . . . 'The evil doers of good' flagellates the busybodies of a small village, who, under the guise of philanthropy, work harm with their meddlesome interference in the affairs of others. . . . 'La malquerida' is not a thesis-drama like the rest, but a peasant play after the manner of Guimerá."—Nation

"Well selected to represent the author's wide range and latest manner."

+ A L A Bkl 14:119 Ja '18

"Mr Underhill does yeoman's service in the cause of the Spanish stage, showing us how very much we have to learn in America from dramatists already popular in Spain and South America." T: Walsh

+ Bookm 46:607 Ja '18 100w

"Mr Underhill's translation is fluent and generally satisfactory. Occasionally he uses 'misery' where 'poverty' seems to be the word—a common mistake in translating French and Spanish words. There are a few passages where the sense seems to be somewhat misinterpreted. . . . But for the most part one forgets that one is reading a translation." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 25 '17 750w

"Had Mr Underhill presented us with only two of the four plays that are in this volume—with 'The bonds of interest' and 'La malquerida'—we should have been inclined to accept his high estimate of the dramatic power of Jacinto Benavente." Padraic Colum

+ Dial 63:393 O 25 '17 750w

"His psychology is more brilliant than profound, and the great passions are beyond his power to portray. He is preëminently a satirist. . . . But tho his satire is cynically keen, it is never bitter, and never constructive. . . . The volume commends itself to a frequent reader of printed plays for one rare virtue. These are absolutely free from the ponderous mass of descriptions, suggestions, interpretations and stage directions which encumber the text of so many modern dramas. Neither characters nor settings are described at all, and no directions are given. One is not even told the heroine's age. . . . His peasants are not real peasants, but members of le grande monde masquerading in poor clothes. The roughnesses and brutalities of life are as foreign to his genius as are the great emotions." + + — ind 91:183 Ag 4 '17 460w

"Jacinto Benavente is the central figure among contemporary Spanish dramatists, the continuator of Galdós and Echegaray. Like Galdós, he is interested in social reform, but presents his message with a delicate irony of which that ponderous declaimer is incapable. And if he is less of a stage technician, in the narrow sense, than Echegaray, he interests by his very departure from theatrical convention. In his lightness of touch he is akin rather to Bretón de los Herreros than to either of his more immediate predecessors. His range is surprisingly great. He has attempted nearly every kind of play with scarcely a failure to mark his course. . . . He is chiefly known as the satirist of modern social conditions in Spain. . . . It is exceptionally difficult to render into English an author so subtle as Benavente, one whose effects depend so much upon lightness. Imagine Shaw in German! But Mr Underhill has been more than successful. One detects no trace of foreign idiom in his English. His biography of Benavente and critical estimate of that writer's work is the best yet attempted in English."

* + + Nation 105:264 S 6 '17 600w

N Y Br Lib News 4:108 J1 '17

+ N Y Times 22:325 S 2 '17 260w

"Benavente is a prolific and versatile writer and it would be impossible fully to represent his accomplishment with four plays, but those selected for this volume are sufficiently varied in theme and treatment to suggest the inclusiveness of his talent."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 3 '17 380w

BENECKE, ELSE C. M., and BUSCH, MARIE, trs. More tales by Polish authors. *$1.50 Longmans A17-369

The first volume of "Tales by Polish authors" appeared last year. "Two of the names that appeared in the first volume are to be found in the second also—Adam Szymanski and Wacław Sieroszewski, and Szymanski's two newly translated tales and Sieroszewski's one take us again to Siberia. In Szymanski's 'Maciej the Mazur' and 'Two prayers,' the engrossing topic is the home-sickness of the Poles in Siberia. Perhaps the ache of home-sickness has never been so ruthlessly forced home as it is in 'Two prayers.' . . . The other stories are taken from authors not included in the first volume. The longest and the most striking is 'The returning wave,' by Bolesław Prus, whose real name seems to be Aleksander Glowacki." (The Times [London] Lit Sup)

Cath World 105:553 J1 '17 130w

"The short stories in 'More tales by Polish authors' grip from the first to the last page by their earnestness and the power of their different authors to portray characters quite out of the ordinary. The style is exceptionally free from the abruptness so common in Slavic translations."

+ Ind 90:298 My 12 '17 60w

"Unfortunately, half of the first volume is taken up by a tale of Sienkiewicz, 'Bartek the Conqueror,' which was already accessible. Chief in merit among the pieces here rendered for the first time are, perhaps, the three Siberian sketches by Szymanski. The English of the translators is excellent, with only the very smallest traces of foreign idiom."

+ Nation 105:93 J1 26 '17 650w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p560 N 23 '16 1100w

BENÉT, WILLIAM ROSE. Great white wall. il *$1 Yale univ. press 811 16-24833

"Timur, the Tartar, has long been a favorite subject for literary treatment. Marlowe wrote one of his best plays about this great, barbaric nomad, and later Rowe made him a dramatic hero. In 'The great white wall' William Rose Benét seizes upon this ancient and cruel autocrat for the central figure of a singularly thoughtful narrative poem. It is the story of Timur's attack on the great wall of China, and the story is mostly a series of pageants."—Springf'd Republican

"In Mr Benét's inimitable rhythmic flare." W: S. Braithwaite

+ Bookm 45:435 Je '17 30w

"Elements of fantasy are happily combined with the epic story."

+ Ind 89:235 F 5 '17 50w

"Benét, equally with Vachel Lindsay, is restoring the chant to its proper place in modern poetry; his work is always interesting and frequently completely successful." Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p14 Ap 29 '17 170w

+ St Louis 15:183 Je '17 20w

"There is a wealth of descriptive verse here, as well as insight into moral truths."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 24 '17 250w

"The poet's metrical gifts have the fullest play here, and the verse must be heard to be fully appreciated. Mr Benét's powers of description were never better used than in this tale of far-off things and battles long ago. The book is original in its workmanship, full of vivid description, and interesting in the life and animation that pervades it. It is Mr Benét at his best." E: B. Reed

+ Yale R ns 6:862 J1 '17 120w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Books and persons; being comments on a past epoch, 1908-1911. *$2 (4c) Doran 824 17-21768

"The contents of this book have been chosen [by Hugh Walpole] from a series of weekly articles which enlivened the New Age during the years 1908-1911, under the pseudonym 'Jacob Tonson.' . . . Mr Frank Swinnerton approved the selection and added to it slightly. In my turn I suggested a few more additions. The total amounts to one-third of the original matter . . . I have left the critical judgments alone, for the good reason that I stand by nearly all of them, though perhaps with a less challenging vivacity, to this day." (Prefatory note) Some of the authors included are: Wordsworth, Joseph Conrad, W. W. Jacobs, Anatole France, Swinburne, Tchekhoff, Trollope, Brieux, Henry James, and Mrs Elinor Glyn. There are also essays on such topics as "French publishers," "The book-buyer," "Middleclass," "Censorship by the libraries," etc.

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BENNETT, ARNOLD—Continued

"Librarians will be interested in the papers on censorship by the libraries."

+ A L A Bkl 14:85 D '17

"The strife about the six-shilling and the sevenpenny novel, the attempts to censor certain novelists, and the stupid animosities of the middle class, are considered from the point of view of a wholehearted disciple of the great French realists."

+ Ath p167 S '17 220w

"With entertainment as his special aim, and sportiveness as his deliberate manner, Mr Bennett rambles hither and thither among the books and writers of the three-year period during which he posed as Jacob Tonson."

E. F. E.
— Boston Transcript p7 O 10 '17 600w

"I think the book is chiefly interesting as a record of the casual judgements—casual in form only—of a tremendous expert on his fellow-craftsmen." G. B. Donlin

+ Dial 63:523 N 22 '17 1500w

"The volume is always readable, it is often 'intime,' and it is nearly always baffling. . . . His judgments seem often to issue from a mind that is constitutionally fussy rather than judicial."

+ — Nation 105:671 D 13 '17 300w

"Mr Bennett knows what he is talking about in respect of Dostoevsky, as in respect of Conrad, Henri Beque, Francois de Curel, Tchekoff, Wilfred Whitten. But here as elsewhere he is dealing in stimulant, not criticism. He is imposing his will. . . . Only when he is writing of H. G. Wells is he sufficiently moved by his subject to lose the coolness of a shrewd and judicious informant and become a passionate critic. . . . In regard to W. W. Jacobs and Rudyard Kipling and Conrad and Henry James and Meredith there are exceedingly pertinent discriminations, but absorbed or inspired interpretation in no case outside Mr Wells." F. H.

+ — New Repub 12:332 O 20 '17 1150w

N Y Br Lib News 4:181 D '17 190w

"In the main neither sufficiently important to be worthy permanent publication in book in theme nor sufficiently careful in treatment form."

+ — Outlook 117:575 D 5 '17 30w

"When Mr Arnold Bennett appears as a critic of men and books many of his judgments strike us as irrational, or partial, sometimes to the point of absurdity. His infatuation about Mr H. G. Wells may be the fruit of friendship, but it is not justifiable on literary grounds, not even on the grounds advanced by Mr Bennett. . . . Surely Mr Bennett is paradoxical when he praises Mr Henry James for clarity."

+ — Sat R 121:19 J1 21 '17 1350w

"Of mid-Victorian novelists he has a poor opinion. 'There is not one of them that would not be tremendously improved by being cut down to about one-half'; moreover, 'they are incurably ugly and sentimental.' Some of us will wonder to find the author of 'The old wives' tale' casting this reproach in particular at Thackeray and Dickens, Charlotte Brontë and Mrs Gaskell; but it is only Mr Bennett's humor"

Spec 119:301 S 22 '17 130w

"This book of literary causeries is a collection of articles published in 1908-1911 in a socialist journal of somewhat exasperating and provocative type called the New Age. They are mostly skits. They are not literary criticisms, though they often reflect literary opinions—rather opinionated opinions, it may be said. They have no importance and for American readers no interest at all. . . . The one thing that gives flavor outlasting the ephemerality of the subject is Mr Bennett's pointed journalistic style and pungent choice of epithet. Those who are engaged in the author's trade and are familiar with the journalists and critics of London may, therefore, read these records of a 'past age' with some interest. But of sound instruction or authentic inspiration they have little. To a limited extent they are diverting."

+ — Springf'd Republican p19 O 11 '17 1300w

"Mr Arnold Bennett is one of the few who can catch their sayings before they are cold and enclose them all alive in very readable prose. That is why these aged reviews (some are nearly ten years old) are as vivacious and as much to the point as they were on the day of their birth. They have another claim upon our interest. They deal for the most part with writers who are still living. We do not think this is a book of first rate criticism; but it is the book of an artist."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p319 J1 5 '17 1150w

BENNETT, HELEN MARIE. Women and work; the economic value of college training. *$1.50 (2c) Appleton 174 17-11904

A study of the place of the college-trained woman in the modern world. In the past half century the type of girl entering college has changed; rather, many types now enter where once there was but one. The standards demanded of women have also changed, and, to some extent, college curricula have been modified to meet the new demands. All these matters are taken into account by the author, who, as manager of the Chicago Collegiate bureau of occupations, writes from the vocational expert's point of view. She writes of: The inflorescence of the new education; College training and working efficiency; The problem of the college girl; The problem of the vocational adviser; The psychology of the girl as related to her occupation; The physiology of the girl as related to her occupation; The girl with the dramatic temperament; The philosophic temperament; The scientific temperament; The interdependence of occupations; The college girl—her own employer; The college girl and women.

"There is a specially good chapter on the problem of the vocational adviser."

+ A L A Bkl 13:426 J1 '17

"A suggestive book for women in and out of college, and for the college faculty as well."

Edna Kenton

+ Bookm 46:345 N '17 280w

"Packed with common sense."

— Ind 91:136 J1 28 '17 50w

"She has made a mistake in adopting a more pretentious title for her work than the results of her efforts warrant. The book falls far short of being an adequate discussion of 'Women and work.'"

+ — J Pol Econ 25:856 O '17 200w

"Those parts of the book which deal with the specific problem of finding jobs are interesting and valuable, but when the author attempts to characterize human traits or to give the results of psychology and philosophy she shows a plentiful lack of knowledge. . . . The reader of the book is likely to be exasperated by the inexcusable irregularity of the style."

— — Nation 101:739 Je 21 '17 400w

Pittsburgh 22:332 Je '17 70w

Pratt p16 O '17 20w

"With its sociology Miss Bennett's book has combined some helpful information for the college graduate who is intelligently trying to choose work to fit her abilities."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 J1 10 '17 480w

"Written in entertaining style, and useful not only to the girls themselves but to any one helping to educate or 'place' them."

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:153 My '17 80w

BENNETT, HENRY EASTMAN. School efficiency; a manual of modern school management. Il $1.25 (1c) Ginn 371 17-21650

The author is professor of education in the College of William and Mary, Virginia. He has had in mind, in writing this book, the average community school of medium size, and the teacher of average ability. "It is the only book that has come from the press in recent times which presents in non-technical language a discussion, both of the specific problems of instruction and of the broad questions of administration and supervision. The book is really a treatise on the principles and practice of education." (El School J) The book includes a consideration of the school plant and two chapters deal with "Community cooperation" and "School extension." "Problems" and "Readings" are appended to the various chapters.

"While the style of the book is distinctly non-technical the author presents the content of the most recent scientific investigations in the various fields of education."

+ El School J 18:72 S '17 450w

BENNETT, ROBERT JOSEPH. Corporation accounting. (Ronald accounting ser.) il $3
Ronald 657 16-25224

"This is much more than a book on corporation accounting; it is more properly a treatise on organization from the legal, industrial, financial and accounting standpoints. It appears in seven parts: Part 1 describes the process of organizing a corporation, discusses the different classes of capital stock and shows the purpose of the various corporate meetings; Part 2 takes up the special books and records required by corporations, and analyzes the distinctive corporate accounts relating to capital stock, bonds, surplus, dividends and reserves; Part 3 is devoted to special descriptions and accounting entries relating to stocks, dividends and processes of incorporation; Part 4 treats bond issues, including a description of the different classes of bonds, their security, methods of issue, amortization of discounts and premiums, sinking funds and redemption; Part 5 explains and illustrates the balance sheet, income statement, and various other special reports and statements; Part 6 is devoted to consolidation, including merger, lease and holding company; Part 7 takes up receiverships, reorganizations and dissolutions. Much more space is devoted to general descriptions than to pure accounting discussion."—Ann Am Acad

"Mr Bennett has given added authority and interest to many of his observations by frequent citations from some of the best known corporations in the United States. In the preface and throughout the volume there is abundant recognition of alternatives of procedure. Mr Bennett's volume will come to take rank . . . among the first ten or a dozen titles that should be owned by every one seriously interested in accountancy. The arrangement of the book makes it readily adaptable for general reference by corporation officers and accountants. When a new edition is prepared, it is to be hoped that more systematic and thorough attention will be given to the index." C. H. Scovell

+ Am Econ R 7:637 S '17 800w

"The book will probably serve as an excellent handbook for practical business men who wish a broad view of corporate organization, finance and accounting. The discussion is unusually clear, simple and informing. Except for incidental suggestions, the book is likely to have little value to the practicing accountant, for it is too general in treatment or to one interested in the more scientific aspect of accounting because it is not sufficiently analytical. It may serve very well, however, as a text for college classes on account of its forms and clear descriptions." J: Bauer

+ Ann Am Acad 72:227 J1 '17 430w

"Concise yet comprehensive."

+ Pittsburgh 22:44 My '17 70w

BENNION, MILTON. Citizenship; an introduction to social ethics; with an introd. by D: Snedden. *$1 (3c) World bk. co. 323
17-20398

The author, dean of the school of education in the University of Utah says, "This book is the result of six years of experimentation in teaching ethics to college freshman and senior high-school students in the University of Utah. The topics have been developed in class discussion and afterwards written up by each student, who thus made his own text." Part 1 treats of the nature of society and social problems; Part 2 deals with the social obligations of the individual and the opportunities society offers each one for development thru service. The book aims to meet the needs of the senior year in high school and first year in college. At the end of each chapter are questions and exercises on the subject matter of the chapter.

"On first thought the social-science teacher might feel that the book has no interest for her. Should such be her conclusion, based on a passing notice of the book, she will change her mind upon careful reading. . . . By making free use of the questions a teacher could make the book the basis of a full semester's work in social problems."

+ School R 26:69 Ja '18 240w

BENSON, ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER. Life and letters of Maggie Benson. *$2.50 Longmans
17-31049

"The record of this life, largely by means of her letters, is made by her elder brother. Margaret Benson was the daughter of the distinguished Anglican clergyman who became archbishop of Canterbury in 1883, and the story of her years is necessarily to some degree the story of a family placed amid exceptional surroundings. . . . Step by step we watch the progress of Margaret Benson through life, viewing the development of her mind and the eagerness with which she thought and studied. Her letters are brief and graphic, but the essential elements of her life, her work and her character are clearly summarized by her brother."—Boston Transcript

"Such lives as the life of Margaret Benson are among those worth recording but that too infrequently give inspiration to the biographer. . . . As a contribution to the history of a remarkable family, Mr Benson's book is no less remarkable than as a contribution to the study of a notable personality." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 24 '17 1750w

"Without moralizing or preaching, merely by recounting the simple story of Maggie Benson's life, he does indeed succeed in showing 'how life can be lived nobly.'"

+ Cath World 106:404 D '17 350w

"The life impresses her brother as a most useful one but he hardly succeeds in persuading the reader."

— Dial 64:30 Ja 3 '18 230w

"Mr Benson has thrown together a mass of notes and hurried communications which can have very slight interest for any except friends of the family. . . . Mr Benson's own additions in the way of narrative and characterization are pleasantly written."

— + Natlon 105:543 N 15 '17 130w

"Dr Benson may rest assured that many readers, friends and strangers, will thank him for bringing out a book which will certainly elevate and strengthen and brighten them."

+ Sat R 124:444 D 1 '17 650w

+ Spec 119:651 D 1 '17 60w

"Her brother has performed his task lovingly and well. Arthur Benson's own contribution is in his fluent, modulated English; he supplies delightful descriptions of English country life as his family lived it."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 4 '17 950w

"It cannot be said that as far as art goes his treatment of his sister's life marks any advance. The author with facile skill sets forth the family facts which he has mostly given elsewhere; and he includes a number of letters of all shades of interest. The attraction lies rather in that Bensonian faculty for criticizing other Bensons, as well as folk in general, which Maggie possessed in a large measure."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p552 N 15 '17 1000w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Freaks of Mayfair. il *$1.50 (4½c) Doran 18-1525

"In 'The freaks of Mayfair' Mr E. F. Benson pokes fun at some very paltry people. Among them are the social snobs; the woman who makes the fad of the moment into a religion; the man who will prattle to anyone who purveys nice food; the cats of both sexes who pretend to be kittens; and the automaton who is governed not by reason or impulse, but by habit." —The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Mr Benson is happier in his satire than in those long and rather didactic efforts in fiction by which we have so far known him. . . . Compared with satire qua satire, the sketches are not of much account, they are rather too obvious and laboured; but they amuse, especially 'The perpendicular,' which is decidedly the best."

+ — Ath p46 Ja '17 100w

"What makes this volume so worth while is that one feels that it is not inspired by a mere desire and delight in mocking, but that it springs rather from an honest and profound detestation of all the soft-brained and wasteful snobs and parasites that incubate a gasping world. Mr Benson, you feel, is a philosopher as austere as Emerson."

+ N Y Times 22:463 N 11 '17 900w

"Mr George Plank's intricate patterns of lines and squares trick out with much ornament things that are not worth any ornament at all. . . . When Mr Benson has finished with his freaks, the futility of what they do compared to the effort they make to do it must be apparent even to themselves. No defence is left to them; and we fear they are too invertebrate to turn and say: 'How came you, brother, when paper is so dear, to describe us in a rivulet of print, meandering thro' a meadow of margin?'"

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p636 D 28 '16 350w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Tortoise (Eng title, Mr Teddy). *$1.50 (2c) Doran 17-17423

This novel, the scene of which is laid in Sussex, was published in England under the title, "Mr Teddy." It is a gently humorous story, with a slight plot, of youth, middle-age, and old age. Edward Heaton, or "Mr Teddy," as he is usually called, a kindly bachelor of forty, devoted to his exasperatingly selfish mother, is "the tortoise." Other characters are the two middle-aged sisters, "Miss Marlon," who writes stories for the parish magazine, and "Miss Daisy," who looks after their home; Mrs Vickary, clergyman's wife and feline diplomatist, and the youthful lovers, Robin and Rosemary.

+ A L A Bkl 14:129 Ja '18

"This is a far better story than 'The Oakleyites,' in which similar material is handled with less spontaneity and freshness. Mr Benson has no idea of 'message' to convey unless it be that the humours of ourselves and our neighbours are among the best sources of refreshment the Lord has given us, and that beneath them, we may flatter ourselves, there wells many a pure fountain of kind feeling and honest purpose." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:491 D '17 350w

"In 'The tortoise,' a delightful tale of English village life, Mr E. F. Benson displays again his peculiarly feminine outlook to great advantage."

+ Dial 64:77 Ja 17 '18 80w

"'The tortoise' is just good enough to read when there's nothing better around." Harry Salpeter

+ N Y Call p14 Ja 12 '18 320w

"It is one of those quiet, human, very interesting tales which are so rare and so difficult to write."

+ N Y Times 22:434 O 28 '17 980w

Outlook 117:475 N 21 '17 40w

+ Spec 119:169 Ag 18 '17 30w

"Mr Benson has the intuition and deftness to make his trivialities take on importance."

+ Springf'd Republican p13 Ja 20 '18 500w

"Once more Mr Benson takes us into a quiet little set of 'nice' people in a provincial town, or village; and once more he studies them with a tenderness at once shrewder and blunter than Mrs Gaskell's, but not less attractive."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p272 Je 7 '17 370w

BENSON, OSCAR HERMAN, and BETTS, GEORGE HERBERT. Agriculture and the farming business. il *$3.50 Bobbs 630 17-7062

The preface says that this book attempts "what has not yet been accomplished for the farmer—the bringing together in one simple non-technical volume of a wide range of practical scientific information directly related to the every-day problems of the farm and home." The object of the authors has been to bring together in convenient form a wide variety of information that is now scattered thru reports and bulletins, etc. In addition to chapters covering the usual subjects, farm management, farm crops, live stock, etc., there are chapters devoted to: The farm home; The automobile and the farmer; Extension education and the farmer; Extension education by means of boys' and girls' club work, and other miscellaneous subjects. Mr Benson is connected with the United States Department of agriculture, and Mr Betts is author of "Better rural schools."

"An admirable general work. . . . Well illustrated."

+ Agricultural Digest 1:460 My '17 60w

"There is vast deal of material touched upon between these covers, but it is not always clear upon what principle it is organized and distributed. . . . This volume does pretty much all that can be done in 500 pages towards a manual of information, of laboratory experiment, and of field practice. Whether the feat is worth attempting, remains a question."

Nation 103:521 N 30 '16 270w

N Y Br Lib News 4:71 My '17

BENSON, STELLA. This is the end. *$1.35 (3c) Macmillan 17-29334

The author has a way of her own in telling a story, as one who has read "I pose" will know. Simplified, the story she now tells is of an English girl who leaves home in war-time to become a London 'bus-conductor. Hoping to find her, her family starts out on a motor car journey around the English coast, following clues thrown out in the girl's letters. Only one of them, her brother, home on leave, knows that the "house by the sea" of which she writes is fancy and make-believe. For these two, brother and sister, have always played at that game together. They have lived in a secret world, which later, comes to an end for the girl with the news of the brother's death in France.

"Cleverness of a somewhat forced type mars the effect of this volume. The author has both imagination and insight, but her sarcastic gifts are apt to run away with her."

+ — Ath p253 My '17 70w

"In 'I pose' her recklessness seemed a little too real for comfort, her modernity too desperate, her feminine nature set too defiantly against any sort of simple emotion or faith. The impression is renewed in this second novel, or fantasy." H. W. Boynton

— Bookm 45:533 Jl '17 500w

"Starts like an essay on modern philosophy, continues like a confession, goes at a bound into fiction, shifts into the manner of a Kipling fairy tale, and ends in perfect consistency with them all."

+ Dial 63:117 Ag 16 '17 550w

"Another very modern, and rebellious, and essentially sentimental affair."

Nation 104:737 Je 21 '17 230w

"In spite of its many pathetic efforts at cheerfulness, and even gayety and whimsical humor, it is this effect of utter hopelessness which remains in the mind of the reader after closing the slender volume."

N Y Times 22:238 Je 24 '17 400w

"A book so kaleidoscopic in its changes from mockery to tenderness, from realism to fantasy, defies the ordinary canons of criticism. We must not omit to note Miss Benson's gift for verse—whimsical and mystical—or her suggestive and vivid treatment of the mysteries of existence. . . . In fine, this is a book to bewilder the old, to perplex the middle-aged, and to enrapture the very modern young."

Spec 118:593 My 26 '17 930w

"Miss Benson often irritates when she means to stimulate; and if we have dwelt on this at some length it is because the irritation spoils our enjoyment of gifts of fancy and expression not often met with. There is an imaginative tenderness in what she writes about certain dead soldiers which shows her sensibility to be delicate, rare, and true."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p152 Mr 29 '17 650w

BENTON, ALEXANDER HAY. Indian moral instruction and caste-problems: solutions. *$1.40 Longmans 17-13334

"The British government in India has, according to the author, made three mistakes in dealing with the educational problem and the book may be regarded as a study of the causes of those mistakes and of possible remedies for the evil results. . . . Mr Benton suggests that toleration should be substituted for neutrality; and toleration he explains to be 'impartial favour for all religions, with maintenance of the law.' Mr Benton's suggestion is to found a committee in each district for religious and moral instruction, empowered to draw up a religious and moral syllabus; and this syllabus would contain a narrative of the barest facts of Christ's life simply told, with the most important gospel precepts embodied." (Int J Ethics) "This scheme, he suggests, should be first introduced in the higher schools and colleges, where the plague spot is to be found, rather than in the elementary schools." (The Times [London] Lit Sup)

"The treatment of the caste problem seems to us to be somewhat inadequate. . . . A similar criticism may be passed upon the treatment of the subject of religious toleration. . . . Here again the defect is chiefly due to lack of space and it may be left to the reader to fill in the gaps and to apply to present day problems the truths enunciated in the past and expounded by Mr Benton. We have nothing but praise for the masterly way in which Mr Benton with the scholarship of a statesman is not content merely with stating the problem and suggesting temporary and superficial remedies but insists on referring his readers to the fundamental principles underlying the problems set forth. But some of his remedial measures are dangerous." M. C.

+ Int J Ethics 27:544 J1 '17 570w

"We hope that Mr Benton's thoughtful study will commend itself to the British as well as to all governments concerned with the education and welfare of Asiatic wards."

+ Nation 106:42 Ja 10 '18 1550w

"The failure of the educational system being assumed, many minds have been directed for many years to find a remedy, or, at least, a palliative. Mr Benton's book is a thoughtful contribution for this purpose. But . . . his proposals are open to serious political objections."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p65 F 8 '17 780w

BERCOVICI, KONRAD. Crimes of charity. *$1.50 Knopf 361 17-15181

"It is the contention of Konrad Bercovici that in being a remedy for one evil, organized charity has become itself an even greater evil to be combated. . . . His charges are not made for the common reasons that it is a futile palliative, that it works toward graft and expenses wasted in red tape, but for the more vital reason that it becomes an actual force of detriment and oppression to those it is supposed to aid."—Boston Transcript

"It is a very strong book whose pictures come very truly from the heart of reality." D. L. M. + Boston Transcript p6 Ap 21 '17 1000w

"In spite of the extreme position of condemnation taken by the author as the result of his alleged experiences as an investigator, the book is worth reading as showing the possible need of a change of method along certain lines."

+ Cleveland p93 J1 '17 50w

"Many of the charities condemned by the author of 'Crimes of charity' would certainly not be considered forms of 'organized charity' by those who are supposed to know what these words stand for. . . . But the book is chiefly devoted to the work of a large relief agency, apparently a Jewish relief society in New York, and the author finds his opportunity to observe the methods of the society by becoming what he calls a 'charity spy.' . . . Is it necessary to say that such dishonesty is not really the method of organized charity in America. The language of the author is extremely violent throughout. 'This stupid ass in charge of the poor,' 'This spiritual hog,' are typical of expressions found throughout the book. His conduct is almost equally violent. . . . Whatever the faults of organized charity may be, they are certainly not set forth in this volume of hysterical stories." Edith Abbott

— Dial 62:478 My 31 '17 1200w

"The testimony given by the author is not melodramatic, but a revelation made by one who has studied at first hand conditions that are pathetic, thrilling, and revolting."

+ Lit D 55:37 S 22 '17 200w

Pittsburgh 22:687 O '17 90w

Pratt p11 O '17 20w

"A preposterous attack."

— Springf'd Republican p19 O 14 '17 60w

BERENSON, BERNARD. Study and criticism of Italian art, v. 3. il *$3.25 Macmillan 759.5 (17-14402)

"Of the six essays in this volume, five relate to Venetian painting in the fifteenth century. They have been selected because they deal with points for which there was no room in another book, published under the title of 'Venetian painting in the United States: the fifteenth century.' Two essays, however, on Carpaccio's 'Glory of St Ursula' and 'A Carpacciesque Madonna in Berlin,' stand somewhat apart, being chiefly essays in method. A paper on Leonardo da Vinci is an attempt at a revaluation."—Ath

Ath p197 Ap '17 80w

"It is equally hard to accept our critic's final appraisal of Leonardo, whom he would put down to Botticelli's level. And still harder is it to share his implicit tenet that the art of the Far East gives us a norm by which Leonardo's painting, and presumably all other painting, is to be measured. . . . Even if Leonardo does not seem wholly to come to his rights in this remarkable essay, the incidental criticism and the fresh point of view are boldly significant." R: Offner

+ Dial 63:447 N 8 '17 1850w

"Offers besides the reprinted papers a novelty and a sensation in a revaluation of Leonardo da Vinci. Mr Berenson describes whimsically his gradual liberation from the spell of legend and his final view that Leonardo is barely a great artist, rather a charming draughtsman obfuscated by the discovery of counterpoise and chiaroscuro. We by no means share the individual appreciations, or depreciations, upon which Mr Berenson's view is based. The whole volume is good reading whether for the amateur or for the professional student."

+ Nation 104:663 My 31 '17 430w

"Nor will the admirer of Leonardo be much troubled by the dubious studio works with which Mr Berenson tries to fortify his case. The essence of his attack is that knowledge, science, logic, and attention to technical problems are ruinous to the artist. Such a sweeping generalization does not stand the test of inquiry."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p91 F 22 '17 1200w

BERENSON, BERNARD. Venetian painting in America: the fifteenth century. il *$4 Sherman, F: Fairchild 759.5 16-25230

"Gathered and amplified into a book, Mr Berenson's conclusions, known to us through his serial studies in Art in America, have gained in persuasion and consequence. Mr Berenson, finding an adequately representative sequence of Venetian paintings in our collections, has grouped them historically; and adopting the discursive method of his avowed master Morelli, he has made them the pretext for discussion of almost all problems incident to their study. . . . As one might expect, the central figure in the book is Giovanni Bellini, and the central problem, his chronology."—Dial

Ath p307 Je '17 60w

"One of the most significant works of reconstructive criticism that have appeared in recent years on the subject of Italian painting. It teems with incidental criticism, æsthetic evaluations, and valuable hints of attribution. . . . The 263 pages of text are abundantly illustrated with one hundred and ten reproductions and provided with two tables and two indexes." R: Offner

* + Dial 62:64 Ja 25 '17 2500w

"Alike for enjoyment and for minute consideration of attributions and chronology the book must be read widely. Thanks are due the publisher for making what must have been a pretty costly book accessible at a price possible for students." R: Offner

* + Nation 104:316 Mr 15 '17 720w

"Whatever one may think of the author's method, the volume shows insight and enthusiasm and contains valuable information on the subject with which it principally deals."

+ Springfd Republican p19 My 20 '17 570w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p166 Ap 5 '17 90w

"If the book fails wholly to satisfy, the scheme on which it is planned must be held in some measure responsible. The author has attempted to rewrite the history of the Venetian school in terms of the pictures representing that school in America. These are of very unequal merit, and though interest in them doubtless gave Mr Berenson the principal stimulus for his work, it is a little unfortunate for its permanent value that it was not planned on cosmopolitan lines."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p195 Ap 26 '17 750w

BERESFORD, JOHN DAVYS. House-mates. *$1.50 (1½c) Doran 17-12391

The main interest in this story lies in the author's analysis of the character of Wilfred Hornby, a young architect, shy, awkward, conventional, brought up "to divide society into categories." "His early experiences at home, at school, and in the architect's office, his love affairs and engagement to his cousin Gladys—a poseuse to the backbone . . . are related with comparative brevity. Then comes the day when, for the first time in his life, obliged to act for himself, he takes lodgings on the ground floor of the old house in Keppel street, a house inhabited by all sorts and conditions of men—and women. Resolved though he is at first to have nothing to do with his fellow-lodgers, proud of his isolation, he is gradually, inevitably drawn into the life of the house. And presently he comes to know all these 'House-mates' of his, and one of them is the girl with whom he quickly falls honestly and deeply in love." (N Y Times) In Keppel street Wilfred learns to alter his standard of values and comes to the "simple realization of [his] essential equality with the rest of mankind."

"When all is said, it is by far the most vital and most appealing of all Mr Beresford's novels." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 8 '17 1300w

* Nation 105:292 S 13 '17 750w

"The hand of the craftsman continues to work, though the materials are of a quality so much thinner, and cruder than those he customarily uses."

+ New Repub 13:387 Ja 26 '18 380w

"The book is written in a style somewhat easier than are the majority of Mr Beresford's novels, but it does not quite rank with his best work—not with 'A candidate for truth,' for instance—though it is, of course, well worth reading and decidedly interesting. The development of Hornby's character, which is the core of the book, is in every way excellent. The product of his narrow, middle-class, Sabbatarian surroundings, the brief spells of emotionalism for which he is unable to find a name, his hesitations and mistakes, and that honesty which lies at the root of his character—all these are portrayed with sure, firm strokes. . . . In the last pages of the story we are given a brief glimpse of the result of the war and of several weeks' service in the trenches on this especial temperament."

+ N Y Times 22:322 S 2 '17 1050w

"Not by any means the equal of Mr Beresford's 'These Lynnekers.' The incidents are disagreeable and in one case revolting, and the young man who narrates the history of his younger days is much more interested in his own psychological development than the reader is likely to be."

— Outlook 117:100 S 19 '17 50w

"If, however, the book has no great central purpose, so that there seems to be no place where the reviewer can take hold, it brings out two big Beresford ideas—freedom from restraint, whether that restraint be stereotyped art or stereotyped thought, and democracy." Doris Webb

+ Pub W 92:808 S 15 '17 500w

"Its purpose is to show the influence of a strange group of human beings in drawing out and molding the spirit and character of a sensitively introspective young man. It is a carefully wrought picture, and a keenly analyzed situation, differing widely from the character of work Mr Beresford has done heretofore. . . . It is not a particularly easy or entertaining story to read."

+ Springfd Republican p15 S 23 '17 660w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p104 Mr 1 '17 430w

BERESFORD, JOHN DAVYS. The Wonder. *$1.40 (2c) Doran 17-8290

The story of a child prodigy. Victor Stott was the son of the most famous man of his time in England. It was the father's ambition to raise up a son who should take his place. The father was a champion cricketer; the son turned out to be a Wonder. Abnormal in appearance, his well-developed and sturdy child's body appearing frail in comparison with his massive head, Victor Stott seemed, so far as those who tried to puzzle out his case could ascertain, to possess illimitable understanding. Nothing in the universe, unless it was the mystery of his own personality, was hidden from him. He had a strange power over every one who came in contact with him. There was one being only who could defy that power. This was the idiot boy, who tried dumbly to claim a kinship with the Wonder. No-mind and absolute-mind were brought into contact in these two. As Henry Challis, the scientist, explained the Wonder, he represented finality, giving a glimpse of what a world would be without ignorance and without mystery.

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Bookm 43:315 My '17 400w

"All the elements of wizardry in this story can only be suggested. It is told consistently with all the verisimilitude of a scientific document, with an occasional footnote and a mention of actual men that can not fail to delude the reader, at least for the moment, into thinking that he is having set before him the life story of a prodigy that actually existed. As to his fate. . . it brings the story to a logical and a sensible conclusion." E. F. E.

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 31 '17 1050w

Nation 105:156 O 25 '17 500w

"Throughout the book we feel restraint. Now and again in elusive realism possible analogies in the life of Jesus are hinted at, analogies which are never pressed—from that pitfall the author is saved by his understanding of how only in little flashes historical analogy may appeal to the imagination. But for the familiar and barren query, 'What would happen if Jesus appeared on earth today?', Beresford plainly substitutes in effect the more stimulating query, 'What would have to happen today to produce the effect Jesus once produced?'" E. C. P.

+ — New Repub 13:53 N 10 '17 1900w

"Mr Beresford's new story is quite unlike any of his previous novels. It is, indeed, a peculiar book, and one is not at all certain whether the author intends it to be taken partly at least, as an allegory. . . . But one thing at least seems fairly certain—it is a book about which people will disagree."

N Y Times 22:113 Ap 1 '17 500w

"The workmanship of the book is notable; its intent is presumably satirical, but it is also, to us at least, unfathomable."

Outlook 115:710 Ap 18 '17 200w

Pittsburgh 22:649 O '17 20w

"In 'The wonder' Mr J. D. Beresford has satirically piloried certain methods of education and taken a fling at the sum of human knowledge."

+ R of Rs 56:553 N '17 210w

BERGER, MARCEL. Ordeal by fire; tr. by Mrs Cecil Curtis. *$1.50 (1c) Putnam 17-26261

This story of the first days of the war follows the development of a man who is transformed from a sceptic and cynic to a loyal and ardent patriot. Michel Dreher is in Switzerland when he learns that war has been declared. For a moment he entertains the idea that he need not return to his country. That he does so is due to a sense of his social position rather than to patriotism. He takes up his duties as a sergeant half-heartedly, but as the war progresses he gradually undergoes a change. Shortly before he had met a young French girl who attracted him greatly, but since love and marriage had no place in his cynical scheme of life, he had passed her by. But with his new seriousness he comes to think of her more and more often and the Epilogue, which carries the story into 1915, pictures their union. The author is a sergeant in the French army.

A L A Bkl 13:314 Ap '17

"It is grimly terrible, but not morbid."

+ Bellman 22:303 Mr 17 '17 260w

"This, evidently, is a book of deeper mood and meaning than the now famous 'Gaspard'; here are Gaspards in their natural setting and relation to the great theme as a whole—the great theme of France at war, which has here its finest interpretation in fiction thus far." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:93 Mr '17 550w

"A vivid translation of a story that throbs with life."

+ Cath World 105:543 Jl '17 160w

"The story is told in the first person with all the characteristic incident and spirited dialogue to be expected from a French writer handling such a theme." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 62:306 Ap 5 '17 180w

"'Ordeal by fire' does for France something very much like what 'Mr Britling' and 'The vermilion box' have done for England. It shows how the war came home to France." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 104:404 Ap 5 '17 180w

+ Nation 104:491 Ap 26 '17 950w

"Whatever M. Berger, himself a sergeant in the French army, was solely responsible for in this book has been admirably done. . . . But the work of the translator leaves much to be desired. . . . One closes the book with a strong desire to read it in French."

+ — N Y Times 22:26 Ja 28 '17 700w

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Mr 18 '17 150w

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:158 My '17 40w

BERLE, LINA WRIGHT. George Eliot and Thomas Hardy; a contrast. *$1.50 Kennerley 823 17-30753

In a preliminary chapter the writer shows that it is Eliot and not Hardy who furnished a basis upon which rational idealism may be developed,—one which, while acknowledging facts, recognizes also the relation of the spiritual elements in life to the grosser material forces. George Eliot's idealism has been in the direction which subsequent generations have found most sound. Hardy, on the other hand, is the romantic decadent. His characters never pass from a lower to a higher spirituality but are bound on the wheel of life which inexorably breaks them in its revolution. Following a statement of these fundamental principles of difference are essays that show the striking contrast in treatment of both weak and good women; that indicate how both novelists struck the same rock in the creation of men—both making the minor characters real men, their principals, men of straw; points out the differences of goal in their love stories.—Eliot attaining wisdom higher than ourselves thru suffering and pain, Hardy descending to licentious, often brutal love; finds saneness in the treatment of old age; and closes with an illuminating estimate of radical and reactionary types with the deduction that Eliot was the radical and Hardy the reactionary.

"On every page of Miss Berle's book is evidence of the fertility of writing such a study." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p9 N 24 '17 780w

"As worked out by Miss Berle the thesis becomes fruitful of excellent criticism, at once ethical and æsthetic, as the best literary criticism always is. Only the last chapter gives one pause. In her use of the words 'radical' and 'conservative' Miss Berle is somewhat arbitrary, and in a manner that may lead to confusion in the minds of many readers."

+ — Nation 105:697 D 20 '17 200w

"The book is decidedly interesting and well phrased, but one feels that while the radicalism of George Eliot has been properly valued by the author, there are emendations that might be suitably made to the estimate of Hardy."

+ — R of Rs 57:217 F '18 70w

BERTSCH, MARGUERITE. How to write for moving pictures; a manual of instruction and information. il *$1.50 (2½c) Doran 808.2 17-17069

The author is director and editor for the Vitagraph company and the Famous players film company. "Her complete discussion of the writing and production of the photoplay is followed by warnings against hackneyed themes, which she classifies, and a presentation of un-hackneyed possibilities." (Springf'd Republican) The last four chapters deal with the censorship and the educational possibilities of moving pictures. The illustrations are from photographs. There is no index.

A L A Bkl 14:49 N '17

"The literature of scenario-making is already bulky, but Miss Bertsch's manual is well worth a place in it."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 19 '17 90w

BETTS, FRANK. Saga plays. *$1.25 Longmans 822

There are three plays in this collection: The passing of Sinflioti; Ingiald Evilheart, and The sword of Sigurd. Writing in 1917, the author says in his preface, "The plays were completed in April, 1914, by one who did not believe that great wars were any longer possible. Especially in 'The sword of Sigurd' he used the traditional motif of the sword to stand in his imaginations for all the adventurous and creative life of men. There is now need for the actual and physical sword as well as the Sword of the Spirit. . . . The writer finds nothing to alter on this account. . . . 'The sword of Sigurd' is not intended to be a complete play. It is a prologue to a play, as yet unfinished, dealing with the death of Sigurd."

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BETTS, FRANK—Continued

"They present tragic episodes from the 'Volsungasaga,' and the terse, grinding dialogue is strong and dramatic, and a fair imitation of that in the translated sagas. But though a prose different from that of real life is tolerable in a translation, where one unconsciously makes allowances, it gives a sense of unreality here without evoking the right poetic atmosphere."

+ — Ath p411 Ag '17 100w

"Through their likeness and unlikeness to the conditions of our own strenuous days Mr Betts's three plays come apt to the moment. Even in the days of laughter and dancing, peace and overflowing garners they would have been found exciting, exalting work. . . . The dialogue seems to thrill and quiver; and though we are always kept close to the matter in hand, the suggestions of thought on fighting, on adventure, on honour, on religion and fate, set the mind at work outside the scope of the stories here vividly and dramatically told."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p246 My 24 '17 900w

BETTS, GEORGE HERBERT. Class-room method and management. II *$1.25 Bobbs 371.3 17-13425

"Part 1, which is devoted to a discussion of general method, makes use of what Professor Betts calls the 'four cardinal elements which comprise method.' These to him are (1) the determination of aim, (2) the selection of material, (3) the organization of subject-matter for instruction, (4) presentation or the technique of instruction. He states the outcome of instruction in the elementary subjects as (1) fruitful knowledge, (2) right attitudes, (3) applied skills. . . . In Part 2 the author discusses method in teaching, applied specifically to reading, spelling, language, arithmetic, geography, history, civics, physiology and hygiene, agriculture, and home economics. In each case he makes use of his four cardinal elements of method and tries to summarize the conclusion from the recent scientific work in learning and teaching in each of the elementary subjects."—El School J

"In spite of the many excellences of the book, the reader familiar with contemporary critical thought in education finds frequent cause for disappointment. . . . Nearly all contemporary books intended as guides to teachers, while indicating orientations of aim and subject matter, fail like that of Dr Betts, to present acceptable indications as to desirable boundaries of the areas of knowledge and skill to be mastered." D: Snedden

+ — Educ R 51:203 S '17 1450w

"The title of the book is in part misleading. It is really a rather systematic treatise on the principles of education and general principles of method in teaching together with a statement of method applied specifically to each of the common branches. . . . Prof. Betts's discussion of the teaching of spelling ought to be very helpful. His treatment of reading from the standpoint of the 'quantitative movement' is quite inadequate. . . . He has not taken advantage of available scientific material in the chapter on the teaching of arithmetic. . . . This book will be of definite value to prospective teachers of elementary subjects or teachers who wish to keep abreast of current modes of thinking about school problems."

+ — El School J 17:687 My '17 520w

BEVAN, EDWYN ROBERT. Land of the two rivers. *$1 (3c) Longmans 935 (Eng ed 18-1520)

A brief historical survey that attempts to answer the question What has Mesopotamia stood for in the past? The author says: "The country which we incorrectly call Mesopotamia and the countries connected with it—Armenia, Asia Minor, Palestine, Persia—have recently become associated with living interests of the hour and immediate questions of practical politics; that may seem a reason for trying to give a fresh rapid survey of what their significance has been in former ages. . . . I have tried to seize the main points and leave out all details which did not contribute to making them apprehensible." There is one folding map.

"This admirable little sketch of Mesopotamia's place in history is by far the best of its kind that we have seen. Mr Bevan's very first sentence, protesting against that misleading catchword 'the unchangeable East,' stimulates curiosity, and is fully justified in the course of the book."

+ Spec 119:452 O 27 '17 210w

"To write a small book on such a subject calls for special qualities in its author, if it is not to degenerate into a mere list of names and dates. Mr Bevan has avoided that pitfall. The reader with no special knowledge of ancient history will here find a book he has long wanted."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p523 N 1 '17 900w

BEVAN, EDWYN ROBERT. Method in the madness. *$1.50 Longmans 940.91 17-28628

A fresh consideration of the case between Germany and ourselves. Loyal to the cause of the Allies, in no sense a pacifist, the author who is an Englishman sets aside controversy and denunciation and prepares an unimpassioned statement of what appear to him the inexactitudes in prevalent views of Germany; and looks at Germany just as it might be looked at by some one who stood outside the hurly-burly, with a desire, not to score points, but to say what he seems to see. In the quiet atmosphere of reflection he invites the reader to a consideration of truths which forward-looking men of all countries regard as basic, calling attention to these truths as the common ground upon which plans for peace may be made, the questions of territorial possessions and economic prosperity cleared up, and the matter of future warfare settled for all time.

"This English book on the great war has two unusual characteristics: It is written in a style of fine and deliberate quality, and its writer is almost as much as it is humanly possible to be, fair and dispassionate. . . . With regard to the attainment of peace, his chapter entitled 'Differences on the major premise' is of special worth as showing that after all the difference between the contending parties is not so much a difference of primary principles as of judgment on particular facts."

+ — Cath World 106:252 N '17 500w
Pittsburgh 22:825 D '17 100w

"Perhaps its greatest merit is that Mr Bevan, unlike too many of the patriotic men of letters who 'do their bit,' has really taken the trouble to master his material. . . . Our only criticism concerning the documentation of the book is that it has been allowed to appear without an Index. That is all the more unfortunate because there is a certain lack of consecutiveness and plan. . . . His book is valuable for the light it throws on German aims and German methods."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p315 JI 5 '17 1100w

BIERSTADT, EDWARD HALE. Dunsany the dramatist. II *$1.50 (4c) Little 822 17-7565

This study of Lord Dunsany consists of four chapters: The man; His work; His philosophy; Letters. The author finds a happy characterization of Dunsany in the exclamation of Thoreau, "Who am I to complain who have not yet ceased to wonder?" He cannot be classified as a realist or romanticist, for he deals not with life but with dreams. The series of letters, taken from a correspondence between Mr Stuart Walker and Lord Dunsany during Mr Walker's production of the Dunsany plays, is particularly interesting. The illustrations show scenes from the plays.

A L A BKJ 13:393 Je '17

"The most interesting section of Mr Bierstadt's book is the chapter which records the recent correspondence between Lord Dunsany and Mr Stuart Walker, the proprietor of the Portmanteau theatre. . . . The simple record of this correspondence, in itself, would make the book worth reading. . . . Those of us who have seen 'The gods of the mountain' do not need to be told that it is a great play. All we really want to learn is a catalogue of further facts concerning the career of a dramatist whose life has been hidden in obscurity. On this account, it is unfortunate that Mr Bierstadt's book is weakest on the score of information." Clayton Hamilton

+ Bookm 45:192 Ap '17 700w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 18 '17 950w

"While Mr Bierstadt's comments are entertaining rather than authoritative, the volume will repay perusal."

+ Cath World 106:544 Ja '18 110w

"He has read everything in print on the subject. He has conned all the plays and Dunsany's other writings. Yet the result leaves one with a sense of undiscovered depths. Least fortunate of all is Mr Bierstadt in the life of Dunsany. . . . The appendix, on the contrary, dealing with productions and publication, seems precise and accurate. The sixteen illustrations in half-tone give us a notion of both the man and his plays. Altogether the book will be welcome as the first treatment of a playwright whose vogue has advanced with surprising leaps in the last year or two."

+ Nation 105:18 Jl 5 '17 350w

+ N Y Times 22:316 Ag 26 '17 700w

"The most discriminating and valuable part of the author's survey is his treatment of Dunsany's philosophy. Like Yeats, Dunsany is more interested in ideas than in people. . . . But he has revived Wonder for us. His plays release us from an intolerable burden of photography and realism." Algernon Tassin

+ Pub W 91:975 Mr 17 '17 550w

R of Rs 55:662 Je '17 370w

St Louis 15:151 My '17 20w

"His criticisms are highly laudatory, but the points at which he takes issue with Dunsany are points which to the average reader will appear to have little importance."

+ Spring'd Republican p17 My 6 '17 480w

BIGELOW, FRANCIS HILL. Historic silver of the colonies and its makers. il *$6 Macmillan 739 17-25629

A vast fund of information has been collected in this work which describes and illustrates the various forms of colonial silver of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries made principally by the colonial silversmiths. It seeks its audience among possessors of colonial heirlooms, art lovers, art collectors, and art students. Church silver, beakers, tankards, flagons, mugs, chalices, table silverware, candlesticks, porringers, casters, tea kettles, inkstands, stew pans, bread baskets and many other objects wrought in silver are included with genealogical and historical notes concerning owners, donors and silversmiths. Over three hundred illustrations accompany the text.

"The 325 illustrations of pieces of colonial plate which the author has selected as typical or as particularly beautiful will arouse the wondering admiration of those who think of our forefathers only as simple and rather inartistic frontiersmen."

+ Ind 92:261 N 3 '17 100w

"There is a confusing mass of genealogical information and dates which would appeal principally to the collector or student, but there is, too, much that is interesting for the general reader. The anecdotes that enliven these pages are of like variety and interest."

+ Lit D 55:38 D 8 '17 160w

"The art side of our pre-Revolutionary times is seldom brought home to us so graphically as in this well-illustrated book. The author writes as one who loves his subject and is an authority upon it."

+ Outlook 117:349 O 31 '17 40w

"The book will prove a joy to lovers of old silver and a competent guide to collectors."

+ R of Rs 57:103 Ja '18 220w

"He has made a book of much value in its particular place, one which collectors and connoisseurs will be very glad to possess."

+ Spring'd Republican p17 D 8 '17 250w

BIGELOW, JOHN. Breaches of Anglo-American treaties; a study in history and diplomacy. maps *$1.50 Sturgis & Walton 341.2 17-11357

In quotations from the British press the author shows that the United States has been looked upon as a treaty breaker. His purpose in this book, begun and practically finished before the war, is to examine the record of the two nations in this respect. He says, "The following study is devoted to determining the relative trustworthiness of two great nations as indicated in their conventional intercourse with each other. Beginning with the treaty of peace at the end of our War of independence, it considers all the treaties, conventions, and similar agreements negotiated between Great Britain and the United States that may be regarded as broken by either of the contracting parties, sets forth and discusses the infraction in each case, and ends with a summarising of the records on both sides and a balancing of the accounts." This summary shows that "the United States has more than a safe balance of good faith to its credit."

"A perusal of the work indeed fully confirms the accuracy of the statement that it 'was not written to form or influence public opinion as to any phase or feature of the present world war.' . . . An examination of the disputes arising out of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty occupies nearly two-thirds of the volume. In this way their relative importance is perhaps unduly enhanced." J. B. Moore

+ Am Hist R 23:194 O '17 850w

A L A Bkl 14:40 N '17

"A curious, interesting, and, in some ways, a futile book. It would seem to reflect the spirit of an enquiring mind, rather than the results of profound research." P. M. Brown

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:577 Ag '17 530w

"The limits of this review do not permit of an analysis, or estimate of the evidence which Major Bigelow brings forward in support of his conclusions but it may be doubted whether the case he makes out against Great Britain in some of the instances which he cites is conclusive." J. W. Garner

Ann Am Acad 72:240 Jl '17 480w

"Marked by fairness of treatment and broad scholarly effort."

+ Cath World 105:553 Jl '17 120w

"We have ventured to sound a note of protest against the tone and temper of this volume, which doubtless contains much valuable matter, but we should equally regret railing accusations on behalf of British claims. One can only hope that a major, even though retired, is finding now more useful scope for his energies than in fanning the flames of wellnigh extinct controversies." H. E. Egerton

+ Eng Hist R 32:443 Jl '17 900w

"Greatly to be commended for its research and candor. . . . After reading the author's gatherings and conclusions about the treatise named, one lays down the book feeling that he has produced a powerful argument for the world court that seems to be rapidly coming nearer."

+ Ind 90:436 Je 2 '17 150w

R of Rs 56:215 Ag '17 80w

+ Spring'd Republican p10 My 25 '17 1250w

BILBRO, MATHILDE. Middle pasture. ll *$1.25 (1½c) Small 17-26262

The middle pasture divided the two Crawford farms. Neglected and unused and overgrown with brambles, it lay between the well-kept acres, dividing the two families as well. For at their father's death, each brother had claimed it, and the family quarrel that resulted had lasted thru many years. The difference didn't extend to the children, however, and the pasture that separated their elders became a common meeting ground for them. Billy and Beatrice climbed the stone wall on one side to meet Mary and Carey, who came tumbling over the wall on the other. The pasture was a very paradise for play. Beatrice, a delightful mixture of earnestness and mischief and naughtiness and wisdom, tells the story, bringing into it the grown-up affairs of many of the neighbors in the pleasant little southern community.

BILBRO, MATHILDE—Continued

"A mildly interesting story by a precocious child of twelve who with her brother manages the affairs of family and friends in a little southern town. . . . Of course there is a sentimental interest. A good example of its type."

A L A Bkl 13:314 Ap '17

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:313 My '17 250w

"Another of the type of stories to which 'Little women' and 'Rebecca of Sunnybrook farm' belong."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 13 '17 170w

+ Dial 62:246 Mr 22 '17 180w

"A good story about decent, lovable human beings told with directness and simplicity."

+ Ind 90:84 Ap 7 '17 140w

"We are pretty close to village melodrama. But there are characterization and true color and sincere feeling in the book." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 104:401 Ap 5 '17 40w

"The telling is simple; but after it is all over you wonder why the book should have been written at all. It is a weak novel of the 'old South' type." C. W.

— + N Y Call p13 Ap 22 '17 120w

+ N Y Times 22:99 Mr 18 '17 350w

"The atmosphere of the story is fresh and delightful."

+ Spring'd Republican p19 My 20 '17 220w

"Very real folk and a charming setting—a little Alabama farming community—make this a pleasing story."

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:158 My '17 40w

BILLINGS, MARIS WARRINGTON, pseud. (EDITH S. BILLINGS). Cleomenes. *$1.40 (1½c) Lane 17-13022

"The central figure is Cleomenes, the great sculptor, who is commissioned by the emperor to make a statue symbolizing maidenhood. This piece of art is known in the present as the famous 'Medici Venus.' In his search for a beautiful, virtuous maiden to serve as model, Cleomenes chooses a young Greek slave girl and sets to work in the atmosphere of danger and intrigue of Nero's court. The story, which involves the sculptor, the model and the emperor as its principal actors, unfolds during the progress of the work on the statue."—Spring'd Republican

"The characters, many of them historical, follow generally historical tradition. The chief exception is that of Octavia, the young wife of Nero."

Boston Transcript p6 Je 20 '17 250w

"The author deserves praise for the care with which the background of imperial Rome has been prepared and set forth."

+ N Y Times 22:250 Jl 1 '17 190w

"The tale is not distinguished either as to style or character drawing, but the author makes telling use of fact and legend to make a narrative of suspense and thrilling incident, the action of which never lags."

+ Spring'd Republican p15 S 2 '17 300w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Brandon of the engineers (Eng title, His one talent). il *$1.35 (1c) Stokes 16-24202

Altho the scene of this story is Central America, its plot is concerned with international affairs. Dick Brandon, who had been dismissed from the Royal engineers after losing valuable papers that were in his possession, is engaged in engineering work in one of the Central American states. Here he unexpectedly meets Clare Kenwardine and her father, who are associated in his mind with his disgrace, for it had been after an evening spent at their house that the loss of the papers was discovered. Kenwardine's presence in the country is not explained, but it later develops that he is, and has all the time been, a spy. This disclosure however does not permanently affect Brandon's relations with Clare.

A L A Bkl 13:266 Mr '17

+ Ath p544 N '16 60w

"The author's hand too obviously moves his puppets about; circumstances do not occur as the result of character, but at the very apparent wish of the author."

Boston Transcript p13 Ap 7 '17 190w

"Interesting but not important."

Ind 90:257 My 5 '17 50w

"Like most of Mr Bindloss's books, this one is neatly manufactured, but Brandon is less likeable than are the majority of his heroes."

N Y Times 22:40 F 4 '17 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p526 N 2 '16 130w

"Not better than the author's other stories, but of a different type."

Wis Lib Bul 13:158 My '17 40w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Carmen's messenger. il *$1.35 Stokes 17-13719

Carmen is the "belle" of a Canadian lumber town and her messenger is a young Englishman going home to visit the parents of his partner. Just before he leaves a man commits suicide—or is murder committed?—and a safe is robbed. At this time too he learns for the first time that his partner is subject to blackmail owing to wrongdoing in his youth. Carmen's message is a package to be personally delivered in Great Britain. The outwitting of blackmailers and evil-doers takes place both on the Scottish border and in Canada and local color is added to the interest of events.

A L A Bkl 14:59 N '17

"A well-written tale of adventure, but the complications are rather too numerous and too subtle."

+ Ath p204 Ap '17 15w

"Not a remarkable piece of work in any particular, but it is a capital story of adventure told in a forthright manner, which insures the reader's attention."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 12 '17 280w

+ N Y Times 22:311 Ag 26 '17 500w

BING, PHIL CARLETON. Country weekly. 2 *$2 Appleton 070 18-291

A manual for the rural journalist and for students of the country field. "The purpose of this book is to open the whole subject of the problems and possibilities of the country field. It is written to show the journalistic neophyte that there are chances in the country field which are worth while from every point of view. It is written, too, to suggest plans and possibilities to men who are already in the field; to encourage a vigorous effort among country editors to do their utmost to make country journalism a bigger, more vital thing than it has heretofore been." (Preface) Contents: The country weekly and its problems; Local news; County correspondence; Agricultural news; The editor; The editorial page; Make-up of the country weekly; Copy-reading and headline writing; Circulation problems; Advertising in the country weekly; Cost finding for the country weekly.

"Notwithstanding Professor Bing's disclaimer that he presents this book as an authoritative, definitive guide, every editor and journalistic neophyte who absorbs the feast of good things provided under its many subjects will be in a fair way to make a success in his profession. In his chapters on the editor and the editorial page Professor Bing devotes several pages to an elaboration of some capital suggestions which might be adopted to their ultimate profit by city editors."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 29 '17 290w

BINYON, LAURENCE. The cause. *$1 Houghton 811 17-9481

A volume of poems on the war, with such titles as: The fourth of August, Ode for September, To women, The bereaved, To the Belgians, Louvain, Orphans of Flanders, To Goethe, At Rheims, Gallipoli, The healers, Edith Cavell, The zeppelin, Men of Verdun, etc.

"Reprints some of the poems which appeared in 'The winning fan.'"
+ A L A Bkl 13:139 J1 '17

"This spirit of exaltation, of glory in the fact that England has chosen the heroic part, is the strongest emotional utterance throughout the book. It is the book's strength and its weakness. He approaches the whole subject in the guise of the idealist, and while he admits the presence of pain and death, he counts them little beside the white heights of patriotism. This attitude is apparently instinctive, but it makes evident a certain limitation, for one must recognize the depths of human passion in the sacrifice and consecration of the soldier before that sacrifice and consecration can raise him to the loftiest heights." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 2 '17 1150w

"Laurence Binyon's poetry once was somewhat coldly 'literary'—aloof from common human experience. But the war has given him new vigor and new humanity."

+ Lit D 54:1511 My 19 '17 280w

N Y Br Lib News 4:78 My '17

"Laurence Binyon's vigorous war poems have great spiritual strength and imaginative richness. 'Thunder on the downs' has scarcely been equaled by any poet save Masfield since 1914, and 'Fetching the wounded' fixes a picture every eye-witness of the war must remember. It is quite the best work Mr Binyon has done."

+ R of Rs 55:660 Je '17 50w

BIRD, CHARLES SUMNER, jr. Town planning for small communities. (National municipal league ser.) il *$2 (2c) Appleton 710 17-11219

A volume prepared by the chairman of the Walpole town planning committee and based on the experience of Walpole, Massachusetts. The book is divided into three parts. Part 1 consists of a general discussion of town planning with chapters on The why of town planning, Ways and means, Streets and roads and physical problems, Parks and playgrounds, Outdoor recreation, Public health, etc. Parts 2 and 3 are devoted specifically to Walpole's experience. Bibliographies are added to the chapters of part 1. Mr Clinton Rogers Woodruff, general editor of the National municipal league series, says that the book affords an admirable complement to John Nolen's volume on "City planning" published earlier in the series.

+ A L A Bkl 13:438 J1 '17

"The appropriateness, interest and novelty of his experiment justify the book in spite of some deficiencies in execution. These include a lack of proportion—the choice of illustrations—nearly always local and sometimes even personal; and the all pervading discussion of Walpole. These, it must be confessed, are faults natural to that town viewpoint which is the first requisite for a book of this kind." C: M. Robinson

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:787 N '17 260w

"The inclusion of this practical matter renders the book all the more useful as a guide to other communities seeking to rebuild themselves in a scientific and economical manner."

+ Dial 64:75 Ja 17 '18 260w

N Y Br Lib News 4:88 Je '17 130w

Pittsburgh 22:812 D '17 60w

"The illustrations are effective and interesting."

+ R of Rs 56:327 S '17 70w

"The spirit animating the book is that of a broad, fraternal liberalism which is entitled to be regarded as progressive in the best sense. . . . The foreword is a vigorous protest against the evils of individualism, especially as found in the manufacturing classes and as embodied in the industrial village."

+ Spring'd Republican p15 J1 22 '17 1100w
Survey 39:46 O 13 '17 220w

BIRDSALL, RALPH. Story of Cooperstown. il $1.50 M. F. Augur, Cooperstown, N.Y. 974.7 17-18707

Mr Birdsall is the rector of Christ church, Cooperstown, where Cooper worshipped and within whose grounds he was buried. A circumstantial account is given of Cooper's life in the village, and many pages are devoted to the subject of the originals of the most famous characters in his novels. The book also gives the history of Cooperstown and its inhabitants from Indian days to the present time.

"Contains many photographic illustrations." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 1 '17 1150w

"Books about Cooperstown there have been in some numbers, one of them by Cooper himself, which he called 'Chronicles,' but this and others deal with the smaller and less generally interesting facts. Mr Birdsall's book stands quite apart from any of these. It abounds not so much in the simple annals of an old and somewhat aristocratic community, as in sketches of important men and picturesque events, that give to the book much wider value. . . . The style has distinct originality and is notable for its literary quality."

+ Lit D 55:33 Ag 18 '17 1300w

"The author has done his work well and has made as human and as interesting a book of that kind as any one could wish."

+ N Y Times 22:279 J1 29 '17 1100w

+ R of Rs 57:104 Ja '18 30w

BIZZELL, WILLIAM BENNETT. Social teachings of the Jewish prophets; a study in Biblical sociology. *$1.25 (2c) Sherman, French & co. 224 16-23121

The author says, "This volume is the outgrowth of studies begun in the University of Chicago several years ago, and since made use of in a series of lectures delivered to college students and instructors. The approach to the study of prophetic literature from the social point of view has aroused a genuine interest, but the fact that I could find no book that exactly met the requirements made the instruction somewhat difficult." This book, based on the best works of modern scholarship, will doubtless meet the needs of others planning similar courses. The general plan is to present the life and teachings of each of the prophets against his historical background, for it is assumed that "the social message of the Jewish prophet was intended for his own times." The author is president of the Agricultural and mechanical college of Texas.

"We are almost led to doubt whether the author knows anything about either biblical or sociological science. . . . What we have here is an uncritical use of critical tools. On top of the lamentable deficiency in scientific method the book is swamped beneath a host of inexcusable errors in spelling and the like."

— Bib World 49:379 Je '17 250w

+ Dial 63:534 N 22 '17 100w

Pittsburgh 22:436 My '17 20w

"For those who wish to revalue the teachings of the Judaic prophets, this book meets a real need."

+ R of Rs 56:554 N '17 80w

St Louis 15:17 F '17 12w

BLACKMORE, SIMON AUGUSTINE. Riddles of Hamlet and the newest answers. il *$2 Stratford co. 822.3 18-2484

The only apologia a writer needs for the appearance of a new interpretation of Hamlet is that the interest inherent in the tragedy is perennial. Hamlet is examined in this study not only as a drama, but as an ethical treatise in which the characters and the problems in the play are shown in their relation to Shakespeare's religious and social affiliations. The first part is preliminary and deals with such questions as the invalidity of Gertrude's marriage, Hamlet's right to the crown, his feigned madness, his commonly alleged vacillation and defective power of will, his character, his religion and philosophy. The second part is the commentary proper. It takes up the drama, scene by scene, analyzing the thought and purpose and Shakespeare's pertinent allusions. An appendix contains a "Note on the doctrine of repentance and justification in relation to the conflict of the king at prayer."

BLACKMORE, SIMON AUGUSTINE—Cont.

+ Cath World 106:691 F '18 250w

BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON. Day and night stories. *$1.50 Dutton 17-21793

"These fifteen stories are of varying length, and in each of them is some phase of that form of mysticism which Mr Blackwood has made the basis of all his fiction. Their mystic quality is, however, as variable as their length. . . . Now and then they touch the mythology and the religions of bygone ages; now and then they are wholly of the immediate hour." (Boston Transcript) Contents: The tryst; The touch of Pan; The wings of Horus; Initiation; A desert episode; The other wing; The occupant of the room; Cain's atonement; An Egyptian hornet; By water; H. S. H.; A bit of wood; A victim of higher space; Transition; The tradition.

"It is probably coincidence that the title of this book has already been used for two volumes of more or less creepy stories by Mr T. R. Sullivan, published in the early nineties. Mr Blackwood's fancies are to my mind more effective in these brief sketches than in the long-drawn narratives of 'Julius Le Vallon' and 'The wave.'" H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:207 O '17 310w

"Especially notable in this collection are two stories entitled, 'The occupant of the room' and 'By water.'" E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 22 '17 1750w

"The present volume is not one that can be regarded with very warm hopes for the author's permanence in literature. Certainly such a tale as 'The touch of Pan' is not worthy of a place in any volume."

+ Cath World 106:407 D '17 320w

"Mr Blackwood is undeniably a master of style—one not only rich and wonderful in itself, but also admirably adapted to his bizarre stories."

+ Dial 63:532 N 22 '17 160w

"The 'Stories' have the author's usual un-usualness. No one else could write with the restrained art which always seems about to lift the curtain between man and the unseen, yet always leaves us with a sense of mystery and of Isis faintly guessed at thru many veils."

+ Ind 91:514 S 29 '17 50w

"No one of these stories equals the half dozen tales, scattered through different volumes, which represent the high-water mark of Mr Blackwood's production. . . . That reincarnation theory, which forms the cornerstone of so much of Mr Blackwood's fiction, is the main theme of 'Cain's atonement'—a story of the present war. . . . Two of the most characteristic stories in the volume are 'Initiation' and 'H. S. H.', both tales of the mountain solitudes."

+ N Y Times 22:310 Ag 26 '17 1100w

"We have often commented on the imaginative quality of Mr Blackwood's work. These mystical tales have that quality in a pre-eminent degree. Like his former stories, they possess distinct literary value."

+ Outlook 117:100 S 19 '17 30w

"The book is seasoned with one humorous tale."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p92 F 22 '17 650w

BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON. The wave; an Egyptian aftermath. *$1.50 (1c) Dutton 16-24201

From childhood he had been haunted by a wave. It rose behind him, advanced, curled over from the crest, but did not fall. Sometimes it came as a waking obsession, sometimes as a dream. His father, a learned psychologist with inclinations toward Freud, tries to explain it, but the Freudian hypothesis is inadequate. Associated with the wave, is a strange perfume, identified afterwards as Egyptian. The recurring experience follows him into manhood, affecting his life and his relations to men and women. Certain persons are borne to him on the crest of the wave, as it were. These always become of significance in his life. Of them are Lettice Aylmer and his cousin Tony. Later in Egypt, these three act out a drama which seems to be a repetition of something they have experienced before. It is here that Tom Kelderdon's wave rises to its full height and breaks, but it does not overwhelm him.

"On the whole, Mr Blackwood maintains, though he does not strengthen, our good opinion of his imaginativeness and power of evoking the beautiful."

+ Ath p544 N '16 150w

"Mr Blackwood knows how to give these stories of reincarnation an effect beyond mere creepiness. But his method is so leisurely that he is often 'slow,' in the sense of dull and long-drawn-out; and his manner is formal and ponderous and unenlivened by humour; common frailties of philosophical romance." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:207 Ap '17 480w

"Never before has Mr Blackwood written a novel that comes so close to the real things of life as 'The wave.' It touches persistently upon the supernatural, but its visions are wholly subjective." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '17 1400w

+ Ind 89:556 Mr 26 '17 200w

+ Nation 104:368 Mr 29 '17 430w

"One's strongest impression on closing this book is that of beauty—beauty alike of style and of spirit. The glory of words, the grandeur that was Egypt, the splendor of a brave and loving human soul—these are the very substance of this fascinating volume."

+ N Y Times 22:47 F 11 '17 950w

"A strange and unusual book, full of insight and imagination. It is the work of a very delicate literary craftsman, who is a past master in the art of elusive suggestion."

+ Sat R 123:40 Ja 13 '17 500w

"With the characteristic Blackwood mystery to help, the book is rich in excitement and experience."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p483 O 12 '16 450w

BLAISDELL, ALBERT FRANKLIN, and BALL, FRANCIS KINGSLEY. American history for little folks. il *75c (2c) Little 973 17-25786

This book, adapted for use in the third school grade, is intended as an introduction to "The American history story-book" and other more advanced works by the authors. The aim has been to choose some of the more dramatic and picturesque events and to relate them in a simple and easy style. A partial list of contents follows: Columbus, the sailor; The sea of darkness; The hero of Virginia; Seeking a new home; Captain Miles Standish; Dark days in New England; The Dutch in New York; William Penn, the Quaker; A famous tea party; Polly Daggett saves the flagpole; Peggy White calls on Lord Cornwallis.

Reviewed by J. Walcott

Bookm 46:496 D '17 50w

BLANCHARD, RALPH HARRUB. Liability and compensation insurance. il *$2 Appleton 331.82 17-24252

A textbook which presents the results of the workmen's compensation movement in the United States in terms of legislative and in-insurance practice, and explains the industrial accident problem and the development of liability and compensation principles as a background for the comprehension of present problems. The book is divided into three parts: Industrial accidents and their prevention; Employers' liability and workmen's compensation; Employers' liability and workmen's compensation insurance.

"Mr Blanchard covers the entire field in a very fair way, though it is evident that he does so in the professor's study rather than from the ground of practical experience. The insurance feature is especially well covered."
+ — Dial 63:534 N 22 '17 170w

"The author deals with the state compensation acts, and the stock company, mutual and state fund methods of insuring the payment of such compensation. He concludes that, because of insufficient data, a choice among these three methods cannot be made at present. The author misses the determining factor in such a choice. This is, that the most desirable method of taking care of industrial accident losses is that which does most to prevent such losses."

— Engin News-Rec 79:1170 D 20 '17 240w

"In the presentation of the insurance problem an important and timely contribution has been made." E. S. Gray

+ J Pol Econ 25:1050 D '17 250w

"It should appeal primarily to teachers and students of insurance, but it contains much information of interest to the business man and the intelligent general reader as well."

+ Nation 106:122 Ja 31 '18 360w

"The subject is presented both broadly and well. The point is not shirked that the subject in some aspects is controversial. In such cases both sides are presented, as the author's intention is to give information rather than judgment."

+ N Y Times 22:497 N 25 '17 230w

"The author has to be commended for the clearness and conciseness of statement and helpful bibliographic notes. On the other hand it must, like most text-books, be dogmatic, and one fails to get the impression from reading the book how much is still controversial in the field of compensation. . . . One is somewhat inclined to question the wisdom of the printing of the New York compensation law as an appendix to the book. The New York act is not as typical as a good many other acts." I. M. Rubinow

+ — Survey 39:149 N 10 '17 350w

BLAND, JOHN OTWAY PERCY. Li Hung-chang. (Makers of the nineteenth century) il *$2 (2c) Holt (Eng ed 17-26886)

Mr Bland is joint author of Backhouse and Bland's "China under the Empress Dowager." The introductory chapter of the present volume reviews the conditions existing in China at the outset of Li Hung-chang's career. The author then gives a detailed account of Li's life from childhood to his death in 1901, just after the Boxer rebellion, at the age of seventy-eight. He considers him as a Chinese official, as a diplomat, a naval and military administrator, and a statesman and politician, and concludes that Li's chief claim to greatness lies in the fact that, at the time of the Taiping rebellion, he "grasped the vital significance of the impact of the West, and the necessity for reorganizing China's system of government and national defences to meet it." The biographer's task, he tells us, has been complicated by the lack of any accurate Chinese account of Li's career, and the untrustworthiness of Chinese official records. Moreover, the "Memoirs of the Viceroy Li Hung-chang," published in 1913, were a "literary fraud." The present work, therefore, is based largely upon the recorded opinions of independent and competent European observers. There is a bibliographical note of two pages, followed by a chronological table of events in Chinese history. The book is indexed.

"Mr Bland makes very clear to us the mingling elements in Li's nature, showing how sometimes patriotism and sometimes self-interest stirred him most. . . . By the time we reach Mr Bland's final summing up of the character we realize how skilful has been his handling of the material and how vividly he has made us realize his impression of the great premier." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 17 '17 900w

+ Lit D 55:36 N 3 '17 950w

"His treatment of his subject recalls a time when familiarity with life at the treaty ports was enough literary capital for the ordinary authority on Chinese affairs and real acquaintance with their history and ideas was left to the missionaries. . . . No new material about Li has been unearthed, no advance has been made towards obtaining Chinese estimates of the man, no approach towards any but an Englishman's point of view is attempted. . . . On the other hand, it is fair to add that the book is easily read and that it portrays a rather splendid type of the oriental viceroy."

— + Nation 105:488 N 1 '17 1500w

"Excellent biography."

+ N Y Times 22:501 N 25 '17 1000w

"The really significant services that Li Hung Chang rendered to his race are clearly set forth in this volume by a writer who has had good opportunities to study China and the Chinese at first hand."

+ R of Rs 56:551 N '17 120w

"If the provision of an adequate 'setting' is one of the difficulties to be encountered in limning Li Hung-chang's career, another is the paucity of record. . . . Mr Bland is to be congratulated upon the comprehensive narrative which he has succeeded in compiling."

* + — The Times [London] Lit Sup p535 N 8 '17 1850w

BLATHWAYT, RAYMOND. Through life and round the world; being the story of my life. il *$3.50 Dutton 17-23043

Mr Blathwayt is a British journalist who has traveled widely and has made a specialty of the art of interviewing. Before taking up journalism, he served as a curate in Trinidad, in the East End of London, and in an English village. He believes himself to be the first to adapt the American "interview" to English manners. Among those interviewed by him are William Black, Thomas Hardy, Hall Caine, Grant Allen, William Dean Howells, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, and Oliver Wendell Holmes.

"Illustrated from photographs and from drawings by Mortimer Menpes." E. F. E.
Boston Transcript p7 Ag 8 '17 800w

"So many aspects of English life and examples of English character are included in Mr Blathwayt's book that it forms a reminiscential commentary upon the journalistic and literary world of London during the past thirty years." E. F. E.

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 11 '17 900w

"The book is a veritable gold mine for the after-dinner speaker, for it is besprinkled with quotable anecdotes."

+ Dial 64:30 Ja 3 '18 250w

"His book abounds in what Mr Leacock calls 'aristocratic anecdotes,' platitudinous reflections, and 'fine writing.' His naive confessions as a curate help to explain the spiritual deadness and professionalism of the Church of England; they might well be used as illustrative footnotes to 'The soul of a bishop.'"

— Nation 105:610 N 29 '17 190w

"It is very entertaining, as engaging a book of reminiscence as has been put before the public in many a day."

+ N Y Times 22:293 Ag 12 '17 1200w

"Mr Blathwayt is a born raconteur. Particularly good are his descriptions of his life as a young curate and as an almost penniless wanderer in Connecticut."

+ Outlook 117:26 S 5 '17 70w

Sat R 123:436 My '12 '17 820w

BLATHWAYT, RAYMOND—Continued

"All his admiration of Captain Marryat and of Mrs Radcliffe has not taught him to spell their names right. He misquotes with the utmost facility. . . . Here is a writer who has made livelihood and reputation by writing, yet has never mastered the elementary rules of the art. . . . His book is frequently, though not constantly entertaining; but it would be much less entertaining than it is without the innocence of its author's self-revelation."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p198 Ap 26 '17 950w

BLEACKLEY, HORACE WILLIAM. Life of John Wilkes. il *$5 (3½c) Lane 17-24576

This is a scholarly account, based to a great extent on original documents of the English politician, publicist and political agitator, who, "from 1764 to 1780 was the central figure not only of London but of England." (Sat R)

"Mr Bleackley has executed his task in a scholarly and interesting manner, and his book forms an acceptable supplement to Lecky. . . . The numerous illustrations are a valuable feature of the book."

+ Ath p419 Ag '17 160w

"Remarkable as the career of John Wilkes confessedly was, and undeniably interesting as this biography is, in spite of Mr Bleackley's literary skill its final impression is not good. If, as we are told, none of his contemporaries influenced more powerfully the spirit of the age, that spirit must have been grossly immoral to condone his immoral grossness."

— + Lit D 55:41 N 17 '17 240w

"Mr Bleackley has found a subject well suited to his talent in this profoundly interesting historical study."

+ N Y Times 22:417 O 21 '17 550w

+ Outlook 117:184 O 3 '17 50w

"This is one of the best biographies that have appeared for a long time. Mr Bleackley has read and rifled nearly all the memoirs, manuscripts, diaries, letters, newspapers of the period, and we have not read a more erudite and conscientious treatment of a controversial subject. . . . He treats his hero with the benevolent impartiality of the scientific historian."

* + + Sat R 124:sup1 J1 7 '17 1200w

"Mr Bleackley has given us a most interesting book. . . . He has put before himself the task of proving that a man who wrought so much for liberty was himself a great man and a lover of the cause for which he fought. We allow that Wilkes had genius of a sort, but doubt whether he really cared two pins about the rights of constituencies, or the illegality of general warrants, or the liberty of the press. He fought for John Wilkes, and in fighting for him achieved results of wide constitutional importance."

* Spec 119:167 Ag 18 '17 1500w

"The language is journalistic. . . . As a picture of 17th-century England in its most corrupt and licentious phases the book has some historical value, though it is too often written in the language of gossip rather than history."

"The book has its faults—particularly its emphasis upon Wilkes's mistresses—but the evidence is well documented. . . . It is to be regretted that a career so closely connected with American independence should be treated to so great an extent as the subject of a record of private vices. . . . There is much biographical and historical matter in it of genuine interest."

— + Springf'd Republican p15 S 23 '17 1050w

"Mr Bleackley enumerates a good many of those who have included Wilkes in their historical canvases. . . . An essay by Fraser Rae preceded Trevelyan's description in his rainbow-tinted history of Charles James Fox, and later came a biography in two volumes by Percy Fitzgerald. Praise is reiterated of the excellent monograph by J. M. Rigg in the 'Dictionary of national biography'; but so far as we see, no mention is made of by far the most judicial and philosophic account of the transactions in which Wilkes was conspicuous in Lecky's

'History of England in the eighteenth century.' . . . His style is a little arid, but his ripened power of research, his patience and diligence in sifting material, combine to furnish a truly notable portrait. . . . The historical background shows a great advance upon any of his preceding work. . . . The volume is very well finished, the references (largely to Mss.) overwhelming, the illustrations well-chosen, the errata scrupulous, the index complete."

* + The Times [London] Lit Sup p318 J1 5 '17 2050w

BLUMENTHAL, DANIEL. Alsace-Lorraine. 2 map *75c (7c) Putnam 943.4

"A study of the relations of the two provinces to France and to Germany and a presentation of the just claims of their people." The author, an Alsatian by birth, has been deputy from Strasbourg in the Reichstag, senator from Alsace-Lorraine, and mayor of the city of Colmar. The book has an introduction by Douglas Wilson Johnson of Columbia university, who says, "The problem of Alsace-Lorraine is in a very real sense an American problem."

"There is no more moving recent plea for the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine than this little volume."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 9 '18 200w

BLUNDELL, MARY E. (SWEETMAN) (MRS FRANCIS BLUNDELL) (M. E. FRANCIS, pseud.). Dark Rosaleen. *$1.35 (1c) Kennedy A17-1416

A story of modern Ireland. In a study of the relationship between two families, the author gives an epitome of the situation that exists in Ireland between Catholics and Protestants. Hector McTavish's father is a fanatical Scotch Presbyterian, but since he grows up in a Catholic community, Hector makes friends with the children of that church. Patsy Burke is his dearest playmate and Honor Burke is to him a foster mother. Fearing these influences, the father takes the boy away and, when he returns thirteen years later, it is to find Patsy an ordained priest and Patsy's little sister, Norah, grown into sweet womanhood. The love between Hector and Norah, their marriage and the birth of their child leads to tragedy. But, in the child, the author sees a symbol of hope for the new Ireland.

"The author has not written a thesis novel, but a touching tale of what she feels and loves."

+ Cath World 105:259 My '17 130w

"There is nothing intolerant in the spirit of this very thrilling book."

+ N Y Times 22:166 Ap 29 '17 550w

BODART, GASTON, and KELLOGG, VERNON LYMAN. Losses of life in modern wars; ed. by Harald Westergaard. *$2 Oxford 172.4 16-20885

"It is the function of the Division of economics and history of the Carnegie endowment for international peace, under the direction of Professor J. B. Clark, to promote a thorough and scientific investigation of the causes and results of war. . . . The first volume resulting from these studies contains two reports upon investigations carried on in furtherance of this plan. The first, by Mr Gaston Bodart, deals with the 'Losses of life in modern wars: Austria-Hungary, France.' The second, by Professor Vernon L. Kellogg, is a preliminary report and discussion of 'Military selection and race deterioration.' . . . Professor Kellogg marshals his facts to expose the dysgenic effects of war in military selection, which exposes the strongest and sturdiest young men to destruction and for the most part leaves the weaklings to perpetuate the race. He cites statistics to prove an actual measurable, physical deterioration in stature in France due apparently to military selection. . . . To these dysgenic aspects of militarism the author adds the appalling racial deterioration resulting from venereal diseases."

—Dial

Am Hist R 22:702 Ap '17 450w

+ A L A Bkl 13:196 F '17

"The work is a candid and sane discussion of both sides of this very important aspect of militarism."

+ Dial 61:401 N 16 '16 390w

"It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of this original and authoritative study into the actual facts of war."

+ Educ R 52:528 D '16 70w

BOGARDUS, EMORY STEPHEN. Introduction to sociology. $1.50 University of Southern California press, 3474 University av., Los Angeles, Cal. 302 17-21833

The author who is professor of sociology in the University of Southern California offers this textbook as an introduction not only to sociology in its restricted sense but to the entire field of the social sciences. He presents the political and economic factors in social progress not only from a sociological point of view but in such a way that the student will want to continue along political science or economic lines. It is the aim to stimulate and to direct social interest to law, politics and business. He discusses the population basis of social progress, the geographic, biologic and psychologic bases as well; social progress as affected by genetic, hygienic, recreative, economic, political, ethical, esthetic, intellectual, religious, and associative factors. A closing chapter surveys the scientific outlook for social progress.

"The advantage of Professor Bogardus's method is that it brings to bear in a simple, elementary way a great mass of pertinent facts."

+ Dial 63:596 D 6 '17 150w

"The author does not, perhaps, distinguish clearly enough between the sociological and the social points of view." B. L.

+ — Survey 39:202 N 24 '17 240w

BOGEN, BORIS D. Jewish philanthropy; an exposition of principles and methods of Jewish social service in the United States. *$2 Macmillan 360 17-15182

"The entire field of Jewish social service, both theoretic and practical, is here discussed by a man who has been engaged in it for about twenty-five years as educator, settlement head, relief agent, and now field secretary of the National conference of Jewish charities. . . . The author points out that the pre-eminent Jewish contribution to social service in this country is the 'federation idea.' By federating their charities, the Jews succeeded in uniting communities, in raising more funds to carry on work more adequately; they have prevented duplication of effort, conserved energies and eliminated waste." (Survey) The book has an eight-page bibliography.

A L A Bkl 14:40 N '17

"No one perhaps is better qualified to discuss with authority the subject of Jewish philanthropy than Dr Boris D. Bogen, of Cincinnati. Himself a Russian by birth and early training, he speaks concerning the immigrant with a thoroughness born of intimate and empiric knowledge, supplemented by years of accurate and exhaustive study." A. A. Benesch

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:785 N '17 580w

"Once in a while the author makes a sweeping statement without citing authorities. There are two serious drawbacks to the usefulness of the work. One is the constant use of Hebrew words, which are usually not translated or are mistranslated. Any future work of this character should have a glossary of such Hebrew words as part of its appendix. The other is the chapter on Standards of relief, which ought to have been the most important, received the most scant attention. But all in all, the book is a splendid piece of work." Eli Mayer

+ — Ann Am Acad 74:303 N '17 460w

Cleveland p107 S '17 10w

+ Ind 92:109 O 13 '17 110w

"The book contains a great mass of information regarding various Jewish philanthropies, although no attempt is made to present statistical matter in a formal way."

R of Rs 56:441 O '17 50w

"Dr Bogen's book is wide in scope and will be found useful as a handbook for non-Jewish as well as for Jewish social workers." Oscar Leonard

+ Survey 38:532 S 15 '17 500w

BOIRAC, ÉMILE. Our hidden forces ("La psychologie inconnue"); an experimental study of the psychic sciences; tr. and ed., with an introd., by W. de Kerlor. il *$2 (3c) Stokes 130 17-13485

This work, translated from the French, is based on investigations in a field to which scientists of note in the United States, with the exception of William James, have given little attention, that of psychic phenomena. In France, on the other hand, the translator assures us, such investigations, have made such progress as to gain national recognition. The book is based on experimental studies and consists of collected papers that were written during the period from 1893 to 1903. Animal magnetism in the light of new investigations, Mesmerism and suggestion, The provocation of sleep at a distance, The colors of human magnetism, The scientific study of spiritism, etc., are among the subjects.

"Professor Émile Boirac, rector of the Academy of Dijon, France, and author of this book, is an acknowledged leader of thought in matters both psychological and psychic. He has devoted many years to studying the problems pertaining to life and death, and this present book was awarded the prize in a contest to which many of the leading psychologists contributed. . . . Though a scientific book, it is not without attraction for the lay reader."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Je 13 '17 320w

Cleveland p91 Ji '17 30w

N Y Br Lib News 4:93 Je '17

+ R of Rs 56:106 Ji '17 80w

BOLIN, JAKOB. Gymnastic problems; with an introd. by Earl Barnes. il *$1.50 (4c) Stokes 613.7 17-12150

This book by the late Professor Bolin of the University of Utah has been prepared for publication by a group of his associates, who feel that the work is "one of the most important contributions to the subject of gymnastics which has been written in English." In the first chapter the author discusses the relation of gymnastic exercise to physical training in general. His own position is that the aim of gymnastics is hygienic in a special sense, its object being to counteract the evils of one sided activity. The remaining chapters are devoted to: The principle of gymnastic selection; The principle of gymnastic totality; The principle of gymnastic unity; The composition of the lesson; Progression; General considerations of method.

"Of value to all teachers of physical education and to those interested in healthful efficiency."

+ A L A Bkl 14:10 O '17

BONNER, GERALDINE (HARD PAN, pseud.). Treasure and trouble therewith. il *$1.50 (1½c) Appleton 17-21974

"After the opening scene, which pictures a hold-up and robbery of a Wells-Fargo stage coach in the California mountains, the story drops into more conventional lines of romance. The robbery, which is the act of two rough prospectors, is the prelude to the social experiences in San Francisco of a familiar type of cosmopolitan adventurer. He is little better than a tramp when he discovers the robbers' cache. He makes off with the gold and conceals it near San Francisco. Being well-born and educated, though thoroughly unscrupulous, he finds an easy entrance to San Francisco society." (Spring'd Republican) The rest of the book gives the story of his life in the city. The California earthquake of 1906 plays an important part in the story.

BONNER, GERALDINE—Continued

+ A L A Bkl 14:59 N '17

"Geraldine Bonner has a good plot in 'Treasure and trouble therewith,' although not an especially attractive one. . . . All her pictures of California are vivid and sympathetic, but the character drawing is unskilful."

+ — N Y Evening Post p3 O 13 '17 80w

"Miss Bonner has endeavored, with commendable success, to combine realism with the stirring incidents and dramatic situations of the story of plot and action. Especially good are the chapters which deal with the earthquake."

+ N Y Times 22:311 Ag 26 '17 770w

"In spite of the complete lack of plausibility, the book affords a certain measure of diversion."

+ — Spring'd Republican p15 S 16 '17 300w

BOSANKO, W. Collecting old lustre ware. (Collectors' pocket ser.) il *75c (3½c) Doran 738

A17-1002

The editor in his preface says that he believes this to be the first book on old English lustre ware ever published. He adds: "Yet there are many collectors of old lustre ware; it still abounds, there is plenty of it to hunt for, and prices are not yet excessive. By the aid of this informative book and the study of museum examples a beginner may equip himself well, and may take up this hobby hopefully, certain of finding treasures." There are over forty-five illustrations.

A L A Bkl 13:136 Jl '17

"Simple, practical handbook."

+ Cleveland p97 Jl '17 20w

N Y Br Lib News 5:75 My '17 20w

+ R of Rs 56:220 Ag '17 50w

BOSANQUET, BERNARD. Social and International ideals. *$2.25 Macmillan 304

(Eng ed 17-28213)

"This volume is a collection of essays, reviews, and lectures, all of which, with one exception, were published before the war, and most of which on the face of them reveal that fact. . . . Though the contents of the volume seem at first sight to be fortuitously put together, there runs through them unity of spirit, thought, purpose, and manner." (The Times [London] Lit Sup Jl '17) "Most of the pages (14 out of 17) are reprinted from the Charity (Organization) Review) discuss the principles which should govern our handling of social problems with the view of displaying 'the organizing power which belongs to a belief in the supreme values—beauty, truth, kindness, for example—and how a conception of life which has them for its good is not unpractical.'" (The Times [London] Lit Sup Je 21 '17)

"We may single out, as of special importance in this new volume, Mr Bosanquet's idea of the growth of individuality and his idea of the structure of political society. In the chapter on 'Optimism' he points out that the mistake of its opponents is the acceptance of their momentary experience as final. . . . Criticism, confined to a few sentences, must obviously be inadequate. . . . If there are omissions in Mr Bosanquet's analysis of fact, his ideal also appears to be too simple."

+ Ath p398 Ag '17 950w

"It is a great privilege to listen to a wise man and a real logician, who is at once a wit and a humanitarian. Dr Bosanquet was not for nothing a fellow in moderations. The whole book is full of sound common sense."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 19 '18 600w

Cleveland p135 D '17 60w

"Written in a strain of reasoned optimism." M. J.

+ Int J Ethics 28:291 Ja '18 200w

"Here we have the precious kernel of wisdom in the hard nut of paradox. No doubt, justice and kindness, beauty and truth are the things that matter most, and it is no small service to direct our thoughts once again to them. But how to embody and realize them in the maze and tangle of our actual world, that is a problem apparently too great for any single thinker." R. F. A. H.

+ — New Repub 13:353 Ja 19 '18 1850w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p299 Je 21 '17 130w

"If we are tempted to say that these pages show his aptitude for making simple things look difficult, they reveal also the meaning of life. They disclose to those living the humblest of lives that they may enter if they will—the door is ever open—to regions the highest and purest. . . . If the book contained nothing else than some of the observations in the last chapters as to true pacifism and patriotism, it would make every reader its debtor."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p326 Jl 12 '17 1800w

BOSSCHÈRE, JEAN DE, il. Christmas tales of Flanders. il *$3 Dodd 398

Popular Christmas tales current in Flanders and Brabant, translated by M. C. O. Morris, and spiritedly illustrated partly in color and partly in black and white by Jean de Bosschère.

"The engaging color-work of Mr de Bosschère is full of brilliancy, and makes of this Christmas book a rich gift from a country now sorely stricken."

+ Lit D 55:53 D 8 '17 50w

"A very charming book for young people, and so interestingly illustrated that their elders will find it almost equally attractive. All the pictures have humor, dexterity, force, and appreciation of character."

+ N Y Times 22:514 D 2 '17 70w

"This handsome and well-illustrated book is one of the most attractive we have seen this season. . . . Some of the drawings seem to us a little scratchy, but they will all be clear to a child. They lack the tortured straining after originality and the purposeful ugliness which modern art has occasionally thrust upon the nursery."

+ — Sat R 124:sup10 D 8 '17 280w

+ Spec 119:sup628 D 1 '17 330w

"The stories are sometimes abrupt in their inconclusiveness; homely and almost entirely unromantic. Sometimes a disagreeable hint of cynicism obtrudes itself; but this may have been left on our minds by the association with M. de Bosschère's illustrations. They are completely unsuited to their purpose."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p621 D 13 '17 200w

BOSTWICK, ARTHUR ELMORE. American public library. il *$1.75 (2c) Appleton 020

17-17641

This is a new edition, revised and brought up to date, of a book written by the librarian of the St Louis public library and first published seven years ago. "As a matter of mechanical necessity, no doubt, the revisions and additions have limited themselves to such changes as could be made, here and there, without requiring any considerable resetting or recasting of the pages, so that the former pagination is retained, except that two pages have been added to the index. The table of contents of the first edition has also been reprinted without change, though a few of its details do not apply to the new edition, and a few details in the new edition find no place in the reprinted table of contents. Among alterations made necessary by recent developments, several of importance arrest attention in the chapter on 'The library and the state.' A useful list of American library periodicals takes the place of the old list of library clubs." (Dial)

A L A Bkl 14:66 N '17

"The only comprehensive manual in its special field."

+ + — Dial 63:468 N 8 '17 220w

BOTHWELL-GOSSE, A. Civilization of the ancient Egyptians. (Through the eye ser.) il *$2 (7c) Stokes 913.32 17-1644

The motto of the series to which this book belongs is "Look and understand." A publisher's note has this to say of the purpose of the series: "Its central idea is the treatment of subjects of general interest in a plain manner, relying to a large extent on a profusion of illustration to elucidate the text." There are over 150 illustrations in the present volume, accompanied by descriptive text, with chapters on: The Egyptians, their temperament and domestic life; Education; Professions and occupations; Amusements; Architecture—pyramids and temples; Sculpture and painting; Science—engineering skill; Medicine; Science—astronomy; Government and laws; Religion; Literature.

"Of value chiefly for its excellent illustrations."

+ A L A Bkl 13:349 My '17

"Special attention is given to ancient home life."

+ Pratt p22 Jl '17 10w

BOTTOMÉ, PHYLLIS. Derelict. il *$1.35 (2c) Century 17-14180

"The derelict" is a story that has been running as a serial in the Century Magazine this year. It is a study of the situation that results from the efforts of a well-meaning young woman to rescue a girl from the underworld. Emily Dering, engaged to Geoffrey Amberley, intentionally throws her protégé in his way. It is part of her program for Fanny's reform, and when the girl suddenly turns about and goes back to her old life, she of course does not understand the nobility of purpose that lay back of the act. The story, which is only a long short story, is followed by seven others, also reprinted from the Century: The liqueur glass; "Mademoiselle l'Anglaise"; An awkward turn; The syren's isle; "Ironstone"; The pace; Brother Leo.

"Of all the stories in this excellent collection of eight, 'The liqueur glass' seems to one reader at least by far the best—not only the best of these, but outstanding among the myriad output of the year." F. A. G.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 13 '17 530w

"The things that pleased us in 'The dark tower' were its economy of utterance and its simple relation of a story whose characters made its telling worth while. In this connection the only story that is really worth the reader's attention—judged by Phyllis Bottomé's own standard of work—is the title piece."

+ Dial 63:73 Jl 19 '17 100w

"Miss Bottomé's manner is of the well-bred school, with a family resemblance to Mrs Wharton's and Miss Sedgwick's, her work has the finish and proportion which, in fiction as elsewhere, are the reward of the artist in contrast with the improvisator."

+ Nation 105:370 O 4 '17 400w

"A strong and piquant flavor of personality breathes from all her pages and gives to them a unique tang—something that is always a blessed thing to find in fiction of any sort."

+ N Y Times 22:206 My 27 '17 720w

"With one or two exceptions they have grim and tragic plot-ideas, but the author has a sense of humor and her art is of the finest. 'The liqueur glass,' for instance, might have been written by Edmond de Goncourt."

+ Outlook 116:304 Je 20 '17 50w

BOTTOMÉ, PHYLLIS. Second fiddle. il *$1.35 (2c) Century 17-28800

"You know, a secretary is a kind of second fiddle. . . I like being a second fiddle." So speaks Stella Waring, secretary for seven years to Professor Paulson, the great naturalist, and later to Mr Leslie Travers, expert accountant. Stella's father was a dreamy antiquarian, and her mother a gentlewoman who "did not manage anything and when she was very unhappy said she was in tune with the infinite." So the three girls, Eurydice, the "suppressed artist," Cicely, who studied medicine, and Stella, had to fend for themselves. The story concerns itself mainly with the business life and the love affairs of Stella, more especially her affair with Sir Julian Verny, who is invaded home from the front.

+ A L A Bkl 14:129 Ja '18

"The tale is told with Miss Bottomé's customary fluency and charm; Stella stands out as the living and original characterisation of the book." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:491 D '17 190w

"The chief charm of the story is in the telling—the dash, the sparkle, the ready humor, and the quick, fine understanding." R. T. P.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 10 '17 1150w

"It is a pity that Phyllis Bottomé should waste her efforts on intellectual cream-puffs. A great deal of the psychology in 'The second fiddle' is accurate; but where could such happy endings possibly evolve? And how could one lovely, normal girl be all but surrounded by a set of caricatures."

— Dial 63:463 N 8 '17 110w

"For the human development of 'The second fiddle' is based upon the sound, and often neglected, psychological fact that sympathy is not pity; that out of love and understanding—and out of nothing else in the world—do human beings raise their hurt comrades from pain and defeat to human brotherhood and sanity and triumph once more. That is the theme of 'The second fiddle.' And it is that that lifts the book from the conventionality of its incident and the mere pleasantness of its romance to a place among novels that are not only readable but worth reading."

+ N Y Times 22:452 N 4 '17 670w

"The great charm of the book—and its charm is not insignificant—lies in the unfolding of Stella's personality, in delicious bits of humor tucked in like little surprises, and in most human love-making!" Doris Webb

+ Pub W 92:1374 O 20 '17 330w

"The author supplies a certain note of pathos, offset by humor and pointed wit."

+ Spring'd Republican p17 D 9 '17 250w

BOUCHIER, EDMUND SPENSER. Sardinia in ancient times. *$1.75 (4c) Longmans 937.9 17-23952

Sardinia merits attention, the author says, "alike for the primitive civilization of which the architectural and artistic remains are numerous and varied, for the flourishing Phœnician colonies which fringed the southern and western shores during several centuries, and for the proof here given of the stimulating and consolidating effect of Roman rule even amidst unpromising surroundings." His account is carried down to the year 600, with chapters devoted to: The prehistoric age; Legendary history; The Carthaginian supremacy; Natural products and commerce; The republican province; Carales; The early empire; The chief cities of Sardinia; The later empire; Architecture and the arts; Religion.

"Mr Bouchier has essayed the difficult task of writing a technical work in a popular style. The scholar will long for more critical apparatus, the layman will be bewildered by scientific details. Still both will find much that is worth while and valuable." J. J. V.

+ Am Hist R 23:203 O '17 400w

Ath p419 Ag '17 40w

Cath World 105:830 S '17 100w

"Mr Bouchier admits the insufficiency of materials, so far, for any complete history, but he does succeed in giving a fairly connected idea of the fortunes of the island and its people in rough outline."

+ Nation 105:267 S 6 '17 250w

"Mr Bouchier is doing useful work in writing monographs on the Roman provinces. After dealing with Spain and Syria, he has now summarized all that is known of ancient Sardinia."

+ Spec 118:733 Je 30 '17 110w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p206 My 3 '17 500w

BOULTING, WILLIAM. Giordano Bruno; his life, thought, and martyrdom. *$3.75 Dutton 17-13237

"It is not an exaggeration to say that in the writings of Giordano Bruno, one of the most amazingly fertile of thinkers, are to be found the germs of all subsequent vital philosophic

BOULTING, WILLIAM—Continued
 thought. . . [In this biography] there are chapters that deal with his birth and parentage, with his boyhood, and with his monastic life in the south; there is a satisfactory account of his early reading (in the classics, in the scholastics, in the Neo-Platonists), and in the writings of contemporary thinkers) and of his first wanderings, which were an inevitable consequence of that reading; a chapter is devoted to an analysis of the budding philosophy of his early works; the renewed wanderings are recounted; the seven books printed in London are explained; the further travels are retold; the final books are outlined; and then the trial and death of the restless and daring thinker are described."—Am Hist R

"Notable is this book, not only because of its subject, but also because unmistakably its preparation and writing have been a work of solicitude of the heart as well as solicitude of the mind. The book is admirable both in its plan and in its execution. The usefulness of the book would have been greatly increased had it been provided with a critical bibliography of the literature relating to Bruno." E: M. Hulme

+ — Am Hist R 23:376 Ja '18 900w

"The volume contains a useful analysis of Bruno's principal writings."

+ Ath p483 O '16 100w

Boston Transcript p10 O 13 '17 880w

"Though we believe that Bruno's philosophy has never before been so well interpreted, so popularized, in English as by Mr Boulting, it is the excellence of the portrait of the man himself which distinguishes this biography."

+ — N Y Times 23:5 Ja 6 '18 950w

Spec 117:sup605 N 18 '16 1850w

"In our judgment Dr Boulting's scholarship is scarcely equal to the task he has undertaken. He is laborious, painstaking, widely read in the literature both ancient and modern which is germane to his subject, and he is inspired with a genuine though somewhat wayward enthusiasm for it; but alike in his appreciation of Bruno's thought and in his presentation of its relations to the thought of other thinkers, both before and after, he seems to us to be wanting in the 'judicium' and the restraint of the true scholar."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p481 O 12 '16 1700w

BOURNE, RANDOLPH SILLIMAN. Education and living. *$1.25 (3c) Century 370:1
17-13424

Brief papers reprinted from the New Republic. Mr Bourne is author of a work on "The Gary schools." He is also one of those disciples of John Dewey who are engaged in spreading the Dewey ideals of education thruout the land. They view education, not as a preparation for life, but as identical with living. Among the subjects under discussion are: Education and living; The self-conscious school; The wasted years; Puzzle—education; Learning out of school; Education in taste; Universal service and education; The schools from the outside; What is experimental education? Communities for children; Really public schools.

+ A L A Bk 13:427 Jl '17

Cleveland p108 S '17 30w

"The fairest, the most impartial, description of the numerous educational experiments now making in America. His marshalling of them is impressive; his review of them, concise, lucid, constructive. One may therefore assert that 'Education and living' is the best handbook for teachers that has thus far appeared. The only serious fault to be found with this book is that it is either too comprehensively titled or too exclusive in confining itself almost entirely to the grammar and the high schools. Furthermore, the author is too brief and cursory in his treatment of the colleges." Bayard Boyesen

+ — Dial 63:156 Ag 30 '17 1000w

+ Ind 91:108 Jl 21 '17 100w

R of Rs 56:440 O '17 40w

"Mr Bourne has made some searching analyses of our imperfect education system. But he has allowed himself to echo many innuendoes neither convincing nor entirely pertinent."

+ — Springfd Republican p6 O 22 '17 800w

BOUTROUX, ÉMILE. Contingency of the laws of nature; tr. by Fred Rothwell. *$1.50
Open ct.

"This essay was presented as a thesis for a doctor's degree to the Sorbonne by its author in 1874. Nearly fifty years have passed, and now it is brought into English with a special preface by the author. The two leading thoughts of the work may be stated in the language of its author. 'The first is that philosophy should not confine itself to going over and over again the philosophical conceptions offered us by the systems of our predecessors with the object of defining and combining them in more or less novel fashion; a thing that happens too frequently in the case of German philosophers.' Philosophy, he holds, should keep itself in touch with the realities of nature and life; it should be grounded on the sciences. So he has sought to replace a philosophy essentially conceptual by one moulded upon reality. Secondly, to his mind all systems can be divided among three types, materialistic, idealistic and dualistic. He says: 'These three points of view have this in common: they force us to regard as a chain of necessity, rendering illusory all life and liberty.'"—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 25 '17 430w

"As long as M. Boutroux criticizes the assumption of an ultimate mechanical explanation of phenomena he is contributing to our understanding of experience. When he substitutes rather arbitrarily another ultimate he makes his argument lose most of its point." J. R. K.

+ — Int J Ethics 28:294 Ja '18 310w

"This book abounds in shrewd insights and in keen criticisms of the half-baked monistic philosophy which underlies current popular science." M. R. C.

+ — New Repub 13:191 D 15 '17 1200w

BOWEN, MARJORIE, pseud. (MRS GABRIELLE MARGARET [CAMPBELL] COSTANZO). William, by the grace of God. 2d ed *$1.50 Dutton 18-83

"A study of the rising of the Netherlands against Philip II of Spain. The siege and relief of Leyden, and the assassination of William of Nassau, are prominent episodes; and there are glimpses of the massacre of St Bartholomew and the death of Coligny."—Ath

"Tedious and lacking in 'go.' The Spanish governor of the Netherlands was Luis de Requesens, not 'Resquesens.'"

+ — Ath p179 O '16 80w

"Whatever her faults of taste, this writer shows a power of projecting character which is rare among her fellow-workmen in this field."

+ — Nation 105:487 N 1 '17 300w

"One cannot quite escape the feeling that the brave William, the cunning Philip, have been taken out of archives, dusted off, and dressed up into fiction, the former in white, the latter in black. But aside from this common failing of historical novels, 'William, by the grace of God' is a book of more than average veracity and vividness."

+ — New Repub 13:sup16 N 17 '17 150w

"A picture of the times and an historical narrative rather than a novel."

N Y Times 22:388 O 7 '17 260w

"The narrative is given frankly in the form of a romance, not a history. The author has already treated several historical personages by this method and is unusually successful in recreating the atmosphere of past times."

+ R of Rs 56:550 N '17 50w

"An admirable novel."

+ Spec 117:773 D 16 '16 10w

BOWER, B. M., pseud. (BERTHA MUZZY SINCLAIR) (MRS BERTRAND WILLIAM SINCLAIR). Lookout man. il *$1.35 (1½c) Little 17-2305

"A worse than foolish escapade in the environs of Los Angeles, and Jack Corey suddenly finds himself in danger of arrest for manslaughter. His flight to Feather River canyon in northern California follows. He secures the position of 'lookout man' on the summit of Mount Hough, and here, in the little house of glass, the 'observatory' for forest fires . . . he starts upon a new life. . . . Then fate . . . sends Marion Rose to him. Her coming to the Toll house had been almost as sudden, as had been his to the great peak towering above it. Only in her case the haste was legitimate. An unexpected opportunity to share with friends a certain mining claim, which is of course to bring wealth to them all. . . . She and Jack become 'comrades.' And indeed Marion proves herself a real one, when the 'lookout man's' identity being discovered, a peculiar complication develops."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 14:62 N '17
Boston Transcript p6 Ag 22 '17 350w
Cleveland p103 S '17 50w

"A pleasant, entertaining little story."
+ N Y Times 22:318 Ag 26 '17 350w

BOWER, B. M., pseud. (BERTHA MUZZY SINCLAIR) (MRS BERTRAND WILLIAM SINCLAIR). Starr, of the desert. il *$1.35 (2c) Little 17-13075

It was her father who sent Helen May down into the desert to herd goats. He was worried about Helen May's health and all neglectful of his own. The doctor had ordered a change of climate and out-of-door life for the girl, and the father, buying a relinquished claim in New Mexico, made arrangements to carry out the doctor's orders. Then he died, and Helen May and her young brother, Vic, feel that his wishes must be complied with. They know nothing of desert life and less of goats, but they find a good friend in Starr. Starr is something of a mystery for a time. He is really a secret service man engaged in heading off a Mexican revolution. Circumstances make it appear to him that Helen May is involved in revolutionary plots, but this mistake, fortunately, is easily explained.

A L A Bkl 13:452 Jl '17
+ Boston Transcript p6 My 9 '17 460w
"A thrilling tale."
Ind 90:474 Je 9 '17 40w

"The machinery of the narrative creaks a bit at times, but the style is so far superior to that of the average performance in this kind that one may willingly consent to be fooled in the matter of plot."

+ Nation 105:246 S 6 '17 350w
+ N Y Times 22:190 My 13 '17 310w

BOWERS, EDWIN FREDERICK. Bathing for health; a simple way to physical fitness. *$1 (4c) Clode, E. J. 613 17-8215

The bath as a preventive and as a curative agent is the subject of this book. Contents: Civilization and the bath; Bathing and morality; Why man needs the bath; The bath tub route to health; Baths as "big medicine"; Cold baths and common sense; Bathing for beauty; Smoothing ragged nerve edges; Sea and surf bathing; Fomentations, cold compresses and wet packs; "Hydrotherapy"; Sunstroke, icy tubs and heat prostration; Turkish and Russian operations, etc.

St Louis 15:173 Je '17 10w
"Neither faddish nor extreme."
+ St Louis 15:410 N '17 40w

BOWERS, R. S. Drawing and design for craftsmen. (Handcraft library) il *$2 McKay 740 A17-1322

The chapters of this book are so arranged as to form a series of consecutive lessons, beginning with a treatment of the simple principles of drawing and working up gradually to the application of principles in practical design for woodwork, glazing, stenciling, metalwork, etc. The illustrations, of which there are over 700, "have been prepared and selected with a view not only of elucidating elementary principles, but of providing a storehouse of motifs, suggestions, styles, and treatments of which the craftsman will be glad to avail himself."

+ A L A Bkl 14:12 O '17
+ Ath p430 S '16 70w

"His text abounds with practical hints and suggestions which should prove very helpful to the student."

+ Int Studio 60:53 N '16 160w
Pratt p30 O '17 20w

"The book would be suitable for self instruction, would also offer suggestions to teachers of drawing and design."

+ Quar List New Tech Bks Jl '17 50w

BOWERS, R. S., and others. Furniture making. (Handcraft library) il *$2 McKay 684 (Eng ed 16-10852)

This book gives "designs, working drawings, and complete details of 170 pieces of furniture, with practical information on their construction." It is a book for the advanced workman, as it does not concern itself with the elementary processes of woodworking. These will be treated in a later volume of the series. There are over 1,000 illustrations.

+ Quar List New Tech Bks Jl '17 50w

BOWIE, WALTER RUSSELL. Master of the Hill; a biography of John Meigs. il *$3 (3½c) Dodd 17-28879

The biography of a schoolmaster. John Meigs was for thirty-five years head-master of the Hill school in Pottstown, Pennsylvania. His life story is here written by one who was associated with him first as a pupil and later as one of the teachers in the school. Contents: Schoolmaster and man; John Meigs' ancestry, and his antecedents at the Hill; Boyhood and youth; The beginning of the venture; Lights and shadows; Ideals for the school; The making of men; The life within; Final achievements and a finished life; Victory.

+ A L A Bkl 14:127 Ja '18
Boston Transcript p7 N 10 '17 380w

"The author has succeeded in making us glad that a man like John Meigs lived among us, and that he lives in this book. Doubtless this is in part due to the fact that Bowie is himself an old Hill boy and former Hill master as well, and brought to his task not only the authority of personal knowledge, but the ability to write well."

+ Nation 105:667 D 13 '17 1000w

"It is enough for us to say here that this book, written by one who was first his pupil and afterwards a teacher in his school is pervaded by his spirit of absolute sincerity. It is appreciative, warmly affectionate, even at times eloquently enthusiastic, but it is not indiscriminating."

+ Outlook 118:31 Ja 2 '18 140w

BOWMAN, ISAIAH. Andes of southern Peru; geographical reconnaissance along the seventy-third meridian. il *$3 (3c) Pub. for the Am. geographical soc. of N.Y. by Holt 558 17-1921

This work by the director of the American geographical society, is an outgrowth of the Yale Peruvian expedition of 1911, under the direction of Hiram Bingham. The author's part in the expedition was the mapping of the country between Abancay and the Pacific, a stretch of two hundred miles. The book is divided into two parts. The first, Human geography, is devoted to native life, economic products, climate, etc.; the second to Physiography of the Peruvian Andes. There are seven topographic maps and many diagrams in addition to the noteworthy illustrations from photographs.

BOWMAN, ISAIAH—Continued

+ A L A Bkl 13:294 Ap '17

"The originality of thought and content, the brilliancy of style, the many original maps and diagrams, the wonderfully beautiful half-tone illustrations, all combine to make this work a noteworthy contribution to geographic science and to our knowledge of Peru." G. B. Roorbach

+ Ann Am Acad 73:233 S '17 250w

"Mainly scientific in its plan and purpose, this study of the mid-southern section of Peru makes a considerable appeal to general interests on account of the information it gives regarding the inhabitants of that region."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 24 '17 330w

"While a physical geographer might be better equipped to make use of the valuable information collected in this book, there are many pages interesting to the casual reader."

+ Ind 90:257 My 5 '17 50w

"Mr Bowman has made repeated journeys in South America, of which, unfortunately, no sufficient account is given in the volume before us, though they have deservedly brought him a gold medal from the Geographical society of Paris. His explorations have thrown much new light on the Andes, long known but never so well described as in his book. A series of contoured maps by K. Hendricksen, topographer of the expedition, are cartographic oases in an uncharted desert."

+ Nation 105:203 Ag 23 '17 1150w

+ N Y Times 22:273 Jl 22 '17 110w

R of Rs 55:555 My '17 130w

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Jl 8 '17 200w

BOWMAN, JAMES CLOYD, ed. Promise of country life. *$1 Heath 808 16-12269

"The promise of country life,' is the attractive title of a book of descriptions and narrations to be used as models in an agricultural course in English. . . . The work has been carefully planned. The author says in his preface: 'The first group of selections has to do with the type of individual who is most at home in the country. The second treats of the pleasures which may be found in solitude; the third shows how various types of men have found enjoyment in a rural environment; the fourth contrasts life in the city with life in the country; still another describes man's mastery over the crops of the fields and domestic animals.' . . . The selections have been chosen from such well-known writers as John Burroughs, Hamlin Garland, James Lane Allen, Corra Harris, Guy de Maupassant, and Lyoff N. Tolstol."—School R

"Good for general reading and for high-school libraries that would not have many of the authors represented."

+ A L A Bkl 13:255 Mr '17

"A book of this sort may well exercise a real influence in opening the eyes of young people to the real opportunities and genuine charm of country life."

+ Educ R 54:208 S '17 50w

+ Ind 87:232 Ag 14 '16 40w

"In his effort to appeal to farm boys, Mr Bowman has happily broadened his appeal to American boys and girls. The selections, without being erudite, are full of the call of the woods and the by-lanes and the out-of-doors."

+ School R 25:68 Ja '17 350w

Reviewed by E. F. Geyer and R. L. Lyman

+ School R 25:610 O '17 270w

"In schools and on the country book shelf it is worthy of permanent place." H. W. P.

+ Survey 38:175 My 19 '17 110w

BOWSER, THEKLA. Britain's civilian volunteers. il *$1.50 Moffat 361 17-14033

"Some eight years ago there was started in England an organization known for short as the V. A. D. Now at the time, members of the Volunteer aid detachments who took seriously their training in hospital work and canteen service were looked on with mild amusement. But when August, 1914, came there was the nucleus of that tremendous body of workers on whom the Red cross and the medical staff have depended and without whom their work could not have been done. . . . The book is an unadorned account of the many sorts of work done in France, Belgium and Great Britain by these volunteer workers, men and women."—Ind

A L A Bkl 14:52 N '17

+ Cleveland p118 N '17 40w

"Some such methods will surely develop here, in making practical the immense and as yet unwholly regulated force of our National league for woman's service and other civilian organizations. . . . The pages have the intense interest that belongs to the story of great endeavor."

+ Ind 90:436 Je 2 '17 350w

Pittsburgh 22:68 O '17 40w

Pratt p38 O '17 30w

Wis Lib Bul 13:220 Jl '17 50w

BOYAJIAN, ZABELLE C., comp. Armenian legends and poems. il *$8 Dutton (*21s Dent, London) 891.54

"Miss Boyajian has gathered examples of genuine Armenian art and literature, to show the world what contributions the horribly persecuted people of that country have made for its enrichment. Lord Bryce prefaces the work with a brief encomium of their poetry and painting, which he rightly says is less known than it deserves to be. This hint at its value is supplemented by a somewhat extended chapter by Aram Raffi on the epics, folk-songs, and medieval poetry of Armenia. Miss Boyajian, the daughter of an Armenian clergyman formerly British vice consul at Diarbekir and herself an artist of fine abilities, furnishes a dozen illustrations reproduced in soft and exquisite colors."—Boston Transcript

+ Ath p541 N '16 100w

"Examples of folk-songs, medieval poems and lyrics by various nineteenth century authors are included, some of them from Alice Stone Blackwell's versions. . . . Most of the translations are made by Miss Boyajian, who dedicates the volume to 'The undying spirit of Armenia,' and who devotes all the profits from its sale to the cause of her countrymen. It is a worthy cause and magnificently upheld."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 7 '17 650w

+ Int Studio 61:99 Ap '17 280w

+ Sat R 122:sup5 D 9 '16 530w

Spec 117:sup684 D 2 '16 210w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p148 My 29 '17 1400w

BOYD, ERNEST AUGUSTUS. Contemporary drama of Ireland. *$1.25 (2½c) Little $22 17-7566

This is one of the first volumes to be issued in the Contemporary drama series, edited by Richard Burton. The aim of the series is to give in separate volumes an account of the contemporary drama in various countries. In this volume, devoted to Irish drama, the dramatic movement is shown to be related not only to the literary revival in Ireland, but also to the general revival of interest in the theatre which stirred the later nineteenth century. There are chapters on: The Irish literary theatre; Edward Martyn; The beginnings of the Irish national theatre; William Butler Yeats; The impulse to folk drama; J. M. Synge and Padraic Colum; Peasant comedy; Lady Gregory and William Boyle; Later playwrights; The Ulster literary theatre; Summary and conclusion. A bibliography is given in an appendix.

"Of more use to study clubs than to the casual reader. Has a good bibliography with dates, and a full index."

+ A L A Bkl 13:340 My '17

"The only thing that is lacking in this little book is the element of style. To write without eloquence about such masters of the art of eloquence as Lord Dunsany, John M. Synge, and William Butler Yeats is to cheat the reader of the better half of criticism." Clayton Hamilton

+ — Bookm 45:193 Ap '17 300w
Boston Transcript p9 F 21 '17 700w
 + Dial 62:484 My 31 '17 370w

"In his review of Yeats's works Mr Boyd is eulogist and apologist rather than critic, but he writes with a keen appreciation of his indisputable poetic gifts. In a kindly but just and searching criticism of Lady Gregory's plays, Mr Boyd, while fully recognizing the value of her zeal and ability to the cause which she has championed, rightly concludes that the majority of them are not important contributions to literary drama or in harmony with the aims of a national theatre." J. R. Towse

+ Nation 105:546 N 15 '17 1000w

"Mr Boyd's book, for all that, makes a valuable guide to the American or English reader, whose standards and preconceptions are always voiced in the judgments of the author. One cannot help feeling that importance is being given to things really little, and that Mr Boyd planned a definitive handbook and executed it accordingly."

+ — N Y Times 22:225 Je 10 '17 260w
Pratt p36 O '17 40w

"It is to be regretted that in dealing with such a fascinating topic he cramped himself by a somewhat dry and commonplace style, but even with this handicap the work is of some value for the information it furnishes regarding a noteworthy dramatic movement. As a popular hand-book it fulfills its function satisfactorily."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Mr 12 '17 450w

BRACQ, JEAN CHARLEMAGNE. Provocation of France. *$1.25 Oxford 944.08 16-24205

"Professor Bracq, holding the chair of French literature at Vassar college, has undertaken, in this interesting little volume, to tell in simple language the story of the provocation and aggression to which France has been subjected by the German government in the last half century, and to describe the general dignity, calmness, and good faith with which the French republic has met this course on the part of Germany. . . . Professor Bracq is himself in close sympathy with the pacifist movement in France, of which the Baron d'Estournelles has been the leader."—N Y Times

"By the author of 'France under the republic' (A L A Catalog 1904-1911). . . . From the French point of view, of course, but temperate and supplied with reference to sources."

+ A L A Bkl 13:393 Je '17

"Professor Bracq writes temperately of Germany's treatment of his country, but nevertheless with tense feeling."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 24 '17 140w

"There is no doubt of the enthusiasm and patriotism of Dr Bracq, but it is a question whether he might not have served his end better had he observed more reticence of feeling and precision of phrasing."

+ — Cath World 105:696 Ag '17 150w
 + Cleveland p102 S '17 40w
 + Ind 90:382 My 26 '17 50w

"For all the facts he cites he gives careful reference to his sources, and any student can, if he wish, verify the author's statements. Professor Bracq has given in a couple of hundred pages an excellent summary of the history of the last half century."

+ N Y Times 22:10 Ja 14 '17 240w

"Prof. Bracq's book, though written from the French point of view, may be recommended to those who wish to know historical facts."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Mr 1 '17 450w

BRADFORD, GAMALIEL. Naturalist of souls; studies in psychography. *$2.50 (4c) Dodd 804 17-24248

Mr Bradford gets the title for his book from Sainte-Beuve's description of himself: "I am a naturalist of souls." "He discusses in the first chapter the psychographic method in the writing of biography, endeavors to define what it is and what it is not, considers the material to be used and the manner of using it, and defines psychography briefly as 'the condensed, essential, artistic presentation of character.' It differs, he explains, from ordinary biography in that it discards the chronological method of treating its subject's life and uses the material facts as a means of illuminating the inner life." (N Y Times) Contents: Psychography; The poetry of Donne; A pessimist poet (Leopardi); Anthony Trollope; An odd sort of popular book (Burton's "Anatomy of melancholy"); Alexander Dumas; The novel two thousand years ago; A great English portrait-painter (Hyde, earl of Clarendon); Letters of a Roman gentleman (Pliny, the younger); Ovid among the Goths; Portrait of a saint (Francis of Sales). The author states that only the last three portraits "are elaborate specimens of psychography working consciously."

"Using the same delightful method which made his 'Portraits of women' a joy to readers of discriminating taste, Mr Bradford analyzes and reveals further personality."

+ A L A Bkl 14:85 D '17

Boston Transcript p7 S 12 '17 850w

"Delightful studies with a strong appeal to every thoughtful reader."

+ Cath World 106:540 Ja '18 270w

"Mr Bradford writes the sort of essay that is born of enthusiasm and affection. He is a humble and not unsuccessful follower of the great unconscious psychographers, Tacitus, Saint Simon, Sainte-Beuve, and, though he is not mentioned as such, R. L. S."

+ Dial 63:459 N 8 '17 350w

"As psychographic studies they are arranged with a sort of crescendo effect. . . . Mr Bradford's exposition of his developed method of writing biographical studies throws light upon and adds interest to the long series of such portraits he has published, first in the Atlantic Monthly and afterward in book form."

N Y Times 22:356 S 23 '17 670w

Pittsburgh 22:741 N '17 60w

BRADLEE, FRANCIS B. C. Eastern railroad. il *$2 Essex inst. 385 17-21687

"Much local history that is of more than local interest is to be found in 'The Eastern railroad: a historical account of early railroading in eastern New England' by Francis B. C. Bradlee. The author has not merely collected the details of the successive stages of financing and organization through which the Eastern railroad passed between 1836 and 1884, when it was merged with its old rival, the Boston and Maine. He gives these necessary facts both in the text and in several tables in the appendix. But he also is at pains to picture the conditions of early railroading and to show the impression, if one may call it such, that the railroad made upon the community at various periods."—Springf'd Republican

"The illustrations of the old-time locomotives and tickets add much to the attractiveness of the book." J. B. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 7 '17 630w

"This volume makes no pretense at being a formal history, and may perhaps be described as a collection of interesting notes. Many amusing incidents are to be found in Mr Bradlee's pages, and these throw light on manners of the past quite as much as on railroading."

+ Springf'd Republican p13 Je 17 '17 800w

BRADLEY, ALICE. Candy cook book. il *$1 (2½c) Little 641.5 17-13104

A preliminary discussion of candy ingredients and necessary equipment is followed by recipes for home-made candies, arranged in chapters as follows: Uncooked candies; Assorted chocolates; Fudges; Fondant candies; Caramels and nougatines; Pulled candies; Hard candies; Glacés and pulled flowers; Crystallized fruits; Fruit and gelatine candies; Dried fruits and nuts; Meringues and macaroons; Popcorn candies; Decorated candies and cakes; Favors.

BRADLEY, ALICE—Continued

"Discusses the food value of candy and gives sources of materials. Well illustrated."

+ A L A Bkl 13:432 Jl '17

+ Pratt p24 O '17 30w

"The work is compiled with the care of an expert cookery book and appears to be reliable in all respects."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 29 '17 170w

BRADLEY, WILLIAM ASPENWALL. Garlands and wayfarings. *$1.50 Mosher 811 17-25839

"William Aspenwall Bradley has composed extremely artistic verse in 'Garlands and wayfarings.' His muse carries him everywhere, from a literary consideration to Jean Moreas and appreciations of nature, to a tribute to Jane Addams and some graphic pictures of sunset on the Connecticut. The various moods mirrored in the verses, however, are all those of a lover of beauty."—Springf'd Republican

"His is at all times a courteous and gracious muse, vivid, clear and sweet. She deems it by far a more attractive appearance to be dressed in a linen suit with exquisite trimmings than in the sinuous silk of her modern sisters, suggestive and alluring in every movement. No, in 'Garlands and wayfarings' are the fruits of a ripe culture, a love of beauty and art for their own sake, an idyllic sensibility to nature and a classic sympathy with the spirit of life." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 31 '17 1000w

"His work is always that of a poet to whom the English language has revealed its secret of rich, lyrical expressiveness."

+ — Springf'd Republican p13 D 16 '17 370w

BRADLEY, WILLIAM ASPENWALL. Old Christmas, and other Kentucky tales in verse. *$1.25 Houghton 811 17-25830

Some four years ago, Mr Bradley, a Connecticut author, contracted "mountain fever" while exploring the Kentucky Cumberlandlands and other parts of the southern Appalachian system, and remained there nearly six months, getting acquainted with "the life and character of the mountain people." This volume, containing seventeen poems, is the result. "The stories," says the author, "which I have attempted to tell are in no sense offered as generally representative of mountain life. . . . All I have tried to do is to invest each story with as much as possible of the peculiar color and atmosphere of mountain life." (Preface)

+ A L A Bkl 11:119 Ja '18

"A reading of these Kentucky tales has made me think of the nearness in his accomplishment of an indigenous Americanism, racy, humorous, pathetic, rich in local color, and characterization, more like Mark Twain than anything we have had in American verse." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 27 '17 1700w

"It cannot be pretended that this is a poetry of a high order; but Mr Bradley, in adapting to his use the life of the Kentucky mountain-folk, has hit upon extremely interesting material; he has given us some excellent stories, told in the folk-language, with many quaintnesses of idiom, and, on the whole, with the simplicity and economy that makes for effect." Conrad Aiken

+ — Dial 63:454 N 8 '17 180w

"It is an interesting book, a contribution to our knowledge of our fellow citizens as well as a piece of creative writing. Mr Bradley makes his readers know the Cumberlandlands better than Mr Masters made them know Spoon River—and like them infinitely better."

+ Lit D 55:36 N 17 '17 700w

"The interest and the value of the book lie, as do that of the Russian ethnographical novel, in its folk aspect."

+ N Y Times 23:24 Ja 20 '18 870w

"They are picturesque, and full of color and atmosphere."

R of Rs 57:106 Ja '18 160w

"For the most part he has tried to duplicate in verse the peculiarities of speech and simile that the Kentucky mountaineers use in conversation. Following this plan, he tells their really poetic stories in a truly native vein."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 N 2 '17 330w

BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND. "By the world forgot"; a double romance of the East and the West. il *$1.40 (2c) McClurg 17-25243

On the morning of his wedding day, Derrick Beekman is shanghaied onto a vessel bound for the South seas. The man responsible for the deed is his best friend, George Harnash, who also loves Stephanie Maynard and is loved by her in return. But of this Beekman knows nothing when he comes to his senses in the hold of the "Susquehanna," altho later the words of a dying mate, give him a clue. The steamer is wrecked and Beekman is cast upon an isolated volcanic island, inhabited by the descendants of early Dutch explorers. One of these is Truda, a girl of wondrous beauty who promptly makes him forget the woman he was to have married. An earthquake shatters the island and a tidal wave washes the lovers out to sea, to be rescued by the yacht that the Maynards and the repentant Harnash have sent in search of the missing man.

"As usual Dr Brady's characters stand out boldly for what they are, some of them strong even in their weakness, his drawing of the two principal women actors being a particularly pleasing series of pen pictures."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 5 '17 290w

"Dr Brady kept life at a respectful distance when he wrote his latest book. Thus he has given that part of the public who is avid for novels of adventure an exciting volume."

+ N Y Times 22:465 N 11 '17 330w

BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND. When the sun stood still. il *$1.35 Revell 17-12713

"For the period of his new story Dr Brady has chosen the time when the various tribes of Israel, under the leadership of Joshua, were busily at work conquering the lands and cities of the Canaanites. The story begins when its hero, Dodai, son of Aboah, a prince of the tribe of Benjamin, goes with Salmon of the tribe of Judah as a spy to the city of Jericho. . . . The tale concludes with the conquest of Gibeon. The biblical narrative on which Dr Brady's novel is founded gives abundant opportunity for color and for dramatic effects."—N Y Times

+ Dial 62:74 Jl 19 '17 100w

"The historical setting of this new book by Dr Brady is far enough back to take on the appearance of a beautiful picture, brilliant, oriental, and engrossing. . . . Dr Brady's association with moving-pictures has accentuated his tendency to melodrama, but he is always interesting."

+ — Lit D 54:1857 Je 16 '17 150w

N Y Times 22:218 Je 3 '17 200w

BRAILSFORD, HENRY NOEL. League of nations. *$1.75 Macmillan 341 17-19730

"The volume discusses calmly and dispassionately pretty nearly all the problems which this war has raised. But it is primarily concerned with the scheme for a League of nations associated with Mr Taft to form a guarantee of the peace of the world. Mr Brailsford as he proceeds in the discussion is led to consider 'The problems of nationality,' 'The roads of the East,' 'Sea power,' 'Peace and change,' 'The future of alliances,' 'The economics of peace,' 'America and the League of peace'—in short, to examine pretty nearly the entire political horizon. . . . At the close of the volume are printed two schemes, 'The war settlement' and 'The League of nations,' a plan for the organization of peace."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"This volume is well and thoughtfully written, and the author expresses himself with moderation."

+ Ath p95 F '17 230w

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 6 '17 550w

"Fully to appreciate the wisdom, insight, and dignity of Mr Brailsford's book one should contrast it with the boiling mess of polemical literature which is still being brewed on both sides of the long fighting line. Mr Brailsford insults no one, impugns no one's motives, seeks no merely nationalistic interpretation of this war, and does not attempt to assume the rôle of supreme judge between the nations." W. E. Weyl

+ Dial 63:198 S 13 '17 850w

"His review of world-politics is masterly. . . . His book is certainly an excellent example of sane and persuasive political propaganda. It is more readable than a treatise and less ephemeral than a 'war book.' . . . Mr Brailsford has shown in this book that the best tradition of English political thinking has not been altogether forgotten in the fog of emotionalism which the war has produced." C. D. Burns

+ Int J Ethics 27:525 JI '17 950w

"It is manifestly impossible to summarize his book or to criticise in detail statements and views beside which stand queries. Time and again, however, the reviewer has found himself wondering how the author could refer to Germany with such mildness and consideration. . . . There is a great deal to think of in this volume—it is by no means negligible—when one has once forced oneself to ignore the absence of generous and righteous wrath and of a disposition not to take the hand from the plough till the furrow is done."

+ Nation 105:407 O 11 '17 800w

"Mr Brailsford's book stresses much more than does Mr Harris's the importance to Europe, even Europe's great need, of America's help in the organization of a league of nations. But he does not show a tithe of Mr Harris's understanding of the difficulties that lie in the way of our entering that league, nor does he show understanding of the procedure by which such a national action would have to be accomplished. His mistake is the same as that which so many publicists in Europe make over and over again—the mistake of thinking that, since the president of the United States has large powers, he must be able to do as he likes without regard to what may be the opinions and wishes of the people. . . . But that mishap at the beginning of his work does not in the least lessen the value of his very able discussion of the general subject."

+ N Y Times 22:269 JI 22 '17 470w

Pittsburgh 22:701 O '17 40w

+ St Louis 15:358 O '17 50w

"One who writes in form so reasonably earns consideration. He sees the weak points of his scheme and discusses them frankly. . . . We are not insensible to the skill and sincerity of Mr Brailsford's appeal, but we cannot see that there is any such dilemma as that on which he tries to impale us."

Spec 118:271 Mr 3 '17 1800w

"Futurity is dark for him, as for most candid inquirers. The value of the book is that it will enlarge the horizon of most readers and will convince them that the formation of a League of nations is not so simple a matter, its consequences are not so clear, as its advocates often assume."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p75 F 15 '17 1050w

BRAINERD, ELEANOR (HOYT) (MRS CHARLES CHISHOLM BRAINERD). How could you, Jean? *$1.35 (1½c) Doubleday 17-28076

Jean Mackaye, when she lost her money, not only could, but did take a position to do general housework, because cooking was the thing about which she knew the most. She went to live with the Bonners, two "elderly Infants," who badly needed a caretaker. Mr Bonner specialized on moths, while Mrs Bonner was oblivious to most things except the fauna, flora and folk lore of the Faroe Islands. How Jean mothered the Bonners in the city and went with them to their farm on the Connecticut river, how well-to-do Teddy Burton fell in love with Jean at first sight, and in order to make her acquaintance, answered the Bonner's advertisement for a man of all work on the farm, and what came of it all is pleasantly told by Mrs Brainerd.

"Light, will be popular."

+ A L A Bkl 14:130 Ja '18

+ Cleveland p132 D '17 60w

"The tale moves so slowly that it seems rather the material for a short story than for a book of 337 pages. It shows, however, Mrs Brainerd's known knack for light fiction."

+ N Y Times 22:500 N 25 '17 220w

Reviewed by Joseph Mosher

+ Pub W 92:1373 O 20 '17 550w

BRAITHWAITE, WILLIAM STANLEY BEAUMONT, comp. Anthology of magazine verse for 1916, and year book of American poetry. $1.50 Gomme 811.08

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"A valuable year book for the small library."

+ A L A Ekl 13:256 Mr '17

Cath World 104:831 Mr '17 550w

"Whether through inability or unwillingness, Mr Braithwaite seems no nearer learning that there can be little excuse for an anthology which does not select. . . . This year's volume, like last year's, is for the most part filled with the jog-trot of mediocrity. One must wade through pages and pages of mawkishness, dulness, artificiality, and utter emptiness to come upon the simple dignity of Mr Fletcher's 'Lincoln' (marred by a faintly perfumed close), or the subdued, colloquial tenderness of Mr Frost's 'Homestretch,' or the sinister pattern of 'The hill-wife,' or Miss Lowell's delicately imagined 'City of falling leaves.' . . . There can be no question that had Mr Braithwaite composed his anthology from books, instead of from magazines, it could have been one thousand per cent better. . . . It very seriously misrepresents—or, rather, hardly represents at all—the true state of poetry in America to-day." Conrad Aiken

+ Dial 62:179 Mr 8 '17 3700w

+ Ind 80:362 F 26 '17 130w

"For a book of avowedly temporary interest, for which the literary horizon is quite as significant as the zenith, I think of no one who could hold the balance between age and novelty, between tradition and adventure, more impartially than Mr Braithwaite." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 105:596 N 29 '17 450w

"This is the fourth collection of American poetry which Mr Braithwaite has given us. In 1913 he found the current of what he calls 'distinctive' poetry running most strongly in the Smart Set. In 1914 the Smart Set, Bellman, and Forum marked an equal wave, while in 1915 the tide left all these high and dry and buried Poetry fathoms deep. This year we learn that 'the radical influence of Poetry . . . has waned,' and it is the Poetry Review of America to which the capricious current turns."

+ N Y Times 22:117 Ap 1 '17 550w

"Decidedly the best of the series of his anthologies, or year-books, of American poetry so far published."

+ R of Rs 55:437 Ap '17 300w

"The tireless optimism of William Stanley Braithwaite persists as one of the disquieting literary phenomena of the times. It was the dominating note in his 'Anthology of magazine verse and year-book of American poetry' last year and the year before; it is even more rampantly dominant in the anthology for 1916. . . . Mr Braithwaite is not responsible for the material he has to work with; undoubtedly he is responsible for what he thinks of it. It is therefore not Mr Braithwaite's fault that his anthology can scarcely compare with such a work as the garnerings of 'Georgian poetry,' of which two volumes have appeared in England within the last five years."

+ Spring'd Republican p15 F 25 '17 600w

BRAITHWAITE, WILLIAM STANLEY BEAUMONT. Poetic year for 1916; a critical anthology. *$2 Small 821 17-26654

"The substance of the chapters in this book appeared in the columns of the Boston Evening Transcript, in a series of articles called 'The lutanists of midsummer,' and in the poetry reviews, which Mr Braithwaite contributed during 1916, to that paper." (Acknowledgments) The book lacks an index, but the poets considered in each chapter are named in the table of contents.

"It makes a helpful supplement to the year's 'Anthology of magazine verse.'"
+ A L A Bkl 14:14 O '17

"For the last five years the largest part of Mr Braithwaite's work has been criticism. . . . A too excessive appreciation has been the charge oftenest brought against his estimate of poets. . . . In this book, Mr Braithwaite comes nearer than he ever has before to explaining to the public his ideals for American poetry and his personal attitude toward his work." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 4 '17 1200w

"Though we must give credit to Mr Braithwaite for his labors, and even wonder at his industry, it is in the character of a collector and not that of a critic that his real value consists. A man may have sufficient taste—though Mr Braithwaite's is by no means impeccable—to make a creditable collection of poems, and yet be incompetent to talk well about them; and hence a bare presentation of his favorites is much to be preferred to this latest method, where the poems are drowned in a sea of talk. For it is talk of the most insufferable sort, namely, that of a literary teaparty—emotional, vague, diffuse, grandiloquent, pompously platitudinous."

— Cath World 106:125 O '17 880w

"At the very centre of his attitude toward poetry is the express belief that poetry is a sort of supernaturalism. . . . In his present book, therefore, Mr Braithwaite puts a clear emotional emphasis on work which is characteristically sentimental. Consequently, such poets as are in the main realists, implicitly critical or analytical of life, or at the most neutrally receptive, are somewhat coolly entertained. . . . Clearly, such an attitude reveals in Mr Braithwaite a very decided intellectual limitation. Must poetry be all marshmallows and tears? . . . The trouble with this book is at bottom, that while it has a rather intriguing appearance of being judicial, it is really, under the mask, highly idiosyncratic." Conrad Aiken

— Dial 63:202 S 13 '17 1300w

"Mr Braithwaite, through himself or his proxies, says all manner of things, including some very good things. . . . We all know that Mr Braithwaite keeps his praise in a 'tank,' and his drafts on that reservoir in the present volume are of characteristic liberality. As for standard English, he seems definitely to have severed his relationship with that archaism." O. W. Pirkins

+ — Nation 105:596 N 29 '17 400w

"If he had called it an appreciative, not a critical, anthology no one could have quarreled with him. But the idea of separation, of a division between black and white, at least, is implicit in the word 'criticism,' and of such separation there is little trace in Mr Braithwaite's purring periods."

+ N Y Times 22:477 N 18 '17 900w

"Among the especially pleasing chapters are 'The idol-breakers,' a discussion of free verse; 'Clotho, Lachesis, Atropos & Co.,' an appreciation of Edwin Arlington Robinson, and 'Magic casements,' which comments upon the poetry of Walter de la Mare, Lizette Woodworth Reese and Bliss Carman."

+ R of Rs 56:217 Ag '17 230w

BRANDES, GEORGE MORRIS COHEN. World at war; tr. by Catherine D. Groth. *$2 (2½c) Macmillan 940.91 17-13334

A collection of essays written before and during the war. The first is Foreboding, written in 1881, just as Bismarck's state-socialistic ideas were being put into practice. "State-socialism, deprived of the fundamental principles of fraternity and self-government, is by the very nature of things a liberty-sapping doctrine," wrote Brandes. Other papers written before the war are: The death of Kaiser Friedrich—1888—the death of the real German spirit; England and Germany—1905—the probability of war between them; German patriotism—1913—the glorification of war. Among those written after the outbreak of war are: The fundamental causes of the world war—1914; Different points of view on the war—1914; The great era—1915; Will this be the last war?—1915; The praise of war—1915; Protectors of small nations—1915; Ideals or politics—1916. Mr Brandes writes thruout as a neutral, and his open letter to M. Georges Clemenceau, reprinted in the volume, is a defense of Denmark's neutrality.

A L A Bkl 13:442 J1 '17

"This book fails to get anywhere. It reflects the despondency of a brilliant man of the republic of letters who cannot comprehend the meaning of grave questions of the empire of the sword."

— Boston Transcript p6 S 8 '17 270w

Cleveland p118 N '17 60w

"The book is evidence that the expert had better stick to his province. In the interpretation of literature many of us are anxious to hear what Dr Brandes has to say. As a publicist, he is quite frankly third-rate. His book is a rehash of old material and new comment which has no permanent value of any kind." H. J. Laski

— Dial 63:15 Je 28 '17 100w

Ind 90:138 Je 2 '17 260w

"A more disappointing book on the war has scarcely been written. It preaches a doctrinaire pacifism."

— Lit D 55:39 S 15 '17 270w

"In spite of these cosmopolitan ties, or rather because of them, he does not hesitate to deal praise or blame to all of the belligerents with equal vigor, according to his idea of the dictates of justice. He lays down the law like an Old Testament prophet to German militarists as well as to M. Clemenceau and Mr William Archer."

+ Nation 105:374 O 4 '17 240w

"The book was completed before the United States had entered upon the contest, but we can infer what judgment would have been passed upon us by the unqualified statement that in 1898 we made war on Spain in order to secure the markets of Cuba. Of the combatant nations in this war, he credits none with any higher motive."

N Y Times 22:207 My 27 '17 780w

R of Rs 56:214 Ag '17 80w

"Dr Brandes touches with fearlessness and a burning sense of justice upon the various aspects of the war without allowing himself to be biased by any one side." B. D.

+ St Louis 15:313 S '17 30w

"Not all that he says will be acceptable to American readers, but in these days when it is essential for us to understand the war aims of all the belligerents, his book is at least of value in presenting opinion from a fresh point of view. . . . Much of Dr Brandes's reasoning is reversed by the revolution in Russia and the entrance of the United States into the war."

+ — Springfd Republican p6 My 21 '17 800w

"He is not a builder. He analyzes—brilliantly, keenly, cuttinely, yet not unkindly; he does not construct. But it is a relief to read one book on the war which does not propose a final solution of the problem of war. Brandes comes nearest to it when he preaches the gospel of free trade. He persists in looking at the war as a Dane and a Jew naturally looks at the war—detachedly, with a bit of a sob and a bit of a sneer for both sides." L. S. Gannett

+ Survey 38:360 J1 21 '17 650w

BRANFORD, BENCHARA. Janus and Vesta; a study of the world crisis and after. *$2 Stokes 901 (Eng ed 17-17103)

"Mr Branford is well known in the educational world as a divisional inspector of the London county council. . . . His zeal for universal vocational training is the expression of no narrow ideal of 'national efficiency,' but springs from a profound study of the conditions of development of the human spirit. It is, therefore, in complete harmony with his passionate conviction that a revival of university life (including a renaissance of the 'wandering scholar') is one of the most urgent needs of the time. . . . In this connection Mr Branford argues with much force that universities have, during the modern epoch, largely forgotten their catholic mission, and have become, in many insidious ways, organs for the cultivation of national separatism and egotism. As a remedy for this state of things he presses the suggestion of a 'world university,' neutral, as the papacy is neutral, to be the guardian of the common spiritual interests of mankind, both western and eastern."—Nature

Reviewed by F. H. Giddings
Educ R 56:167 F '18 550w

"To one at least it seems a noble book, full of a wise and strong humanity, worthy to be classed with writings to which all men pay homage. Any scientific reader who will start with the chapter on 'Science and occupation' and follow whither the clue leads will probably reach much the same opinion. . . . Though his ideas are often at first provocative, they are generally seen, on candid consideration, to be widely and solidly based. No one concerned with the problems of our State internal or external, can afford to neglect them."

+ Nature 99:142 Ap 19 '17 570w

"An impartial thinker, passionately eager to find a common understanding in every sphere of human life, not by ignoring difficulties, but by honestly attempting to reconcile them and transcend them."

+ Sat R 123:85 Ja 27 '17 1300w

"The arrangement of the book baffles patience and even curiosity."

Springf'd Republican p17 J 8 '17 170w

"It is only fair to the prospective reader to warn him that there are some passages in the book that seem reverberantly empty, and others whose content appears to be of the cloudiest; it will be for the reader himself to decide how far any apparent hiatus of meaning is due to failure of expression on the author's part, how far to his own lack of intuition. This warning uttered, we commend the book wholeheartedly to the consideration of thoughtful people. Besides frequent nobility of thought, it shows much of the keen practicality that always characterizes the work of the true mystic."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p631 D 29 '16 1850w

BRASSEY, THOMAS BRASSEY, 1st earl. Work and wages; the reward of labour and the cost of work. *$1.25 Longmans 331 16-9980

"Lord Brassey describes this book on the title-page as 'a volume of extracts, revised and partly re-written.' They are taken partly from the original 'Work and wages,' which was published in 1872, and partly from other contributions of his to the subject, none of them later than 1879. They belong, therefore, to the past, and do not directly touch the most acute and recent labour questions of the moment."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Pratt p11 Ja '17

"This little book should be put in our bookcases side by side with Thorold Rogers, for it adds a great many facts to the 'Six centuries of work and wages.'"

+ Sat R 122:43 J1 8 '16 450w

"The facts recorded and opinions expressed have a historical value, and some of them throw light on problems of perennial interest."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p183 Ap 20 '16 450w

BRERETON, FREDERICK SADLIER. On the road to Bagdad. Il 6s Blackie, London

"The hero of this book has accomplishments beyond those of an ordinary subaltern. During his boyhood his guardian had taken him on many adventurous journeys in Mesopotamia, the pair frequently passing as natives, so perfect was their knowledge of the language and customs of the country. When the theatre of the great war was extended to Mesopotamia, the hero, as a member of the Expeditionary force, found himself detailed for all kinds of adventurous missions."—Ath

"The story gives a graphic picture of the perils and dangers of the Expeditionary force in this land (Mesopotamia) of desert and marsh."
+ Ath p54 Ja '17 90w

"Captain Brereton is an old hand at boys' books, and he has mingled instruction and adventure well in this narrative."

+ Sat R 122:sup6 D 9 '16 120w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p606 D 14 '16 260w

BRESHKOVSKY, MME CATHERINE. Little grandmother of the Russian revolution; reminiscences and letters; ed. by Alice Stone Blackwell. Il *$2 (2c) Little 17-31435

One of the first acts of Russia's provisional government, after the revolution, was to liberate Madame Catherine Breshkovsky who for fifty years was not free from police surveillance and for thirty years was an exile in Siberia. Miss Blackwell has had access to three sources of information: the account of Madame Breshkovsky's childhood and youth given to Doctor Abraham Cahan while she was in America in 1904; a description of her early prison experiences with an outline of her later life, published in the Outlook; and letters, many of them written to Miss Blackwell during the years since 1904. Miss Blackwell has put this material together chronologically, unfolding one of the most dramatic careers of all time. The work is valuable first as a human document; second, as a survey of the social problems that have sent so many missionaries of revolution among the peasants of Russia.

+ A L A Bkl 14:127 Ja '18

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 24 '17 1600w

+ Lit D 55:38 D 8 '17 150w

"Her viewpoint on the war is especially fine and valuable reading in this day; she is so deeply the lover of peace and of humanity, and so vigorous and clear-thinking an advocate of the carrying on of the war to a successful end for Russia and the Allies."

+ N Y Times 22:584 D 30 '17 380w

"The letters deserve to live, not only because of their individual charm and interest, but because taken together they give a beautiful reflection from one of the noblest souls who has lived in our time. They are cheerful, often playful, and they are full of human sympathy and human interest. There is in them not a single note of despair, of personal resentment, and rarely is there any evidence of indignation because of her own hateful and wicked treatment."

+ Outlook 117:614 D 12 '17 230w

"The skilful editing has plainly been a labor of love. Mme Breshkovsky appears in these intimate communications as a woman of unconquerable spirit, acutely sensitive to the sufferings and wrongs of the people, individually or in the mass, appreciative of the wrongs done to herself but much more concerned in acknowledging the kindnesses bestowed upon her by hosts of friends."

+ Springf'd Republican p13 D 16 '17 1650w

BRIDGES, ROBERT SEYMOUR. Ibant obscuro; an experiment in the classical hexameter. *$5 Oxford 873 17-14043

"In this beautiful volume, one of the fairest products of the Clarendon press, Mr Bridges reprints his paraphrase in quantitative hexameters of part of Virgil's sixth book and gives to the world for the first time a similar para-

BRIDGES, ROBERT SEYMOUR—Continued
 phrase of the scene between Priam and Achilles in the last book of the Iliad. His hexameters occupy the right-hand page, and in smaller type under each line is Virgil's and Homer's original, the Greek words being printed from an elegant font in common use two centuries ago. On the left-hand page appear selections, each under its author's name and date, framed in a cartouche, from the versions of previous translators, both in prose and verse, fifty-two Virgilian and twenty-eight Homeric, distinguished and undistinguished, curiosities like Gavin Douglas and Chapman, poets like Dryden, Pope, Cowper, and Morris, public men like Derby and Bowen, professional scholars in abundance, Conington, Mackail, Leaf, Simcox. Most important of all is Mr Bridges's introduction, in which he explains clearly enough to all who can follow it the system upon which he has written these English hexameters."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"An experiment of tranquil days, growing up around a friend's paper on Virgil's hexameter, lovingly and rather quaintly printed, has 'loitered on,' to appear in these tragic times. One may question whether the thing was worth doing, or worth printing when done; but hostile criticism is disarmed by the author's frank abandonment of any claim."

Nation 105:147 Ag 9 '17 1600w

"For our part, we see no special reason why any more hexameter verse, whether accentual or quantitative, should be written in the English tongue. The measure is, and remains, an exotic. In the accentual kind the most successful are the 'Evangeline' of Longfellow and the 'Bothie' of Clough; the former an exercise in romance, and the latter an experiment in fiction. One reads and enjoys them, but hardly desires successors."

Sat R 123:sup4 Mr 31 '17 1300w

• The Times [London] Lit Sup p114 Mr 8 '17 2350w

BRIGHAM, GERTRUDE RICHARDSON. Study and enjoyment of pictures. il *$1.25 (3c) Sully & Kleinteich 750 17-12954

This work on pictures is divided into four parts: Principles of art criticism; Schools of painting; Pictures to see in America; Pictures to see in Europe. The author says, "About fifty of the most famous names in painting have been chosen for discussion, ranging from the renaissance down to the present day, unfolding the gradual progress of art, and indicating the motives which have influenced artists as great schools have arisen in one country after another. . . . The illustrations have been selected from great artists, but of subjects not yet too well known, and hence they offer material for study." There are sixteen illustrations. A short bibliography is provided at the end and there is an index.

"The 'Pictures to see in America' will help as a quick survey of the chief works of art in the leading cities of the country."

+ A L A Bkl 13:436 Jl '17

+ Cleveland p111 S '17 60w

+ Dial 61:81 Ja 17 '18 280w

"Gertrude Richardson Brigham is instructor in the history of art at George Washington university. Her text is sensible but not always free from commonplaces."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 19 '17 140w

BRITAIN, HARRY ERNEST. To Verdun from the Somme; an Anglo American glimpse of the great advance. *$1 (4c) Lane 910.91 17-12615

The author visited France in company with James M. Beck, who contributes a foreword to the book. They spent some time with the British forces in the valley of the Somme, visited Verdun and were taken along the battle line of the French front, spending some time with the Russian soldiers who are fighting in France. There is no table of contents, but some of the chapter titles picked out at random are: The Somme; Behind the firing line; On the Peronne road; Tommy Atkins; French airmen; Through the Argonne; To the Russian lines; Rheims.

+ Ath p106 F '17 120w

"Descriptive writers are divided into two classes, those who can paint a picture and those who can take you there. The book under discussion belongs in the first group. . . . Mr Britain leaves out most of the petty happenings. Genial, though his style is, one cannot help the feeling that he has written with his gloves on. The two accounts of his visits to Verdun and to Rheims are exceptions to this lack of generosity on the author's part."

+ Boston Transcript p14 Ap 7 '17 420w

+ Ind 90:298 My 12 '17 60w

Pittsburgh 22:680 O '17

Pratt p38 O '17 10w

"Mr Britain treats his subject with a freshness and simplicity which will make a sure appeal to his readers. Possibly one of the most interesting divisions of the book is that which deals with a visit to the Russian lines, and gives a short account of a Russian 'church parade,' at which the congregation was representative of anywhere 'from Korea to the Caucasus.'"

+ Spec 118:616 Je 2 '17 250w

"Mr Britain adds little to our knowledge of the war save his own sketchy views of the front as he found it, which are perhaps as valuable as those of other casual observers."

Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 23 '17 80w

BRONNER, AUGUSTA FOX. Psychology of special abilities and disabilities. *$1.75 (2c) Little 371.9 17-11120

The author has made a special study of two classes: (1) those of normal general ability who possess some special disability; (2) those below normal in general capacities who possess some special ability. At present, she says, all persons are divided into two classes: normal and defective. Children are so divided and are taught accordingly. No provision is made for those on the border line who might be better adjusted to society if account were taken of their particular abilities and defects. Contents: The problem; Methods of diagnosis; Differential diagnosis; Some present educational tendencies; Special defects in number work; Special defects in language ability; Special defects in separate mental processes; Defects in mental control; Special abilities with general mental subnormality; General conclusions. The author is assistant director of the Juvenile psychopathic institute of Chicago.

Reviewed by L. S. Hollingworth

+ Am J Soc 23:128 Jl '17 400w

A L A Bkl 11:39 N '17

"This brief but scientific account of special abilities and disabilities should be read especially by the practicing teacher and the school officer." E. B. Woods

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:788 N '17 300w

"Apart from its title, which is altogether too general, this work may be unreservedly commended."

+ Dial 63:411 O 25 '17 190w

Reviewed by A. T. Poffenberger

+ Educ 55:71 Ja '18 700w

"Public-school teachers will get something of benefit from the discussions of this book as well as those engaged in the technical work of mental examination."

Pittsburgh 22:833 D '17 70w

+ El School J 18:70 S '17 750w

Pratt p11 Jl '17 30w

St Louis 15:139 My '17 10w

"The book is very carefully worked out; the conscientious accounts of the work by others are more than mere references, and the theoretical discussion and the actual case-records go clearly hand in hand. A careful study of this book gives one the comfort that instead of the usual mass of generalities dealt out in books on education we have at last solid ground for sensible and well directed constructive work." Adolph Meyer, M.D.

+ Survey 38:372 J1 28 '17 270w

BROOKE, HENRY BRIAN (KORONGO). Poems; with a foreword by M. P. Willcocks. il *$1.25 Lane 821 17-240.6

"Captain Brian Brooke lost his life at Mamez, leading his men with unabated courage in spite of wounds. In British East Africa he had a great name as a hunter . . . and readers of the foreword by Miss Willcocks will easily see what a splendid man he was. His life was a poem, but he did not write poetry. His verses are like those of Adam Lindsay Gordon, free-and-easy records of 'The call of the wild,' close communings with nature, tales of fine horses, ionely souls, and sinners going right at the end, and downright denunciation of some of the humbugs of civilisation."—Sat R

"Brian Brooke lived poetry rather than wrote it. . . . Judged by the critic's standards, the verses are not poetry at all. . . . The bulk of them first appeared in the Leader of South Africa and similar colonial papers. They are direct, sincere interpretations of pioneer life as he saw it, and they do for East Africa much what those of Robert Service have done for Alaska. Like Service's they are largely narrative." R. T. P.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 15 '17 760w

+ Sat R 123:412 My 5 '17 180w

"That ride,' a race for the border between an illicit trader and a German whom he has taken unawares, is an exciting piece of direct narrative that may rival 'How we beat the favourite'—its obvious source of inspiration. The Masai called Brooke 'Korongo' or 'The Big Man'; his friends called him 'The Boy'—a more fitting epithet, for it is long since we read any verse that was so full of the glorious vigour and recklessness of youth."

+ Spec 118:616 Je 2 '17 170w

"In spite of the utter lack of literary craftsmanship—perhaps because of it to some extent—his rough ballads of African life are at times curiously impressive. 'The song of the bamboos,' for example, will always be remembered by those who have ever camped by a thicket."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p208 My 3 '17 670w

BROOKS, ALDEN. Fighting men. *$1.35 (2c) Scribner 17-21875

The author, who has been war correspondent and American ambulance driver, and is now an officer in the French artillery, uses the knowledge he has gained of the national characteristics of the fighting countries as a background for a series of short stories. Full of the horrors of war, the first interest of these tales is yet psychological. Contents: The Parisian; The Belgian; The Odyssey of three Slavs; The man from America; The Prussian; An Englishman. Some of the series were first published in Collier's in 1916. "The man from America," which appeared in the Century Magazine for July, 1917, describes that type of American to whom liberty was dearer than neutrality. He allowed no outsider to criticize his government but before April, 1917, he had died fighting with the Foreign legion of France. The intimate touches which the author gives bring these tales home to the reader as tragedy through which he is personally passing.

A L A Bkl 14:94 D '17

"They are the work of a writer who has felt (not pursued) the continental influence, and whose master is de Maupassant rather than 'O. Henry.' But they are the work of an American, and they have the direct and personal effect of honest work done at first hand." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:337 N '17 490w

"The red realism of war enters into the six short stories that make up this book."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 12 '17 170w

"To those who have found war too gloriously represented in fiction, to those who would like to know a few of the typical fighting men of the eastern and western fronts, shorn of their civilized demeanor and expressing in action the purely elemental impulses, we recommend 'The fighting men.'"

+ Dial 63:282 S 27 '17 140w

+ Ind 92:536 D 15 '17 140w

"As a piece of writing 'The fighting men' is an uneven look. But for the most part it is graphic. And always it is horrible. The three stories, which take up the first half of the volume, are the best. . . . 'The Prussian' is a terrible tale of war, like the others, but it seems less vivid, less real. As for 'An Englishman,' it is a morbid piece of fiction, false, maudlin, unwholesome."

+ N Y Times 22:325 S 2 '17 550w

"The tale called 'The Odyssey of three Slavs' is one of the most powerful war stories we have seen."

+ Outlook 117:100 S 19 '17 70w

"Gradually, however, the realization sinks in that they are something more profound and significant than mere printers-ink pictures of phases of the great war—they are psychological studies executed with amazing dexterity, comprehension and simplicity of means, embodying, for the most part, in a single character the complex personality, the dominant racial spirit of each of the warring nations." F. T. Cooper

+ Pub W 92:869 S 15 '17 900w

BROOKS, CHARLES STEPHEN. There's pippins and cheese to come. il *$2 (5c) Yale Univ. press 814 17-29242

"Journeys to Bagdad," a book of reprinted papers published last year, won a place for the author in the regard of those who still cherish the essay as a form of literary diversion. There are twelve essays in the new volume, that which gives it the inviting title and the following: On buying old books; Any stick will do to beat a dog; Roads of morning; The man of Grub street comes from his garret; Now that spring is here; The friendly geni; Mr Pepys sits in the pit; To an unknown reader; A plague of all cowards; The asperities of the early British reviewers; The pursuit of fire. Some of these have appeared in the New Republic and the Yale Review.

"Whimsical, clever essays with a leisurely atmosphere, reminiscent of Lamb."

+ A L A Bkl 14:119 Ja '18

"One of those books which cannot be recommended at all to many readers, but which can be recommended very highly to some. The worst that can be said of these twelve essays, from any point of view, is that they are a waste of time and energy, and fail to stimulate; they are often as futile as Edward Lear's nonsense books, but at the same time almost as refreshing." J. F. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 15 '17 400w

+ Cleveland p133 D '17 60w

"Rarely does one find a book so loaded with quiet humor, literary charm, ease of expression and delicate fancy."

+ Ind 92:604 D 29 '17 80w

"He has nothing whatever that is new to communicate but his own personal gusto; and he even smacks his lips, as he employs the subjunctive mood, with an antique smack."

+ Nation 106:44 Ja 10 '18 200w

"By all the known laws of style and thought Mr Brooks ought to have lived 100 years ago. The peculiar appeal of what he has to say comes from the fact that he is essentially archaic. He talks about the most modern things from an 18th or early 19th century point of view. . . . Not the least entertaining feature of 'Pippins and cheese' is the skill with which Theodore Diedricksen, jr., has illustrated the pages."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 D 8 '17 1300w

BROOKS, EUGENE CLYDE. Story of corn and the westward migration. il 75c (1c) Rand 633 16-23150

The author tells the story of corn from an interesting point of view, linking it up with the history of the westward movement of population in our country and the settlement and development of the Mississippi valley. The first chapters of the book are of a more general nature, treating of The struggle for food, Mythical stories of our food-giving plants, Food a factor in civilization, etc. The work is a companion volume to "The story of cotton," and the two together, the author says, "should make a good course in elementary economic history for the last year of the grammar school or the first year of the high school." The author is professor of education in Trinity college, Durham, N.C.

BROWER, HARRIETTE MOORE. Piano mastery; second series. il *$1.75 (3c) Stokes 786 17-25989

A second series of talks with pianists and teachers, including conferences with Hoffmann, Godowsky, Grainger, Powell, Novaes, Hutcheson and others. In all, there are twenty-four interviews, each offering from a different angle, colored by a different personality, some big truth or truths about the development of piano art. The chapters will prove stimulating, inspiring and instructive to students.

"Not less interesting and valuable to the student and music lover than the first series."

+ A L A Bkl 14:82 D '17
Pittsburgh 22:811 D '17 50w

BROWN, ALICE. Bromley neighborhood. il *$1.50 (1c) Macmillan 17-18592

"If a 'neighborhood' story can be said to have a heroine the outstanding, central figure of Miss Brown's new novel is not either one of its young women . . . but Mary Neale, middle-aged and mother of the two young men whose loves and ambitions, foibles and missteps furnish much of the skeleton of the story. . . . But the Neales are only one of several families that inhabit the country neighborhood of Bromley, in New England, and all the others, the Greenses, the Brooks, the Gleasons, and their neighbors are pictured in the same detailed and graphic style, with little threads of quiet humor running through and the interaction of their individualities upon one another and the reaction of each to the environment form the story."—N Y Times

+ A L A Bkl 14:25 O '17

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Bookm 46:95 S '17 700w

"It is a story of the spirit rather than of the flesh. . . . In a story of New England life we expect to find the sort of New Englanders we meet there. But there are practically none of these in 'Bromley neighborhood.' Its people might have existed and their happenings might have come to pass anywhere in the wide world, but least of all in New England." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 18 '17 1400w

"The book is excellent in character drawing and has the plot material for several good short stories. As a long story, however, its construction breaks down."

+ Cleveland p103 S '17 80w

"Perhaps the men and women of Bromley neighborhood are a little too consistent, even for New England, where consistency is said to be so common a jewel as to pass unnoticed; perhaps Miss Brown is a shade unsympathetic toward those characters in whom the spirit of New England has shrunk and crystallized into something different. But on the whole, the people of Bromley neighborhood are real people with reactions that are, on the whole, true—deadly true."

+ Dial 63:280 S '17 '17 550w

"Surely one of the best American novels of the year."

+ Ind 92:561 D '17 300w

"Miss Brown burns with a clear flame of indignation against the mood of the American government and the American people during the first year of the war. She respects only those who refused to be bound by official neutrality, who saw where our part lay and tried to do it. And she sees the war as a great purifier and solvent. . . . As for the story proper, the tangled love story of Hugh and Ben Neale and Ellen Brock and Grissie Gleason, it is, like all of Miss Brown's longer narratives, plainly a fiction. The truth is, she cannot paint a full-length portrait of a man. The women of this story are truly characterized."

+ Nation 105:124 Ag 2 '17 520w

"Miss Brown's virulent pro-ally bias can be excused. She is as much entitled to her opinion as one holding the reverse to his. But the artificiality of the whole plot, the excessive limitations of her characters, are not so excusable." Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p14 Ag 26 '17 400w

"Miss Brown excels in this rich and glowing interpretation of New England character and temperament. Scarcely does she have her equal among writers of recent years. . . . Once in a while she falls short in her interpretation into action, or rather, allows a character so to offend against probability as to rouse the reader to indignant protest. But when she does this it is because of her need of some crucial action in her plot and it usually takes the form of allowing one of her women characters to embark upon some adventure of sex that outrages all human probability. This new novel has just such a flaw in the sudden marriage of Ellen Brock."

+ N Y Times 22:255 J1 8 '17 700w

"No novel by Alice Brown, not even 'The prisoner,' is more mature or richer in character depiction than 'Bromley neighborhood.' It would indeed be difficult to name any American novel of the year which is more thoroughly well worth reading."

+ Outlook 116:626 Ag 22 '17 180w

Pittsburgh 22:649 O '17 20w

"A very fine novel, a better sermon on the recovery of the lost values of American citizenship."

+ R of Rs 56:333 S '17 350w

"The work contains diverse elements—some richly truthful and others sentimentally romantic."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 5 '17 550w

BROWN, ALICE. Road to Castaly, and later poems. *$1.50 Macmillan 811 17-7033

The earliest copyright date of the poems brought together in this book is 1893. It is in part a reprint of a small volume with the same title issued a number of years ago. Later poems have been added. Among these are a short poetic drama, "The immortal witnesses," and a sonnet sequence, "The book of love."

+ A L A Bkl 13:340 My '17

"The volume shows no lack of craftsmanship in the handling of a variety of poetic forms. . . . It is the sincere and sometimes inspired singing of a poet. . . . Her shorter poems are without exception her best." R. T. P.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 21 '17 1150w

"The distinction of Miss Alice Brown's poetry is its originality; Miss Brown is remarkable for her power of finding new themes and of saying new things about old themes."

+ Lit D 51:1999 Je 30 '17 700w

"Without classing Miss Brown among great or incisive poets, I can warmly commend 'The road to Castaly.' First of all, she has utterance, the plastic mouth. There is a perfect leafage of phrase, a sun-flecked and wind-tossed abundance, over which her fancy plays with what I can best describe as a hovering fondness. Again, her work is notable for the rarity of imperfections—itsself a high rarity in current American verse of any grade." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 105:400 O 11 '17 240w

+ N Y Times 22:241 Je 24 '17 230w

"Originality, daring, delicacy—these are the qualities that mark this book of verse from beginning to end. . . . Yet the mastery is not complete; a certain obscurity clouds many of the poems, and the fascinating series of sonnets called 'The book of love,' which one feels ought to be the author's best work, is for this reason unsatisfying."

+ No Am 205:809 My '17 320w

"One is accustomed to think of Alice Brown as the author of the prize play, 'Children of earth,' and as a successful short-story writer, rather than as a poet, but this book will not fail to convince her readers of her great natural gift for poetic expression. The poems in this collection are diverse of theme, thoughtful, and reverent of mood and strong with a certain dramatic propulsion."

+ R of Rs 55:439 Ap '17 100w

+ Springf'd Republican p19 My 27 '17 380w

BROWN, CHARLES REYNOLDS. Master's way; a study in the synoptic gospels. *$1.75
(1c) Pilgrim press 232 17-2209

A series of papers reprinted from the Congregationalist. The author says, "This is not a 'Life of Christ.' It contains a series of studies based upon the more significant actions and utterances of the Master as we find them reported in the synoptic gospels." They are designed especially for those engaged in Sunday school work or leading Bible study classes. "They were not written for the critical scholar." The author is dean of the School of religion at Yale university.

"Dr Brown has sufficient keenness of insight, freshness of statement, and real power of interpretation to make his collection of 'lesson helps' worth preservation in this permanent form. . . . This is the work of a teacher."

+ Bib World 50:50 J1 '17 300w

"Filled with a sympathy which finds in love's boundlessness a hope for all mankind, this collection of Doctor Brown's sermons comforts as well as inspires."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 31 '17 210w

"Delightful and full of suggestions."

+ Ind 90:299 My 12 '17 60w

"To a remarkable degree it correlates the events and the ministry of Christ with present-day problems and needs. . . . The best modern scholarship appears throughout the book. The author is very balanced in his judgments and presents both sides of the disputed questions."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 F 8 '17 150w

BROWN, DEMETRA (VAKA) (MRS KENNETH BROWN). Heart of the Balkans. *$1.50 (3½c) Houghton 914.97 17-14034

In these papers, some of them reprinted from the Delineator and the Century, the author describes a journey taken thru the Balkans in company with her brother. The date of these travels is not given, but they were probably taken in one of the interims of the first or second Balkan wars. The author was most interested, as she states, in the women of these countries. Contents: Wild Albania; Romantic Albania; Through the lands of the Black-mountaineers; The eagle and the sparrow; Servia, the undaunted; The gypsies of the Balkans; The Prussia of the Balkans; The sons of the Hellenes; Saloniki, the city of histories.

"She gives much information, shows the contrasts between the various peoples and has many original points of view."

+ A L A Bkl 14:22 O '17

"The author is remarkably successful in grasping and presenting the diverse characteristics of these neighbor-peoples."

+ Cleveland p15 S '17 50w

"It would make a poor guidebook indeed, but it is something better. Her word pictures of the physical appearance of each land are suggestive and touched with beauty."

+ Dial 63:348 O 11 '17 190w

+ Ind 90:561 Je 23 '17 30w

+ Ind 91:78 J1 14 '17 50w

"The author is a Greek, born in Constantinople, a woman who has studied both the political and racial characteristics of her country and who has also a style charmingly individual, picturesque, and a diction worthy of her native land."

+ Lit D 55:42 O 13 '17 290w

+ Outlook 116:305 Je 20 '17 180w

Pittsburgh 22:674 O '17 50w

Pratt p46 O '17 20w

"Particularly valuable in this fascinating book is the presentation of the characteristics of the women of the various countries. If anyone wishes to get a vivid first-hand account of these countries in brief compass that is more engaging than most fiction, this little book to him can be recommended."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 29 '17 260w

BROWN, EDNA ADELAIDE. Spanish chest. il *$1.35 (2c) Lothrop 17-23755

This book for boys and girls, by an author who can always be depended on for a fresh and absorbing story, describes attractively scenes in the island of Jersey. Two English girls, thrown on their own resources, decide to let rooms to tourists and are fortunate in obtaining as their first lodgers a delightful American family. Edith the younger of the two English girls, immediately makes friends with Frances, the American, and Estelle, the older, is at once attracted to Mrs. Thayne. The two American boys, Win and Roger, find interests to their liking. Win in historical research and Roger in outdoor adventure and exploration. The party make friends with the residents of an old manor house, associated with the stay of Charles II on the island, and are allowed to investigate its secret passage ways. The finding of the chest, once the possession of Prince Charley, is the culminating incident.

+ A L A Bkl 14:100 D '17

"It is not a love tale; it is not a story of adventure; it is not a story of mystery and ghosts, and yet these features are suggested, giving a distinct charm that makes it readable for older persons, as well as the younger generation."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 8 '17 100w

+ Ind 92:447 D 1 '17 60w

N Y Times 22:389 O 7 '17 50w

Outlook 117:100 S 19 '17 20w

"The Channel islands are unfamiliar ground to most American readers, and the peculiarities of Jersey in general, and of St Helier's in particular, are well brought out by the author, and even the little colloquialisms that she introduces are worth noting."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 1 '17 160w

BROWN, GEORGE ROTHWELL. My country; a story of today. il *$1.35 (2½c) Small 17-23648

This is said to be the first novel to come out of our war with Germany. The plot and the way in which the story is developed recall Phillips Oppenheim. The hero, Wilhelm Hartmann, known as Billy, and his twin brother, Karl, are Prussians by birth, though their father has become a loyal American citizen. After the father's death, Karl returns to Germany for his education and becomes thoroughly Prussianized, while Billy, through the influence of Prussians who hope to use him later, though he is ignorant of this at the time, is appointed to Annapolis and later promoted to a position of importance in the United States navy. The crucial point in the story comes when Billy, already obliged to pay the penalty of a dual nationality in suffering the distrust of his fellow officers, meets his twin brother, who has returned secretly by submarine as the official representative of the Kaiser and tells Billy that he is the Kaiser's man, that he owes his appointment as assistant chief-of-staff to the commander-in-chief to Prussian influence and that it is his duty to save Germany by betraying the American navy. How

BROWN, GEORGE ROTHWELL—Continued

Billy deals with his brother and how he saves and finally wins the girl he loves in ingeniously told.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 20 '17 489v
Cleveland p128 N '17 70w

"The story is a thrilling one and offers a serious idea or two besides."

+ Dial 63:220 S 13 '17 120w
+ N Y Times 22:243 Je 24 '17 330w

BROWN, HAROLD WARNER. Electrical equipment; its selection and arrangement, with special reference to factories, shops and industrial plants. il *$2 McGraw 621.3 17-5558

"The book supplements, and does not duplicate, existing recognized texts which describe electrical apparatus or present the principles of design and application or give various performance data. Its aim, in contrast, is to show how to apply principles and data elsewhere accessible."—Engin News-Rec

A L A Bkl 14:44 N '17
Cleveland p93 Jl '17 20w

"Non-electrical men who have problems in the selection and use of electrical equipment put up to them, will welcome Mr Brown's lectures."

+ Engin News-Rec 78:363 My 17 '17 150w
+ N Y Br Lib News 4:59 Ap '17

"Unique in that it attacks the subject from the standpoint of the mechanical engineer. To facilitate study, data references are confined mainly to the 'Standard' and the 'American' handbooks, while Alexander Gray's 'Principles and practice of electrical engineering' is depended upon for theory."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p7 Ap '17 120w

"Primarily intended to guide college students in laying out their work and to assist mechanical and electrical engineers in selecting electrical equipment, and in this capacity it should find a wide field of usefulness."

+ Pittsburgh 22:145 My '17 50w

"Helpful book, the first to deal definitely with this subject."

+ Pittsburgh 22:517 Je '17 20w

"The tables given in the chapter on Motor applications are a very important part of the work."

+ Power 45:400 Mr 20 '17 440w
Pratt p17 Jl '17 20w

"Author is connected with the engineering department of Cornell University."

+ Quar List New Tech Bks Ap '17 160w
St Louis 15:174 Je '17 10w

BROWN, IVOR. Security. *$1.25 (1½c) Doran

The way of dons, the way of men, the way of women, and the way of the world are the four divisions of this novel. John Grant, an Oxford don at the opening of the story, is just beginning to find the peace and security of the life intolerable. His father's death, which brings him a comfortable fortune, provides a way of escape. He goes to London to plunge into the world of men with a friend who is a champion of labor. But he is not built for the hazards and excitements of such an existence. He leaves it and marries, expecting to find in marriage the peace and security for which he again longs. But his wife also has married for security, and like himself she finds that it falls after a time. She tries a way of escape which, strangely enough, results in drawing the two, husband and wife, together in a mutual understanding.

"So far as the hero himself is concerned, we hope recognition of the fact will grow among readers that, like many well-intentioned capitalists, he is attempting to improve at one end the situation he is helping to create at the other. . . . Security is certainly never attained, though if the hero had any real aim in life, perhaps it was that. A better title would have been 'The slacker's progress.'"

— Ath p126 Mr '16 550w

"A thoughtful and sincere piece of work."

+ Cleveland p33 Mr '17 60w

+ N Y Times 22:136 Ap 15 '17 360w

"The talk of the labour men is as good as the talk of the dons. . . . Our conviction of the author's knowledge begins to wane in 'The way of women,' and it evaporates rapidly in 'The way of the world.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p70 F 10 '16 600w

BROWN, KATHARINE HOLLAND. Wages of honor, and other stories. il *$1.35 (2c) Scribner 17-24278

The stories in this book are divided into three groups, representing three geographical divisions of our continent. The four stories of the first group: 'The wages of honor; The master strategist; "Crabbed age and youth"; and Brewster blood have scenes laid in the east. Following these are three stories of the Mississippi country: The ragged edge of forty; Raw prose; Briarley's real woman. The third group consists of three stories of Mexico; Billy Foster and the snow queen; Millicent, maker of history; On a brief text from Isaiah. With two exceptions the stories are reprinted from Scribner's Magazine.

"Ten readable short stories. They all have a high moral tone."

+ A L A Bkl 11:94 D '17

"Magazine readers are already well acquainted with the clean and dignified style characteristic of the author. There is nothing to offend and much to interest and provide pleasant reading in these three hundred pages."

+ Cath World 106:113 D '17 80w

"Rather subtle and a little too slow for the average novel reader. The three stories of Mexico are interesting, especially the first, in letter form, and they present a new view of the Mexican peon."

+ Cleveland p128 N '17 50w

"They are all stories with happy endings, irrespective of the logic of the situation."

+ N Y Times 22:388 O 7 '17 160w

"A man cannot write a story of a sewing society that will convince women and a woman cannot write of violent masculine physical labor, in a way convincing to men. Thus, in 'The ragged edge of forty,' Miss Brown, though she has her technical details and a correct background, writes a story that leaves the masculine reader with the unsatisfied sense that she didn't know what she was writing about. 'Billy Foster and the snow queen' has, in many ways, the greatest appeal in the book."

+ Spring'd Republican p15 Ja 13 '18 380w

BROWN, PHILIP MARSHALL. International realities. *$1.40 (3c) Scribner 341 17-3489

The author says, "Since the great war began I have been conscious, with many others, of the urgent necessity of a thorough reconstruction of the law of nations in accordance with the big facts of international life. I have set myself the task of endeavoring to ascertain the fundamental values in international relations. The method followed has been to select certain of the large problems of international relations and treat them as separate topics illustrating and elucidating some of the basic principles of international law." Some of the papers are reprinted from the North American Review. Contents: International realities; Nationalism; The rights of states; The limitations of arbitration; International administration; Ignominious neutrality; The dangers of pacifism; Pan-Americanism; Democracy and diplomacy; The substitution of law for war.

A L A Bkl 14:5 O '17

"Though unduly obsessed by 'realities,'—which is to say, existing phenomena—and unnecessarily patronising in tone toward the 'emotion and sentiment' of those who seek a more idealistic and visionary solution, it is nevertheless a valuable analysis of the bases of international law." Nathaniel Pfeffer

+ Bookm 45:198 Ap '17 230w

"His book will serve to clear up some misunderstood points, but his personal predilections are apparent and his 'common sense' reduces all considerations to a somewhat materialistic basis. Much of this was written for magazines, and a part of it has a slight political-campaign flavor."

+ — Cleveland p53 Ap '17 70w

"It is no dispassionate study as proved by such headings as Ignominious neutrality and Dangers of pacificism, but in pointing out the tasks immediately practical, especially in relation to South America, it is suggestive and inspiring."

+ Ind 90:556 Je 23 '17 50w

"Professor Brown of Princeton, in writing of international relations and the 'law' that more or less guides and governs them, has the advantage of adding considerable experience in diplomacy to his professional study. He served as secretary of legation and as chargé in the Near East, especially at Constantinople, and as minister to Honduras."

N Y Times 22:37 Mr 11 '17 700w

St Louis 15:133 My '17 10w

BROWN, WILLIAM ADAMS. Is Christianity practicable? lectures delivered in Japan. *$1.25 (4c) Scribner 261 16-23974

Dr Brown is Union seminary lecturer on Christianity in the Far East and the lectures that make up this book were delivered in Japan. The question that serves as title is considered with reference to the present war. The author's answer is that Christianity has never been tried. It has been tried as an individual religion, but has never been applied to national or international problems. The responsibility for the war is laid to the fact that the leaders of all the so-called Christian nations have assumed the impracticability of Christianity. In this they have been sustained by public sentiment. The five chapters of the book are: The world crisis as challenge and as opportunity; The Christian interpretation of history; The Christian programme for humanity; The duty for to-morrow; What the church can do.

"A courageous, candid, and constructive book—courageous, because it consists of lectures in the Orient upon the most embarrassing question of Christian apologetics; candid and constructive, because without artificial or question-begging theological premises, and working only with real facts and ideals, the author has produced a clear and simple apologetic adapted to build up genuine Christian conviction." E. W. Lyman

+ Am J Theol 21:467 J1 '17 860w

"These lectures were delivered in Japan, and ought to have a wholesome influence in counteracting the baleful effects of jingoism both in Japan and in America."

+ Bib World 49:186 Mr '17 450w

N Y Times 22:436 O 28 '17 60w

+ Outlook 115:668 Ap 11 '17 200w

"The volume is a distinct contribution to the literature of social Christianity." Graham Taylor

+ Survey 38:574 S 29 '17 360w

BROWN, WILLIAM ALDEN. Portland cement industry; with notes on physical testing. il *$3 Van Nostrand 666 (Eng ed 17-17970)

"A practical treatise on the building, equipping, and economical running of a Portland cement plant." (Sub-title) A short introductory chapter and a historical sketch of the industry are followed by discussions of: Manufacture—raw materials; Design and construction of a modern Portland cement plant; The rotary kiln; Power plants; Costs and statistics, etc. The author is a member of the South Wales institute of engineers, and the book has been written to encourage the development of the Portland cement industry in Great Britain to meet the competition of Germany and the United States after the war.

"The book itself is a very good categorical description of the manufacture of portland cement, with special detailed reference to the individual parts making up the cement mill. More attention is paid to the factory itself and to raw materials than to chemical investigations, although there are six chapters on the technique of testing."

+ Engin News-Rec 79:325 Ag 16 '17 130w

"The book before us is eminently practical, and deserves serious consideration because the author has had important American experience, and is now managing a large modern cement works in South Wales. Some notes on physical testing constitute a valuable feature." J. A. A.

+ Nature 98:368 Ja 11 '17 260w

BROWNE, BELMORE. White blanket. il *$1.25 (2c) Putnam 17-31026

A sequel to "The quest of the golden valley." George Draper and Fred Morgan, the two boys of that story, spend a winter in Alaska with George's uncle, who is prospecting for gold. In addition to helping establish a valuable mining claim, the two boys have many adventures and brave great dangers. The author, who is an arctic explorer, is utilizing his experiences in the north in this series of books for boys. His familiarity with the country is further shown in the drawings he has made to illustrate the story.

"A first-class book with a background of reality."

+ N Y Times 22:565 D 16 '17 110w

BROWNE, JOHN HUTTON BALFOUR. Recollections; literary and political. *10s 6d Constable & co., London

Mr Browne, a Scottish lawyer, author of "Forty years at the bar" and of many other volumes, is a brother of Sir James Crichton-Browne. He shows a strong bent towards philosophy and was for several years a reviewer of philosophical books for the magazines. His "Recollections" abound in anecdotes, many of them not new.

"His thumb-nail appreciations of politicians and others are sometimes acute, occasionally amusing, and in certain instances likely to be dissented from by many readers. . . . Does not appear to have much sympathy with efforts at social reforms. . . . On pp. 113-14 there are some references to the United States which it would have been better, we think, to delete. On p. 203 'Auberon,' in a copy of a letter from Lord Bramwell, should be Auberon."

+ Ath p417 Ag '17 390w

"He has no doubt about his likes and dislikes, and expresses them with a frankness that leaves little to be desired, and deals some shrewd knocks at the idols of the present generation. . . . These recollections give us a vivid picture of a shrewd, able, alert, and highly critical mind, keenly interested in many subjects outside the law."

+ Spec 118:88 J1 28 '17 1600w

"These recollections are such as might have been published by that busy, canny old gentleman Polonius, but for the hasty action of Hamlet. . . . They are not legal, but political and literary—a record of unimportant elections lost; of writings that have been forgotten by the writer himself; and of sentiments that have nothing novel or striking to commend them."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p353 J1 26 '17 900w

BROWNE, PORTER EMERSON. Someone and somebody. il *$1.35 (2½c) Bobbs 17-14136

"The collision of a Long Island railroad train with an automobile in which his two tight-fisted uncles are riding raises the hero from the status of book agent to millionaire. Notwithstanding that he is a college man, he is singularly ignorant of the usages of good society. But he is physically attractive and soon learns the ways of the world into which fortune pitches him. Coincidentally with his leap from poverty to affluence, the heroine's position is reversed. . . . One day, however, she discovers that the hero's uncles had mulcted her father of his fortune. She marches directly to the young man and demands her money back. . . . He consents. But before he is able to carry out his good intention, the news is brought to him that his confidential agent has . . . absconded [with his fortune]." (Spring'd Republican) Both young people, however, contrive to outwit ill fortune, and the book ends happily.

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BROWNE, PORTER EMERSON—Continued

"There is a keenness even under the froth in a story of the type of this present one, and we have the impression that under it all he is rather laughing at those who read it. . . . He deliberately puts aside the serious mood, unless it be true that his very burlesquing is serious. He gives us every kind of a fictional misfortune and then ends his story by arbitrarily bringing all right again."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 20 '17 350w

"Perhaps Mr Browne's experience as a playwright is responsible for the manner in which the situation develops. . . . His pointed humor is very diverting, and although the romance does not always move voluntarily, there is no lack of lively interest throughout."

+ Spring'd Republican p17 J1 8 '17 320w

BROWNELL, WILLIAM CRARY. Standards. *$1 (4½c) Scribner 801 17-13754

The author discusses standards in art and literature. The tendency of the present day is to discard standards of all kinds, and to point out the dangers of such a course is part of Mr Brownell's aim in this little book. There are seven chapters, dealing with: Measures of value; The public; Taste; The individual; The inner life; "Modern art"; The cause of art and letters.

A L A Bkl 14:14 O '17

"A brief monograph, admirable in its technique and apparently intended to supplement his concentrated little essay on criticism."

+ Cleveland p89 J1 '17 80w

"A thin volume of masterly essays with a rich and widely varied vocabulary that well serves to project intellectual and art pyrotechnics."

+ Ind 92:604 D 29 '17 70w

"There can never be too much of the refined and much-experienced criticism such as Mr W. C. Brownell's essay on 'Standards,' which we all read in Scribner's Magazine and are glad to have now as a book."

+ Nation 105:152 Ag 9 '17 100w

"His pages sparkle with wit and wisdom in happy combination. The reader feels the sway of a loyal, candid, deeply self-respecting nature and of a mind disciplined by the study not only of what literature discloses of life, but of that still richer revelation which actual living brings to the soul that can receive it."

+ N Y Times 22:290 My 20 '17 800w

Pratt p33 O '17 20w

BRUBAKER, HOWARD. Ranny, otherwise Randolph Harrington Dukes. II *$1 10 (2c) Harper 17-20177

"A tale of those activities which made him an important figure in his town, in his family—and in other families." (Sub-title) The sixteen chapters about the doings of this representative American small boy, during the year when he was "eight-going-on-nine" are written from the adult point of view. They appeared originally in Harper's Magazine.

+ A L A Bkl 14:25 O '17

Cleveland p128 N '17 30w

"Howard Brubaker has been a real boy, but more to the point, he has the faculty of making his readers boys again. 'Ranny' is excellent reading."

+ Dial 63:354 O 11 '17 40w

+ N Y Times 22:282 J1 29 '17 370w

BRUCE, EDWIN MORRIS. Detection of the common food adulterants. 3d ed rev and enl *$1.25 Van Nostrand 614.3 17-31161

This third edition of a little volume published in 1907 "has been revised so that it contains the latest and best tests for the common food adulterants." (Preface) Contents: Dairy products; Meat and eggs; Cereal products; Leavening materials; Canned and bottled vegetables; Fruits and fruit products; Flavoring extracts; Saccharine products; Spices; Vinegar; Fats and oils; Beverages. In addition to the general index, there is an index to authors and tests.

BRUCE, HENRY ADDINGTON BAYLEY. Handicaps of childhood. *$1.50 (3c) Dodd 136.7 17-29498

The author states that he has written this book "to amplify and supplement his 'Psychology and parenthood.'" "Its general aim, accordingly, is to present additional evidence in support of the doctrine, that, in view of the discoveries of modern psychology with regard to individual development, the mental and moral training of children by their parents ought to be begun earlier, and be carried on more intensively, than is the rule at present. But whereas in 'Psychology and parenthood' the emphasis was chiefly on the importance of early mental training, the chief concern of the present book is to demonstrate the importance of early training in the moral sphere." (Preface) Much of the material here presented has already appeared in the Century, Good Housekeeping, McClure's, Harper's Bazar, Every Week, and the Mother's Magazine. The book includes chapters on Stammering, The only child, and Fairy tales that handicap. This latter points out the danger to many children of fairy tales that reek of brutality and gore.

"A work of manufacture rather than of literature, but none the less rather interesting reading for an hour or two and, if liberally seasoned with the salt of skepticism, perhaps not unprofitable reading for parents. The salt is needed for the author's naive acceptance of Freudian 'discoveries'; apart from this prepossession, his suggestions are not lacking in sanity."

+ Nation 106:120 Ja 31 '18 100w

"Simple in expression and eminently readable, this discussion of child psychology is based on full knowledge and sound thinking."

+ Outlook 117:651 D 19 '17 60w

BRUCE, WILLIAM CABELL. Benjamin Franklin, self-revealed. 2v *$6 (3c) Putnam 17-29818

A biographical and critical study of Franklin based largely on his own writings. All of the aids of modern scholarship have been employed to make the work accurate and exhaustive. It is the many-sided Franklin who stands revealed in these pages. The first volume inquires into Franklin's moral standing and system, his religious beliefs, family relations, American, British and French friends, and estimates Franklin, the philanthropist and citizen; the second volume portrays his personal characteristics, looks at Franklin, the man of business, statesman, man of science and writer.

"The volumes throughout are distinguished by keen critical insight and by a deep understanding of human nature, added to which are a fine sense of proportion and a literary manner which renders the work eminently readable." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 21 '17 730w

"Here are two volumes which, with literary finish, careful accuracy, and critical insight, consider every side of this remarkable man. They abound in citations from Franklin's writings, especially his private letters, and thus reveal his personality as no mere biographical pages could."

+ Lit D 55:36 D 15 '17 340w

"It is detached, impersonal, detailed, and it discusses Franklin's foibles and flaws on every side, in all their manifestations and in all their relations to his family, friends, and period."

+ N Y Times 23:5 Ja 6 '18 650w

"An admirable piece of work—every page sparkling with the interest that attaches to a unique character."

+ Outlook 117:574 D 5 '17 100w

+ R of Rs 57:100 Ja '18 110w
 + — Spec 120:61 Ja 19 '18 2050w
 "The author belongs to that school of American writers on biography and history who have never taken to heart the maxim that the half is greater than the whole."
 — + The Times [London] Lit Sup p16 Ja 10 '18 1000w

BRUNNER, EDMUND DE SCHWEINITZ. New country church building. (Library of Christian progress) il 75c Missionary education movement 17-17093

"Edmund de S. Brunner, who has been successful in community leadership and who knows churches from every angle, including that of the pulpit, . . . has packed into these 140 pages a comprehensive survey of architectural and spiritual needs. Eleven plans are submitted for country churches, incorporating in varying degree, from simple to elaborate, suggestive arrangements for Sunday-school rooms, boys' and girls' club rooms, gymnasium, etc.; and several other plans deal with parish houses or community buildings." (Springf'd Republican) The Federal council's commission on church and country life has indorsed Dr Brunner's volume.

+ Ind 91:345 S 1 '17 40w
 "While the volume is meant for country churches, it has much of value for town and city parishes."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 O 8 '17 350w
 "It is not a technical book, but it should be valuable to the architect, though it is written for the country minister, the country layman and the rural social worker. The sketches and plans by James Grunert are most suggestive. Particularly interesting is the section by Mrs Brunner upon the kitchen." S.
 + Survey 38:574 S 29 '17 200w

BRYAN, WILLIAM JENNINGS. Heart to heart appeals. il *$1 Revell 308 17-12620

"These selections from the Bryan speeches and writings are varied and all-embracing. The topics include Government, Imperialism, Equal suffrage, The liquor question, Peace, Ideals, Labor, Trusts, and many more."—Boston Transcript

"As one glances through the pages of this book it is bound to embody merely the fond and lingering memories of a man whose talents and political efforts have largely spelled failure."
 — Boston Transcript p6 My 23 '17 450w

Reviewed by H. M. Kallen
 Dial 63:445 N 3 '17 580w

"They afford many glimpses of history, with side-lights revealing a personality widely recognized as dominant and picturesque."
 + Lit D 55:33 S 1 '17 60w

N Y Br Lib News 4:88 Je '17 6w
 Springf'd Republican p15 S 30 '17 100w

BRYANT, MRS LORINDA (MUNSON). American pictures and their painters. il *$3 (4c) Lane 759.1 17-16076

This work "is designed to provide a working basis for the appreciation of American art. To accomplish this I have attempted especially to trace the careers of the leaders in their respective eras—artists who even now are modern old masters. . . . Naturally it is too early as yet to judge the younger artists correctly, consequently only a limited number are here represented; those are included who indicate the trend of thought in art to-day." (Intro.) Beginning with a chapter on West, Copley, Peale and Trumbull, the author traces American painting down to the present day, closing with a chapter on Ultra-modern art. The book is illustrated with over 200 reproductions of paintings.

A L A Bkl 14:12 O '17
 "The author has been responsible for a series of quite a half-dozen books embodying various phases of this subject, all of which have found readers. . . . The work is broad and comprehensive, and the many illustrations are equally so, and add greatly to the interest of the work."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 23 '17 420w
 "The author's appreciations are characterized by both fairness and interest. The 230 illustrations are chosen with discrimination."
 + Ind 91:514 S 29 '17 60w

"The illustrations afford only a fair idea of the pictures, for it must be confessed that they are somewhat flat and leave much to the imagination."
 + — Lit D 55:43 D 1 '17 300w

+ Outlook 116:488 Jl 25 '17 40w
 "The text is delightfully written, with just enough chattiness to lift it out of the ruts of guide-books. One welcomes the chapter on ultra-modern art, inasmuch as upon the spirit of unrest manifest in it largely depends our artistic progress."
 + R of Rs 56:219 Ag '17 100w

"One studies the volume rather hopelessly in the search of the key to the sequence of names. The pictures are so good that they might stand as the raison d'être of the volume with the letterpress added as commentary."
 + — Springf'd Republican p6 D 13 '17 350w

BRYCE, MRS CHARLES. Long spoon. *$1.40 (2c) Lane 17-23341

The title of this book is taken from the old proverb, "He must have a long spoon that must eat with the devil." The scene is laid in Wales. The heroine, Thirza, has married Sir Hugo Averill as a means of support, only to discover that he is a brute with a partially unbalanced brain. Two men fall in love with Lady Averill: George Blount, who has rented Sir Hugo's fishing, and Oswald Gerrard, Sir Hugo's land agent. The story goes on to tell how Lady Averill resorts to necromancy to solve her difficulties, and what comes of it all in the end.

"Terse and full of action and sustained interest. . . . To introduce necromancy in a novel is daring and difficult, for if the subject is not treated with great tact it so easily distorts and cheapens. Mrs Bryce has done her work cleverly."

+ N Y Times 22:343 S 16 '17-160w

BRYCE, JAMES BRYCE, viscount. Some historical reflections on war, past and present. *1s Oxford 172.4

These essays are portions of two presidential addresses delivered to the British academy, June, 1915 and July, 1916. "Among the topics considered are the vast range and extent of the war, its immense influence upon neutral nations, the changes in the methods of war, the cost, the moral issues raised, the effect in each nation upon the whole body of the people, . . . the shock given to the rules of international law, the chief causes of war in the past, the question whether international machinery can be contrived 'calculated to reduce the strength of the forces that make for war and to strengthen those that make for peace.' He indicates some of the difficulties to be surmounted, but believes that there is much to be hoped from the creation of . . . an international mind, and of an international public opinion." (Ath)

Ath p33 Ja '17 280w
 "Lord Bryce's two presidential addresses are deliberately written in a spirit of detachment. . . . The second address contains some acute criticisms upon plans for a federation, or league of nations." M. J.
 + Int J Ethics 27:538 Jl '17 110w

BRYCE, JAMES BRYCE, viscount. Treatment of Armenians in the Ottoman empire, 1915-1916; documents presented to Viscount Grey. *$1 Putnam 956 17-2893

"The collection is made from a great variety of reliable sources including American consuls and missionaries, German travelers and missionaries, Danish Red cross workers, Swiss visitors, native teachers, pastors and other re-

BRYCE, JAMES BRYCE, viscount—Continued—Religious leaders. It is a terrible mass of conclusive evidence pointing to the perpetration of the foulest crime ever committed against a defenseless people.—Ind

A L A Bkl 13:393 Je '17
Ind 90:437 Je 2 '17 200w

"If the reader is sickened by the dreadful reiteration of horrors, of torture and murder and mutilation, of outrage and burning, of the sufferings of starving women forced to march on under a blazing sun when the pains of labour were on them, let him not fail to read Mr Toynbee's admirable historical retrospect of Armenia and his review of the antecedents and procedure of the deportation policy."

Spec 118:105 Ja 27 '17 2100w

BRYCE, JAMES BRYCE, viscount, and others.

Proposals for the prevention of future wars.
*Is Allen & Unwin, London 341.1
(Eng ed 17-22062)

"This is a draft scheme for an international alliance to keep the peace. It differs from the League of nations society's programme in not asking the Allies to enforce an arbitrator's award, and from the programme of the American League to enforce peace in requiring the Allies to deal with aggression by a non-Ally as well as by one of their number."—Spec

Ath p303 Je '17 90w
Int J Ethics 28:285 Ja '18 110w
Spec 118:705 Je 23 '17 60w

"The proposals are reasonably modest and admittedly deal only with a part of the problem. They are concerned only with international disputes and with the means of preventing international wars. . . . They are sound enough so far as they go, but the motor will not move without its petrol; and it is the spirit which is difficult to obtain."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p313 Jl 5 '17 2300w

BRYCE, JAMES BRYCE, viscount, and others.
War of democracy. *$2 (2c) Doubleday
940.91 17-8205

A collection of papers on the war from the standpoint of the Allies. Lord Bryce in his introduction says: "The present war differs from all that have gone before it not only in its vast scale and in the volume of misery it has brought upon the world, but also in the fact that it is a war of principles, and a war in which the permanent interests, not merely of the belligerent powers but of all nations, are involved as such interests were never involved before. . . . This war of principles is a war not only for the vindication of international right, for the faith of treaties, for the protection of the innocent, but also for liberty." Among those who contribute to the book are: Lord Haldane, Gilbert Murray, Arthur J. Balfour, G. M. Trevelyan, Viscount Grey of Falloden (Sir Edward Grey), and M. Maurice Barrès.

"Mr Balfour's discussion of naval questions comes no nearer to our time than the summer of 1915, and this fact suggests the most obvious comment upon this whole volume. It is not keyed to the present moment. It meets no present vital need. The volume entitled 'The war and democracy,' which Messrs Seaton-Watson, Wilson, Zimmern, and Greenwood published in 1915, is incomparably superior to this one." C. H. Levermore

— + Am Hist R 23:170 O '17 470w

"A notable collection of articles, addresses, interviews, and documents."

+ A L A Bkl 13:318 My '17

"Mr Fisher's discussion of the value of small states is an historical analysis of permanent importance. . . . The temper of the book is admirable in its moderation and its calm common sense. It is greatly to be hoped that this collection is only the first of a series which will winnow from the immense mass of pamphlets some, at any rate, of those which have more than a momentary importance." H. J. Laski

+ Dial 62:473 My 31 '17 170w

+ Ind 90:556 Je 23 '17 70w

"The war of democracy' was written for American consumption and was put together with the avowed purpose of influencing American opinion. As America made up its mind definitively at the very hour of the book's publication, many of the articles, addresses, and interviews so carefully selected by the editor are rather belated. A few of the articles, however, are of permanent value."

+ — Nation 105:227 Ag 30 '17 300w

N Y Br Lib News 4:58 Ap '17

"Perhaps the article which most needs to be read by Americans is the one on 'Economic Germany,' in which Henri Hauser discusses German industry as a factor making for war. For he lays bare developments, conditions, purposes that are as much a menace to the harmony and well-being of the world as is Prussian militarism."

+ N Y Times 22:45 F 11 '17 650w

"Includes some of the great speeches of the war period."

+ Ontario Library Review 1:114 My '17 30w

+ Pittsburg 22:427 My '17 60w

+ Pratt p43 O '17 40w

R of Rs 55:445 Ap '17 70w

St Louis 15:106 Ap '17

BUBNOFF, I. V. Co-operative movement in Russia; its history, significance, and character. il $1.25 M. Fainberg, 309 Broadway, N.Y. (Co-operative printing society, Manchester, England) 334 17-30589

The author shows that cooperation has gained a firm footing among the Russian peasantry, and that the European war has given a prodigious stimulus to the movement. He begins with a sketch of agriculture from the abolition of serfdom in 1861, and tells of the help furnished the peasants by the zemstvos and by agricultural societies, whose work is mainly instructional while economic functions are discharged by the artels for production, consumers' societies for distribution, and credit banks for finance. Consumers' societies, we are told, between 1905 and 1917 have multiplied from 1,000 to 20,000 and credit and loan associations from 1,434 to 16,057.

"The book evidently contains authentic matter prepared by one thoroughly familiar with the subject at first hand." Herman Kobbe

+ N Y Call p14 S 2 '17 180w

Spec 118:64 Jl 21 '17 70w

"Mr Bubnoff says nothing about the political or industrial side, but his account of the co-operative movement reveals so much capacity for organization, self-help, and practical action among the peasantry and industrial classes of Russia that current events become much more intelligible in the light of it. . . . His book is a compact statement of facts with sufficient explanatory comment to make clear the character of cooperation in Russia and its various ramifications. It is a valuable addition to the library of cooperative literature."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p291 Je 21 '17 950w

BUCHAN, JOHN. Battle of the Somme. il *$1.50 (2c) Doran (1s Nelson, London) 940.91 17-14221

The main purpose of the allied forces at the Somme, says the author, was "to exercise a steady and continued pressure on a certain section of the enemy's front." Subsidiary aims were to ease the pressure on Verdun and to prevent the transference of large bodies of German troops from the western to the eastern front. He gives a somewhat detailed account of the entire campaign, dividing it into four stages. The book is illustrated and well supplied with maps.

"Contains two appendices: 1, Sir Douglas Haig's second dispatch; 2, General Sixt von Armin's report."

+ A L A Bkl 13:112 Jl '17

"A most lucid and instructive account with not a few fine touches; it is also marked by the admirable balance that places Mr Buchan above most war historians and chroniclers of these days."

+ Ath p600 D '16 33w

"Mr Buchan's book is a recital of the field moves of an army all told in a calm, clear way and without passion. Then at intervals it gathers up its momentum of dispassion, its inertia of facts, and in some supreme and succinct statement of fact carries the reader to a conclusion that creates emotion. It is his reticence that gives one additional confidence in the sequence of his facts."

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 25 '17 550w

"His style is simple narrative with the accent of true English restraint."

+ New Repub 13:224 D 22 '17 270w

+ N Y Times 22:323 S 2 '17 220w

Pratt p39 O '17 10w

+ R of Rs 56:213 Ag '17 90w

"Written with the fervour and simple straight patriotism we expect from Mr Buchan. . . . Here is the right blend of emotion and of sturdy common sense."

+ Sat R 122:556 D 9 '16 100w

"Its main concern is to give a semitechnical account, which he succeeds admirably in doing, thanks in great measure to the ample number of maps with which the book is supplied, and which appear at sufficiently frequent intervals to make the text entirely comprehensible. . . . Mr Buchan's qualifications for his task are attested by his recent appointment as director of publicity in Great Britain."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 My 13 '17 450w

"This is a timely narrative, very well illustrated."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p562 N 23 '16 20w

BUCHAN, JOHN. Greenmantle. *$1.35 (1c)
Doran 17-20424

Richard Hannay, hero of the author's first novel, "The thirty-nine steps," is made the central figure in this war story. Hannay, who has been made a major in England's new army, is summoned to the foreign office and entrusted with an important mission. He is to investigate the sources of a "Jehad" (holy war) said to be organizing in the East. With three companions he gets into Germany, and out again. He then goes to Constantinople, and there finds what he is seeking, the woman who is the chief agent in fomenting rebellion in India.

"An absorbing adventure story, not a series of 'movie' thrills but clean cut, sustained excitement."

+ A L A Bkl 13:314 Ap '17

"Mr Buchan has given us another novel, not only of vivid interest, but one which visualizes certain phases of the world war as only a book of its kind can." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p7 F 24 '17 300w

"Although (or perhaps because) it is not a realistic war story, the book is a great favorite with convalescent readers at the base hospitals, and the fact that the author wrote it while in active service accounts for the vividness of some of its details."

+ Cleveland p63 My '17 90w

"There is no instruction in the book. . . . You will just be thrilled—as Cooper thrilled you with his Mohicans and Dumas with his Musketeers. You will arise refreshed from the contemplation of great exploits greatly performed. And next day's business will seem the brighter because for one short evening you have held commune with the impossible." H. J. L.

+ New Repub 11:60 My 12 '17 950w

"A story full of spirit and swing and high heroism. It is very much better than either of its author's two previous novels, successful and interesting as were both those books."

+ N Y Times 22:75 Mr 4 '17 450w

"This is the longest of the sensational romances that Mr Buchan has given us since the outbreak of the war. It is also the most exciting and in our opinion the best."

+ Spec 117:555 N 4 '16 850w

+ Springf'd Republican p15 F 18 '17 250w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p512 O 26 '16 500w

BUCHAN, JOHN. Nelson's history of the war; with preface by the Earl of Rosebery. v 14-17 maps ea *60c Nelson 940.91
(War15-86)

Volumes 1 to 13 were published in 1916. In volume 14 Mr Buchan "begins with General Townshend's surrender, writes of the war in the Levant, of the Russian front, of the battle of Jutland, of Italy's part, and ends on the second battle of Verdun." (N Y Times) Volume 15 deals with Brussilov's offensive and the intervention of Rumania. "The sixteenth volume is devoted entirely to the battle of the Somme. That great achievement is described in five chapters, the first of which is concerned with preliminaries. The appendixes contain Sir Douglas Haig's second dispatch, and General Sitt von Armin's report describing experiences of the 4th German corps during July, 1916." (Ath) "The two main episodes of the seventeenth instalment are the brilliant opening and the disastrous sequel of Roumania's campaign, and the heroic advance of the French at Verdun." (Ath)

"Mr Buchan's account of the great sea-fight is a masterpiece of clear and sober narrative."

+ Ath p551 N '16 200w (Review of v 14)

+ Ath p316 Je '17 70w (Review of v 16)

"Lieut.-Col. Buchan continues, with the same mastery of detail and incisive style, to convert yesterday's news into intelligible history. It would facilitate reference if the year, as well as the month and day, of the event, recorded were printed offener in the margin."

+ Ath p531 O '17 180w (Review of v 17)

"He handles the intricacies of the Balkans with the same quiet clearness that marks his treatment of the attacks on Verdun."

+ N Y Times 22:18 Ja 21 '17 90w (Review of v 14)

"The most striking portion of the work is the lucid account of the battle of Jutland, which is described with an exemplary grasp of essentials. There are several diagrams."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 23 '17 (Review of v 14)

The Times [London] Lit Sup p419 Ag 30 '17 100w (Review of v 17)

BUCHAN, JOHN. Salute to adventurers. *$1.35 (1½c) Doran 17-26974

Altho the story opens in Scotland, its scene changes shortly to Virginia. Young Andrew Garvald goes out to the colonies to engage in trade. His business takes him far away from Jamestown and the tidewater, back into the interior of the country, where he learns more of true conditions than the governor or the young gallants of his train will believe. The sudden outbreak of the Indians does not come to him without warning, and because of this he is able to rescue Elspeth Blair and win the reward of which he had dreamed ever since his first meeting with the girl in Scotland years before.

"Good of its type, but not as good as 'Greenmantle.'"

+ A L A Bkl 14:130 Ja '18

"It is a colorful tale, this, with plenty of action and ingenuity and interest, but it does not rank for a moment with 'Greenmantle,' either in its characters, its setting, or its plot."

+ N Y Times 22:468 N 11 '17 550w

"With its strong Scotch flavor and its tang of hazardous events, the book smacks strongly of Stevenson. . . . Unfortunately, Mr Buchan is open to the criticism of which most prolific writers are deserving. His historical facts and background are not accurate. . . . But, after all, the story's the thing, and inaccuracies of this sort are unimportant in so gripping and adventurous a yarn."

BUCHAN, JOHN—Continued

+ — Springf'd Republican p15 Ja 13 '18 600w

BUCHANAN, FLORENCE. Home crafts of today and yesterday. (Harper's home economics) il *$1 (2½c) Harper 640

17-16903

The author is instructor in handwork in the School of household science and arts, Pratt institute, Brooklyn. "The woman who longs to try something new but feels a bit vague about beginning will find [here] the what, the where, and the how for a variety of crafts. Emphasis is placed on the start rather than on detailing the technical processes, but enough of the latter is always given along with explanatory diagrams to guide a beginner through the piece of work." (Preface) Linen, chair-caning, basket-planning, dyeing materials for and making rugs, weaving, painting and batik dyeing are among the subjects considered.

A L A Bkl 14:80 D '17

"Practical book for the home keeper who wishes suggestions for many kinds of handiwork."

+ Cleveland p114 S '17 30w

N Y Times 22:521 D 2 '17 50w

Quar List New Tech Bks O '17 50w

St Louis 15:365 O '17 10w

BUCHANAN, JOHN YOUNG. Comptes rendus of observation and reasoning. il *$2.25 Putnam 504 (Eng ed 17-18064)

A collection of scientific papers. The author says, "As the title of this volume indicates, the book consists of 'accounts rendered' of work done at different times, in different places and on different subjects." Among the subjects with dates of first publication are: Recent Antarctic exploration (1906); On ice and brines (1887); On steam and brines (1899); The size of the ice-grains in glaciers (1901); Ice and its natural history (1909); On the use of the globe in the study of crystallography (1895); Solar radiation (1901). Some of these are republished from the Proceedings of the Royal society, others from magazines and newspapers.

"Mr Buchanan is a believer in original research in the full significance of the words, including originality in methods and point of view, as well as in the subject dealt with. Unlike his former volume of collected oceanographical papers, this collection consists of a selection on many subjects, scientific and popular, several reproduced from the pages of Nature. The memoirs themselves form solid and informing reading for students; but they are rendered entertaining by the extraordinarily copious analytical table of contents, which occupies thirty pages." H. R. M.

+ Nature 99:142 Ap 19 '17 800w

"A prospective reader who opens this book at the beginning will find a rather dull account of Antarctic exploration as it stood in 1905, with a reprint of chemical and physical notes for the use of explorers, which, however important for their particular purpose, are likely to bore the layman. If he then turns impatiently to the end, he will find some elementary remarks on such fundamental topics as the 'power of Great Britain' or the 'House of commons,' and he may then lay the book aside. But if he has the good luck to open it in the middle, he will probably turn over a good many pages with pleasure and profit; for Mr Buchanan has some interesting and important things to say on a fascinating topic, which makes it the more aggravating that they are presented in so unnecessarily unattractive a guise."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p173 Ap 12 '17 900w

BUCK, ALBERT HENRY. Growth of medicine from the earliest times to about 1800. il *$5 Yale univ. press 810.9 17-5568

"As Dr Buck has chronicled them, there are nine periods in the history of medicine. They are: Primitive medicine to be reckoned by thousands of years; the medicine of the East by which we possess only a fragmentary knowledge; the medicine of the classical period of antiquity; that of the Hippocratic writings which in Greece was the most flourishing period; the period during which the greatest intellectual activity was at Alexandria, Egypt; the medicine of Galen whose searching profoundly influenced the thought and practice of one whole civilized world of medicine up to our seventeenth century; the medicine of the middle ages; the medicine of the renaissance which brought adoption of dissection, the only effective method of studying anatomy; and modern medicine, in two periods, the first to about 1775. The second Dr Buck does not attempt to cover." (Boston Transcript) "The author is consulting aural surgeon of the New York eye and ear infirmary." (St Louis)

"Especially interesting are the chapters on Oriental medicine, The Arab renaissance, and The advance of surgery during medieval times."

+ A L A Bkl 13:432 J1 '17 (Reprinted from the Journal of the American Medical Association 68:1650 Je '17)

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 9 '17 1500w

"The book is not intended for the student of medical history, but for the physician who wishes to become acquainted with the essential phases of that earlier medicine upon which his own theory and practice had been built."

+ Nation 105:155 Ag 9 '17 220w

N Y Br Lib News 4:72 My '17

"Not overburdened with detail, but presents the important facts in an attractive manner."

+ Pittsburgh 22:317 D '17 10w

St Louis 15:142 My '17 10w

"Throughout the volume the reader is impressed by the clearness of Prof. Buck's expression and by the overwhelming mass of facts that have been interestingly assembled."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 15 '17 1550w

"An interesting and thought-provoking volume is this, when the material might easily have been treated as technical and specialized. The history has a social message and this not for the doctor only, but for every one who watches with interest all progress of matters medical." G. S.

+ Survey 39:327 D 15 '17 450w

"Dr Buck claims nothing which is not his own, and credit to authorities is honestly and fairly rendered, wherever due, without the encumbrance of footnotes. The book is printed in beautiful style." F. H. Garrison

+ Yale R n s 7:295 O '17 1050w

BUCKROSE, J. E., pseud. (MRS ANNIE EDITH [FOSTER] JAMESON). Matchmakers. *$1.35 (1½c) Doran 16-21706

Peggy, daughter of the rector of Little Pendleton, is the heroine of this story of English village life. Little Pendleton doesn't always approve of Peggy, but it has her best interests at heart and wants above all to see her make a good match. All the village stands back of the squire in his wooing, but Peggy takes the matter into her own hands, and altho the village is flouted in its aims it isn't crestfallen. It turns squarely about and takes credit to itself for the success of Peggy's marriage with young Charley Tremaine. Peggy's father, the impractical rector, is made a very lovable figure, and the whole story is told with quiet humor.

A L A Bkl 13:266 Mr '17

+ Ath p479 O '16 60w

"Our greatest quarrel with the story lies in the arbitrary way in which the author has surmounted her difficulties in the end. It quite offends our sense of good story telling that with a good situation, instead of finding a way out of it, she should so arbitrarily go around it."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '17 450w

+ N Y Times 22:47 F 11 '17 300w

+ Spec 118:241 F 24 '17 30w

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 8 '17 250w

"A genial, placid portrayal of village life which never excites, but equally never bores and never offends."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p466 S 28
'16 70w

BULLARD, ARTHUR. Mobilising America. *50c
(2½c) Macmillan 355.7 17-10363

The author, having spent much time in France and England during the war, had begun to collect data for a book on "How democracies mobilise." Some of the main points on the subject are summarised in this small book. He says, "I am not considering the ethics of war, nor the advisability of our participation in the present struggle. I accept the fact that we have decided to fight and I try to show how the experiences of other democracies can teach us the way to do it efficiently." (Preface) Contents: America goes to war; Democracies as fighting machines; The mobilisation of public opinion; The mobilisation of industry; The mobilisation of men; A programme.

"His book has the endorsement of a long list of prominent editors and authors, and of the conference committee of national preparedness."

A L A Bkl 13:427 J1 '17

"This is a tiny volume, but it is worth the intelligent perusal of every American citizen. It is sane, thoughtful and constructive. It would be of particular value in any course in government given at our American colleges." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 8 '17 370w
+ Cleveland p77 Je '17 50w
+ Ind 90:185 Ap 21 '17 30w

"One can only hope that the sanity and helpfulness of Mr Bullard's fertile suggestions will not be lost in the maze of Washington officialdom." H. S.

+ New Repub 11:166 Je 9 '17 950w
N Y Br Lib News 4:90 Je '17
+ N Y Times 22:130 Ap 8 '17 830w
+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 10 '17 500w

"Offers many of the practical suggestions which have since come from the visiting French and English commissions as how best to mobilize and conduct the war."

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:182 Je '17 50w

BULLITT, MRS ERNESTA DRINKER. Uncensored diary; from the central empires. *$1.25
(3c) Doubleday 940.91 17-10878

A diary written, the author says, for her great grandchildren, not for publication. She was in Germany with her husband, a newspaper correspondent, in the summer of 1916. A short trip to Belgium and one into Austria-Hungary are recorded in the diary, but it is concerned for the most part with her experiences in Germany. It forms one of the very small number of books which tell us anything of what is going on within the German empire. Informal interviews and conversations with important officials, among them Von Bissing and Zimmermann, are reported, but of no less interest are the accounts of what German women are doing. The book also throws some light on the methods by which Germany is attempting to conserve her child life during war.

+ A L A Bkl 13:391 Je '17
Boston Transcript p14 Ap 7 '17 680w
+ Dial 63:29 Je 28 '17 70w

"The book is markedly good on two counts: It is written with freshness, with cleverness and wholesomeness and real personal charm; and it has things of actual interest and importance to say."

+ N Y Times 22:150 Ap 22 '17 350w
Outlook 116:75 My 9 '17 190w
Pittsburgh 22:528 Je '17 40w
R of Rs 55:551 My '17 80w

BULLOCK, EDNA DEAN, comp. Selected articles on single tax; 2d ed., rev. and enl. by Julia E. Johnsen. (Debaters' handbook ser.) *$1.25 (1c) Wilson, H. W. 336.2 18-397

"Since the first publication of the Single tax handbook a fairly large bibliography on the subject has become available, references to which are included in this revised edition. The handbook is brought down to date by the inclusion of late reprints in the concluding pages, and by a revision and enlargement of the bibliography and brief." (Explanatory note) The first edition, compiled by Edna D. Bullock, was published in 1914. The second edition has been prepared by Julia E. Johnsen.

BÜLOW, BERNHARD HEINRICH MARTIN KARL, fürst von. Imperial Germany; tr. by Marie A. Lewenz. new and rev ed il *$2
(2c) Dodd 943 (17-5549)

This book was first published in Germany as a section in an important general work compiled to commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession of the Emperor William II. A revised edition was separately published in Germany in 1916. The first edition in English was reviewed in the Digest for 1914. "More than one-half of the letterpress of the original volume has been re-written, . . . and the new passages are indicated by brackets. The introduction by Prince Bülow is entirely new, and so are the two chapters on Militarism and the chapter on the Social Democrats, and the latter part of the Conclusion." (Publishers' note) An illuminating foreword of twenty-eight pages is by J. W. Headlam, who speaks of the book as "largely a defence and apology of von Bülow's own action during the years he had held office (1897-1909), and an exposition of the principles by which he had been guided."

"One dollar cheaper than the first edition (Booklist 10:384 Je '14)."

A L A Bkl 13:456 J1 '17

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 22 '17 700w

"It is admirably translated. . . . Written as it is by one who, with the single exception of the German emperor, is more responsible than any other man for the present catastrophe, it is little less than a public duty for everyone who wishes adequately to understand the present situation to read it. Prince Bülow's whole conception of international relations is based upon the terrible chimera of the balance of power, and he obviously considers concerted European action of any kind a fantastic dream. . . . Such was the attitude of Prince Bülow in 1913. The tragedy of this new edition is the fact that not even the terrible experience of the last three years has led him to modify a single conclusion." H. J. Laski

+ Dial 63:16 Je 28 '17 1050w

New Repub 12:83 Ag 18 '17 160w

Reviewed by W. C. Abbott

Yale R ns 6:892 J1 '17 200w

BUNNER, HENRY CUYLER. Poems of H. C. Bunner. new ed il *$2 Scribner $11 17-24881

H. C. Bunner, former editor of Puck, died in 1896. Lately there has arisen a steady demand for his writings, which resulted in the publication, about a year ago, of a new edition of his stories, now followed by his collected poems. "In the present volume are included the contents of the two books of verse he published during his lifetime, 'Airs from Arcady' in 1884, and 'Rowen' in 1892, and also a selection from the 'Ballads of the town' (which he had been contributing to Puck for half-a-dozen years), together with a few of his later lyrics and the . . . lines read before the Army of the Potomac at New London in 1895." (Intro.)

"It is perhaps as a poet," writes Brander Matthews in his introduction to this edition, "that the author of 'Airs from Arcady' is likely longest to be remembered; it is as a poet that he would have chosen to be cherished in men's memories." And his verse met with the same good fortune that befell his fiction; it pleased both the critical and the uncritical. . . . Bunner's

BUNNER, HENRY CUYLER—Continued
name stands for the light, delicate and whimsical. His work in prose and verse is alike beloved for its charm. . . . Among the more serious poems is one, "Bismarck soliloquizes," which is a most fitting expression of men's thoughts today; indeed, nothing more vigorous and condemning has been written by any contemporary poet on the iniquitous system of German autocracy than this poem of Bunner's—written a quarter of a century ago." W. S. B.
+ Boston Transcript p11 O 13 '17 1450w

"Great metrical accomplishment is in these poems. There is such variety in the themes as would be expected of the poet who is also a journalist. Invention often flies on humor's wing. . . . It is a happy sign that the present hour is willing to turn back for inspiration and fine and perfect examples of the lighter lyrical art to the day before yesterday."
+ Springf'd Republican p6 O 18 '17 650w

BUNNER, HENRY CUYLER. Stories. 2v. ll ea
*$1.35 (2c) Scribner v 1 17-13500
v 2 A17-332

Two volumes of the stories of H. C. Bunner were published last year. The addition of two more volumes makes complete a collection of his stories in four books of uniform make-up. The first of the new volumes contains "Short sixes" and The suburban sage; the second, More "Short sixes" and The runaway Browns.

"Good paper and binding, and wide margins."
+ A L A Bkl 13:361 My '17
+ Natlon 104:346 Mr 22 '17 330w

"All these gently satirical tales and the purely humorous ones are more worth while, incidentally, as mirrors of the past, but first and foremost as good short stories." Doris Webb
+ Pub W 91:584 F '17 '17 500w

BURBANK, EMILY. Woman as decoration. ll
*$2.50 (6½c) Dodd 391 17-29164

A book on costume, illustrated with thirty-three plates. The foreword says that the book is intended as a sequel to "The art of interior decoration," by Grace Wood and Emily Burbank. "Having assisted in setting the stage for woman, the next logical step is the consideration of woman herself, as an important factor in the decorative scheme of any setting,—the vital spark to animate all interior decoration, private or public. . . . Contemporary woman's costume is considered, not as fashion, but as decorative line and colour." (Foreword) The book has been planned also to meet the demand for a handbook on costuming for fancy dress balls, etc. The scope of the illustrations ranges from studies of Greek vases to portraits of Mrs Vernon Castle.

"It expounds no philosophy of clothes—it is technical rather than philosophic—and it has no claim to being regarded as 'literature'; and yet one feels that it should be recommended. It teaches the art of using an old weapon in a new cause."
+ Dial 63:530 N 22 '17 190w

Nation 105:612 N 29 '17 60w
N Y Br Lib News 4:182 D '17 90w

BURGESS, GELETT. Mrs Hope's husband. ll
*$1 (4c) Century 17-23049

When Mrs Hope became a well-known novelist and was sought out by many clever people, her husband, an able lawyer, ceased to interest her. He regained her love and his own self-respect by courting her a second time, through letters, under an assumed name. The story is being dramatized by a well-known playwright.

A L A Bkl 14:59 N '17
+ Cleveland p128 N '17 70w

"A delightfully humorous comedy of manners and character."
+ Dial 63:282 S 27 '17 100w

"High-class comedy, graceful, skillful, entertaining, and always clever. Its skillfulness is especially manifest in the artful legerdemain with which the author probes into the depths of the human soul without seeming to be doing more than skimming over its surface."

+ N Y Times 22:322 S 2 '17 550w

"Mr Burgess's humor and satire are delightfully keen; but apart from this he tells a dramatic little tale that provokes a lively sympathy and interest throughout."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 O 7 '17 250w

BURKE, EDWARD. My wife. *$1.50 Dutton
17-23980

This book is the "autobiography of a middle-aged man. Although outsiders show a full appreciation of his wife's looks and good qualities, he imagines that he cherishes a romantic passion for a flame of his boyhood, till the lady in question reappears on the scene after twenty years, and he finds himself disillusioned concerning her."—Ath

"Clever and amusing."

+ Ath p479 O '16 80w

"Mr Burke's feeling for character is almost, if not wholly, as noteworthy as is his quality of humor in the handling of it." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 10 '17 1200w

Dial 64:78 Ja 17 '18 60w

"Mr Burke has turned out a humorous little story that makes excellent reading. Despite its war atmosphere, it is done in the spirit that 'while the big things crash around us, the lives of those of us who are out of it go on much the same.'"

+ N Y Times 22:372 S 30 '17 250w

BURKE, THOMAS. Limehouse nights. *$1.50
(3c) McBride 17-22292

"Limehouse, that district down by the West and East India docks, is not a pleasant part of London, and there is nothing pleasant about any one of the fourteen stories in this volume, each of which has its scene laid in that region. Most of them are grim tales, tales of cruelty, bestiality, horror, and fear." (N Y Times) Contents: The Chink and the child; The father of Yoto; Gracie Goodnight; The paw; The cue; Paryl, the Croucher and the rest of England; The sign of the lamp; Tai Fu and Pansy Greers; The bird; Gina of the Chinatown; The knight-errant; The gorilla and the girl; Ding-Dong-Dell; Old Joe.

"One of the most frankly and brutally realistic books that has appeared in our tongue in a long time. . . . But such a description does not convey the whole truth. The fact is that Burke has cast a glamour over his pages that prevents his stories from being merely studies in the sordid and the morbid. He has seen things with sharp vision and he has etched them just as clearly. But somehow also he makes you feel that he has viewed life with pity and tenderness and loving comprehension." Milton Bronner

+ Bookm 46:15 S '17 1750w

"Not pour les jeunes, these heart-rending stories of London's Chinatown; but for the stalwart reader they are full of cleansing and noble pity and terror. . . . Amid erotomania, satyr and sadists—and if the full meaning of those ghastly terms escapes you, be thankful—he seizes scraps of splendid courage, beauty and pathos. The poor little gifts of those eastern pavements are the undying memory of his book. . . . If you dare to face the human heart as it really is, do not miss 'Limehouse nights.'" C. D. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 18 '17 1150w

"Mr Burke's passing repute comes from the tales of terror which the libraries were compelled to bar from their shelves; but to those who have some respect for the English tongue and for whom Walter Pater has not lived in vain, Mr Burke will always possess an attraction because he has written well his slight sketches of London life. . . . These 'Limehouse nights' appeared in three of the most interesting periodicals of England: the English Review, Colour, and the New Witness." G. V. Seldes

+ Dial 63:65 J1 19 '17 2500w

"He has made a new sensation in war-time England, avid of spicy diversions. Mr Bennett has praised his book, Mr Wells has lauded its 'romantic force and beauty.' . . . There is no fresh note of inspiration here; at best, there is a fresh trick."

— + Nation 105:317 S 20 '17 280w

"The stories are well told, and have their full share of that curious fascination which so often goes hand in hand with horror. And here and there comes a touch of beauty, a glimpse of real love, like a flower growing from a cranny in the rocks. . . . 'The paw' [is] an intensely painful tale of a tortured child—almost too painful to read. . . . Perhaps the best of all the tales in the volume, however, is 'The bird,' a powerful imaginative story, as grim and as brutal and as hideous as its fellows, but with a certain artistic quality which lifts it above them."

N Y Times 22:303 Ag 19 '17 500w

"Taken as a whole, it is one of the books that would better not have been written."

— + Outlook 117:64 S 12 '17 50w

Pittsburgh 22:748 N '17 60w

"The material was so unique that we quarrel with Mr Burke's misuse of it. In place of the steady, equalized light which he should have thrown on that pestiferous spot off the West India Dock-road, he has been content for the most part with flashes of limelight and fire-works. . . . 'The paw' is not a story, but a piece of brutal, horrifying, useless writing."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p464 S 28 '16 750w

BURLEIGH, LOUISE. Community theatre in theory and practice. il *$1.50 (4½c) Little 792 17-25292

A valuable book for students of modern drama which breathes the spirit of the new democracy. The writer in her first chapter quotes a statement of J. R. Sceley's, "Three ties by which states are held together are community of race, community of religion, and community of interest." In the course of a thoughtful examination she shows that in America today we have no community of either race or religion. She concludes that "for a unifying force we must find a living expression of a great common ideal: we must depend upon a community of interest: we must find an institution in which great and small can find expression." The eleven chapters that follow enlarge upon the fitness of the community theatre to perform the desired service and the practical success so far achieved. Mr Percy MacKaye contributes a prefatory letter.

A L A Bkl 14:82 D '17

"The community theatre' treats the drama earnestly and endearingly, though somewhat scrappily, from the point of view of its social qualities and the emotional needs of the community." Algernon Tassin

+ — Bookm 46:347 N '17 130w

Pittsburgh 22:806 D '17 40w

R of Rs 57:168 Ja '18 130w

"Miss Burleigh has produced a rather dull work about an intrinsically keen subject. She fails to recognize the necessary spontaneity of the movement. But her earnestness and enthusiasm cannot fail to win the reader's own sympathy."

+ — Springf'd Republican p8 O 25 '17 1100w

BURNET, JOHN. Higher education and the war. *$1.50 Macmillan 378 (Eng ed 17-18365)

"In his 'Higher education and the war' Prof. John Burnet, now dean of the faculty of arts in the University of St Andrews, deals primarily with the conditions of education in Scotland, but his observations bear none the less on his own university, Oxford, and indeed on our American institutions, to which he makes frequent reference." (Nation) "He states that most of his criticisms were published in 1913 and 'are not, therefore, unduly influenced by the war.' That they have been somewhat influenced thereby is thus admitted; this is the chief way the war comes in, for the work is mainly an appreciative account of the German system of higher education. As such it will be useful if only to show those people who are ignorant of the fact . . . that this system is more completely based on the 'humanities' than that of any other country." (Nature)

"The work of a master in small compass. Written with a delightful limpidity, in a spirit at once shrewd and idealistic, it is full of real knowledge and wise comment as to the working of higher education, not only in England and Scotland, but in Germany, in France, and in the United States."

+ Ath p256 Je '17 1000w

"An important work for educators. . . . The first chapter, on German kultur, should be interesting to many who are not concerned with higher education."

+ Cleveland p108 S '17 40w

"This is a most thorough, sane, and scientific piece of work. . . . This is the best work on education we have seen for a long time." P. J.

+ Int J Ethics 28:289 Ja '18 100w

"Not the least valuable part of the treatise is the lucid description of the actual scheme of studies in the German higher schools and universities, and the impartial analysis of the advantages and disadvantages of the system, with reference to the systems prevailing in Scotland and England. . . . His arguments for the humanities, while neither narrow nor exaggerated, are extremely cogent."

+ Nation 105:98 Jl 26 '17 240w

"Like most other humanists, Prof. Burnet holds that an education based upon the acquisition of knowledge which is of no value in after life is more useful than one based on knowledge which is of permanent value. . . . Prof. Burnet's contentions are not without such discrepancies as are inseparable from the pursuit of a weak line of argument." E. A. Schäfer

— + Nature 99:361 Jl 5 '17 1500w

+ Spec 118:677 Je 16 '17 230w

"He shows a much more intimate knowledge of the details of the German system than do most writers. . . . Perhaps the most valuable part of the book is to be found in the pages in which Professor Burnet shows that, however in appearance the Prussian gymnasium and other schools still continue on the old lines, the action of the Prussian state has really completely changed and warped the whole spirit."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p207 My 3 '17 2050w

BURNETT, FRANCES (HODGSON) (MRS STEPHEN TOWNSEND). White people. il *$1.20 (6c) Harper 17-5128

A little story that touches delicately on the supernatural and evidence of life after death. The heroine, who spends a lonely but happy childhood, in an old feudal castle in Scotland, has a gift of seeing things denied to others. She is grown up when she first learns that her "white people" are not visible to other eyes. To her, thru this power or gift, the dead are not dead, and because of this she is able to bring comfort to others. The story was published in Harper's Magazine, December, 1916—January, 1917.

"Appeared in Harper's Magazine."

+ A L A Bkl 13:315 Ap '17

"Mrs Burnett has not hitherto done anything with so sustained a note of simplicity and sincerity; moreover, she has here employed the brevity that is the test as well as the achievement of art. By this means she has accomplished that rare result, genuine pathos. The delicate, touching beauty of the one love scene, and of the closing chapter, is not paralleled in any of her former writings and is not surpassed by anything in recent fiction."

+ Cath World 105:405 Je '17 250w

"Mrs Burnett's transcendentalism will probably appeal more to 'new thinkers' and the like than to those whose fancies range less freely. In any case one may enjoy its consistent setting, in the purple Scotch Highlands, and the manner of the author's narration."

BURNETT, FRANCES—Continued

+ Dial 62:314 Ap 5 '17 140w

+ Ind 90:299 My 12 '17 40w

+ Lit D 54:1087 Ap 14 '17 170w

"Mrs Burnett is always a sentimentalist, but in this instance develops a difficult theme with a fair measure of restraint."

+ Nation 104:369 Mr 29 '17 200w

"A story, so simple, so natural, so humanly normal and sweet, that it must hold the reader by its sheer lovely closeness to the realities of ordinary life. Its background is exquisitely beautiful. Its theme is mystical. . . . This challenge to the fear of death is a simple story of life."

+ N Y Times 22:53 F 18 '17 500w

+ R of Rs 55:554 My '17 140w

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Mr 18 '17 220w

BURNS, CECIL DELISLE. Greek ideals; a study of social life. *$2 Macmillan (*5s G. Bell & sons, London) 938

"This book is mainly an attempt at an analysis of some Athenian ideals in the fifth century B. C. It is a brief, but lucid survey of Greek social life; of the Athenian religion; of the great festivals, such as the Anthesteria, Panathenaia, Dionysia, and Eleusinia; of the political ideals of Athens; of Greek moral standards; and of the ideals of Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle."—Ath

Ath p313 Je '17 80w

"The chapter on Athenian religion is an illuminating piece of analysis. . . . Mr Burns succeeds in making Greece live again, and this because he is alive himself. . . . He is at his best in his criticism of Greek political thought."

+ + — Ath p397 Ag '17 2000w

+ Int J Ethics 28:293 Ja '18 130w

"To one who is fairly familiar with Greek literature, and has read Mahaffy on Greek life and Frazer on ancient religions, the first part of the book offers nothing new. It has, indeed, the defect of being rather too diffuse for scholars while demanding a little too much from the reader unversed in Greek. . . . With the eighth chapter the discussion acquires a keener interest and a surer appeal; for here a certain psychological acumen with which the author is rather unusually gifted comes strongly into play. The analysis of the Athenian thinker of 'the old school' is both just and humorously acute. . . . In the main an excellent description and a somewhat penetrating analysis of Greek moral ideas, the book is occasionally marred by a certain looseness of statement."

+ — No Am 206:311 Ag '17 1250w

"A discussion of Greek ideals, designed primarily for ordinary readers. It presupposes some acquaintance with Greek history and literature, but not necessarily a knowledge of the language. . . . Mr Burns gives a lame excuse for his silence about the supreme artistic instinct of the Greeks. . . . It is also a pity that he had not more space to deal with their religious contribution to the world's inheritance. . . . Further, he shows little sympathy with or understanding of Christian ideals, and is ready calmly to beg the most colossal questions. . . . Then there are definite errors. . . . Passages suggest that Mr Burns is not primarily a scholar, but a student of politics and morals in other fields who has interested himself in Greece. But they should not blind us to the merits of his book. He has covered much ground in a small compass. He is thoroughly alive himself, and treats Greece like the living force which it is. Most of what he says is indisputably true."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p292 Je 21 '17 1600w

BURNS, ROBERT. Sylvander and Clarinda; the love letters of Robert Burns and Agnes McLehose; ed. by Amelia J. Burr. il *$1.50 Doran 17-29797

A woman, shorn of illusions by a worthless husband, her brilliancy grown hard in the process, looks around for a lover "who will offer his passionate devotions at her shrine in the decent name of friendship which shall offend none of her benevolent friends. . . . She wants a guest who will accommodate himself to the cramped quarters of her heart and warm them with Promethean fire." Burns is the man she chooses and this volume brings together their letters extending over many years. The curious satisfaction which many readers find in the bared intimacies of literary folk shrivels before the larger privilege offered here of getting at Burns's daily life, of seeing at work the quality of genius that gave the world some of its most human poetry.

"To read these letters is to be in the midst of a highly entertaining literary achievement as well as to be witness to a lively exhibition of the greatest of human passions. It is a deep and moving affair while it lasts, but little insight is necessary to discern its transitoriness. . . . It must not be imagined that Cupid is their sole hero. In fact, they plunge more than once deeply into the labyrinths of philosophy and religion." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 10 '17 1700w

Nation 105:642 D 6 '17 40w

"The publishers deserve hearty thanks. The book is edited with care, knowledge, and sympathy, and furnished with an introduction that is an admirable biographical essay in itself."

+ N Y Times 22:448 N 4 '17 800w

+ Springf'd Republican p11 Ja 27 '18 500w

BURR, AGNES RUSH. Russell H. Conwell and his work; one man's interpretation of life. auth ed il \*\$1.35 (1 $\frac{1}{2}$ c) Winston 17-5422

The subject of this biography is widely known as preacher, lecturer and teacher. His is one of those romantic, and essentially American stories of success won against odds. He began life on a rocky New England farm, worked his way thru college, served in the Civil war, prepared himself for the ministry and entered on a life of service that has brought a large measure of success. Dr Conwell's famous lecture, "Acres of diamonds" is reprinted in an appendix.

+ A L A Bkl 13:351 My '17

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 3 '17 650w

"No other man in America, perhaps, has touched individually and helpfully so many lives as has Russell H. Conwell."

+ Lit D 54:1710 Je 2 '17 170w

"The story will inspire many a seeker after education and opportunity, inspire many a servant of humanity and stir the flagging spirits of those who faint by the way. It is a mine of material for illustration, anecdote and quotation." L. A. Walker

+ N Y Call p14 Ap 15 '17 270w

+ N Y Times 22:533 D 2 '17 90w

St Louis 15:186 Je '17 10w

"As he is a sort of national institution, by virtue of his ubiquity on the lecture platform, the general public will be glad to know that an authorized biography has appeared."

+ Springf'd Republican 18 Ap 13 '17 520w

BURROUGHS, EDWARD ARTHUR. Fight for the future; with a foreword by the Archbishop of Canterbury. *Is Nisbet, London

"This is a collection of seven papers of diverse origin and for the most part spoken to audiences of various character. They do not, therefore, present a logical sequence of thought, and there are repetitions of ideas or phrases. But they have a unity of purpose, and it is rather helped than hindered by the emphasis of repetition. The purpose is partly to give some help towards understanding the religious significance of the war, and partly to urge the practical claims of a movement, influentially supported by the leaders of different religious bodies, called 'The league of spiritual warfare.'"—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Reviewed by Bishop Frodsham

+ Sat R 122:sup3 O 14 '16 600w

"An Oxford churchman and scholar has in such a crisis as the present a very definite task before him; and Mr Burroughs is one of those who have done most to show the world what that task is."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p140 Mr 23 '16 1000w

BURROUGHS, EDWARD ARTHUR. Valley of decision. *$1.60 Longmans 940.91 17-15380

"The Rev. E. A. Burroughs, a thoroughgoing British patriot, presents what he calls 'a plea for wholeness in thought and life.' The author says the British people have been convicted through the lessons of the war of fragmentary and haphazard living, and stand in need of a philosophy of life. This philosophy he sees in the religion the British 'have long professed and never yet practiced.' His view is that the war has not disturbed the claims of Christ on the world, but has illustrated and reinforced them; all that remains to be done, he argues, is to acknowledge these claims and act accordingly."

N Y Times

N Y Times 22:88 Mr 11 '17 100w

+ Spec 118:46 Ja 13 '17 1250w

"This is a man who has devoted the enthusiasm of a well-stored mind and an evangelistic spirit to the task of helping and keeping in touch with men and officers—especially undergraduate officers—during their great ordeal at the front. . . . Mr Burroughs has a message based on independent observation, and this gives him an ample right to be heard."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p572 N 30 '16 470w

BURTON, RICHARD EUGENE. Poems of earth's meaning. *$1.25 Holt 811 17-18038

"A midsummer memory," the elegy in memory of Arthur Upson, published by Edmund D. Brooks in 1910, is reprinted as the first number in this volume. It is perhaps Dr Burton's most distinguished piece of work. Other poems, many reprinted from Harper's Magazine, the Atlantic Monthly, Bellman, and other magazines complete the book. Among them are a number that justify the title given to the volume. Such are: The earth mother, Song of the open land, Spring fantasies, Aspects of autumn, etc.

"There is none of the pulsing unrest of the present in these poems, nor the disquieting struggle toward complete revelation which is found so often in the poetry of today. It brings us back quietly but unerringly to a realization of the strength and beauty of that which underlies the present and is the enduring link between the present and past and future. . . . This collection of verse contains the best of Mr Burton's poetic work during the last few years." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 30 '17 1250w
Cleveland p120 N '17 140w

"Professor Burton holds his old course thru his latest volume. He is untouched by recent fantasies of verse form, neither is there here any poem born of the war. Sincere work there is with no straining for emotional or linguistic effect."

+ Ind 92:262 N 3 '17 60w

"There is no appeal for popularity in 'Poems of earth's meaning,' and no high poetic gifts, but a richness of thought foreign to most modern verse."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 S 20 '17 250w

BURY, HERBERT. Here and there in the war area. il *$1.40 (2c) Young ch. 940.91 17-18817

A collection of papers by the Bishop for North and Central Europe. The title is well chosen, as his duties have taken the author to many parts of the war zone. Contents: Our naval division in Holland; With the wounded; "Somewhere in France"; In the trenches and firing line; Has there been a spiritual revival? Prisoners of war; "Manfully"; How the permanent chaplains "carry on"; The way to Russia through

Norway and Sweden; Russia's two capitals; With the bishops, clergy, and people of Russia; "Our gallant Russian ally."

"During his experiences as chaplain on and near the fighting lines in Holland and in France Bishop Bury found the good for which he sought. . . . Without asserting it directly, the good bishop impresses the reader as believing that there has really been a great spiritual revival on the war front. . . . On the German side, also, the spirit has been working, fostered by the German Student Christian federation."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 14 '17 220w

Pittsburgh 22:680 O '17 60w

"He writes very pleasantly, and, if we may judge from this book, has carried everywhere a saving common-sense, unbounded energy, and a cheerful disposition."

+ Spec 118:239 F 24 '17 110w

"His general report on the treatment of prisoners on either side, which partakes of the spirit of optimism, to which we have alluded, will repay study."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p533 N 9 '16 200w

BUTLER, ELLIS PARKER. Dominie Dean. il *$1.35 (2c) Revell 17-18164

"Ellis Parker Butler sympathetically recounts the large difficulties and small triumphs of Rev. David Dean in his lifelong service to a Presbyterian parish in a small Mississippi river town. It is the young minister's first and only charge. . . . Occasional dissensions within the church threaten his dismissal or enforced resignation, but he invariably triumphs in these contests. On one occasion he foregoes a call to a wider and more lucrative field in order to complete the self-imposed task of saving a young man addicted to drink. The story begins before the Civil war days, extends over several decades, and leaves the minister an old man, poor and neglected, but still possessing his childlike optimism and faith."—Springf'd Republican

"Appeared in the Ladies Home Journal."

+ A L A Bkl 14:25 O '17

"There is more than a touch of Mark Twain in its composition, without the spark that vitalizes Twain's narrative."

+ Dial 63:74 JI 19 '17 70w

+ Ind 91:108 JI 21 '17 500w

"We feel the power of 'Our Davy' at home and in the church, and we resent the neglect and the lack of appreciation which he received, but the characters and events which go to make up the story have no vividness; they are neither real nor logically convincing."

+ Lit D 55:42 O 27 '17 200w

"Though Mr Butler's people are by no means badly drawn, they are not sufficiently well drawn to carry a book of this type, a book which depends altogether upon characterization. Even David Dean himself, carefully as he has been studied, does not win as much as he should of the reader's affection and sympathy."

+ N Y Times 22:265 JI 15 '17 300w

"The author makes Dean a lovable, appealing personality, and effectively brings out the injustice of leaving pastors to want in their old age after a lifetime of unselfish service to their congregations. It is a well-told and very interesting story."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 JI 29 '17 350w

BUTLER, NICHOLAS MURRAY. World in ferment. *$1.25 (3c) Scribner 940.91 17-21930

These seventeen "interpretations of the war for a new world" were delivered by the president of Columbia university between September 23, 1914 and June 6, 1917. They, therefore, follow the development of his thought during the years of the great war. In his introduction Dr Butler states: that this "is a war for a new international world and a war for a new international world. It is to be hoped that the new world will come to an understanding with itself about peace. . . . Peace is not an ideal at all; it is a state attendant upon the achievement of an ideal. The ideal itself is hu-

BUTLER, NICHOLAS MURRAY—Continued—man liberty, justice, and the honorable conduct of an orderly and humane society." Given this, a durable peace follows naturally as a matter of course." Among the addresses are: Higher preparedness; Nationality and beyond; Is America drifting? The Russian revolution; The call to service; The international mind: how to develop it; A world in ferment. The book is indexed.

A L A Bkl 14:41 N '17

Reviewed by C. H. P. Thurston

+ Bookm 46:289 N '17 30w

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 29 '17 430w

"He takes refuge in general statements, for the more general your statements the more noble they may be made to seem. His volume, therefore, is interesting not for any interpretation of our time so much as for its revelation of an anachronism—the florid oratorical mind still at work in the years 1914-17."

— Dial 61:39 Ja 3 '18 219w

Ind 91:512 S 29 '17 100w

"It is a tribute to President Butler's essential statesmanship that these papers, delivered under such varying conditions, sustain as well as they do the test of reprinting. Few collections covering a like period contain so much that has proved true and wise, or, being still in the future, is still likely to justify the author."

+ Lit D 55:39 O 13 '17 220w

"The president of Columbia has much skill in phrasing sententious platitudes, especially regarding the moral aspects of business or politics. We commend this volume of addresses to all who feel that they ought to take the world seriously, but who at the same time cannot bring themselves to think very deeply about it."

— Nation 106:69 Ja 17 '18 570w

"President Butler seems enamored of this utopianism of language, by means of which the specific difficulties of a problem are resolved in an elaborate statement of the good effects which will inevitably flow from its perfect solution. In reading President Butler one aches for a specific, quantitative recommendation as one aches at a Debussy opera for a whole tone."

— New Repub 12:251 S 29 '17 500w

"We have gone over these essays carefully, and, though we regret to return empty handed, we must sorrowfully admit that there does not seem to be anything very original or striking in any of them, though perhaps they may be regarded as good, sound, practical common sense, as that rather indefinable quantity is regarded today." Joshua Wanboe

— N Y Call p11 O 28 '17 460w

"His presentation and argument are very interesting. And his repeated warning to the American people that as they move forward in this new direction they must keep in mind their old ideals, is of the highest consequence. There are many suggestions and brief discussions of the means by which the movement of the nations toward closer and more harmonious co-operation can be encouraged and facilitated, so many, indeed, that this idea becomes, especially with reference to America's part in that movement, the dominating note of the book."

+ N Y Times 22:301 Ar 19 '17 800w

"Without any shrinking from grim facts and without any flamboyance of emotional or self-laudatory patriotism, the author makes one see a better future for the world as something real and tangible and within reasonable expectation, and he sets forth the part that this country is to play in helping on the coming of a new and better order, with a clearness and sanity that makes national duty seem near and feasible and attractive."

+ No Am 206:799 N '17 320w

+ Spec 119:329 S 29 '17 750w

"In these days when history is being made and remade in so short spaces of time, a book such as this soon loses whatever initial starting-point it may have adopted, simply for the reason that the events with which it deals are soon left in the background, displaced by newer developments."

— + Springf'd Republican p19 O 14 '17 190w

BUTLER, SAMUEL. Notebooks. new ed *$2 Dutton 824

The book "gives the tang of Butler's personality, and presents in fairly compact form his comment upon man, morality, memory and design, mind and matter, pictures, books, music, cash, religion, travel, truth, translation, etc. . . . He recorded his observations; he tried their effect in conversation; he rewrote them; he drew upon his store for his published books; he collected and indexed them. After his death, his friend Henry Festing Jones sorted and rearranged and expurgated them, and brought them out in 1912. Dutton republishes the volume with a brief appreciative introduction by Francis Hackett."—Nation

A L A Bkl 14:120 Ja '18

"It used to be a boyhood stunt to stand on your hands and see the world upside down. Butler knew the trick well and did a deal of walking on his hands through our world of conventions. His books are integrated visions of the world thus viewed—'The way of all flesh,' of marriage and the family; 'Erewhon,' of the daily life of the English-speaking world; 'Life and habit' and 'Evolution, old and new,' of Darwinism; 'The fair haven,' of Christianity. . . . The 'Note-books,' is a museum of thoughts caught on the wing. . . . To thinking men and women, providing they are not too old in spirit, Butler speaks with vital directness. Not that he formulates a philosophy or solves problems or toms with information. Exactly not that. One does not accumulate; one expands. One does not become a little Butler but a larger self." M. G. Orto

+ Dial 63:106 Ag 16 '17 3100w

+ + — Nation 105:98 Jl 26 '17 400w

Pittsburgh 22:746 N '17 70w

R of Rs 56:104 Jl '17 230w

"Butler was the precursor of the critical and ironical reasoning to which religious and moral conceptions are subjected nowadays by writers of the type of Messrs Shaw and Wells. . . . As an expression of personality, and pungent, individual thinking the 'Notebooks' continue to be worth reading, though the criticism of society, and in particular of the church, is much less effective than in 'The way of all flesh.'"

+ + Springf'd Republican p19 My 27 '17 330w

BYNE, ARTHUR, and STAPLEY, MILORED.

Spanish architecture of the sixteenth century: general view of the Plateresque and Herrera styles. (Hispanic soc. of Am. Pub. no. 109) il *$7.50 (1lc) Putnam 724

17-11801

Spanish renaissance or Plateresque architecture which forms the subject of this book is, the authors say, a distinct product from that "picturesque, semi-Moorish stucco architecture" of Andalusia which was introduced into Spanish America and which is now usually accepted as typically Spanish. The Plateresque style flourished chiefly in Castile and the purpose of this book is "to increase the appreciation of what was done in Castile, to point out its charm, and to give the student some idea of what awaits him in Spain." The book is illustrated with eighty plates and one hundred and forty other pictures in the text.

"This book is stated to be the first to appear on renaissance architecture in Spain. The change from the Plateresque to a more frigid style under the chilling influence of Philip II is well described in chaps. 13 and 14, the latter including an interesting account and an impressive view of the vast and gloomy Escorial."

— Ath p360 Jl '17 150w

"The book is illustrated with eighty full-page plates and 140 text-illustrations and these, without the accompanying inscriptions, give an intimate notion of the richness of the churches, palaces, and houses of Spain. . . . A good many Spanish terms are used but they are all explained and the book is filled with thrilling bits of history. It is a rare addition to the literature of architecture."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 6 '17 370w

"The book must take an honored place in every architectural library with any pretense to completeness. Not only does the volume contain more than two hundred illustrations, but many of these are carefully measured drawings, the value of which, to an architect, is greater than any photograph, however good. The text is historical as regards the style, biographical as regards its most famous practitioners, and critical in the discussion of the more famous buildings." Claude Bragdon

+ Dial 63:17 Je 28 '17 1200w

"The discussion is not at all popular, indeed it is almost severely technical. The unprofessional reader requires at hand a dictionary of architectural terms to gain an adequate comprehension of the volume. . . . The publishers have given us a volume worthy of their reputation, substantially bound in buckram. To own it is a pleasure; to comprehend it, a full recompense for the effort expended."

+ Lit D 54:2006 Je 30 '17 270w

"Their work is a welcome addition to the literature of architecture in a sadly neglected field. The architect who has Prentice's invaluable folio volume of plates and this excellent history to go with it, possesses the material for acquiring an intelligent appreciation of a most interesting phase of the history of the renaissance in western Europe."

+ Nation 105:70 Jl 19 '17 900w

"Its pages are refreshing in their clear revelation of personal contact with the country and race, and of the intimate connection between these and the architecture."

+ N Y Times 22:390 O 7 '17 500w

"A rich find for students of architecture."

+ R of Rs 56:218 Ag '17 130w

* + The Times [London] Lit Sup p295 Je 21 '17 1400w

BYNNER, WITTER. Grenstone poems; a sequence. *$1.35 Stokes 811 17-25234

"Many a glimpse in Mr Bynner's poems localizes the habitation of Grenstone up under the shadow of Mt. Monadnock, but the name symbolizes more than a place in the poet's singing; it is the deification of experience finding love, losing its earthly presence, and gaining above all the indestructible sustenance and faith of realities beyond the world. This is the golden thread upon which all these lyrics are hung."—Boston Transcript

"His love and joy and grief and faith are expressed with much delicacy and spirituality."

+ A L A Bkl 14:85 D '17

"The mistake has been made that poets almost universally make, of putting in much that is ephemeral and irrelevant to the real soul of the book, thus obscuring that precious and intrinsic quality—personality. It is in an epigrammatic lyric, of a peculiar pith and pungency, and often informed with a whimsical humour, that Mr Bynner seems to me to be most wholly himself." J. B. Rittenhouse

+ Bookm 46:440 D '17 930w

"There is the suggestion here of a new Dante and a new Beatrice, in the poet's relation to Celia. . . . Nearly two hundred lyrics, touching upon an infinite variety of moods and subjects, more subtle and simply wrought, more instinct with genuine flashes of lyric beauty, subjective in the best traditional manner of English verse, than any collection produced since the present revival of poetry came into being." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p11 O 6 '17 780w

"Charming and delicate as the poems are, full of whim and fancy and loveliness, they are imbued above all with Bynner's ordered passion for simplicity. It seems to me that he is sometimes almost mathematical in the development of his simplicity. He loves to strike poetic balances and make poetic classifications—almost to replace poetry by a lengthened epigram. My only wish is that he would content himself with being a very good and growing poet, instead of tending to preoccupy himself with a theory. His gift is sufficient, if he will permit it, to stand above theories." Swinburne Hale

+ Dial 64:23 Ja 3 '18 1450w

Ind 92:63 O 6 '17 50w

"A volume overflowing with lyric beauty. Pure and strong passion, a keen sense of melody, epigrammatic deftness of phrase—these are among Mr Bynner's gifts."

+ Lit D 55:32 N 3 '17 360w

"One of the most effective things in the arrangement is the way it builds up to the final 'Behold the man':

Behold the man alive in me,

Behold the man in you!

If there is God—am I not he?—

Shall I myself undo?

I have been awaiting long enough

Impossible gods, goodbye!

I wait no more . . . The way is rough—

But the god who climbs is I.

This last line is humanity's motto today; and its author is one of the leading interpreters of the climbing." Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p16 Ja 15 '18 530w

"Though he has failed in his main purpose, however, it is to be remarked that scattered here and there throughout the book are many charming lyrics quite in his usual satisfying manner. Of these, 'Mercy,' 'An old elegy,' and 'The heart of gold' are particularly fine."

— + N Y Times 22:436 O 28 '17 550w

"He has not, to be sure, the depth of background of Edwin Arlington Robinson and some others. But he now proves himself a genuine poet of beauty."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 18 '17 400w

BYRNE, LAWRENCE, pseud. American ambassador. *$1.35 (1½c) Scribner 17-13818

The publishers say that the author of this novel is an American diplomatist who prefers to write under a pseudonym. The story is told in the first person by a young man who has just been engaged as private secretary to a newly appointed ambassador to one of the European courts. He begins his duties by falling promptly in love with the ambassador's daughter, Kate Colborne, like her father, is wholesomely frank and American, but Mrs Colborne, her step-mother, is one of those Americans who crave social prestige and bow down before a title. An important cablegram from the State department at Washington is stolen from the ambassador's desk. To save her father from possible ruin, Kate engages herself to Comte de Stanlau, the man who seems to hold his fate in his hands. The mystery of the lost cablegram is explained; the ambassador wins a triumph for himself and his country, and Kate's affairs are settled happily for the young man who is telling the story. The background of the story is necessarily indefinite, as the European country concerned is not named.

A L A Bkl 14:26 O '17

"There is a love story running through the book which increases the excitement of its episodes and helps round out the plot. It is well written, and the fine picture it presents of an American diplomat should come at an opportune moment." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 9 '17 950w

Cath World 105:842 S '17 70w

"You rarely see an American man who looks as if he had ancestors. We usually appear to have been made in a hurry." Thus Mr Lawrence Byrne sums up, unconsciously, the fault of his novel."

— Dial 62:528 Je 14 '17 80w

"Comes down to a Zenda story with realistic touches. . . . The American ambassador is the plain, blunt hustler from 'back home,' who drags at each remove a lengthening chain of ignorances and complacencies."

Nation 105:16 Jl 5 '17 150w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BYRNE, LAWRENCE, pseud.—Continued
 "We venture to assert that the writer who signs himself 'Lawrence Byrne' is personally familiar with the ways of embassies. 'The American ambassador' is written with a seemingly inconsidered mastery of small detail that gives the book background, charmingly."
 + N Y Times 22:134 My 20 '17 480w
 + Springf'd Republican p17 Je 3 '17 350w

C

CABELL, JAMES BRANCH. Cream of the jest; a comedy of evasions. *$1.35 (3c) McBride 17-24970

Mr Cabell's story will provide a new sensation for the satiated novel reader. The reader, however, must not be the matter-of-fact sort who has lost faith in human dreams. The pendulum of the story swings leisurely between the two existences of Felix Kennaston. In one, as Kennaston, with two motors and money in four banks, he lives a life that "his body is shuffling thru aimlessly." While in this atmosphere of action and the commonplace, he bores himself and others, including a rather worldly minded, otherwise estimable wife. But as Horvendile, the hero of his own book, the dreamer, "he lives among such gallant circumstances as he had always hoped his real life might provide to-morrow." As a part of his mental diversions, he abandons himself to "delicious and perilous frolics" with Etarre, the heroine of his book, who symbolizes the ageless, deathless ideal of woman. The delicacy of touch and the classic atmosphere of the dream episodes give charm and distinction to the tale.

"People who have a great respect for gas and none at all for moonshine, for whom half-shades are non-existent and dreams mere nonsense, will do well to pass it by."
 + N Y Times 22:380 O 7 '17 400w

"Both for its originality and literary value the book is notable."
 + Springf'd Republican p15 Ja 13 '18 380w

CABLE, BOYD, pseud. Grapes of wrath, il *$1.50 (3c) Dutton 17-13446

Altho Mr Cable's story is based on the battle of the Somme, he warns the reader that it is not to be taken as an authentic historical account. He says, "My ambition was the much lesser one of describing as well as I could what a Big Push is like from the point of view of an ordinary average infantry private. . . . I have tried to put into words merely the sort of story that might and could be told by thousands of our men to-day." Four men, fellow soldiers and close friends, are the heroes of the tale. Three of them are Englishmen, drawn from different social ranks. One is an American.

A L A Bkl 13:448 Jl '17

+ Ath p204 Ap '17 80w

"The story is told in a vigorous, straightforward way without false sentiment or pretentious effort. That no one who starts it will be likely to set it down unfinished is sufficient comment on its worth." R. W.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 9 '17 430w

"As big as its theme and as moving."

+ Cath World 105:551 Jl '17 250w

Dial 62:219 S 13 '17 340w

+ Ind 90:556 Je 23 '17 80w

"So does the great American hymn give title and summing up to this picture of the army of one of our allies, a picture etched with steel in lines of fire and blood and heroism unsurpassed. 'Grapes of wrath' is indeed a memorable book."

+ N Y Times 22:158 Ap 22 '17 700w

Pittsburgh 22:528 Je '17 50w

Pratt p39 O '17 20w

+ R of Rs 55:669 Je '17 60w

+ Spec 118:341 Mr 17 '17 700w

"One who wishes to learn about war as it is fought will do well to read it, for no other among the host of war books explains this phase of it so well or even seeks to."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Je 5 '17 300w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p107 Mr 1 '17 120w

CADE, COULSON T. Dandelions. *$1.50 (1½c) Knopf 17-19507

"'Dandelions' is a first novel. A story of heredity, its thesis seems to be that education, no matter how excellent or how careful, is of little influence when opposed to the force of inherited qualities. The two principal characters in the book are a father and son; the father, Sir Harold Carne, makes idle love to the pretty daughter of the village innkeeper. Later he marries and has a legitimate son, whom we leave as, at about eighteen, he is taking his first step along the road trodden by his father."—N Y Times

"It is a very singular story, with no trace of the characteristics of contemporary fiction. It might have been written in the days of Fielding, although fortunately it is of a reasonable length. The average reader of 'best sellers' and 'glad' books may turn from 'Dandelions' with signs of ennui. But its publisher as well as its author are to be sincerely congratulated. It has distinguished literary merit."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 1 '17 400w

"There is charm and to spare in the pictures of English country life that are presented in dissolving succession. But the machinery of Mr Cade's narrative rumbles and groans too audibly at too frequent intervals; the plot is superficial, even flimsy, and the characterization shallow."

+ Dial 63:403 O 25 '17 180w

"A story of odd and vaguely reminiscent flavor—Peacockian, if we were to give it a name. Its quaint style, its sly humor, recall the author of 'Headlong hall' and 'Gryll grange.' It is all mildly amusing, and a trifle wicked, ending on a note of what on the whole deserves to be called malice rather than irony."

Nation 105:149 Ag 9 '17 140w

"The descriptions of the English countryside are very much the best part of the book—far better than the dialogue, which is often 'bookish' rather than natural, or the story, which is not particularly interesting. This new writer is not without gifts, but he should learn to restrain his tendency to verbiage."

+ N Y Times 22:266 Jl 15 '17 400w

"The one thing lacking in Mr Cade's novel is a point of view. . . . We are offered neither a moral idea nor a wholly consistent tale. Otherwise this is a well-written and amusing book. . . . Mr Cade's work will be worth watching. He can put colour into it without letting it get loud; he likes a dash of oddity, but keeps his people human."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p32 Ja 18 '17 600w

CADY, MRS BERTHA LOUISE (CHAPMAN), and CADY, VERNON MOSHER. Way life begins. (Serial pub. no. 85) il $1 Am. social hygiene assn. 570 17-4856

This introduction to sex education, intended for parents and teachers, regards nature study as the logical means of approach to the subject. Dr William Freeman Snow in his foreword, says that the book has been prepared to meet the demand for "a simple, scientifically accurate book on the subject of the way plant, animal, and human life begins, written in an interesting, non-technical way, and with adequate illustration." The arrangement of material is shown by the table of contents: The deeper meaning of nature study; The lily; The moth; The fish; The frog; The chick; The rabbit; The child; Nature study and the personal problems of life. The book is illustrated with nine plates and other figures in the text.

"The last chapter on 'Nature study and the personal problems of life' is a sane summing up of the attitude the parent or teacher ought to take toward this important subject."

+ A L A Bkl 13:335 My '17

+ Ind 92:559 Mr 28 '17 50w

Pratt p13 O '17 30w

"The tone is sweet and constructive—spiritual, in the finest sense of the word. One is pretty well justified in saying that while it is not the only useful and commendable book in its field, it is beyond any question the best." J: P. Gavitt

+ Survey 38:423 Ag 11 '17 500w

CAFFIN, CHARLES HENRY. How to study architecture. il *$3.50 (2½c) Dodd 720.9 17-24868

This book is an attempt, by an art critic, "to trace the evolution of architecture as the product and expression of successive phases of civilisation." (Sub-title) Each chapter, or group of chapters, on the architecture of a period, is preceded by a chapter on the civilization of which it was a product. Book 1 is introductory; the remaining six books deal respectively with the pre-classic, classic, post-classic, Gothic, renaissance, and post-renaissance periods of architecture. There is a two-page bibliography, which follows the glossary and index. The book is illustrated with numerous plates.

"Each type is well illustrated."

+ A L A Bkl 14:48 N '17

"A good handbook is a valuable and welcome addition to the understanding of a given art, and Mr Caffin's work in this case is well done and has the virtue of being readable and not a bore. He is, from long practice, an essayist on this and similar themes who knows how to write and so spares us the ennui which is immemorably associated with works of reference. In his statement as to what has been done and is doing of late years in the United States, it would seem as if the treatment were a little sketchy, because it is centered in New York city." R: Burton

+ — Bookm 46:479 D '17 450w

Dial 63:527 N 22 '17 500w

"The field covered is so wide . . . that a certain congestion of statement was, perhaps, inevitable. . . . By its inclusiveness and the abundance of its modern material it fills an empty place in the literature of its subject."

+ — N Y Times 22:368 S 30 '17 190w

"To teachers and students the cohesion shown between art principles and their historical manifestations has particular value, and to readers generally the subject and its treatment provides the appeal of romance as well as instruction and an opportunity to develop critical appreciation."

+ School Arts Magazine 17:274 F '18 310w

CAHAN, ABRAHAM. Rise of David Levinsky. *$1.60 (1c) Harper 17-23760

In this novel, a Russian Jew who came to America in 1885, at the age of twenty, tells his own story. About eighty pages deal with ghetto life in Russia, the rest of the action passes in America. Though he has been educated in a Talmudic seminary, David tries first to earn a living in New York as a peddler. Failing in this, he becomes an operator in a clothing factory, with the idea of earning enough money to put himself through the City college. An accident changes his dream and he starts out as a manufacturer in the business he has now learned. He steals designs, cheats the union and indulges in other dishonest business practices; but he makes his pile. The story of his relations with various women is given, and especially with the three he loved: Matilda, his first love; Dora, the wife of his friend, Max Margolis; and Anna Tevkin, socialist daughter of a Hebrew poet. David does not marry, and we leave him at the end of the story sensitive, sensual, desperately lonely, finding business "good sport," but confessing that there is one thing which he craves and "which money cannot buy—happiness." The story is marred by occasional vulgarities. The author is the editor-in-chief of the Jewish Daily Forward and is the author of "Yekl, a tale of the New York ghetto" and other works.

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Bookm 46:338 N '17 100w

"As he approaches sixty, Mr Cahan gives us this solid, mature novel, into which are compacted the reflections of a lifetime. The vanity of great riches was never set forth with more searching sincerity. . . . As a matter of biography, he is a child of Russian literature. And that is why his novel, written in faultless English, is a singular and solitary performance in American fiction." J: Macy

+ Dial 63:521 N 22 '17 1750w

Nation 105:432 O 18 '17 500w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Nation 105:600 N 29 '17 150w

"One of the most impressive novels produced in America in many a day." R. B.

+ New Repub 14:31 F 2 '18 650w

"The tale of Levinsky is, incidentally, the tale of the cloak industry in this country; of the methods by which a dominating personality achieves his financial success. But its revelations in this regard are as far from mere muck-raking as are Cahan's pictures of the cloak makers from mere propaganda. . . . It is written with a clarity that is French, a chaste realism that is Russo-Yiddish, and a deep human insight that render it universal." Isaac Goldberg

+ N Y Call p15 S 23 '17 700w

"No phase of modern life betrays the cheapness and shams of capitalistic culture more strikingly than does the literature of today. Happily, however, there are some few exceptions, and Cahan is one of these. His 'Rise of David Levinsky' is not a commodity, but a piece of art, full of life's unvarnished truths."

+ N Y Call p15 O 7 '17 1500w

"The rise of David Levinsky' is not a pleasant book, nor is David himself an especially likeable or appealing individual. His very soul is stripped bare before us; we know him intimately, but it cannot be said that to know him is to love him. Yet he often excites our pity."

The dominant quality in this novel is the effect it gives of being altogether real. Whether the scene be laid in the Russian ghetto or the big expensive hotel in the Catskills where rich Jews congregated, whether it is in the Division street factory or David's fine place on Fifth avenue, this sense of reality is always present. . . . In this story of 'The rise' of one individual is pictured the development of an entire class, as well as of what has become one of the great industries of the country."

N Y Times 22:341 S 16 '17 1200w

"As a story for the story's sake the novel is much less important than as a study of a people whose qualities and experiences are to be increasingly important in American life."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 O 28 '17 550w

"Had the book been published anonymously, we might have taken it for a cruel caricature of a hated race by some anti-Semite. It will be taken by an already critical outer world as a picture of Jewish life in general. It really is not." K. H. Claghorn

— + Survey 39:260 D 1 '17 350w

CALHOUN, ARTHUR WALLACE. Social history of the American family from colonial times to the present. 3v v 1 $5 Clark, A. H. 392.3 17-23329

"The first volume of 'A social history of the American family' devotes a chapter to sexual codes and customs in the European countries which furnished colonists to the new world and then traces their modification and development in the thirteen English colonies down to revolutionary times." (Ind) "Three volumes are contemplated, the second bringing the history through the Civil war period; the third focussing its attention on the present generation." (Cath World)

"In addition to the value of this material as social history, all of it makes the most interesting reading, and some of it is unsurpassed as the richest kind of humor." F. W. C.

+ — Boston Transcript p11 N 28 '17 750w

"Dr Calhoun, despite his avowed intention not to exaggerate in this direction, does, we think, lay too much stress at times on the 'economic interpretation' of life. . . . But on

CALHOUN, ARTHUR WALLACE—Continued the whole, Dr Calhoun is clear-sighted and open-minded. He has, for instance, the courage to show what dire fruits the reformation and the loose moral teaching of Luther have borne to the world."

+ — Cath World 106:263 N '17 350w

"The volume shows evidence of great research and contains a full bibliography."

+ Ind 32:193 O 27 '17 60w

"The publishers have given an excellent page on attractive and substantial paper in a serviceable cover."

+ Lit D 55:43 N 17 '17 500w

"American history is being rewritten by the scientific historians, and this volume is a valuable addition to the rich contributions that have been made in recent years." James Oneal

+ N Y Call p15 N 11 '17 1100w

CALHOUN, DOROTHY DONNELL, Princess of Let's Pretend. il *$1.50 Dutton 16-25148

"The first story is called 'The story of the enchanted leg'; it tells how a fairy came to Gert van Vent and took charge of his wooden leg, thus bringing happiness to his daughter. 'Daemon and Pythias' relates the old legend in terms of childhood. 'The merry monarch' makes a cobbler king for the day to the great amusement of the court. . . . 'The princess of Let's Pretend' contains several other stories, touching on a variety of subjects. Even a baseball story adorns the volume."—N Y Times

"The illustrations are novel, being photographs chosen from moving picture films; but their realism will disappoint the childish imagination, which can far more aptly picture its own fairy world."

+ — Cath World 105:556 J1 '17 60w

"A delightful collection of stories. They are simply told and sure of entertaining the little folk."

+ N Y Times 22:224 Je 10 '17 170w

"Obviously intended for children from eight to ten or twelve."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 My 13 '17 150w

CALKINS, GARY NATHAN. Biology. 2d ed rev and enl il $1.80 Holt 570 17-25304

"In the present edition, although there is no change in the method by which the subject of biology is developed, there are many changes in the text, some parts being condensed, others elaborated, in the interest of clearness. Apart from verbal improvements throughout the book, the most important alterations and additions have been made in connection with the subjects of fermentation and enzyme activities; the significance of conjugation; plants, the food of animals; photosynthesis; circulation in the earthworm; and immunity. Three figures in the first edition (numbers 6, 21, and 39) have been replaced by more instructive illustrations, and in all cases where necessary, the legends have been amplified. The glossary, which was introduced with the second printing of the first edition, is considerably enlarged, and a bibliography added." (Preface to the second edition)

+ Educ R 55:79 Ja '18 30w

CALVERT, MRS AMELIA CATHERINE (SMITH), and CALVERT, PHILIP POWELL. Year of Costa Rican natural history. il *$3 Macmillan 508.728 17-6345

"The primary concern of the authors in visiting Costa Rica was a study of dragon flies with reference to their seasonal distribution. The book has little to say on that subject, however, because their investigations along that line are not completed. It is devoted mainly to the little republic itself. Describing the daily life in town and country, the authors always have a quick eye for its trees, plants, and animal and insect life."—N Y Times

"It is abundantly illustrated and will interest tourists and students of general and commercial conditions. Bibliography (30p.)."

+ A L A Bkl 13:381 Je '17

"Here lies the drawback of the book; although so full of information, there are but few chapters to be enjoyed by the general reader, who, taking the detail, much of which is unavoidably technical, for granted, would relish some more comprehensive generalised descriptions as characteristic of the country."

+ — Nature 100:323 D 27 '17 650w

N Y Br Lib News 4:59 Ap '17

"The result of their observations is set forth with a skill and all-embracing perception only possible to writers who are able to catalogue definitely in their minds what has come under their notice. It is all told in an impressive volume of 577 pages."

+ N Y Times 22:196 My 20 '17 190w

Pittsburgh 22:655 O '17 30w

"The style in which this almost inexhaustible store of material has been presented renders the book readable throughout."

+ R of Rs 56:216 Ag '17 330w

St Louis 15:140 My '17

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 2 '17 250w

CAMBRIDGE history of American literature. 3v v 1 *$3.50 (3c) Putnam $10.9 (17-30257)
v 1 Colonial and revolutionary literature; Early national literature: Part I.

The Cambridge history of American literature, edited by William Paterfield Trent, of Columbia, John Erskine, of Columbia, Stuart P. Sherman, of the University of Illinois, and Carl Van Doren, headmaster of the Brearley school, will be complete in three volumes. Volume 1 covers Colonial and revolutionary literature and Early national literature, part I, ending with a study of Emerson. The distinctive features of the work as a whole are enumerated by the editors: "(1) It is on a larger scale than any of its predecessors. . . . (2) It is the first history of American literature composed with the collaboration of a numerous body of scholars from every section of the United States and from Canada; (3) It will provide for the first time an extensive bibliography for all periods and subjects treated; (4) It will be a survey of the life of the American people as expressed in their writings rather than a history of belles-lettres alone." (Preface) As in the "Cambridge history of English literature," the bibliographies, arranged at the close, are extensive.

Boston Transcript p8 N 17 '17 1200w

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 8 '17 730w

"A chapter on transcendentalism by Professor Goddard, of Swarthmore college, is one of the best pieces of work in the volume. . . . Now that the foundations of the history are laid, perhaps the superstructure will exhibit a lighter and more attractive aspect. One would welcome a smaller measure of compilation and a larger manifestation of the critical and the appreciatory."

+ — Dial 63:646 D 20 '17 340w

"Tho the chapters on Franklin and Emerson are very well done, perhaps the most delightful chapter in the whole volume is that on Washington Irving, by Major George Haven Putnam."

+ Lit D 56:34 Ja 12 '18 380w

"A valuable, comprehensive, and from beginning to end a most interesting book. Emphasis must be laid upon the care and detail which the authors and editors have devoted to the early literature of our land. 'The Cambridge History of American literature' is a book of the utmost importance."

+ + — N Y Times 22:497 N 25 '17 1500w

+ Outlook 117:653 D 19 '17 90w

+ R of Rs 57:216 F '18 170w

"The editors have plainly worked in harmony, and, what is more, they have plainly tried to harmonize the work of their contributors. In one or two of the chapters there is excessive individualism in the interpretation; and even a few foolish statements can be found. But, in the main, the contributors have worked upon a basis of facts and have sought to study the relations between facts. It is to be regretted where so much space is devoted to bibliographies, that they are less exhaustive than cooperative scholarship might make them."

+ — Springfd Republican p19 D 2 '17 1600w

CAMBRIDGE history of English literature; ed. by A. W. Ward and A. R. Waller. 14v v 13-14 ea *$2.75 (1½c) Putnam 820.9 (7-40854)
v 13-14 Nineteenth century.

The thirteenth volume continues the history of the nineteenth century, begun in volume 12. Among the studies contributed to the volume are: Carlyle, by J. G. Robertson; The Tennysons, by Herbert J. C. Grierson; Robert Browning and Elizabeth Barrett Browning, by Sir Henry Jones; The prosody of the nineteenth century, by George Saintsbury; Nineteenth-century drama, by Harold Child; Thackeray, by A. Hamilton Thompson; Dickens, by George Saintsbury; The Brontës, by A. A. Jack. Volume 14 completes the trilogy of the nineteenth century and brings the work as a whole to a close. It has chapters on: Philosophers; Historians, biographers and political orators; The growth of journalism; The literature of science; Anglo-Irish literature, etc. There is also a chapter by W. Murison on Changes in the language since Shakespeare's time.

"Volume 14 has especially noteworthy articles on the growth of journalism and on literature in the English colonies."

+ A L A Bkl 13:340 My '17 (Review of v 13 and 14)

"A grim and militant provincialism is the presiding spirit of the volumes. Only so can one explain the fact that Newman is mentioned only in scattered references and nowhere treated as the great master of prose that he was, that Meredith's 'Modern love' is slurred over as unimportant, and that the treatment of Patmore's later verse ('The toys,' 'Magna est veritas,' etc.), of Henley, and of Pater is brief and grudging." Ludwig Lewisohn

— Dial 62:473 My 31 '17 1700w (Review of v 13 and 14)

"Mr Robertson treats in too cursory and perfunctory a fashion the question of the historical value of Carlyle's historical works, nor does the bibliography supply this lacuna. . . .

In any general survey of the progress of historical studies in England during the nineteenth century there are two facts which ought to be clearly stated and adequately emphasized, viz. the opening of the national archives to historians and the revival of the study of history in the universities. They are suggested and referred to, but not given sufficient importance. . . . Instances might be noted in which the selection of one writer rather than another seems difficult to explain, but carping criticism of details is an ungrateful task, where in the main there is agreement." L.

+ — Eng Hist R 32:447 Jl '17 850w (Review of v 13 and 14)

"The bibliographies in themselves form probably the most valuable book-record of the subject in print."

+ Ind 90:215 Ap 28 '17 500w (Review of v 1-14)

"With such names as Robertson, Grierson, Saintsbury, and Jack, it can be assumed that the present volume reaches the high level normal to this authoritative series."

+ Lit D 54:768 Mr 17 '17 250w (Review of v 13)

+ Lit D 54:1429 My 12 '17 280w (Review of v 14)

"But there is much more in the volume that will interest men of science than the single chapter which is specifically devoted to the literature of science. The whole volume is full of interest. A chapter on the changes in the language since the time of Shakespeare, by Mr W. Murison, may be commended to all those who are interested, as all of us ought to be, in the literary exposition of scientific work."

+ — Nature 100:141 O 25 '17 1100w (Review of v 14)

+ N Y Times 22:97 Mr 18 '17 950w (Review of v 13 and 14)

"The editors have chosen for their collaborators writers who know how to be scholarly without being pedantic; and they have allowed a fair modicum of personal equation to pass the editorial pencil unchallenged. Nevertheless, one feels, more in some chapters than in others, a sense of restraint, as tho the critic had checked himself on the verge of giving expression to his full thought." F. T. Cooper

+ Pub W 91:591 F 17 '17 750w (Review of v 13)

"It is a miscellany of both brilliant and careless workmanship, and its value will depend largely upon the individual reader's interpretation of what is meant by history."

+ — R of Rs 56:103 Jl '17 180w (Review of v 14)

St Louis 15:151 My '17 (Review of v 14)

"The chapters devoted to the literature of the Dominions from the freshness of their matter and their treatment, are among the most enthralling in the book."

+ Sat R 123:438 My 12 '17 1650w (Review of v 13 and 14)

"Most of the contributors have taken pains to be accurate in their statements of fact even if their criticisms often provoke dissent. The very lengthy bibliographies add much to the value of the work for purposes of reference."

+ Spec 118:210 F 17 '17 180w (Review of v 13 and 14)

"If the volume fails to make a unified impression, one is glad to take it for what it is—a collection of interesting and sometimes important papers by men well qualified to speak of their respective subjects. But the drawback of the method is not to be overlooked."

+ Springfd Republican p15 Ja 28 '17 1100w (Review of v 13)

"A newspaper man will relish the chapter on 'The growth of journalism,' by J. S. R. Phillips, editor of the Yorkshire Post, a model of condensation and good judgment. But the public as a whole may be more interested in the well-written and well-reasoned chapter on English-Canadian literature by Pelham Edgar, professor of English literature in Victoria college, University of Toronto."

+ Springfd Republican p6 Mr 19 '17 1350w (Review of v 13)

The Times [London] Lit Sup p10 Ja 4 '17 120w (Review of v 13 and 14)

"In conclusion we must regretfully congratulate Professor Robertson, Mr Hamilton Thompson, and Sir Adolphus Ward on being the only authors in this volume with a right sense of the historian's responsibility; they alone have completed their own bibliographies. 'G. A. B,' who is wholly or partly responsible for the rest, cannot be said to have attained a satisfactory level in the more difficult subjects."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p54 F 1 '17 1600w (Review of v 13)

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p78 F 15 '17 1650w (Review of v 14)

CAMMAERTS, ÉMILE. Through the iron bars (Two years of German occupation in Belgium). Il *75c (3½c) Lane (Eng ed 6d) 940.91 17-22575

"It is the plain matter-of-fact story of Belgian life under German rule. . . . The German occupation of Belgium may be roughly divided into two periods: Before the fall of Antwerp, when the German policy, in spite of its frightfulness, had not yet assumed its most ruthless and systematic character; and, after the fall of the great fortress, when the yoke of the conqueror weighed more heavily on the vanquished shoulders, and when the Belgian population, grim and resolute, began to struggle to preserve its honour and loyalty and to resist the ever increasing pressure of the enemy to bring it into complete submission and to use it as a tool against its own army and its own king. I am only concerned here with the second period. . . . My heroes risk their lives, but they are not soldiers, merely prosaic 'bourgeois' and workmen. They have no weapon, they cannot fight. . . . They can only oppose a stout heart, a loyal spirit, and an ironic smile to the persecutions to which they are subjected." (Chapter 1) Seven cartoons by Louis Raemaekers are reproduced.

CAMMAERTS, ÉMILE—Continued

+ A L A Bkl 14:122 Ja '18

"In these pages we have vivid, searching descriptions of and protests against the unwarrantable vandalism of the Teuton soldiery. It is a sad document, illumined by fires of devoted heroism."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 1 '17 160w

"The evident restraint of passion is not its least virtue."

+ Nation 105:672 D 13 '17 170w

Pittsburgh 22:826 D '17 20w

+ R of Rs 56:549 N '17 110w

"M. Cammaerts describes very clearly the successive phases of Belgium's martyrdom under the rule of an enemy who has by turns attempted to cajole and to intimidate her. He says that the German pro-Flemish agitation has been a complete failure, as the Flemish-speaking Belgians saw through the enemy's intrigue."

+ Spec 118:616 Je 2 '17 70w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p203 Ap 26 '17 70w

CAMP, CHARLES WADSWORTH. Abandoned room. il $1.35 (2c) Doubleday 17-29177

This story of two mysterious murders is by the author of the "House of Fear." These murders take place at "The Cedars" in a bedroom where many Blackburns have died reluctantly and which has been unused for a number of years. Who murdered Silas Blackburn and the detective, Howells? Was it Katherine Ferrine, who lived with her uncle? Or Bobby Blackburn, that "damned waster," his grandson? Or Carlos Paredes, Bobby's Panamanian friend, who was always harping on the supernatural? The secret is well kept, and the solution of the mystery a most unexpected one.

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Bookm 46:342 N '17 20w

"The author succeeds to an unusual degree in inducing in the reader that peculiar creepy feeling associated with deeds of darkness and the supernatural. Nevertheless, the characters are very human, present-day people and the romance of Bobby and Katherine lends a welcome touch of tenderness."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 26 '17 320w

"Mr Camp's new mystery story is one of those tales which keep the reader on the alert, leading him on from one apparently inexplicable occurrence to another, and leave him in the end with a feeling of mingled disappointment and annoyance."

+ N Y Times 22:491 N 25 '17 220w

"Mr Camp makes such effective use of the supernatural manifestations that the reader has frequent attacks of goose flesh. The story is rather superior to the general run of its type, but the type is not distinguished."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 D 2 '17 250w

CAMP, CHARLES WADSWORTH. War's dark frame. il $1.35 (2½c) Dodd 940.91 17-15964

These Impressions of life in France, Flanders, and England in wartime picture the home conditions of the man at the front as well as his life in the trenches. The author is a war correspondent whose tour apparently took place during the winter of 1916-17, and who was many times under shell fire.

A L A Bkl 14:52 N '17

"One notices the changed attitude in this book from the journalistic flippancy that used to be encountered in the earlier war-books. The continued strain is beginning to tell not only upon officers and men, but in the literature of the war. It is a serious business, which nevertheless has its virtues and its lighter sides. All are reflected with great fairness and sincerity by this thoroughly competent correspondent and author."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 30 '17 320w

"An account of the darker side of the war told with an economy of words which makes it singularly moving."

+ Cleveland p101 S '17 60w

"His conversational way of mingling fact and fancy makes a decidedly readable, though light, book."

+ Nation 105:181 Ag 16 '17 130w

"It is intimate touches that make the book unique, and which will probably cause it to become more popular than many another much more pretentious volume. The fourteen illustrations, all from photographs, have the added value of showing people as well as places."

+ N Y Times 22:294 Ag 12 '17 500w

CAMPBELL, FRANCES (WEED) (MRS GEORGE CAMPBELL). Book of home nursing. il $1.25 Dutton 610.7 17-21895

"A practical guide for the treatment of sickness in the home. . . . While the subject matter is in the main such as would be found in any practical book dealing with the problems of sickness and nursing, there are included many original ideas in the care of patients that have been used with great success by Mrs Campbell." (N Y Call) "The author is a trained nurse who writes out of the knowledge gained in actual experiences. One very useful chapter is called: How to keep well." (R of Rs)

+ N Y Call p15 O 28 '17 270w

"If you are intending to work in the war hospitals, this book will prove invaluable and serve as a solid foundation for specialized training."

+ R of Rs 56:555 N '17 50w

"Writing in an easily readable style with now and then a little flash of humor, Mrs Campbell has brought together simple every day facts that should be of great value to one who, unused to the profession of nursing, is suddenly forced to think and plan for the comfort of an invalid." J. E. Hitchcock

+ Survey 39:170 N 17 '17 230w

CAMPBELL, JAMES MANN. New thought Christianized. $1 (3½c) Crowell 131 17-13825

This book discusses "the law of suggestion, fear and its antidotes, the folly of worry, repose and how to get it, health and religion, true optimism, the power of initiative, self-control versus divine control, the higher environment, etc."—R of Rs

N Y Br Lib News 1:111 Ji '17

"These cults lack an essential element of Christianity. They affirm man's self-sufficiency apart from God, of whom, man's indispensable source of sufficiency, they affirm little or nothing."

Outlook 116:451 Ji 18 '17 70w

"Dr Campbell is in agreement with Dr Dresser in fundamentals. . . . This is an excellent book for the orthodox Christian who wants to come over into the New thought camp without the loss of one jot of his Christianity."

+ R of Rs 56:106 Ji '17 140w

CAMPBELL, MAURICE VIELE. Rapid training of recruits. $1 Stokes 355 17-29354

"A practical scheme for quick results in training the national army, based on the definite record of what has been actually accomplished in England. The aim is to give the recruit instructor in America cantonnments a thoroughly tested plan for whipping his men into shape speedily. A typical day's work is minutely outlined, lectures are suggested, in fact every detail necessary to an intensive program is fully treated. The book is as useful to the recruit himself as to his instructor."—Publishers' note

+ R of Rs 57:102 Ja '18 50w

CANBY, HENRY SEIDEL; PIERCE, FRED-ERICK ERASTUS, and DURHAM, WILLARD HIGLEY. Facts, thought, and imagination. *$1.30 (1c) Macmillan 808

17-19155

A book on writing, prepared for the use of second year college students. It is assumed that the students have been taught "all they can absorb of unity, coherence and emphasis" and are now ready to write. Part one of the book consists of theoretical discussion and is made up of three chapters on writing: Facts, by Frederick Erastus Pierce; Thought, by Henry Seidel Canby; and Imagination in the service of thought, by Willard Higley Durham. "These essays," the authors say, "not only give instructions for writing, but also, directly or by implication, suggest an abundance of subjects." The remainder of the book is given up to selections, arranged in three groups to accompany the three chapters, and chosen from the work of modern writers. The authors are members of the department of English, of Sheffield scientific school, Yale university.

CANNAN, GILBERT. Mendel; a story of youth. *$1.50 (1c) Doran 16-23586

Mendel Kähler is a young Austrian Jew who grows up in the East End of London. He is the youngest child of his parents and the best loved, and his early leanings toward art are fostered, altho humble Jacob and Golda, intent only on getting on in the world, cannot understand them. The story is concerned with Mendel's progress in art, his life in London's Bohemia, his association with his artist friends and his love for Greta Morrison. He is a child of the city and he loves it, its squalor and filth and noise. As an artist he paints it, coming in time to adopt the new modern methods of treatment. Greta Morrison belongs to the country. Her delights are in deep woods and wet meadows. Their love is a conflict, but while the book leaves their story unfinished, it gives the impression that their need for one another must conquer all differences.

"Gilbert Cannan, in his new book, has hardly maintained the high standard that he has set for himself in some of his earlier work. There is too much of the flavor of George Moore, particularly of 'Lewis Seymour,' in it, and a good deal of Jean Christophe, and dish-water. . . . It must be said, however, that the character drawing is fearless and generally consistent."

+ Bellman 22:278 Mr 10 '17 250w

"There is a good deal of dinginess in the chronicle, the dinginess of egotism, of drink, and of sex." H. W. Boynton

Bookm 45:204 Ap '17 650w

"Mr Cannan's is so expert a hand at hard realism that we again and again regret his frequent excursions into the field of grotesque fantasy and violent eroticism. . . . It must be obvious by this time to anyone who has followed Mr Cannan's work as a novelist that he is obsessed by the idea that sex and nothing but sex should form the background of a novel. . . . His entire atmosphere reeks with eroticism. . . . And intermingled is a persistent jargon about art which gives us little knowledge of the subject and that fails to convince us of Mendel's genius." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 F '17 1400w

"The book is unreserved, but the naturalism is subordinated to the fine characterization of a Jew and an artist, and therein Cannan does for his genius what Theodore Dreiser fails to do for his; that is, he gets above the merely material plane and shows how lower values are transmuted into higher."

+ Cleveland p87 Jl '17 120w

Reviewed by John Macy

Dial 62:357 Ap 19 '17 350w

"In long dissertations on art between Mendel, and Logan, and other art-students, we cannot forget that they were only callow youths with more enthusiasm than brains. In his ups and downs we get quite an insight into the 'new art' of Van Gogh, Gauguin, and Cézanne. . . . The author is overstocked with material. . . . He is too diffuse."

+ Lit D 54:1088 Ap 14 '17 270w

"It is an exceedingly candid picture of life, and a remarkable portrayal of an interesting and significant character—the real person that I have met in fiction for years. . . . There is something new happening in fiction; and this is it." F. D.

+ Masses 9:28 My '17 700w

"As' usual, Mr Cannan has found plenty of spades here to be called by name, but we never suspect him of pursuing grossness for its own sake. The narrative is hardly a 'story,' it has no plot, and is most liberal of detail. It is, nevertheless, very artfully put together to an end far beyond that of naturalism in its raw phase—to the end of interpreting a human character in action upon a higher than animal plane." H. W. Boynton

Nation 104:403 Ap 5 '17 150w

"One likes Mendel chiefly because it expresses valorously a sense of the primitive value of the fight that there is when one's work and one's love are made to use all the forces of one's life. The book is not comfortable and acquiescent. It demands thorough-going and pugnacious protest. . . . But one wishes Mr Cannan would write a little better. . . . It tests one's disposition toward Mendel to have its author give so little gratification to a taste for letters as a fine art." Edith Borie

+ New Repub 10:sup11 Ap 21 '17 950w

"A long step forward in fictional art has been taken by Gilbert Cannan in this new novel. He is best known to American readers as the translator of 'Jean Christophe' and as the author of 'Old Mole,' 'Young Earnest,' and 'Three sons and a mother,' as most of his long list of novels and plays have not been brought out in the United States."

+ N Y Times 22:54 F 18 '17 600w

"The acrid savor of the Jewish race, their mounting egotism, their strange humility and evermastering desire for God, Cannan has pictured with sympathy and deep insight."

+ R of Rs 56:556 N '17 200w

"Mendel' is a fearless piece of work. It has grip and power, shrewd observation, and clear-cut thought. Sloppiness, sentiment and gush—the three distinguishing traits of so many modern novels—are absent. The writer knows what he wants to say and knows how to say it. Mr Cannan works close to life. His book is realism, but realism of the right kind."

+ Sat R 122:628 D 30 '16 500w

"Besides theories on art, another preoccupation of Mr Cannan's personages is sex. There is far too much talk about it; an exasperated consciousness of it pervades the book. . . . So far we have said nothing of the honesty, the intelligence, the frequent and delightful pungency of the book. Mr Cannan has moments in which he lazily subsides into ineffective emphasis, or caricature, or cut-and-dried appreciations, and these moments are frequent enough to make 'Mendel' seem too long. But it almost continuously entertains, and we are not using the term in a trivial sense; it entertains because it provokes."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p499 O 19 '16 600w

CAPPEAU, MRS IDA MAY (JACK). Voyage to South America and Buenos Aires, the city beautiful. il $1.20 (4c) Sherman, French & co. 918 16-24332

A woman's diary of a voyage to South America. On the voyage stops were made at Bahia, Rio de Janeiro and Santos, and brief glimpses of these cities are given. Most of the author's time was spent in Buenos Aires and she writes with enthusiasm of the city and of the courtesy and kindness of its people.

"Only the fact that so few people find anything at all to say about South America makes Mrs Cappeau's account appear of relative interest. . . . A few of the photographs are excellent."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 10 '17 70w

CARBAUGH, HARVEY CLARENCE, ed. Human welfare work in Chicago. il *$1.50 (4c) McClurg 917.731 17-9261

The purpose of this book is to bring together information pertaining to the various activities in Chicago that come under the heading human welfare. These include music, art, education, philanthropy, etc. The editor is a member of the civil service board of South park commissioners; there is an introduction by John Barton Payne, president of the South park commissioners, and chapters are contributed to the book by other men directly engaged in special lines of work, among them Henry E. Legler, librarian of the public library. Contents: Art in Chicago; Chicago as a music center; The city's public schools; The public library; Parks and boulevards; Public recreation; A summary of philanthropic work; Philanthropic work of religious organizations; Neighborhood work. There are a number of interesting illustrations.

+ A L A Bkl 13:427 J1 '17
Boston Transcript p6 My 9 '17 100w
Cleveland p108 S '17 40w

"It is not until one comes upon the full list of municipal activities, as in such a volume as the present, that the scope and significance of that future are possible of realization. . . . The volume contains much statistical information and is amply illustrated."

+ Dial 62:406 My 3 '17 190w
N Y Br Lib News 4:109 J1 '17 80w
Pittsburgh 22:675 O '17 60w

"A valuable handbook for those interested in gaining an idea of the varied activities which a modern city carries on for the benefits of its citizens."

+ Pratt p10 O '17 40w

CARMICHAEL, MARY H., comp. Pioneer days. il *$1.25 (3c) Duffield 973 17-13393

The author has collected these stories of pioneer days in the Mississippi valley from early histories and from lives of frontiersmen and pioneers written by contemporaries. Contents: Josiah Hunt—the Indian fighter; Maniac defender—a story of the border; Providential interference; Tom Higgins rescuing his comrade; A romance of pioneer life; Ham Cass and his vow; Capture and escape of Alexander McConnell; Charles Hess; Captain Hubbell defending his boat; Pioneer boys; James Moore's captivity; Lewis Wetzel's scout. The illustrations are from old prints

"A good library book for sixth grade."

+ Ind 91:228 Ag 11 '17 40w
N Y Br Lib News 4:109 J1 '17 50w

"There might have been a more careful editing of the contents; one is led to infer that scissors and pastebush were the only utensils in use."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Ag 31 '17 200w

CARNOVALE, LUIGI. Why Italy entered into the great war. il $2.50 Italian-American pub. co., 903 Michigan boulevard bldg., Chicago 940.91 17-21996

"The author, an Italian living in Chicago, writes this book to defend his country from the charges . . . that Italy had been guilty of treachery in declaring void the treaty of the Triple alliance and that she entered the war first because she had been bought by English and French gold, and secondly because she was eager to acquire territory (Trieste and Trent) 'which by hereditary divine right was the possession of the Hapsburgs.'" (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "The first part deals with recent history—with the relations between Italy and Austria for the past century. . . . The second part comprises a longer historical retrospect—one of two thousand years—and is designed to prove the essentially Italian character of the borderlands in dispute between the two countries. The third part gives an account of the diplomatic doings which immediately preceded the declaration of war—a complete and compact presentation of the actual documents. The fourth part gives the reasons which justified

Italy in breaking with the Central powers and in joining France and England." (Dial) The book is printed in two languages. "The English text fills the first three hundred pages, and the whole is then presented in Italian in the second half of the book." (N Y Times)

A L A Bkl 14:52 N '17

"One feature of the book is a plate giving in facsimile the famous 'Tavola Clesiana,' a bronze tablet which was discovered at Cles, in mid-Tyrol, in 1869. This tablet contains a decree of the Emperor Claudius, A.D. 49, determining the essentially Italian character of the inhabitants of that region. . . . Mr Carnovale, who has a reputation, as a journalist both in Italy and America, is one of the younger school of radical reformers. He is against not only the papacy but also the house of Savoy; and against not only the house of Savoy but also the capitalistic forces which . . . often take an undue part in originating and in furthering wars."

+ Dial 63:212 S 13 '17 430w

"Readers who wish to preserve a judicial attitude will need to be on their guard against the author's point of view. And one cannot refrain from marveling that so ardent a patriot should choose to live in a country of which he has such a low opinion as he expresses of America."

+ N Y Times 22:332 O 17 '17 350w

St Louis 15:417 D '17 10w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p431 S 6 '17 150w

CARPENTER, FORD ASHMAN. Aviator and the Weather bureau. 2d ed il 25c; free to libraries San Diego chamber of commerce, San Diego, Cal. 629.1 17-25375

"This little booklet consists of a brief but comprehensive account of the history of aviation as it is associated with southern California and of a syllabus of lectures delivered at the War department school of aviation at San Diego on practical meteorology as applied to aviation. There is also an interesting narration of weather study from an aeroplane, including the details of the author's first ascent, and, finally, an account of the present active coöperation between aviators and the United States Weather bureau."—Nation

+ Nation 105:19 J1 5 '17 170w

"Contains a considerable number of interesting illustrations."

+ Nature 99:263 My 31 '17 60w

Pittsburgh 22:753 N '17 20w

CARPENTER, WILLIAM BOYD. Further pages of my life. il *$3.50 Scribner (*10s 6d Williams & Norgate, London) 17-14124

"The ways of man and the shortcomings of clergymen, the life of the rural vicarage and the personalities of several English leaders in letters, religion and affairs, are revealed by Dr W. Boyd Carpenter in a second volume of reminiscences. It is a companion to his 'Some pages of my life,' and it is written in the same informal, companionable and entertaining manner. Neither is it in any sense a biography, for Dr Carpenter is content merely to set down a few glimpses of life and people as he has encountered them during a long career of clerical activity. After having served as bishop of Ripon from 1884 to 1911, he is now sub-dean and canon of Westminster."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p7 Ap 25 '17 750w

"There are many good stories of all sorts—humorous, strange, and grim—in this variegated chronicle."

+ Spec 117:704 D 2 '16 1850w

"Few people write a sequel to an autobiography which is more interesting and important than the first book. But this is the case with 'Further pages of my life.' . . . Every clergyman should read the chapter on the bishop's experiences with the clergy of his diocese. . . . The book, as a whole, is delightful reading. . . . Bishop Boyd Carpenter is able to tell things which have never before been revealed. This is especially true in his chapter on King Edward VII."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Jl 3 '17 570w

"A fascinating volume."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p558 N 23 16 1000w

CARR, JOSEPH WILLIAM COMYNS. Ideals of painting. il *$2 (2c) Macmillan 759 17-860i

The purpose of this book is "to assist those students who desire to obtain a general view of the movement of painting from the time of Giotto to the present day; and to compare and contrast the spiritual ideals that have been pursued and perfected in the work of separate schools labouring under the dominating impulse supplied by individual genius." The first two sections of the book deal with The ideals of Italy and Venice and the north. The remainder consists of chapters devoted respectively to the ideals of Flanders, Germany, Holland, Spain, France and England. There are a number of illustrations, and an index that seems to be complete.

"The illustrations are numerous and well chosen."

+ A L A Bkl 14:12 O '17

+ Boston Transcript p7 Jl 11 '17 230w

"Well arranged material."

+ Cleveland p97 Jl '17 40w

"There is any amount of interesting detail, comparison, analysis, and assertion; but no pattern of a theory of life, related in specific ways to the theories of life of the others, emerges for any one of these lands."

+ Dial 63:115 Ag 16 '17 250w

+ Lit D 55:40 N 2 '17 100w

"Nearly everything he says is interesting, and his characterization of particular painters is often admirable. Of course, there are what must appear to another critic faults of proportion and of accent. His greatest critical weakness seems to us to be a lack of complete understanding of the possibilities of light and shade. The greatest drawback of Mr Carr's book is his style. He is not master of the vivid phrase or the illuminating word. His wordiness and repetitiousness make hard reading, and it is to be feared that few readers will be sufficiently persevering to discover how much better his thought is than it sounds."

* — + Nation 105:126 Ag 2 '17 800w

+ N Y Br Lib News 5:75 My '17 40w

"The present book reflects to a degree the crowding of thoughts and impressions arising in the presence of so multitudinous a subject, and it lacks distinction of proportion."

+ N Y Times 22:334 S 9 '17 180w

"The text is set forth with the same charm as characterized the author's previously most lately issued volume, 'Coasting Bohemia.'"

+ Outlook 115:758 Ap 25 '17 110w

"Will give the veriest tyro in art the ability to appreciate and to criticize intelligently the paintings of the various schools."

+ R of Rs 56:219 Ag '17 170w

"The history of art is now so specialized that to be adequately furnished at every point is scarcely possible to a single man. How can any one student know as much as Morelli or Mr Berenson about the Italians, as much as Dr Bredius or Dr de Groot about the Dutch, and as much as a dozen other experts about the French, German, Spanish, and English painters? Mr Carr would have replied that he made no such pretension. . . . To sum up, we have found this book interesting and suggestive and based on a sound foundation of knowledge. It is a pity, however, that the proofs were not more carefully read."

* + The Times [London] Lit Sup p235 My 17 '17 1150w

CARRINGTON, FITZROY. Engravers and etchers. il $3 Art Institute of Chicago 760

"This volume, with its 133 illustrations, embodies six lectures delivered under the auspices of the Scammon foundation at the Art Institute of Chicago by the curator of prints at our own [Boston] art museum. The chapter titles will give an adequate idea of the ground covered: German engraving; from the beginning to Martin Schongauer; Italian engraving; the Florentines; German engraving; the master of the Amsterdam cabinet and Albrecht Dürer; Italian engraving; Mantegna to Marcantonio Raimondi; Some masters of portraiture; Landscape etching."—Boston Transcript

"He scarcely touches on contemporary artists of the needle and burin, and he dwells lovingly on Dürer and Rembrandt. . . . This necessarily limits the interest of the book principally to those that know little or nothing of these arts. Neither does he go into the technicalities of the processes engaged in them. His book is to be especially recommended to young amateurs. . . . Most of the reproductions of the works of Schongauer, Mantegna, Raimondi, Nanteuil, Daubigny, Corot, Haden and other masters represented, are admirably clear and satisfactory." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Jl 25 '17 520w

"The last lecture, dealing with landscape, is perhaps the best in its directness and unity, and the tribute to Dürer's little-realized importance in this field is noted with pleasure by the reviewer. As to the illustrations, regrets concerning the havoc with lines played by the half-tone screen are of course unavoidable. And one may at least question whether the irritatingly glazed and malodorous paper used throughout the book is necessary. Mr Palf's bibliographical lists, obviously not intended to be complete, are helpful."

+ Nation 105:299 S 13 '17 430w

"In its agreeable blending of technical discussion with discriminating feeling the book is an excellent aid to appreciation."

+ Pittsburgh 22:811 D '17 50w

"For the needs of persons to whom engravings and etchings are an unexplored region of art there is no better book. It is beautifully printed and contains 133 well-executed illustrations."

+ R of Rs 56:220 Ag '17 130w

CARROLL, ROBERT SPROUL. Mastery of nervousness based upon self reeducation. *$2 (3c) Macmillan 616 17-18704

Dr Carroll tells us that "nervous health is a mental state, not a physical condition," although "physical disturbances play a large part in the production of nervousness." For instance, food intemperance, which in America is "almost universal," is "a larger factor in producing the damage which results in defective nervous offspring, than any other single cause." The earlier chapters of the book take up various types of nervousness, discuss "eating errors" and "eating for efficiency," and point out the benefits of work and play. Later chapters deal with mental and moral self-reeducation under such headings as: Tangled thoughts; Emotional tyranny; Clear thinking; Moulding the emotions; The fulfilment of self, etc. Dr Carroll believes that nervousness is to be mastered by diet, exercise and training of the will, rather than by drugs.

"A most helpful popular treatise."

+ N Y Evening Post p6 O 13 '17 400w

"An abundance of useful information and wholesome advice is presented by Dr Carroll."

+ N Y Times 22:521 D 2 '17 60w

+ Springf'd Republican p13 Ja 20 '18 170w

CASALIS, ALFRED EUGÈNE. For France and the faith. il *60c (3c) Assn. press 940.91 17-24722

This book is made up of fragments of letters written to relatives and intimate friends by Alfred Eugène Casalis who was born of missionary parents in South Africa, was a student in the theological seminary of Montauban, France, when the war broke out, volunteered and fell in battle at the age of nineteen. The letters are translated by W. E. Bristol. In an introductory page John R. Mott says: "The English edition has helped many a soldier of Britain to live his life and to fight his battles on the higher levels."

CASALIS, ALFRED EUGÈNE—Continued

A L A Bkl 14:88 D '17

CASTLE, AGNES (SWEETMAN) (MRS EGER-TON CASTLE), and CASTLE, EGERTON. Wolf-lure. il *$1.50 Appleton 17-24204

"The strange, barbaric title of this latest adventure story by these popular authors amply suggests the wild, exotic scenes enacted about Castle Rozac of Guyenne, not long after the old French régime came to an abrupt downfall under the 'Corsican upstart.' The tale consists of the reminiscences of an elderly Englishman, who in youth wandered into this out-of-the-way part of France for the sake of historical study and research. The action, which is extravagant, though doubtless appropriate to the times and the setting, takes one into the midst of a passion-haunted castle, into the territory of a race of ruffians and counterfeiters, and even down to the subterranean caves in the back waters of the Tarne."—N Y Times

"Romantic and rather long."

+ — A L A Bkl 14:130 Ja '18

+ Ath p595 N '17 90w

"Needless to say of a work from these experienced hands, it is a vigorous and finished story of its kind." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:342 N '17 60w

"The color and romance of the story give us the Castles at their best; and the character of Louvecelle, the heroine, is touched with spirit and charm."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 3 '17 170w

"'Wolf-lure' is the work of specialists in their field. . . . Having chosen their atmosphere, they breathe it easily; and they are seldom to be caught napping (there are a few modernisms in the dialogue, of the present story) in matters of detail."

+ Nation 105:487 N 1 '17 270w

"The story is surprisingly void of really 'palpating moments.' This is due, perhaps, to a certain loquacity on the part of the narrator that detracts from the point and force of the tale."

+ — N Y Times 22:381 O 7 '17 300w

"The story is not always quite probable, but it holds the reader's attention closely."

+ — Outlook 117:219 O 10 '17 40w

"We have no objection to fantastic invention in stories of this kind, but if they are put in an historic setting the setting should be true to history."

— Sat R 124:353 N 3 '17 90w

+ Springf'd Republican p15 Ja 13 '18 230w

"The tale has many exciting moments; but these come in the latter half of the book, and it needs some perseverance to win through to them."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p507 O 18 '17 200w

CASTLE, WILLIAM ERNEST. Genetics and eugenics; a text-book for students of biology and a reference book for animal and plant breeders. il *$1.50 Harvard univ. press 575.6 16-25200

"The first part of Prof. W. E. Castle's 'Genetics and eugenics' is devoted to the larger subject of genetics, especially in its relation to the theory of evolution, and the smaller second part is given over to the discussion of the 'agencies under social control that may improve or impair the racial qualities of future generations, either physically or mentally.' Most emphasis is laid, of course, upon the fundamental studies of Lamarck, Darwin, Weismann, and Mendel, but the very latest researches are also considered."—Nation

"This is a welcome addition to the rapidly growing list of books which set forth the newer results and problems of biology and show their application to human life. Moreover, it is well illustrated. . . . The volume will be of great interest and value to laymen as well as biologists; indeed, we may assume that the latter know the facts now." Carl Kelsey

+ Ann Am Acad 73:244 S '17 310w

"The reader will find here a summary of the subject that will put him fairly in touch with the best of contemporary thought on such matters as the inheritance of acquired characters, biometry, the mutation theory, unit characters, sex-linked and other kinds of linked inheritance, inbreeding and crossbreeding. . . . As regards human inheritance, Professor Castle agrees neither with Pearson, who denies Mendelianism, nor with Davenport and Plate, who are enthusiastic for unit characters, but adopts a more eclectic view."

+ Nation 104:563 My 3 '17 300w

"Since the beginning of the present century, when genetic research passed from the province of the amateur to that of the professional, Prof. Castle has been recognized as one of the most active workers on these lines. A book embodying his outlook after years of teaching and research is sure of a welcome from all who are interested in these matters. . . . The amount of ground covered involves a condensed treatment of many important questions, and though this need not be a drawback to the student whose reading is supplemented by lectures, it makes it rather a difficult book for the average reader. . . . The treatment of eugenics is eminently sane."

+ Nature 99:202 My 10 '17 650w

CASTLE, WILLIAM RICHARDS, Jr. Hawaii past and present. rev and enl ed il *$1.50 (3c) Dodd 919.69 17-5138

The first edition of this book was published in 1913. The addition of a chapter on The army and navy in Hawaii is the most noticeable change in the second edition. Other chapters have revisions, bringing them down to date.

A L A Bkl 13:362 My '17

"A descendant of the earliest white families to settle in the Hawaiian Islands, Mr Castle is well fitted by long acquaintance with the people and their life and customs to write sympathetically and intelligently concerning them."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 29 '17 210w

"A valuable book that purports to do a great deal and accomplishes it."

+ Cath World 105:266 My '17 250w

N Y Times 22:396 O 14 '17 50w

St Louis 15:185 Je '17

CATT, MRS CARRIE (LANE) CHAPMAN, comp. Woman suffrage by federal constitutional amendment. (National suffrage library) $1.30 ($½c) National woman suffrage pub. co. 321.3 17-4988

This little book does not argue the question of woman suffrage. The justice, necessity and inevitability of suffrage for women are taken for granted. "The discussion is strictly confined to the reasons why an amendment to the federal constitution is the most appropriate method of dealing with the question." Contents: Why the federal amendment? by Carrie Chapman Catt; State constitutional obstructions, by Mary Sumner Boyd; Election laws and referenda, by Carrie Chapman Catt; The story of the 1916 referenda, by Carrie Chapman Catt; Federal action and states rights, by Henry Wade Rogers; Objections to the federal amendment, by Carrie Chapman Catt.

A L A Bkl 13:375 Je '17

N Y Br Lib News 4:126 Ag '17 80w

CATT, HEINRICH ALEXANDER DE. Frederick the Great; the memoirs of his reader (1758-1760); tr. by F. S. Flint; with an introduction by Lord Rosebery. 2v il *$7.50 Houghton (Eng ed 17-11818)

"The translation constituting the bulk of these important volumes has been made from the French text published from the manuscript in the Prussian state archives. . . . As reader and librarian to the king, with whom he was on terms of intimacy, Catt had ample opportunity of observing and becoming conversant with the sovereign's character, and he recorded Frederick's sayings as faithfully as Boswell noted down for posterity those of Johnson. The result is that Henri de Catt's memoirs, though almost devoid of literary merit, have preserved for us a picture which it is scarcely too much to affirm gives a better idea of the man than does even Carlyle's monumental work."—Ath

"During the bitter years 1758-1760 Catt kept a very brief diary of all the conversations and journeys with the king. Many years later he artistically amplified the diary into 'Memoirs.' . . . The former, not here translated, consists of disconnected jottings and is wholly without literary form. It is of much value, however, to the meticulous biographer of Frederick, because of its unvarnished accuracy. The 'Memoirs,' on the other hand, put together in pleasing narrative form, have doubtless much greater interest for the general reader, but are not quite so trustworthy. Admitting, however, that there is a mixture of 'dichtung und wahrheit' in the 'Memoirs,' they nevertheless give a generally veracious, favorable, and intensely human picture of a really great man." S. B. Fay

+ Am Hist R 23:146 O '17 700w

"The book is of great interest, and has appeared opportunely."

+ Ath p50 Ja '17 230w

"A document of great human interest, a faithful portrait of a monarch working at concert pitch with an intensity and application truly marvelous, Catt's memoir is of even greater value as the chronicle of the sowing of a seed which only now has reached its sinister harvest. . . . The translator has done a difficult work well. The original 'abounds in solecisms and faults of style'; the translation has both character and lucidity. The work will join that company of distinguished biographies which is as exclusive as the host of ordinary biographies is numerous." R. W.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 21 '17 1050w

Lit D 54:1855 Je 16 '17 1000w

"Carlyle, in writing his life of Frederick, would have been only too delighted with these memoirs, had he been acquainted with them. They would have formed a welcome oasis in the desert of Dryasdusts against whom he loved to fulminate."

+ Nation 105:295 S 13 '17 600w

"Mr Flint has given us a text in good idiomatic English. . . . One of the most interesting features in the 'Memoirs' is the light they throw on the relations of Frederick and Voltaire."

+ N Y Times 22:145 Ap 15 '17 1100w

+ Outlook 115:758 Ap 25 '17 200w

R of Rs 55:666 Je '17 70w

"This is a capital book, and an agreeable surprise. . . . Catt is the soul of sincerity and straightforwardness; but Catt soon perceives that a little of the truth goes a long way, and it is amusing to see him reflecting how far he can venture to go in the criticism of bad verses and other of Frederick's indiscretions."

+ Sat R 123:16 Ja 5 '17 1500w

"As Lord Rosebery says in his introduction, this is a very human book. Frederick the Great, Prussia's only really able king, has been eulogized and criticized in hundreds of volumes, but we have never read anything giving so simple and homely a picture of him as that drawn by his admiring Swiss reader."

+ Spec 118:237 F 24 '17 2250w

"The 'Memoirs,' which are now for the first time translated from the original French, present a very remarkable picture of one side of the great king. They extend over two years only, but those two years include the crisis of the Seven years war. . . . The translation, which is admirably done, is introduced by Lord Rosebery in a preface which brings out the full difficulty of the enigma which the character of Frederick presents."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p1 Ja 4 '17 180w

"Catt's memoirs approach Boswell's 'Johnson' and Busch's 'Lismarck' in their intimate revelations, and, for those who read only English, furnish an excellent supplement to Carlyle's fervid and memorable epic." A. L. Cross

+ Yale R n s 7:221 O '17 1450w

CAULDWELL, SAMUEL MILBANK. Chocolate cake and black sand, and two other plays. il $1.50 Putnam 812 17-16753

The three plays in this book were written by the author for the entertainment of his own children and the amusement of his friends. The author's preface says "These plays are distinctly a domestic product intended for home consumption. The family hearthstone finds its place in the foreground of the stage setting. The living-room is transformed into the orchestra and the hall staircase answers all the purposes of the gallery. Little if any stage scenery is required, except such as can be found in the cellar or garret of any well-regulated family." Mrs Cauldwell, who has edited the plays for publication after her husband's death, says that they are offered to all who are interested in amateur performances in the home. The title play and the one following, "The undoing of Giant Hotstuff," are dream plays. The third, "The invention of the rat trap," is a "romantic historical drama."

"Very whimsical and gay."

+ Ind 91:135 Jl 28 '17 50w

"They are stronger dramatically than most plays for young actors."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 20 '17 70w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. Barbarians. il $1.40 Appleton 17-28656

"The story is a group of episodes, each narrating the fate of one of eight men who sail for Europe together on a mule-laden steamer 'in quest of something they could not find in America—something that lay somewhere amid flaming obscurity in that hell of murder beyond the Somme—their soul's salvation, perhaps.' They are 'fed up' with America's holding aloof from participation in the struggle. Several of the men take service in the French army and Mr Chambers follows each to his dramatic end. . . . Mr Chambers displays bitterness and abhorrence of Germany's military conduct and employs strong terms in characterizing it."—Springf'd Republican

"Tales that, if not inspired, are honestly felt and written, and not merely manufactured for an audience or an effect."

+ Nation 105:695 D 20 '17 270w

"Mr Chambers expresses much contempt and disapproval of the government of the United States because it did not enter the war at the beginning. Whatever may have been one's personal opinion upon this matter in former months, such piled-up oburgations in the pages of fiction at this time are in offensively bad taste, to say the least."

+ N Y Times 22:434 O 28 '17 600w

Outlook 117:432 N 14 '17 40w

"Too bad that the author could not resist the temptation to play up the usual suggestive moments! As a matter of fact, however, they do not particularly detract from a work of great vividness." E. P. Wyckoff

+ Pub W 92:2030 D 8 '17 370w

"The episodes are adroitly conceived and related with grim vividness and feeling."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 4 '17 200w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. Dark star. il $1.50 (1c) Appleton 17-13501

A Russian princess, a German prima-donna and the young daughter of an American missionary are characters in this war-time romance. As a child in Turkey, Rue Carew had played with the wonder box that had been the property of Herr Conrad Wilner. It held, along with the figure of a Chinese god and other treasures, a series of maps and plans. Years after when she is studying art in Paris, under the protection of her friend, the Russian princess,

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM—Continued
Rue learns how important these old sketches are. A cable despatch to her childhood friend, Jim Neeland, in America, sends him up to her old home in the Catskills to find the box, which he is instructed to bring at once to Paris. But someone is there before him; the German singer also knows of these plans of the fortifications of the Dardanelles. This is only the beginning of the series of adventures in which he becomes involved and from which, being an American with a touch of Irish blood, he comes out victorious.

"Sensational, but almost without any cloying sentimentality. Appeared in the Cosmopolitan."

A L A Bkl 13:44S J1 '17

"Not since Robert Chambers's early novels has he given us so absorbing a story of adventure as that which he has woven about 'The dark star.' In it he gains back the power which made him a magician in the realm of adventure stories, but which has so often been lost sight of in his later novels." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 6 '17 1000w

"A lava-spouting, rambunctious, movie-play kind of an entertainment. . . . But Mr Chambers never forgets the marshmallows, and the dainty makes its appearance, as luscious as ever, at the proper time."

+ N Y Times 22:194 My 20 '17 670w

"This is not only a very stirring tale, but is the best-written novel Mr Chambers has produced since the outbreak of the war."

+ Springfd Republican p19 My 27 '17 270w

CHAMPION, JESSIE, Jimmy's wife. *$1.25 (2c) Lane 17-2485

When they separated, Jimmy's wife had exacted from him a promise. He was never to recognize her should they meet in public. This much of his story Jimmy tells to Rev. and Mrs Horace Venn when he comes to live in their parish, and Mrs Venn, who tells the story, begins immediately to take an interest in Jimmy's wife. She has reason to believe that one of two women is the lady in question. But which? Circumstances point sometimes to one, sometimes to the other. At the end the war breaks in on the events of the story, as it does in so many English novels of the day. It helps to solve the problem of Jimmy and his wife without in any way curbing the sprightliness of the narrative.

"There are clever touches, evidently from close observation of real life. The author is smart, but not truthful, in the scenes wherein she presents the daily conversation in the rector's family life. . . . The principal blemish of the book is the writer's evident satisfaction in her own mental dash and alertness."

Boston Transcript p6 F 24 '17 280w

Dial 62:148 F 22 '17 110w

"The dominant situation resembles that of Mr Hay's very clever tale of 'The man who forgot.' The conversations are the strong point of the novel."

N Y Times 22:155 Ap 15 '17 300w

CHAMPNEY, ELIZABETH (WILLIAMS) (MRS JAMES WELLS CHAMPNEY), and CHAMPNEY, FRÈRE. Romance of old Japan. il *$3.50 Putnam 398.2 17-30304

Colorful, atmospheric, this volume which is uniform with "Romance of old Belgium" traces the legends of the flowery isles—"traces the floating bubbles of romance which reveal the deeper tide of history." There are the legends of the age of mythology, of mediæval days and of later times, legends in prose and verse with illustrations that bear out the spirit of the tales. The most tangible chapter of the book is the closing one, "Notable examples of Japanese architecture," contributed by Frère Champney who is an acknowledged authority on the subject.

+ Lit D 55:38 D 8 '17 90w

"It is not a scholarly work in any sense. The authors are careless of or indifferent to sources, and they handle their material with a romantic disregard for anything save its lurking charm. To this uncritical attitude is attached the further fault of a too unselective catholicity."

+ N Y Times 23:10 Ja 13 '18 180w

"Both in text and illustration this volume well carries out its authors' aim."

+ Outlook 117:576 D 5 '17 30w

"Lastly come the more modern romances suggestive of 'Madame Butterfly.' These tales lose something of the romantic reality and flavor of their precursors. . . . partly because the materialistic present seems to render ridiculous the sweetly appropriate actions of a halo-ed past when life was poetry, before a sense of humor had been born." Ruth Stanley-Brown

+ Pub W 92:2029 D 8 '17 620w

+ Spec 119:583 D 8 '17 40w

"The volume is a pleasant doorway into the literature of old Japan."

+ Springfd Republican p17 D 9 '17 230w

"It is a pleasantly got up book, well illustrated, and by no means as lengthy as the number of its pages might imply."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p587 N 29 '17 70w

CHAN, SHIU WONG. Chinese cook book. il *$1.50 Stokes 641.5 17-25304

More than one hundred tested recipes of palatable Chinese dishes, explicit enough for every housewife and practicable for the restaurant-ur. Aside from the novelty of the dishes, the recipes are to be recommended for the success they achieve in furnishing a desirable mixed diet. One feature that recommends itself to housewives who are practicing Hoover restraint and economy is the substitution of peanut oil for butter.

"The directions are so explicit that a woman with little experience can follow them."

+ Ind 92:343 N 17 '17 300w

CHANNING, EDWARD. History of the United States. 8v v 4 *$2.75 Macmillan 973 (5-11649)

v 4 "This history deals with the period from 1789-1815, when Federalists and Republicans were the dominant political parties. Earlier volumes deal with the planting of a nation in the new world (1492-1606), a century of colonial history (1606-1760), and the American revolution (1761-1789). Eventually there will be eight volumes. . . . The work represents an effort to search out the truth of statements of earlier writers, to analyze anew original material and to turn fresh light upon a period that is little understood by the average American and even among specialists is a subject of dispute and much disagreement. The notes and bibliography are especially valuable."—Springfd Republican

"The discriminating reader will note the success with which Professor Channing solves his problem of writing a new book which is not merely a re-statement of what he wrote in the twelfth volume of the 'American nation.' It does not seem extravagant to say that for the period with which this volume deals Professor Channing must be regarded as having set a new light in the historical heavens in the United States which none of his successors will ignore. The most important general feature of the volume is that the author irons out the New England crimps that have long been noted in the history of this period. . . . By a fresh examination of documents, with his mind divested of the ideas that he got from the older books, he composes his own narrative in which appears no sectional bias of either conscious or unconscious origin." J. S. Bassett

+ Am Hist R 23:189 O '17 1600w

"Special mention should be made of those chapters which deal with the organization of the new federal government, the rise of political parties, and the downfall of federalism."

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:793 N '17 60w

+ Ath p530 O '17 60w

"Professor Channing's work is a little difficult to appraise justly. It is substantial, informing, and useful; one could not well afford to leave it off one's shelves. Yet there is little, if anything, new in it. Perhaps this is as it should be in such a work. Nor are there new interpretations or evidences of very keen insight. . . . Still if this work fails to show, as one might wish, the evolution of society in America, the meaning of events, and the influences of ideas, it is a useful reference work, an ever-ready friend in time of need, which all who are interested in American history should hasten to buy." W: E. Dodd

* + Dial 63:60 J1 19 '17 2100w

"Valuable as Professor Channing's work is, and indispensable as it is bound to become to the student of the history of the United States, we still think that the historian who performs his function rightly must deal not only with facts, but also with ideas, institutions, and the operation of historical and social forces, and must include the interpretation of evidence among his necessary attributes."

* + Nation 105:692 D 20 '17 1850w

"The reader will be mistaken if he comes to the conclusion that he might as well turn back to his Hildreth and Schouler. Not so. Professor Channing does not write with the scissors and paste pot. He turns every topic over and views it in the light of the last results of historical research. . . . There are many such judgments in Mr Channing's pages, judgments that betray penetration and that long thoughtfulness which mark the true scholar off from the cheap critic and cheaper chauvinist. They betray also a mind of great natural powers, which, had it been devoted to a different type of historical construction, could have contributed still more to our understanding of the early phases of American politics." C: A. Beard

+ New Repub 11:282 J1 7 '17 1250w

+ R of Rs 56:215 Ag '17 110w

"Of all the American historians with whom we are acquainted, he is the most supremely dispassionate and impartial."

+ Spec 120:16 Ja 5 '18 1800w

"The work is not easy reading, but it is not designed for popularity. Rather does it meet the needs of the student who would go into the complex currents of that day in search of a better understanding of the beginnings of this government."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 Je 29 '17 450w

CHAPIN, ANNA ALICE. Greenwich village. il *$2.50 (3½c) Dodd 974.71 17-30045

In spite of "our great streets, hemmed by stone and marble and glittering plate glass, crowded with kaleidoscopic cosmopolitan traffic, ceaselessly resonant with twentieth century activity," Father Knickerbocker still "has a sanctuary, a haven after his own heart, where he can still draw a breath of relief . . . among buildings small but full of age and dignity and with the look of homes about them; on restful, crooked little streets where there remain trees and grassplots; in the old-time purlieus of Washington square and Greenwich village!" Browsing among Manhattan's oldest records the writer has gleaned history, tradition and romance from the records that hold immortal the quaintest section of New York. She has also caught in her pages the magic of the village that holds Eohemia under its spell today. It is a very personal and careful handling of the personal soul of the village that has engaged the author of "Wonder tales from Wagner."

A L A Bkl 14:126 Ja '18

"Miss Chapin has diligently assembled all the points of interest in this holiday volume, to which Allan Gilbert Cram contributes sixteen full-page illustrations. They have produced a charming memorial of one of the most interesting spots in America."

+ Lit D 55:38 D 8 '17 120w

Natlon 105:612 N 29 '17 90w

"An interesting and attractive book. The author has studied her subject with care and in detail, and the artist has made charming drawings of the Washington arch and Milligan place, of Jefferson market and old St John's. The book is pleasing, too, in its binding and general makeup."

+ N Y Times 22:493 N 25 '17 780w

CHAPIN, CHARLES VALUE. How to avoid infection. (Harvard health talks) *50c Harvard univ. press 614.4 17-7060

"The present essay is one of a series of lectures sent out from the Harvard medical school on subjects of general medical interest. In this booklet [of 88 pages] Dr Charles V. Chapin tells us 'How to avoid infection' in terms that all can understand and in ways that all can follow. A discussion of bacteria and bacterial diseases is followed by a clear and concise statement of the more simple means at our disposal of safeguarding our health from the more prevalent troubles, especially those connected with the public drinking cup and public towel."—Spring'd Republican

A L A Bkl 13:381 Je '17

Pratt p20 O '17 10w

+ Spring'd Republican p15 Ag 19 '17 100w

"Not often is the needed authoritative information made available in a form so compact and so interesting as that of Dr Chapin's little pocket volume. It illustrates the changed emphasis from cure to prevention." G. S.

+ Survey 39:171 N 17 '17 150w

"Admirably practical and concise statement of the modes of infection and how a person or community may avoid them. By the author of 'Sources and modes of infection.'"

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:216 J1 '17 30w

CHAPIN, FRANCIS STUART. Historical introduction to social economy. il *$2 (3c) Century 330.9 17-25499

A study, in the light of present progress, of contrasting types of industrial organizations at different historical periods, and of public and private efforts made to relieve the poverty of each period. Elementary in treatment, the volume meets the need of a textbook for an introductory study in the history of social economy. Problems of early Greek and Roman civilization are reviewed; likewise, the industrial development at the end of the middle ages and the great social revolutions of modern times. The transition from remedial to constructive charity and preventive philanthropy is the theme for the closing chapters.

Reviewed by S. A. Queen

+ — Am J Soc 23:549 Ja '18 220w

"As far as it goes Professor Chapin's 'Social economy,' is a stimulating and valuable book."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 D 29 '17 420w

"The work is important in its analysis of the recurrent agrarian problems, particularly land distribution, of the productive systems of slavery and free labor, and of the historical changes in industrial organization."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Ja 24 '18 500w

"It is rather a wide subject for 300 pages, and it is necessarily a little sketchy. As a general introduction to a great subject the book is sound and valuable." I. C. Hannah

+ — Survey 39:150 N 10 '17 140w

CHAPIN, HENRY DWIGHT. Health first; the fine art of living. *$1.50 (3½c) Century 614 17-23809

An essentially common-sense book by a New York physician of long experience and high standing. He says: "In order to understand and properly manage any period, we must know the conditions that precede and are liable to follow it, so that we may make the necessary changes in our conduct of life. . . . It is believed that in this way life can be prolonged and made more efficient." (Preface) Dr Chapin therefore discusses, in a series of chapters, rational procedure from infancy to old age and also considers health from the outlook of nutrition, the avoidance of infection, climatic, local and moral influences. A practical book for the use of the individual reader in home or work. The publishers call it a "first aid to the well."

CHAPIN, HENRY DWIGHT—Continued

Cleveland p124 N '17 20w

"The book is written in an agreeable, terse, and altogether readable style. It is a volume to be welcomed, to be read and returned to with lasting profit. The author is a recognized authority, of course, on his subject, and he presents it in important detail and interesting form."

+ N Y Times 22:344 S 16 '17 980w

"The few pages devoted to infancy contain more useful information than many a volume written on the subject. The description of adolescence is necessarily incomplete. On the other hand, the chapters on nutrition and infection contain the gist of the subject. . . . There probably is no other book that covers the subject so well in so few pages." Medicus

+ N Y Call p15 S 30 '17 200w

+ Sat R 123:412 My 5 '17 180w

"A reading of the book should stimulate healthful thinking and should lead to the exercise of healthful precautions in daily life. For the application of individual details, however, it were wiser to consult a well-trained physician." L. A. Jones

+ — Survey 39:472 Ja 26 '18 250w

CHAPLIN, ALETHEA. Treasury of fairy tales. il $50c (1½c) Crowell

Six old fairy tales retold with sympathy and charm, with the necessary expurgation and change to warrant their having a safe bed-time effect. The stories are: Babes in the wood; Puss in boots; Hop of my Thumb; Jack and the bean stalk; Red Riding Hood; Cinderella.

CHAPMAN, ARTHUR. Out where the West begins, and other western verses. *$1.25 Houghton $11 17-7485

The title poem appeared first in a Denver newspaper and it has been copied and re-copied many times. The other poems of the book have a western flavor, too, as some of the titles will show: Cow-puncher philosophy; The sheriff's report; The diamond hitch; The white man's road; The herder's reverie; Little papoose; The old-timer; Out among the big things; The pony express; The homesteader; The mother lode.

A L A Bkl 14:120 Ja '18

"Mr Chapman phrases the old facile philosophy of 'God's out-of-doors' in a manner not very novel or very attractive in itself. The title poem is merely an inept and sentimental phrasing of the braggadocio of the far West." Odell Shepard

— Dial 63:20 Je 28 '17 110w

"Mr Arthur Chapman is one of the most popular of American poets, and he counts among his readers many who are not to be classified as poetry-lovers. Yet what he writes is poetry, imaginative and beautiful, but so filled with human sympathy that it appeals even to those who ordinarily are deaf to rime and rhythm."

+ Lit D 54:1072 Ap 14 '17 370w

N Y Br Lib News 4:61 Ap '17

"Some are in cowboy language and nearly all are serious in tone."

Wis Lib Bul 13:155 My '17 40w

CHAPMAN, CHARLES FREDERIC. Practical motor boat handling, seamanship and piloting. il $1 Motor boating, 119 W. 40th st., N.Y. 797 17-12272

"Twenty-one timely and concise chapters by the editor of Motor Boating upon the subjects of navigation, regulations, lights, buoys, equipment, compasses and charts, piloting, helpful publications, instruments, flags, signals, yachting etiquette, steering, and meals." (N Y P L

New Tech Bks) "Especially prepared for the man who takes pride in handling his own boat and getting the greatest enjoyment out of cruising; adapted for the yachtsman interested in fitting himself to be of service to his government in time of war." (Sub-title)

A L A Bkl 13:432 Jl '17

Cleveland p110 S '17

N Y P L New Tech Bks p10 Ap '17 30w

Pittsburgh 22:662 O '17 40w

Pratt p23 O '17 30w

+ Quar List New Tech Bks O '17 30w

CHAPMAN, JAMES CROSBY, and RUSH, GRACE PREYER. Scientific measurement of classroom products. il $1.25 Silver 371.3 17-9714

A book which "describes quite clearly—in fact, often as to a child or a moron—the several scales that have been devised for the measurement of ability in arithmetic, handwriting, reading, spelling, English composition, completion of sentences, and drawing. The authors regard the application of scientific measurement to school products as 'the greatest contribution which has been made to education in the last ten years'; but they do not minimize the difficulties to be met with in the application of the various methods devised, and counsel caution to the over-enthusiastic convert." (Nation) There is a three-page bibliography.

+ Cleveland p123 N '17 80w

"The writer of a text on educational measurement takes upon himself the responsibility of (1) selecting the best representative scales and standard tests to put before teachers, (2) evaluating these carefully, (3) presenting them in non-technical language, (4) showing how they can be and are being used to set standards of attainment and to improve teaching in a very definite way, and (5) supplying the teacher with a completely organized and well-annotated bibliography of tests and scales that are now available. 'The scientific measurement of classroom products' is deficient on nearly every one of these counts. . . . Because of all these deficiencies, we do not commend this publication as a representative discussion in the field of educational measurement."

* — — El School J 17:765 Je '17 1150w

Nation 105:259 S 6 '17 360w

CHAPMAN, VICTOR EMMANUEL. Victor Chapman's letters from France. il *$1.25 Macmillan 940.91 17-14800

Victor Chapman was a young American who was killed at Verdun in June, 1916. He was in Paris studying architecture in the summer of 1914, and he enlisted at once in the Foreign legion, and became a member of the Franco-American flying corps. This book consists largely, as its title states, of his letters written from France, but there is also a memoir, written by his father John Jay Chapman, together with other tributes.

"Remarkable letters, spontaneous and without self-consciousness."

+ A L A Bkl 14:18 O '17

"His letters, more than all the short sketch which precedes them, show us the young légionnaire and aviator in his true colors—as one to whom danger was life itself, to whom pretension and heroics were as foreign as fear, who took life, so be it a life of action, as a glorious adventure, and death as the most natural and perhaps the most glorious adventure of all." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 27 '17 470w

"The memoir by his father is an emotionally reserved but curiously vivid sketch of the young Victor."

+ Cleveland p101 S '17 130w

"Victor's letters should endear him to readers principally for the whole-hearted enthusiasm shown for the cause for which he fought and for his boyish naïveté and buoyant youthfulness. The letters are interesting as revelations of character. They shed a strong and illuminating light on trench conditions and the every-day experiences of soldiers in France. It is a book of touching and pathetic as well as inspiring revelations."

+ Lit D 55:34 S 29 '17 200w

+ Nation 105:462 O 25 '17 200w

"His letters express his passion for landscape, for the French countryside he could look down on, for the clouds near which he was so much at home. He and his mother come to life again, and will live with a tragic intensity forever, in this 'Memoir,' where Mr Chapman speaks of them with a passion of candor that is lonelier than any reticence."

P. L.

+ New Repub 12:22 Ag 4 '17 1450w

"They are graphic letters that show imaginative feeling and unusual faculty for literary expression, and they are filled with details of his daily life and duties and reflect the keen satisfaction he was taking in his experiences."

+ N Y Times 22:200 My 20 '17 650w

Pittsburgh 22:680 O '17 100w

Pratt p39 O '17 20w

+ R of Rs 56:325 S '17 120w

CHASE, MARY ELLEN. Virginia of Elk Creek valley. il *$1.35 (3c) Page 17-10859

This book is a sequel to "The girl from the Big Horn country," published in 1916, which told how Virginia Hunter left her father's cattle ranch in Wyoming and went east to school. In the new volume, practically all the action takes place on or near the ranch which is Virginia's home, and to which she invites her eastern friends in the summer vacation. The only love affair in the story is that of Virginia's Aunt Nan, and that is touched on but lightly.

CHEKHOV, ANTON PAVLOVICH. House with the mezzanine, and other stories; tr. from the Russian by S. S. Koteliansky and Gilbert Cannan. *$1.35 (2c) Scribner 17-22089

"My life," the longest of the seven stories, takes up about half the book. The other stories are: The house with the mezzanine; Typhus; Gooseberries; In exile; The lady with the toy dog; Goussiev. "The lady with the toy dog" appears in the third volume of Chekhov's tales translated by Mrs Garnett and published by Macmillan as "The lady with the dog."

Reviewed by L. S. Friedland

* + Dial 64:27 Ja 3 '18 2350w

Reviewed by Alvin Johnson

+ New Repub 13:sup12 N 17 '17 320w

"Chekhov, with the subtle skill of the etcher, transforms the ordinary into the artistic. This is his miracle of creation." L. S. Friedland

+ N Y Call p14 Ja 12 '18 300w

"He is, above all things, a lover of beauty. If he were not, he could not hate ugliness so much. . . . In the present volume his sensitiveness becomes almost morbid. . . . Tchekoff is an artist, not a propagandist, and he holds out no panacea for the conditions he portrays. But he places a suggestion in the mouth of Misrail, the ineffectual, wasted idealist, that is very significant—i.e., that in order that man should not enslave his fellows, nor build up a prison house of greed and egotism about himself, it was necessary that all without exception—the strong and the weak, the rich and the poor—should share equally in the struggle for existence, every man for himself, and in that respect there was no better means of leveling than physical labor and compulsory service for all." The world is coming to see that universal service of one sort or another is a national duty. . . . William James has offered it as a substitute for war. Tchekoff offers it as a necessity of peace."

N Y Times 22:329 S 9 '17 1800w

"The popularity of Anton Chekhov, or at any rate, the attempt to popularize him, is evidenced from the fact that two publishers are concurrently bringing out what must eventually be his complete works. . . . There is much overlapping, and as even the most enthusiastic Russo-ophile would not want both sets, the question comes to one of translation. Cursory comparisons fail to settle the question. Mrs Garnett has probably rendered more Russian into English than has Mr Cannan, but Mr Cannan is not unskilled, and imparts a finish to the work, which does not mean lack of fidelity to the original, that makes it read as smoothly as does Mrs Garnett's version, which is no mean praise."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 S 6 '17 230w

CHEKHOV, ANTON PAVLOVICH. Lady with the dog, and other stories; tr. from the Russian by Constance Garnett. *$1.50 (2c) Macmillan 17-15285

"This is the third volume out of the six in which Mrs Garnett's translations of Tchekhov's tales are to be issued." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "One or two of the stories have already appeared in different translations." (Boston Transcript) The longest of the nine tales, "An anonymous story," takes up about a third of the book. The other stories are: The lady with the dog; A doctor's visit; An upheaval; Ionitch; The head of the family; The black monk (a story of madness); Volodya; The husband.

"Any one with a turn for sampling stories by looking at the last page might well be put off by the uniform ending of these tales in suicide, disillusionment, or gross abandonment to the sensual sty, and suspect a formula of pessimism and tragedy on the author's part. But they are various enough in theme, if monotonously grim in colouring; and they belong to various periods in Chekhov's life, the most poetical of them, 'The black monk,' having appeared in English as long ago as 1903."

Ath p416 Ag '17 280w

"It is said that among the more modern masters of Russian fiction, Chekhov is accorded the first place by his own people. No doubt it takes a Russian fully to appreciate the significance of this, for the writings of Chekhov lack the extraordinary beauty of Sologub's, the simple charm of Kuprin's, the deep tragedy of Andreiev's and the tensify of Maxim Gorky's. But as the characteristics of all these writers are to be found in Chekhov's pages, together with a distinct individuality, perhaps he really does give a saner and more truly typical picture of his people, thus explaining the veneration in which his memory and writings are said to be held in Russia. . . . 'A doctor's visit' is the unforgettable story of the book. It seems to us to be one of the finest stories of capital and labor ever written." J. F. S.

Boston Transcript p6 J1 18 '17 650w

+ Cleveland p103 S '17 40w

Reviewed by L. S. Friedland

* + Dial 64:27 Ja 3 '18 2350w

"Mr Edward Garnett has said that Chekhov is 'an unfinching realist, with a poet's sensitiveness to beauty.' 'A true realist' might better express it all, if we were to permit the phrase its higher meaning. . . . Hapless mortals, striving vainly for self-fulfilment, for happiness; frustrate in the end, but not ignoble: such are the figures with which this little world of Chekhov's is mainly peopled."

Nation 105:70 J1 19 '17 400w

Reviewed by Alvin Johnson

+ New Repub 13:sup12 N 17 '17 320w

N Y Br Lib News 4:131 S '17 20w

N Y Times 22:274 J1 22 '17 830w

"In one way or another, that opposition between the claims of the ego and the inevitability of 'what is going on about us' is almost as persistent in Tchekhov as it is in the novels of Mr Hardy. . . . Life interested him, hurt him, puzzled him; and the more it puzzled him, it might be thought, the more urgently he felt the need of expressing its effect upon him, touching with the nicest restraint upon the significant though homely details which emphasized the puzzling interest by bringing it to the very doors of his Russian readers. An English reader who does not know Tchekhov's Russia can never, perhaps, appreciate the full force of those details; but many, perhaps most of them, stand good for any civilized country of the modern world."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p306 Je 28 '17 1200w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

CHEKHOV, ANTON PAVLOVICH—Continued
 "Chekhov can forgive any sin of the body or the mind except the sin against the Holy Ghost—the failure to understand the joys and sorrows of the imagination." W: L. Phelps
 + Yale R n s 7:189 O '17 500w

CHEKHOV, ANTON PAVLOVICH. Party, and other stories. *$1.50 (2c) Macmillan 17-23646

This is the fourth volume in the new series of Chekhov's tales translated from the Russian by Constance Garnett. Contents: The party; Terror; A woman's kingdom; A problem; The kiss; "Anna on the neck"; The teacher of literature; Not wanted; Typhus; A misfortune; A trifle from life. Another translation of "Typhus" appears in Chekhov's "House with the Mezzanine, and other stories," published by Scribner.

"This volume includes eleven tales of a high level of merit. While there is considerable diversity in the subjects and methods of treatment, the general sombre atmosphere and feeling of uneasiness and dissatisfaction make it desirable that the tales should be taken singly in order to be fully appreciated."
 + Ath p597 N '17 140w

"There are eleven tales in this volume, and in none of them is life found anything better than unintelligible. The sweetness and spirituality have been carefully extracted from life, and there is left a sort of carnival of sordidness and inconsequence which is like a nightmare of the soul. It is nothing to say that these tales are not Christian. They are not even in the nobler tradition of paganism."
 — Cath World 106:689 F '18 360w

Reviewed by L. S. Friedland
 * + Dial 64:27 Ja 3 '18 2350w

"Chekhov, in 'The party and other stories,' shows himself again a master of the art of character drawing. With all its power, however, the book, like so much of Chekhov's work, is depressing and gloomy. Its keynote is human feebleness, human futility. There is not one instance in it of a man or woman fighting against and overcoming adverse circumstances by force of will."
 + — Ind 93:150 Ja 26 '18 150w

"If we really wish to understand Russia, we have much to learn from Chekhov. Read 'The party' and you will know at least something of the life of the intelligent upper classes of the provinces. . . . Chekhov is concerned mainly with middle class and aristocratic life, fundamentally in a false position among the benighted and exploited millions. Inevitably there is much that is pathological in life thus artificially limited, much that is corrupt and more that is futile. The effect is sometimes depressing, but no intelligent reader would wish it relieved. Chekhov gives us nothing that we do not need to know, if we wish to understand Russia." Alvin Johnson
 + New Repub 13:sup12 N 17 '17 320w

"'The party' is a terrifying piece of realism, indicting the ordinary artificialities of life with a power which would seem as excessive as that used to break the proverbial butterfly on the wheel, if we were not at the same time made to feel that an existence made up of these artificialities is spiritually and even physically ruinous—a lingering death-in-life. Chekhov is the modern Preacher. An evil hath he seen under the sun."
 + N Y Times 22:570 D 23 '17 670w
 + Outlook 117:134 O 3 '17 20w

"'The party' is a powerful, grimly realistic tale."
 + R of Rs 56:557 N '17 70w

CHENEY, SHELDON. Art theatre. il *$1.50 (3c) Knopf 792 17-30697

A study of the art theatre, its ideals, its organization and its promise as a corrective for present playhouse evils. The writer believes that the art theatre must become the corrective first for the shortcomings of the little theatre. His point of view differs from that of some of the writers about little theatres, in that he considers the little theatre only a step towards something better. "In all the excitement about little theatres we are in danger of losing sight of the higher ideal—the art theatre." Next the art theatre must correct the evils of the commercialized theatre with its destructive practice of creating and exploiting "stars." The real art of the theatre, he thinks, must be established thru the development of fixed local playhouses with resident companies dedicated to repertory production of the best that dramatic art has to offer.

"As a man of experience and vision, he does not fall into the error of trying to 'uplift' the commercial theater. It can't be done, and he knows it." L: Gardy
 + N Y Call p15 Ja 12 '18 730w

"Deals to a certain extent with the same subject as Mr Dickinson's book, but views it from so different an angle and discusses it with so different an individuality that the two books admirably supplement each other and should both be read by any one who desires all the illumination of the question it is possible to have. A chapter of bibliography, with running comment upon the books mentioned, will add greatly to the book's value to the student."
 + N Y Times 22:578 D 30 '17 300w

"What these theaters mean in the process of the democratization of our national life, and in the development of a fresh and vital art impulse, Mr Sheldon Cheney tells us in a stirring and capitivating book."
 + R of Rs 57:107 Ja '18 350w

CHÉRADAME, ANDRÉ. Pangerman plot unmasked; Berlin's formidable peace-trap of "the drawn war"; with an introd. by Lord Cromer. il *$1.25 (2c) Scribner 327.4 17-1796

"By pan-Germanism Mr Chéradame means the doctrine of purely Prussian origin, which aims at annexing all the various regions, irrespective of race or language, of which the possession is deemed useful to the power of the Hohenzollerns." This doctrine, the author claims, is one of steady growth and accretion, and a realization of it has already been on the verge of achievement. He holds even that acceptance of the German offer of a drawn game would make it real within a decade at the furthest.—Lit D

+ A L A Bk1 13:305 Ap '17

"To review the book adequately would be to quote it in its entirety, for every page is of significance. It is by all means the most pregnant volume on the deeper issues of the war that has come under our eyes."
 + Boston Transcript p9 Ja 31 '17 700w

Cleveland p15 Mr '17 60w

"Useful for its vigorous handling of the geographical issues involved." H. J. Laski
 + Dial 62:96 F 8 '17 30w

Ind 89:558 Mr 26 '17 110w

"Mr Chéradame has concentrated on this subject for over twenty years, in studies in the very lands now occupied or directed by the Germans."
 + Lit D 54:413 F 17 '17 350w

"The neutral nations are vitally concerned in this. . . . His book is arresting, pertinent, unforgettably challenging to serious thought."
 + N Y Times 22:18 Ja 21 '17 750w

"It is not surprising that M. Chéradame, an eager student of international politics from his youth up, and a pupil of Albert Sorel, should have derived from these sources a point of view quite different from that of the ordinary French or English official diplomatist. . . . Entirely apart from any conclusions that may be thought speculative, there are in this book of M. Chéradame's certain truths of fundamental importance which ought to be widely appreciated, especially in the United States."
 + No Am 206:477 S '17 100w

Pittsburgh 22:685 O '17 70w
 St Louis 15:73 Mr '17

"We cannot commend to our readers a better collection of facts from which to derive a wise caution at this critical turn of events than is contained in this important work. . . . Pan-Germanism, which was the source of the war, aims at creating a great military empire stretching from the North sea to the Persian gulf. . . . Even as the situation is, Germany has executed nine-tenths of the pan-German plan of 1911. . . . The substance of the whole book is a most impressive political argument, very cogent and extraordinarily opportune."

+ Spec 117:805 D 23 '16 2050w

"No British writer has so firm a grip as M. Chéradame upon the countless ramifications of the pan-German movement."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p618 D 21 '16 850w

CHESTERTON, CECIL EDWARD. Perils of peace; with an introd. by Hilaire Belloc. *2s T. W. Laurie, London 940.91 (Eng ed 16-20285)

"Mr Chesterton's book is a warning against any compromise or patched-up peace with the enemy, of which he considers there is danger. Three factors in the politics of this country he regards as mainly concerned in the problem: pacifism, with which he associates the names of Mr Macdonald, Mr Snowden, and others; financiers with cosmopolitan concerns; and our system of government by professional politicians. Mr Chesterton is severe upon the ministers in power. Alluding to their decision to fight Germany, he remarks that 'they achieved the most popular act of their largely misspent lives.' He considers that if the war proceeds to exhaustion, the Central powers will be exhausted first, and will therefore be obliged to accept the Allies' terms. A compromise would, for the Allies and especially Great Britain, be disastrous."—Ath

"We notice some misprints; everywhere Mr Snowden's name is spelt 'Snowdon.'" Ath p438 S '16 240w

"I do not in the least disagree with Mr Cecil Chesterton in the immediate object of his book, which is, to avert a sudden laying down of our arms. But I see no danger of that: we are far more likely to go on fighting long after there is nothing more to be gained by it. For the rest the book is full of the most frightful nonsense." G. B. S. New Repub 9:270 Ja 6 '17 9000w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. Short history of England. *$1.50 (2½c) Lane 942 17-29757

At the start Mr Chesterton challenges the claim of so called popular histories to the word popular. "They are all, nearly without exception, written against the people; and in them the populace is either ignored or elaborately proved to have been wrong." It is his aim to produce, therefore, a history from the standpoint of the public, one that does not trample upon popular traditions. His book is a small one on a big subject; but as he strides down the centuries of England's progress he pauses at the epoch-making forces long enough to estimate their power and influence in shaping the nation's course. He dismisses the detail of transitional happenings with a sentence. He places the crisis in English history at the fall of Richard II where the king and the populace for a moment came together, instead of placing it about the period of the Stuarts. Turning to the present world struggle he sees in defeat nothing before England but the servile state; in success, freedom from a yoke of slavery which is another word for militarism.

A L A Bkl 14:122 Ja '18

"You open his pages—perhaps you distrust him and doubt him—but whether you agree with him or disagree, whether you are pleased or annoyed, you inevitably go on reading."

+ Ath p659 D '17 300w

"It is a trifle that a book should be sometimes too exuberant. The main thing is that it should be alive. And Mr Chesterton's history is not only alive, but kicking. It has so much of the truth of imagination that it may be forgiven for having some of its falsehood as well."

+ Ath p661 D '17 1650w

"On the whole, it is one of his best books, the tendency to verbal display and superficial anti-thesis being balanced by the demands of a sustained argument."

+ Ath p683 D '17 200w

"This book, a pioneer in historical introspection, must kindle severe criticism for its superficial conclusions, inferentially at least, against the assertion of spirited leadership in transition eras, when the persistence of 'one good custom should corrupt the world.' . . . However, Mr Chesterton is to be welcomed in this new rôle of political philosopher for the fresh interest he brings." L. E. Robinson

+ Bookm 46:270 N '17 700w

"But it is true of Chesterton's 'History of England,' as it is true of any work of art, that the sanctities which it violates are not so important as the vision which inspires it." R. K. Hack

* Dial 64:65 Ja '17 '18 1450w

"Finally, Chesterton is unable to make his book wholly impartial; it is a partizan history, as bitter against the aristocracy as Macaulay was against the Stuarts and as pro-Catholic as Froude was anti-Catholic. Chesterton is at his best as a historian when he sums up for us the general 'atmosphere' of an age or an institution."

+ Ind 93:128 Ja 19 '18 1100w

"Mr Chesterton's thesis is that the middle ages were the time of true democracy, and that parliamentary government is government by an anti-popular oligarchy. Upon this general theme he has written a strange and fascinating history of England."

+ N Y Times 22:501 N 25 '17 700w

+ R of Rs 57:103 Ja '18 170w

"We love Mr Chesterton—we could 'hug him,' as Johnson said of a man in whom he discovered his own preference for rhyme—for his real understanding of and sympathy with the rhetoric and the aristocracy of the eighteenth century. Mr Chesterton's 'Short history' is the wittiest, most eloquent, and discerning essay on the history of England which we have ever happened to read."

+ Sat R 124:395 N 17 '17 1100w

"Unsuited, therefore, as Mr Chesterton's style is to history, it is still less suited to propagandism. . . . A paradoxical partisan runs very little chance of winning converts. When we want clear thinking he gives us a jingling antithesis; in the words of Bagehot's invaluable distinction, he can make a loud argument but not a fine one. . . . And yet, when we have counted all the faults of the book, we return to its great outstanding merits: its freshness, its vitality, its interest."

+ Spec 119:493 N 3 '17 1500w

"Nevertheless the book is a brilliant history of Mr Chesterton's reactions from English history."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 18 '17 900w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p507 O 18 '17 140w

"It would be vain to review this book as a history of England, for it is interesting only as an expression of Mr Chesterton's mentality. The historian is well aware that he can only see the past through a glass of many colours, but he knows that the business of his science is to dispel, so far as possible, the distortions of the various media through which historical knowledge is transmitted. But to Mr Chesterton the distortion is the reality."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p564 N 22 '17 1550w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. Utopia of usurers, and other essays. *$1.25 (4c) Boni & Liveright 304 17-26888

The "Utopia of usurers" is an attack on modern society, with special reference to Great Britain. Mr Chesterton "is up in arms against the terror of a world which shall be ruled—in politics and literature and art and all things else—by its 'captains of industry.'" (N Y Times) He is particularly concerned about "the way in which the capitalists of today use art and the press for their own purposes. His spleen, it seems, is largely directed against the liberal press." (Spring'd Republican) Some chapters such as: The amnesty for aggression, The servile state again, and The tower of Bebel, deal with the European war. Other chapters are: The mask of socialism; A workman's history of England; The French revolution and the Irish; The art of missing the point, etc. Two poems are included: A song of swords and The escape.

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH—Continued

A L A Bkl 14:85 D '17

"The general scope of his latest book, 'Utopia of usurers,' is sociological, but it rambles so wildly and discursively through those regions that we doubt if anyone who is diligent enough to read it to the litter end will have a well-formed idea of his theory of the structure and organization of modern society. . . . He gives us the impression of the orator who has a plethora of words and a dearth of ideas and who begins to talk and keeps on talking simply because a multitude of English phrases are at his command and he cannot resist the temptation to use them. . . . His wit is not so agile as it once was." E. P. E.

— + Boston Transcript p8 O 31 '17 1650w

"The work is an impassioned plea, unmarred by any of the demagogue's shallow eloquence, for the natural rights of men and the restoration of their earlier liberties. If there is something less than usual of Mr Chesterton's wit, it is by no means wholly absent; and there is no lack of wisdom, based upon enduring truths and expressed with the clearness of a tocsin."

+ Cath World 106:539 Ja '18 400w

Reviewed by E. Sapir

* Dial 64:25 Ja 3 '18 1650w

"The average literary critic always says that Chesterton is an amusing, entertaining, attractive concocter of paradoxes but that he is not sincere and must not be taken seriously. Chesterton's latest volume is neither amusing nor attractive, it is certainly the least enjoyable book which he has ever written, but it has a savage earnestness that puts the charge of insincerity out of court completely."

+ Ind 92:256 N 3 '17 350w

"The 'Utopia of usurers' is distinctly among the 'negative' creations of Chesterton, and it takes high rank among those creations. Like all his iconoclastic works, the 'Utopia' is a negation only in an objective sense: it is destruction which is positive in its purpose. Chesterton's natural weapon is the hammer of Thor—in the service of Christ. And in his latest book he utilizes this ancient weapon against something very modern and vital, indeed—capitalism." E. J. Moyer

+ N Y Call p15 N 25 '17 1000w

"It sums up the advocacy of eugenics as 'one of the most strange, simple, and horrible ideas that have ever risen from the deep pit of original sin.' He is against the 'social reforms' of modern government with all the strength of his being. Of the view of English history which is 'current at public schools and colleges, part of the culture of all the classes that count for much in government,' he says flatly: "There is not one word of truth in it from beginning to end." He is the reactionary radical here, as elsewhere. Some of his essays are exceedingly dogmatic. With some of his passionate convictions the reader will not agree. But every page of the book is interesting."

+ N Y Times 22:418 N 4 '17 1150w

"He who possesses the rhetorical power of Mr Chesterton and uses that power to falsify current history, misinterpret motives, and stir up class hatred is guilty of a crime against humanity."

— Outlook 117:518 N 28 '17 240w

"'Utopia of usurers' is Chesterton a little grouchy, but Chesterton at his best or very near his best. The object of the satirist's attack is modern plutocratic society, and, if he is not always at pains to distinguish what is bad from what is good in that society he is always amusing, without being too paradoxical to be pointless."

+ — Spring'd Republican p17 O 28 '17 1400w

CHEVRILLON, ANDRÉ. England and the war (1914-1915). *$1.60 (2c) Doubleday 940.91
17-15314

M. Chevrillon, a nephew of Taine, has lived in England, has many English friends, and has visited outlying parts of the empire. Rudyard Kipling says in his preface to the volume that Chevrillon writes "with the knowledge of the psychologist and the profound sympathy of one long acquainted with our lives, our history, and the expression, formal or idiomatic, of our thoughts." The book is "a psychological study of the English mind in the first eighteen months of war." (Dial) It tells how "England awoke from a mood of self-complacency to the consciousness of being engaged in a life and death struggle; how a dead weight of cherished traditions, habits, and prejudices, all connected with much that is best in her life, was cast aside; and how her scattered and incoherent energies were welded into one collective and disciplined will." (The Times [London] Lit Supp) All this is discussed under the captions: Public opinion; The illusion of security; The appeal to conscience; The men; The need of adaptation; Adaptation; To-day and to-morrow. The papers were first published in the Revue de Paris from November, 1915, to January, 1916.

"His book is not history in the technical sense. But it is the raw material of history and of the greatest value. The French quickness of understanding and ability to put oneself in another's place come here to the advantage of the future historian." G. B. A.

+ Am Hist R 23:432 Ja '18 550w

A L A Bkl 14:18 O '17

"The best treatment of that aspect of events [national psychology] that has yet appeared, and much of it is applicable, for one reason or another to life on this side of the Atlantic." C. H. P. Thurston

+ Bookm 46:286 N '17 240w

+ Cath World 106:397 D '17 310w

Cleveland p118 N '17 70w

"When allowance for the human fact of conviction is made this is the best interim study of the English attitude the war has so far produced." H. J. Laski

+ — Dial 63:53 JI 19 '17 1900w

"The M. Chevrillon's study does not surpass or, indeed, nearly equal that revelation of the English mind presented by Mr H. G. Wells, yet skilfully made is his clean cut distinction between the British sporting conception of war and the German vision of its glory."

+ — Ind 91:174 S 22 '17 200w

"This may be regarded as the thesis of the book, the power of religion and an inborn sense of duty to take the place of intelligent governmental control before a great and sudden emergency. As coming from a clear-eyed Frenchman, this study of a national temperament very different from his own is peculiarly valuable."

— Nation 105:128 Ag 2 '17 290w

"It ought to be read by Americans as much for the light it throws on our own processes as for the sake of making us understand better our English cousins."

+ N Y Times 22:261 JI 15 '17 800w

"M. Chevrillon is, of course, no such theorist as was Taine; but he has a very similar sensitiveness to national character and a like gift of selecting and developing the essential elements. In this there is something more than simple thesis-building or than unambitious description. It is a combination, so to speak, of trenchant analysis with artistic handling, of intellectual and moral honesty with the desire to please. Like Taine, too, M. Chevrillon is perhaps a little prone to exaggerate. But to exaggerate only in the interests of clearness! If M. Chevrillon's book really expresses in any degree the attitude of France toward England, it is reasonable to expect that there will be not merely a continued alliance between these two peoples, but a true and enduring friendship."

+ No Am 206:637 O '17 1000w

+ Pittsburgh 22:761 N '17 110w

"Some of this comment has been made obsolete by later developments. But, as a study of the English mind in contrast with the German, the book is interesting and it may also prove useful as a piece of friendly criticism."

+ — R of Rs 56:213 Ag '17 100w

"A piece of contemporary history which has, we think, a permanent value."

+ Spec 119:sup630 D 1 '17 180w

"If there is any one deficiency in a narrative and in comments vivid, pointed, and studiously fair, it is a somewhat insufficient appreciation of the work of the navy in our days of limited military inactivity."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p279 Je 14 '17 1350w

CHILDS, LESLIE. Legal points for automobile owners. 50c (7c) Ogilvie 629.2 17-14172

"The compiler has endeavored to set out, in a few words, the general rules governing the operation of automobiles, and the liabilities for violations thereof. This is in no sense a text book, is not intended for the use of lawyers, or others learned in the law, but for the man in the street, the farmer, the business or professional man, in fact any owner of a car." (Preface) Among the points covered are: The employer's liability for acts of his chauffeur; On turning corners; Frightening horses; When required to stop; Unregistered automobile; Unlicensed chauffeur; Lending your automobile.

+ Ind 91:77 JI 14 '17 40w

Pittsburgh 22:664 O '17 10w

St Louis 15:330 S '17

CHILDS, W. J. Across Asia Minor on foot. II *$4 (2½c) Dodd 915.6 (Eng ed 17-26394)

The author started from Samsûn on the Black sea and traveled, by a somewhat devious route, to Alexandretta on the Mediterranean. His experiences were pleasant ones and he writes of them entertainingly. He says, "Only in the quality of adventure did realization fall short of what might have been expected. Brigandage and robbery, fighting between troops and deserters, murder and forcible abductions—affairs of this kind took place before and behind me, but I missed them ever, sometimes by days, sometimes only by hours, and moved always, it seemed, in the peaceful intervals between storms. For this reason no bloodshedding, no hair-breadth escapes will be found in the narrative." His journey was taken in the days before the war and he met with universal kindness, from American, German, Turk, Armenian and Greek. In his last chapter he touches on the international significance of the undeveloped resources of Asia Minor.

"Incidentally sheds light on the Armenian situation before the war and the German plan for a railway to Bagdad."

+ A L A Bkl 13:397 Je '17

"Not only lovers of travel but those readers desiring to understand as much as possible local conditions in the various fighting areas of the war will find Mr Childs' book a revelation. . . . For on the same battle-scarred terrain where Alexander and Cæsar fought for that world hegemony only the control of the travel route to India and the Far East could give the armies of the Allies are fighting today." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 11 '17 800w

"A tale of adventure of never slackening interest from beginning to end."

+ N Y Times 22:196 My 20 '17 20½w

Pittsburgh 22:677 O '17 60w

"The illustrations are attractive, but we are rather surprised that an obviously competent writer has forgotten the detail of an index."

+ Sat R 123:233 Mr 10 '17 330w

"Exceptionally attractive and brilliant book of travel. . . . Mr Childs does not devote much space to politics. He has too many other subjects to deal with, and, like Porrow, prefers the wind on the heath or a night in a crowded tavern among alien folk to debating high matters of state. But his shrewd estimates of the native peoples are fresh and valuable."

+ Spec 118:273 Mr 3 '17 1950w

"To some not the least interesting part of the book is the indication constantly given as the traveller gets farther south of the large far-seeing policy which the Germans have for the last twenty years been slowly, quietly, and consistently carrying out in the East. . . . We are grateful for a book which enables us to share the romance of one great road before the railway opens up its hidden places and destroys its guarded secrets."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p221 My 10 '17 1350w

CHITWOOD, OLIVER PERRY. Immediate causes of the great war. *$1.35 (3c) Crowell 940.91 17-13588

"The object of this volume is to narrate briefly the direct causes of the European war as they are given in the published documents of the belligerents. These sources are abundantly adequate for determining the immediate responsibility of each nation and apportioning the guilt for this great crime." (Preface) The author is professor of European history in West Virginia university, and he says that his experience as a teacher has shown him the need for such a work. Contents: Some indirect causes of the war; The assassination of Francis Ferdinand; The Austro-Hungarian note to Serbia; Serbia's reply to Austria-Hungary; Efforts to prevent war; Efforts to isolate the war; The war area broadens; Great Britain declares war on the Teutonic powers; The violation of the neutrality of Belgium; Japan and Turkey drawn into the conflict; Italy enters the war; The lesser belligerents.

+ A L A Bkl 14:88 D '17

+ Ind 90:556 Je 23 '17 50w

N Y Br Lib News 4:101 JI '17

"Persons who do not have access to the various official statements of the governments at war, or do not have time to read the evidence therein presented, will find this summary convenient and useful."

+ R of Rs 56:214 Ag '17 100w

CHOLMONDELEY, ALICE. Christine. *$1.25 (2c) Macmillan 17-21644

Reviewers differ from each other as to whether these letters are fact or fiction. The publishers wrote the editor of the Digest on September 13, that "We don't know and we have no means of finding out." The letters purport to be written to a mother by a young Englishwoman with a talent for music, who goes to Germany to study the violin, and is in Berlin from May to August, 1914. Christine believes all Germans to be "simple and kindly." Her disillusionment begins in Frau Berg's middle-class boarding-house where "she becomes a target for the Anglophobe remarks of the other boarders," and is continued in the home of a family of the "Junker-military-official military set," where she goes to live later because she has become engaged to a young officer in the Prussian army with a leaning towards music. The point of view of the well-to-do country folk is given when she goes for a short rest to the home of a forester and his wife at Schuppenfelde. The artistic set is represented by her violin teacher, Kloster, who seems to stand "for fearlessness, for freedom, for beauty, for all the great things," but is silenced when the government "chokes him with the Order of the Red Eagle, First class." When war comes, Christine's situation becomes impossible and she starts to join her mother in Switzerland, but contracts pneumonia on the way and dies in a hospital at Stuttgart.

+ A L A Bkl 14:94 D '17

CHOLMONDELEY, ALICE—Continued

"In style and feeling 'Christine' reminds one strongly of 'Fräulein Schmidt and Mr Anstruther' and other works of the Baroness von Arnim."

+ Ath p526 O '17 160w

"It is not often that a collection of letters intended for no eyes but those of a beloved mother turns out to be an amazingly accurate revelation of the real, hidden nature of a great people. . . . To the earnest men and women of the time the book is a state document, to the eager story readers an idyll, to the lover of music a perfect interlude, to any reader an hour's delight."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 29 '17 2400w

"Whether fact or fiction, they have the ring of truth and spontaneity."

+ Cath World 106:251 N '17 300w

"They tell a touching story, and give a vivid, but for artistic purposes, somewhat over-emphasized picture of a whole nation hypnotized by one man."

+ Cleveland p132 D '17 80w

"The doubt as to the legitimacy of the letters comes when one reads the initial one, which, like all first letters in epistolary novels, retails to the ostensible recipient all the facts the reader needs to know. And as one reads on, the natural development of events, the study of the actions and reactions of different classes of Germans to war and then to the war, no less than the fluency of the style, seem to indicate that 'Christine' is a clever, interesting, but fabricated, narrative."

+ Dial 63:220 S 13 '17 550w

+ Ind 91:353 S 1 '17 80w

"If the volume is indeed what it purports to be—it is a document as significant as any which the war has yet furnished. For, on this assumption, it goes far to wipe out the distinction gladly made by many between the attitude of the German people and that of the German government towards the possibility of a world war. Provided the letters are genuine, they leave little doubt that the great middle class in Germany ardently desired, even before the Sarajevo tragedy, a testing of German arms, and especially with England. If this is not a true history (and we prefer to believe that it is), then we can only deplore the wretched taste of an author who just at this time would dare to confirm our worst suspicions of Germany by an elaborate fiction parading as a document before the fact."

Nation 105:202 Ag 23 '17 1000w

"Were 'Christine' genuine, it would be impressive. Were 'Christine' a 'human document,' it would confirm many sickening doubts and fears, it would fortify the indictment of a whole people. But whether those doubts and fears are to be sustained or not, 'Christine' will not confirm them or even support them because it is a book obviously composed by a skilful writer of fiction, feeding the appetite for hatred, supplying in detail and with subtle art the 'confirmation' which it is natural at this date for groveling natures to relish."

F. H.

— New Repub 12:277 O 6 '17 1500w

"A book which is true in essentials though it wears the garb of fiction—so real is it that one is tempted to doubt whether it is fiction at all. . . . It would be difficult to find a book in which the state of mind of the German people just before and at the very beginning of the war was pictured so clearly, with so much understanding and convincing detail, as it is in this one. The letters are admirably written, revealing an absolutely charming personality."

+ N Y Times 22:285 Ag 5 '17 1200w

"Doubtless it is based on 'genuine' letters. But we can't help believing that in editing these letters 'Alice Cholmondeley's' knowledge of the needs of fiction was drawn on repeatedly. And we can't see that the book—even as a 'document'—has suffered in consequence. The fact part has not been injured by the fiction."

+ N Y Times 22:358 S 23 '17 930w

+ Pittsburgh 22:748 N '17 10w

+ Pratt p50 O '17 20w

"It is also odd to find a girl in real life so extraordinarily like one in Mrs Ward's novels."

— + Sat R 124:509 D 22 '17 560w

+ Spec 119:389 O 13 '17 250w

"The chief value of the letters—assuming the correctness of the author's observations—is the vivid presentation of the German viewpoint and the analysis of the bumpitious, modern-minded, all sufficient, yet fear-haunted Germany that plunged the world into a needless war."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 26 '17 700w

"In one sense, however, it does not matter whether the setting is real or only made up. The matter, in either case, is full of truth. The letters, whether written by an English girl in Berlin before the war, or by a clever storyteller in England during the war, were written by someone who knew Germany and the Germans."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p450 S 29 '17 750w

CHRISTIAN, W. E. Rhymes of the rookies. *31 Dodd 811 17-25969

The "sunny side of soldier service" is dedicated to Theodore Roosevelt. The rhymes have been called the barrack-room ballads of the American soldier, touching, as they do, upon the little monotones of life in camp. Aside from the short poems there is a glossary of American and English army slang, words to the army trumpet calls and a few hints for first aid.

A L A BkI 14:85 D '17

CHURCH, ALEXANDER HAMILTON. Manufacturing costs and accounts. diags *$5 McGraw 657 17-3317

"It is the purpose of this book to present the subject of costing in such a way as to bring together the points of view of cost men and of general accountants. . . . The book is divided into three parts, the first of which gives a general outline of manufacturing accounts."

Part 2 opens with a general diagram that, with proper study, makes clear the relationship of the cost records to the main books of account and explains means for unifying the general accounts and the cost system into a consistent whole. The separate features of manufacturing accounts, as outlined in part 1, are then taken up in greater detail. . . . Cost system reports and returns for the foreman, superintendent and general executive are suggested and described in part 3. The four chapters making up this part are revised from a series of articles published in the American Machinist in September, 1915.—Engin News-Rec

"Some question may be raised as to the wisdom of attempting to teach or explain the theory of double entry bookkeeping in the small amount of space allotted to this subject by the author in part one. The book is a notable addition to a library on cost accounting, and to the student who is well grounded in the basic principles of accounting it will prove of considerable value in treating of cost accounts." A. T. Cameron

+ Ann Am Acad 74:294 N '17 390w

Cleveland p96 J1 '17 20w

"It is sufficiently elementary in treatment to be recommended as a general textbook on accounting and cost keeping for the use of engineers needing instruction in those subjects."

R. R. Potter

+ Engin News-Rec 78:150 Ap 19 '17 450w

N Y Br Lib News 4:58 Ap '17

"Mature minds . . . will find in it suggestion, explanation, and direction obtainable so far as the reviewer knows, nowhere else." C. B. Going

+ Pittsburgh 22:447 My '17 80w (Reprinted from Journal of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers p369 Ap '17)

Pratt p24 J1 '17 30w

St Louis 15:113 Ap '17

CHURCHILL, MRS MATILDA (FAULKNER). Letters from my home in India; ed. and arranged by Grace M. Rogers. il *$1.35 (2½c) Doran 16-22790

The author has spent a lifetime in India. She went to that country as a missionary in 1873 immediately after her marriage. The letters cover the period from that time to the present. In the last letter, written from Nova Scotia, the author's native home, she expresses her deep joy at the prospect of returning to her labors in the mission field.

"The appeal of sincerity is universal. Hence, however divergent, anent foreign missions, may be the views of the readers of Mrs Churchill's letters, they will be unanimous in respect to the writer's unselfish and heroic service."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 18 '16 250w

+ Dial 61:542 D 14 '16 120w

N Y Br Lib News 4:14 Ja '17

CHURCHILL, WINSTON. Dwelling-place of light. il *$1.60 (1c) Macmillan 17-25746

Mr Churchill's latest novel deals with, but makes no attempt to solve, the industrial problem. "The Massachusetts mill city of Hampton . . . appears to be Holyoke to a hair, until an industrial crisis involving the I.W.W. and a dynamite plot on the part of the manufacturers convinces us that we are in Lawrence, with its neighboring Andover." (Nation) The central figure in the story is Janet Bumpus, whose father, "a racial failure who worships the Bumpus genealogy," is gate-keeper in the Chippering mill. Janet becomes stenographer and confidential secretary to Claude Ditmar, the manager of the mill, but later joins his enemies, the I.W.W. workers who are handling the strike. Janet's personal relations with Ditmar, with Rolfe, the I.W.W. leader, and with Brooks Insall, the humanitarian author, are recounted with much detail. Lise, Janet's sister, who has the temperament of a courtesan, and is "all for easy street," forms a strong contrast to Janet.

"Though we did not close the book satisfied that we had learnt how and where the mind might be sure of being environed by wisdom, we felt that some of the ways and means of approach had been indicated."

+ Ath p679 D '17 90w

"Somewhat oddly, perhaps, our author is a good deal more chary of laying down the law about industrialism than he was about religion. It almost seems indeed that, three-quarters through his narrative, he gradually withdraws from the problem he has so thoroughly stated, and takes refuge in the personal human story of the girl Janet." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:339 N '17 360w

"With 'The dwelling-place of light' Mr Churchill begins what appears to be his third epoch as a novelist. It contains something of each of his earlier manners, but it also involves an archaic tale of unrequited love such as hitherto he has never attempted to tell. He combines this with an ultra-modern portrayal of the sordid conditions of life among the poor, and a tedious account of a strike whose details are very obviously drawn from the activities of a notorious labor organization in a New England manufacturing city a few years ago. . . . Doubtless the novelist has written it in a mood of conviction and sincerity, but it does not convey that impression." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 10 '17 1450w

"Frankly, we believe that this novel merits severe condemnation. Any man who, at this stage of our national life, with a war on our hands and many internal dangers and problems to cope with, will publish such a defence of the propaganda of syndicalism and mob-rule, deserves a reprimand."

+ Cath World 106:694 F '18 330w

"He is apparently trying to show Theodore Dreiser the high honor of imitation. He has not Dreiser's savage equipment, and lacks the ponderous sledge-hammer stroke that makes its effect by heavy iteration of details. He lacks, too, the evident sincerity of Dreiser, who, however unpleasant he may be, is always unmistakably in earnest. Mr Churchill is a sheep in wolf's clothing, and the costume suits him not at all."

+ Ind 92:385 N 24 '17 280w

"To the reader of Mr Churchill's new novel, bewildered and curious at such long-continued philosophizing and analyzing of apparently ordinary characters, will suddenly come a conviction that, under an apparent sameness, there is something entirely new, something intensely vital."

+ Lit D 55:48 D 29 '17 480w

"Mr Churchill has rendered with extraordinary breadth and sympathy the New England manufacturing city, with its enterprise and its squalor, its huge industrial 'plants' driving always remorselessly for increased dividends, its polyglot hordes kept within bounds, for the most part, by the slender but steely filaments of necessity. Claude Ditmar, manager of the Chippering mill, is a striking portrait of the successful American. . . . One closes the record with the impression that, as Mr Churchill has solved Janet's knot by cutting it, he is fain to dispose of the industrial problem by retiring from it, as Janet has done, to some kindlier, mellow atmosphere."

Nation 105:403 O 11 '17 650w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 105:600 N 29 '17 200w

"Mr Churchill will never escape from gentility. He has achieved his position as its favorite interpreter. But the vitality shown in the 'Dwelling-place of light' proves how persistent is his faith in its tenets. He can make a place for the I.W.W. in his tradition rather than give up an American mill or an American girl." F. H.

+ New Repub 12:306 O 13 '17 1750w

"The picturing part of the book is an excellent performance, but the preaching of the after effects of freedom in love, and against socialistic and syndicalistic ideas, snacks of that mid-McKinleyan conservatism and prudery out of whose somber shadows America has stepped, for once and for all." Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p18 D 15 '17 800w

"He has never hitherto depicted a woman character with quite so much insight, skill, and surety as he portrays Janet Bumpus. . . . It is a pleasure to bear witness to the finer, truer taste with which Mr Churchill now writes. Scarcely anywhere in the book does one find any of those occasional lapses which offended so much in his earlier work. But this does not hold true of the ending of the story. Not since the deathbed of Little Eva has there been anything more banal than the last pages of this novel."

+ N Y Times 22:393 O 14 '17 1250w

"Mr Churchill is not afraid to present life as it is, and that with unsparing frankness, but also with a spirit of idealism and desire for future national and social advance."

+ Outlook 117:388 N 7 '17 170w

"One feels that the straight and logical working out of the plot has been distorted in order to furnish the author with vehicle for some of his own social theories. This, however, does not rob the final tragedy of its poignancy, nor detract from the merit of the masterly analysis of a certain type of feminine temperament embodied in Janet." F. T. Cooper

+ Pub W 92:1371 O 20 '17 1050w

"Mr Winston Churchill has been moved to picture the rapidly changing conditions of American social and industrial life in a story of great earnestness and power."

+ R of Rs 56:556 N '17 400w

"It is with thanksgiving that the serious English reader hails the work of those American authors—a select few—whose mental standpoint differs little from his own. Of these writers, sprung from the old American stock, our near relations, Mr Winston Churchill is perhaps the nearest to us. His point of view is indistinguishable from that of a well-educated and large-minded Englishman, and his language is, with a few comprehensible variants, our own.

CHURCHILL, WINSTON—Continued

In the course of the story we get a wonderfully clear impression of the heterogeneous mob of workers in an American manufacturing town; and of the dismay with which the old American regards these hordes of foreigners."

+ Sat R 124:374 N 10 '17 580w

"In his plot Mr Churchill is less successful than usual. He has evidently taken great pains with Janet's complex personality; but though every woman, and every man too, may be a bundle of inconsistencies, a heroine, to be credible and sympathetic, must have a more definite character than she seems to possess."

+ — Spec 119:497 N 3 '17 560w

"Recently we had the melancholy spectacle of the gifted Mr Galsworthy floundering in the miasma of sex, and now comes Winston Churchill with a story which treads dangerously near the distressing phases of the same theme. There is doubt whether Mr Churchill is marking time, or entering a new epoch in his literary life. For his own well-being, it is to be hoped that the former is the case, for, notwithstanding abundant evidences of his graceful narrative style and ability at vivid portraiture of character, the story adds little, if anything to his achievements."

+ — Springf'd Republican p17 O 21 '17 900w

"It is a long book and closely thought out; but it is always interesting to read, because Mr Winston Churchill writes with a discernment which is based on knowledge."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p540 X 8 '17 570w

CLADEL, JUDITH, comp. Rodin: the man and his art; with leaves from his note-book; tr. by S. K. Star; with introd. by J. Huneker. il *$5 Century 17-29347

"Mr Huneker opens the book with an introduction in which he says practically all that need be said of Rodin. He tells us in a few paragraphs what is significant in his career; that he mastered the technique of his art by the sweat of his brow, working for other sculptors as an anonymous, that he worked for the Sevres porcelain works, [etc.]. . . . In the biographical chapters the events of Rodin's life are elaborated and a reasonable perspective is kept, bringing into relief the important moments [of his career]. . . . The pages devoted to Rodin's own notes cover a wide field of comment. Throughout he raises a hymn to work. . . . Besides these comments, written from the intense interest of the artist in the reasons and sources of what he observes, there are other notes that are casual or lyric as the spirit prompts." (N Y Times) "The text is illustrated by about forty beautiful photographs of Rodin's work." (A L A Bkl)

+ A L A Bkl 14:83 D '17

Reviewed by Kenyon Cox

* Nation 105:574 N 22 '17 2200w

"Much of the text is touched by the generous but blighting spirit of special pleading and resentment against criticism of Rodin, but biographical information is given of the kind that alone is important in the case of an artist; and the quotations from the note-books have the great value of original and direct expressions upon a subject thoroughly known and deeply felt."

+ — N Y Times 22:557 D 16 '17 1600w

CLAPHAM, CHARLES BLANCHARD. Arithmetic for engineers. (Directly-useful technical ser.) il *$3 Dutton 620.8 17-14150

"This is a comprehensive, practical treatment of the most elementary arts of mathematics, including simple algebra, mensuration, logarithms, graphs and the slide rule. It is written for students of most limited training; in fact, in the endeavor to make all points perfectly clear to this class of readers the explanations and practical examples are given with most comprehensive care."—Engin Rec

Engin N 77:436 Mr 15 '17 100w

"The most important feature of the text is the use of at least one practical example to illustrate every principle or procedure described. This results in a fully illustrated volume, filled with stimulating exercises using engineering subjects, presented in a satisfactory form typographically. It should be emphasized, however, that the text is written for elementary students and is in no sense a handbook for reference."

+ Engin Rec 75:475 Mr 24 '17 130w

"The clear detail of the work should commend it wherever a text or home study is desired."

+ Pittsburgh 22:447 My 17 60w (Reprinted from Scientific American p364 Ap 7 '17)

"Author is lecturer in engineering and elementary mathematics, University of London."

+ Quar List New Tech Bks Ap '17 59w

CLARK, ALEXANDER GRAHAM. Text book on motor car engineering. 2v v 2 il *$3 Van Nostrand 629.2

v 2 Design.

Volume 1 dealing with Construction was published in 1912. The subject matter of the present volume is based on the author's lectures to students in the Polytechnic, London, and it is intended "for the use of engineers, designers, draughtsmen, students and others whose work entails a knowledge of design." The illustrations number over sixty and there are also numerous tables.

"We cannot praise too highly the clearness of diction and simplicity of expression which prevail throughout the work. Were it not for the illustrations, we should have been at some trouble to find any cause for criticism of the work at all. . . . A little more discrimination in regard to the scale of the drawings as reproduced, and the preparation of an entirely new set of half-tones from original photographs, would have enhanced the value of the book to a degree which would be out of all proportion to the additional expenditure involved."

+ — Nature 100:102 O 11 '17 1200w

CLARK, BARRETT HARPER. How to produce amateur plays. *$1.50 Little 792 17-15178

"A practical handbook whose aim is to demonstrate how dramatic pieces can be produced in an inexpensive, artistic and effective manner. Discussions of the choice of play and cast are followed by three chapters on rehearsing, with detailed consideration of the stage, lighting, scenery and costumes. Selective lists of amateur plays are added. The appendices include a statement on the workings of copyright and royalty and a note on make-up embodied in an article by Miss Grace Griswold. Mr Clark is qualified to discuss his subject and does so in a lucid manner that makes his instructions clear and comprehensible."—Springf'd Republican

"Covers much the same ground as Taylor but is more direct in method, has a chapter on lighting, and is illustrated both with diagrams and photographs."

+ A L A Bkl 14:12 O '17

"Such a handbook as Mr Clark's has often been called for. Its teaching is practical and its doctrine admirable."—Algernon Tassin

+ Bookm 46:347 N '17 80w

+ Cleveland p105 S '17 50w

+ Ind 91:77 J1 14 '17 40w

+ R of Rs 56:444 O '17 100w

+ Springf'd Republican p15 S 2 '17 120w

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:218 J1 '17 30w

CLARK, BARRETT HARPER, ed. Masterpieces of modern Spanish drama; tr. from the Spanish and Catalan. *$2 Duffield 862 17-8763

The three plays presented in this book are "The great Galeoto," by José Echegaray; "The duchess of San Quentin," by Benito Pérez-Galdós; and "Daniela," by Angel Guimerá. The first and third have appeared in English in earlier translations, the third under the title "La pecadora." A biographical sketch of the author precedes each play. In his preface Mr Clark says, "As may be seen after a cursory reading of the three plays contained in this collection, the Spanish drama of to-day cannot easily be summed up in a few words; the attempt here made is largely with a view to showing something of the genius of a nation whose dramatic products have as yet scarcely begun to receive the attention they so well deserve."

"Good translations."

+ A L A Bkl 14:120 Ja '18

"Echegaray's 'The great Galeoto' is already known through previous translations and public readings; 'The duchess of San Quentin,' by Galdós, seems a little facile, theatrical, and old-fashioned. . . . Guimerá's 'Daniela,' alone, translated from the Catalan by John Garrett Underhill, comes to us with all the force of a new sensation, and this by virtue of the profound and tragic poetry of its theme. . . . It is of the great order."

+ — Dial 62:530 Je 14 '17 250w

+ Ind 91:135 Jl 28 '17 50w

N Y Br Lib News 4:74 My '17 30w

"The splendid technique shown in the structure and dialogue of these Spanish dramas is an answer to the slovenly and ill-fitting constructors of plays in other countries. One learns that correctness and certainty of emphasis are not altogether lost arts in the theatre, and one wishes good fortune to the influence of these Spanish playwrights."

+ N Y Times 22:300 Ag 12 '17 250w

Pittsburgh 22:747 N '17 50w

"Should have a hearty welcome from the public. . . . By some slight oversight, Mr Barrett Clark, who has edited the plays and written a most agreeable introduction, states that only 'The great Galeoto' has been previously given an English translation. An excellent version of 'Daniela,' rather freely translated by Wallace Gillpatrick, was included among the publications of the Hispanic society (Putnam) in 1916."

+ R of Rs 55:662 Je '17 140w

Spring'd Republican p10 Ap 5 '17 110w

CLARK, CHARLES EDGAR. My fifty years in the navy. il *$2.50 (3½c) Little 17-28674

Rear-Admiral Clark was born in Vermont in 1843, graduated from the United States naval academy at Annapolis in 1863, and was retired from the navy in 1905. In this book, he tells the story of his public life up to the time of his retirement. During the Civil war, he served on board the "Ossipee" in the West Gulf blockading squadron for nearly two years, taking an active part in the battle of Mobile bay. In the Spanish-American war, he commanded the "Oregon" on her memorable trip around the Horn to play her part in the battle of Santiago, July 3, 1898. Some thirty pages of chapter twelve are devoted to a log of the "Oregon" as written by an unlettered sailor, who was one of her crew. The addenda include diagrams showing the positions of the American and Spanish ships at the battle of Santiago. There are three portraits of Rear-Admiral Clark and a number of other illustrations.

+ A L A Bkl 14:93 D '17

"The author is a prince of raconteurs. The style is simple and direct. The book is well made up; the illustrations few but good; its index fairly complete. It should be read by all who seek to comprehend the spirit of our navy during the transition from sail to steam."

+ Nation 105:633 D 20 '17 800w

"A straightforward narrative of interest to all who love the American navy."

+ Outlook 117:350 O 31 '17 30w

Reviewed by F: T. Cooper

+ Pub W 92:2027 D 8 '17 330w

CLARK, FRANCIS EDWARD. In the footsteps of St Paul. il *2 (2c) Putnam 915.69

An account of the life and labors of St Paul in the light of a personal journey to the cities visited by him. The author has gone over and identified the Apostle's routes of travel thru Tarsus, Jerusalem, Damascus, Antioch, Iconium, Ephesus, Salonica, Athens, Corinth, and a score of other cities. In reconstructing, as far as possible, the physical background and the scenery of St Paul's labors, the writer makes his activities more real and vivid. The book seeks its audience among Bible students, Sunday school teachers—all who study the Bible for public or private use.

+ Boston Transcript p10 D 19 '17 710w

"This book is a boon to many unlikely to have heard of such a masterpiece as Sir William Ramsay's 'Paul the traveller and Roman citizen.'"

+ Outlook 118:67 Ja 9 '18 110w

CLARK, JOHN SCOTT. Study of English and American writers. v 3 $2 Row, Peterson & co. 820 16-16560

v 3 The books that have preceded this are "A study of English prose writers" and "A study of English and American poets." In these three volumes the author has developed a "laboratory method" for use in teaching English literature. The preface to this volume says, "The method consists in determining the particular and distinctive features of the writer's style (using the term style in its widest sense), in sustaining this analysis by a consensus of critical opinion, in illustrating the particular characteristics of each writer by carefully selected extracts from his works, and in then requiring the pupil to find, in the works of the writer, parallel illustrations." About sixty-five authors are included. Professor Clark died before the book was ready for publication and his work has been completed by John Price Odell, professor of English in Occidental college, Los Angeles, California.

"Teachers who have not become familiar with the methods of these volumes have missed valuable training." G: Sherburn

+ School R 25:63 Ja '17 580w

CLARK, JOHN SPENCER. Life and letters of John Fiske. 2v il *$7.50 Houghton 17-27754

"This is the long-awaited official life of the most eminent and the most interesting of later American historians, the work of one of John Fiske's lifelong friends, who was associated with him in his philosophical studies, and as a member of the publishing house of James R. Osgood & Co. Mr Fiske's career was a crowded one, and Mr Clark was in touch with it at every point. He tells the story of the famous historian's New England boyhood, his early literary struggles, his close association with the famous Darwin-Huxley-Spencer group, his life as a lecturer on American history, his friendships, and his contributions to philosophy and literature."—Lit D

"Mr Clark's two-volume life shows just why such rich quality of thought and variety of knowledge filled to overflowing all that John Fiske wrote and why he was able to present his great stores to his readers with never failing clarity, simplicity, and impressiveness." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 46:327 N '17 450w

"The story of John Fiske's life is told by Mr Clark by means of numerous letters with connecting links of a narrative which is frequently verbosely labored and repetitious. It succeeds in giving, however, a faithful account of a notable career and remarkable intellectual achievements, although little revelation is made of the personality of the man." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 15 '17 1350w

"No book of more general interest to a thoughtful reader is likely to appear in a long time; certainly no book presenting a more engaging personality."

+ Lit D 55:39 D 8 '17 130w

"These two imposing volumes and their subject are mutually worthy of each other. If one is tempted to criticize the amount of space given to the childhood and youth of young Fiske, he soon learns that the subject is worthy of it."

+ Lit D 56:30 Ja 26 '18 980w

CLARK, JOHN SPENCER—Continued

"A wealth of personal letters and memoranda has been skilfully utilized, and reveals in attractive light the scope of Fiske's intellectual activities and the warmth of his friendships. Rarely has the home life of a man of letters shown itself possessed of greater simplicity or sincerity than these pages display. In all these respects the work is an addition of permanent value to American biography. As a piece of constructive criticism, on the other hand, Mr Clark's work is somewhat less satisfactory."

* + — Nation 196:91 Ja 24 '18 2106w

"His letters to his family [from England], from which Mr Clark makes liberal quotation, afford some of the most graphic and interesting portraits of the famous people of that day we have had from any source. . . . But, interesting as these portraits are, they should not obscure the story of Fiske's remarkable career, which Mr Clark has told with full detail and with a richness of background and vividness of color that make it one of the notable books of the year and one of the most notable of American biographies."

+ N Y Times 22:569 D 23 '17 2250w

"Mr Clark has produced a faithful, comprehensive account of John Fiske's life. The reader would gladly spare one or two of the author's mannerisms. But the book, as a whole, is concrete and readable, and there is no emphasis on questions of philosophy beyond the point to which the average reader will care to go."

+ Springf'd Republican p11 Ja 27 '18 2300w

CLARK, KEITH. Spell of Scotland. il *$2.50
Page 914.1 16-23814

"This is one of the interesting 'Spell' series. Like its predecessors, it unites description with reminiscences of travel and appreciation of famous sights, antiquities, and landscape beauties of the country it treats." (Outlook) "The chief attractions of Scotland are agreeably brought to our attention in the eleven chapters of the book, even the Hebrides, but apparently not the Orkney or the Shetland Islands, being included in the author's tour of the kingdom." (Dial)

"It is well illustrated, has a good map, and has a four-page bibliography. More expensive than Griffin's but in the same 'popular' travel-book style."

+ A L A Bkl 13:263 Mr '17

"Though Miss Clark succeeded admirably in 'The spell of Spain,' she could hardly have hoped to achieve there what she has in her second book. For she is Scotch of the Scotch herself, and here every page of her writing breathes an instinctive and inherent sympathy and understanding. To 'see' Scotland through such eyes is indeed to feel its spell. To the Catholic reader Miss Clark's book cannot fail to recommend itself with a very special appeal."

+ Cath World 105:828 S '17 380w

"Literary allusion and quotation, with a sufficiency of history for popular liking, enrich the descriptions, which are made more vivid still by frequent illustrations from photographs and other sources and eight colored plates of much beauty."

+ Dial 62:150 F 22 '17 230w

+ Outlook 115:118 Ja 17 '17 40w

CLARK, VICTOR SELDEN. History of manufactures in the United States, 1607-1860; with an introd. note by H. W. Farnam. Il pa $6 Carnegie inst. 330.9 16-15333

"This is the second of the contributions to American economic history which have been written under the auspices of the Carnegie institution of Washington. . . . Of the twenty chapters in the present volume that deal with the history of manufactures, nine cover the colonial period, eleven the period between 1790 and 1860. Dr Clark first describes the colonial environment, British policy, and colonial legislation affecting manufactures. . . . The spread of the factory system Dr Clark attributes quite as much to the growth of markets in the South as to the invention of new processes and machines. The effects of tariff legislation, of the development of better transportation agencies, and of a more plentiful supply of capital and labor are treated in successive chapters, as are the technical progress, the organization, and the general distribution of manufactures. Some valuable appendices conclude the volume. . . . A second volume, covering the period from 1860 to date, is promised."—Ann Am Acad

"To say that Mr Clark's book is the best in its field would be faint praise, for there is only one other that covers the field, and that was written nearly sixty years ago. . . . Mr Clark's book is singularly free from bias or prejudice. . . . The quantity of facts assembled in this framework is very great, for the writer's researches have been wide and laborious. But they are not always interpreted, and sometimes several pages of specific facts are given that have little apparent significance. . . . It is far from being the 'final word' on this subject, but it is the most considerable contribution to it that has ever been made."

T: W. Page

* + Am Econ R 7:300 Je '17 1350w

"The volume under review may safely be proclaimed one of the most important and valuable contributions to the economic history of the United States which has appeared in recent years. . . . The value of the work is in no small degree to be attributed to the broad interpretation and the method of treatment adopted by the author. . . . In the main the conclusions of the author, backed up as they are by scholarly method and a broader basis of fact than has heretofore been available, will, it is believed, be accepted. Concerning a few of the more general statements the reviewer, however, would be inclined to raise a question. . . . The index is adequate and the bibliography comprehensive." C. W. Wright

+ Am Hist R 22:384 Ja '17 1000w

"One is inevitably led to compare this work with that of Bishop, which covers practically the same ground and for so long has been the single authority covering the whole field. Dr Clark's book is more analytical and endeavors to explain the movements and forces of each period, and not merely to chronicle facts. It moreover takes up phases of the subject not touched upon by Bishop, such as organization. All in all it constitutes an admirable economic history of manufactures." E. L. Bogart

+ Ann Am Acad 70:323 Mr '17 350w

"The chief contribution of the work is in details rather than in principles. . . . Not all of the generalizations are substantiated. . . . The allotment of space and the distribution of emphasis are open to serious criticism. . . . The history of the development of industrial organization is inadequate. . . . The section on the factory system (pp. 418-55) is incomplete. . . . Since the book was apparently written to trace the volume of growth rather than to analyze the causes for the development of new forms of industrial organization, one ends a critical reading of the volume with a feeling of uncertainty as to how much valuable evidence on the latter subject may have been overlooked." M. T. Copeland

J Pol Econ 25:633 Je '17 530w

CLARKE, GEORGE HERBERT. ed Treasury of war poetry, 1914-1917. *$1 25 Houghton $21 08 17-25111

The publishers state that this collection of about 150 British and American poems of the world war "contains important poems by important authors which have not been accessible to other anthologies." They are arranged under the headings: America; England and America; England; France; Belgium; Russia and America; Italy; Australia; Canada; Lidée; Verdun; Oxford; Reflections; Incidents and aspects; Poets militant; Auxiliaries; Keeping the seas; The wounded; The fallen; Women and the war. The editor's policy "has been humanly hospitable, rather than academically critical, especially in the case of some of the verses written by soldiers at the front." (Introd.) There are indexes of first lines, of titles and of authors;

Occasional notes, giving brief biographies of some of the poets; and an introduction by the editor.

A L A Bkl 14:120 Ja '18

"On the whole Professor Clarke has been remarkably successful in sifting the grain from the chaff."

+ Ind 92:262 N 3 '17 70w

"Many of the poems have been inaccessible to other anthologists, and Professor Clarke has provided illuminating notes to the whole collection."

+ Lit D 55:39 D 8 '17 110w

"Practically all of the best and finest things the war has inspired are included in the collection, and that means at least a little of the finest verse that has been written in English for some years. The indexes are so well contrived that they deserve a word of praise."

+ N Y Times 23:12 Ja 13 '18 420w

"While there may be individual differences of opinion regarding the inclusion or omission of particular poems, no one will find fault with Prof. Clarke's general principle of selection."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 18 '17 360w

CLAY, OLIVER. Heroes of the American revolution. il *$1.25 (2c) Duffield 973.3 16-25270

The title of this book is somewhat misleading. It suggests a book of biographies. What the author has written is a series of chapters bearing on the Revolution and devoted to groups and localities rather than to individuals. Contents: The men of Massachusetts; The royal province of Virginia; The part New York played; The rally of the patriots; The writer of our Declaration of independence; The birth of the American army; Our foreign allies; The shadows of the Revolution; Daughters of liberty; Our revolutionary navy; From Lexington to Yorktown; Our commander-in-chief.

"Would appear to be fitted for use in secondary school instruction. . . . It is a good book to put into the hands of American boys, whether in or out of school."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 7 '17 100w

+ Ind 91:228 Ag 11 '17 40w

"The author's method undoubtedly has its advantages in focusing the reader's attention on the movements of men in the mass rather than on the development of sporadic careers."

+ R of Rs 55:216 F '17 70w

"While primarily intended for young persons, grown-ups will also find much of interest in 'Heroes of the American revolution.'"

+ Springf'd Republican p15 F 18 '17 130w

CLEGHORN, SARAH NORCLIFFE. Portraits and protests. *$1.25 Holt 811 17-23579

The poems in this volume are arranged under the four headings: Portraits; Of country places and the simple heart; Of time and immortality; Protests.

A L A Bkl 14:86 D '17

"She belongs as thoroughly to New England as does Robert Frost himself, but she sees New England in softer, more gentle garb than he sees it. . . . Though people do not move her to the biting word and we feel in her portraits a charity of outlook, it would be doing faint justice to Miss Cleghorn not to note the way in which her lines can flay, when she is roused by injustice or cruelty." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 22 '17 900w

"While the verses have all a distinct, personal accent, they fail adequately to convey emotion. This is partly due to the fact that the author clings to lilting measures, intelligible for 'Margerita singing ballads,' but not for 'Jane Adams,' that she uses inversion frequently, permits her metrical feet to stumble, and has a rather tiresome fondness for founcés and roundabouts. The lack of intensity is perhaps also due to Miss Cleghorn's austere passion for New England."

+ Dial 63:525 N 22 '17 260w

"Many of her poems of protest, such as 'Comrade Jesus,' have been reprinted in all radical periodicals and anthologies. Others, such as 'Peace hath her Belgiums,' 'The incentive' and 'One hundred thousand more' deserve to be as widely known. . . . In the earlier sections of the book there are some lovely things. 'Comrade Captain Age,' 'Vermont' and a few others stand out. But too often the verses seem too chiselled, too cautiously contrived, too much a product of reading rather than life, which either make the result unimportant, or incoherent." Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p15 O 21 '17 300w

"The war intrudes itself only momentarily to elicit the 'protest' which seems to come instinctively from the 'intellectual' in an era of 'patriotism.' . . . 'The poltroon' and 'Comrade Jesus' ought to receive the chuckles of delight and the mutterings of wrath that they were doubtless expected to call forth. . . . 'Portraits' and 'protests' gives the impression that it ought to be an anthology combining the work of George Woodberry, the Masses and Franklin P. Adams."

Springf'd Republican p6 S 18 '17 250w

CLEMENS, SAMUEL LANGHORNE (MARK TWAIN, pseud.). Mark Twain's letters; ed. by Albert Bigelow Paine. 2v *$4 (1½c) Harper 17-30756

Uniform in binding and in number of volumes with Paine's biography of Mark Twain. A brief sketch of Mr Clemens's life prefaces the first volume, while throughout both volumes is editorial comment which amplifies references in the letters and keeps the chronology clear. The letters reveal the great American humorist at his best, and as the personalities of the recipients of his letters are so different and the observations and interests of the writer so varied the reader enjoys a wide range of reactions. The first letters were written from New York and Philadelphia in 1853 when Mr Clemens left his home in Hannibal, Mo., and started out to make his fortune. Among the largest number to any one person are the letters to W. D. Howells, which are intimate and lasting testimonials of the great friendship between the two men.

Reviewed by Archibald Henderson

Bookm 46:583 Ja '18 1350w

"Few writers made their letters so thoroughly a part of themselves as did Mark Twain. They are as characteristic an expression of his individuality, of his manner, of his habit of thought and tricks of speech, as are the pages he wrote for the immediate eye of the public. His letters are an unending pleasure."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '17 2100w

"It goes without saying that he portrays himself in this work in every mood, and he had them all. One of the most significant features of the collection is the light it throws on the creation of his books."

+ Lit D 55:46 D 8 '17 140w

"The work, as done by Mr Paine, is not only a contribution to Mark Twain literature, but it is, likewise, a notable example of the way in which letters should be compiled so as to reflect the true character of the person who wrote them."

+ Lit D 55:42 D 29 '17 2050w

+ Nation 106:115 Ja 31 '18 2100w

"[Mr Paine's] running commentary [is] always modest, always unobtrusive, and always confined to the strictly necessary explanations. In other words, he has let Mark Twain, the letter writer, speak for himself. It is difficult to see how this work could have been done more discreetly or more tactfully. These letters are never composed with any thought of publication; they are never labored; they are always easy; they are sometimes even free and easy. They are the spontaneous expression of the man himself as he happened to be at the moment of taking pen in hand. They are highly individual; they abound in whim, in humorous exaggeration, in imagination, and in energy. They are delightful reading, in themselves in the first place, and in the second as revelations of the character and the characteristics of Mr

CLEMENS, SAMUEL LANGHORNE—Cont.

Samuel L. Clemens, who was in some ways a different person from Mr Mark Twain known to all the world."

+ + N Y Times 22:473 N 18 '17 2300w

"The letters are well edited, with such historical comment as is needed to make them understandable and no more."

+ Outlook 118:31 Ja 2 '18 190w

"His is one of the few figures that the whole nation has learned to love, and one that has become an enduring part of our best traditions. It has been only too often the unfortunate office of intimate letters to shatter similar illusions. So what greater tribute can be paid to the present ones than to say that they serve simply to enhance the richness, the tenderness, the whimsical tolerance of the Mark Twain we have learned to know in his books." F: T. Cooper

+ Pub W 93:221 Ja 19 '18 1050w

"This collection of his letters is a revelation of his growth as a writer and of the main-springs of his conduct."

+ R of Rs 57:99 Ja '18 170w

"Albert Bigelow Paine is the editor of these volumes and a most loving interpreter of Mark Twain he proves to be. He is a little sweeping in his judgments, but he supplies adequately the information which enables the reader to understand the occasion of any letter. . . . The feeling in the book, wherever it crops out, is as unaffected as the humor, and seemingly expressed with the same unconsciousness. The offhand nature of this writing is peculiarly American. The style is undress without being excessively colloquial, vigorous and workman-like, and, above all, rich with meaning and savor."

+ + — Springf'd Republican p17 N 25 '17 2400w

CLEMENS, SAMUEL LANGHORNE (MARK TWAIN, pseud.). What is man? and other essays. il $1.75 Harper 814 17-13964

A collection of miscellaneous essays and papers, some of them reprinted from magazines, others appearing in print for the first time. "What is man?" the longest piece in the volume, is Mark Twain's cold and cutting analysis of the human race. It is in the form of colloquy between an old man and a young man, the elder arguing that man is a machine and nothing more. This is followed by the touching memorial to Jean Clemens, who died shortly before her father. Several of the papers are sketches from the author's travels abroad. One is an appreciation of William Dean Howells. Other miscellaneous essays are: English as she is taught; A simplified alphabet; Concerning tobacco; The bee; Taming the bicycle; Is Shakespeare dead?

A L A Bkl 14:120 Ja '18

"Wherever in these pages he is humorous, Mark Twain is at his best, wherever he is serious and in a disputative mood he causes his readers to long for the creator of the jumping frog, and for the traveller who made his historic journey through Europe in company with a party of merry innocents." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 Je 2 '17 500w

"An aftermath of sixteen papers representing the intellectual byplay of a big restless mind. Nothing human is foreign to this ranging curiosity."

+ Nation 105:480 N 1 '17 520w

CLEMENS, FREDERIC EDWARD. Plant succession. pa $5 Carnegie inst. 581.1 16-17349

"For nearly a quarter of a century the author of this large and attractive volume has been investigating numerous problems in the field of phytocology and related subjects as he has found them in the great out-of-door laboratory of western United States. This area is particularly stimulating for such work since so many of the natural life phenomena have been preserved to the present in nearly their original conditions. . . . The reader must understand that this work is not in any sense a treatise on general plant ecology. It represents a careful examination of the facts and principles of plant succession, an analysis of the development of vegetation in the past as well as the present, together with a digest of the methods for investigating successional phenomena." (Science) Professor Clements has recently resigned from the faculty of the University of Minnesota to become a member of the staff of the Carnegie Institution of Washington. He is the author, with Mrs Clements, of "Rocky Mountain flowers."

Cleveland p40 Mr '17

"This latest work from Clements will attract the attention of botanists and biologists in general throughout the world. . . . The bibliography of nearly a thousand titles, the most of which have been abstracted or noted somewhere in the text, is still another valuable part of the book. This is probably the most nearly complete collection of titles on succession and related phenomena available. It may be said, after securing a bird's-eye view of the book as a whole, that Clements's monograph presents an invaluable summary of our knowledge of plant succession and that it must become at once the indispensable reference and guide for the student of vegetative cycles in all parts of the world." R. J. Pool

+ Science ns 45:339 Ap 6 '17 1650w

CLENNELL, WALTER JAMES. Historical development of religion in China. *$2 Dutton 299 (Eng ed 17-17530)

"This book is an expansion of an address delivered on Dec. 8 and 9, 1913, to the students of the Caermarthen Presbyterian college. The relation between religion and history in China, and the attitude of the Chinese towards religious beliefs and practices, are set before the reader, together with accounts of Confucianism, Taoism, Buddhism in China, and Lamaism, the modern transformation of China, and other matters of interest."—Ath

A L A Bkl 14:110 Ja '18

Ath p94 F '17 70w

"A sane and readable account of Chinese culture by a British consul. . . . Mr Clennell succeeds in putting comprehensive statements in a lucid way, and any one who performs the easy task of following them is already equipped with some understanding of the creeds of China."

+ Nation 105:125 Ag 2 '17 1000w

"Scholarly, thoughtful, suggestive, reverent, the work before us is one of the very best of its kind." I. C. Hannah

— Survey 39:445 Ja 19 '18 200w

CLIFTON-SHELTON, ALFRED. On the road from Mons. map and diags. *$1.25 Dutton 940.91 (Eng ed A17-707)

"The work in the field of the English A. S. C. (Army service corps) is a branch of the service little known to Americans. Captain Clifton-Shelton, who was with the supply train of the Nineteenth brigade, gives, in 'On the road from Mons,' an account of the peril and the obstacles encountered by his immediate command during the historic retreat from Mons and the forward movement to the line of the Aisne."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 14:88 D '17

"Graphic, and at times humorous, account."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 14 '17 290w

+ Ind 92:342 N 17 '17 40w

COAN, CLARENCE ARTHUR. Fragrant note book; romance and legend of the flower garden and the bye-way. il *$2.50 Putnam 716 17-14230

Mr Coan tells us "how to know the flowers. Intimately and lovingly, but not at all scientifically and botanically. . . . Poetry, both original and selected, profusely sprinkles the pages. . . . Delicately tinted decorations cover the printed text."—Dial

"To Mr Coan, his garden, through whose gate the Dumb Porter leads us, is a place of delight, of peace and ease of heart. And its freedom is given generously to us."

Boston Transcript p7 Ag 1 '17 280w

"In its content there is, as the author warns us, 'of horticulture not a word.' . . . The appearance of the volume is handsome, and it will doubtless figure as a gift-book."

+ Cath World 105:685 Ag '17 80w

"Delightfully original."

+ Dial 63:167 Ag 30 '17 250w

"Precisely the sort of sentimental concoction devoted to 'Romance and legend of the flower garden and the bye-way' that is irresistibly alluring to a certain part of the American public."

— + Nation 105:44 Je 12 '17 140w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. "Speaking of Prussians—" il *50c (4c) Doran 940.91

17-14799

The author was in Europe as a war correspondent early in the war. At that time he was a neutral, representing a neutral nation. He now says, "I am not a neutral any more. I am an American! My country has clashed with a foreign power, and the enemy of my country is my enemy and deserving of no more consideration at my hands than he deserves at the hands of my country. Moreover, I aim to try to show, as we go along, that any consideration of mercy or charity or magnanimity which we might show him would be misinterpreted. Being what he is he would not understand it." The essay is reprinted from the Saturday Evening Post.

+ A L A Bkl 14:18 O '17

"He is brief, uncompromising, but he is also fair-minded. He defends the German soldier from many charges, and thereby makes his arraignment of the German government and military system the more convincing."

+ Ind 91:75 J 14 '17 40w

Pittsburgh 22:680 O '17 60w

Pratt p39 O '17 40w

"He was one of five experienced newspaper men who signed a statement of inability to discover good evidence of German atrocities in Belgium at that time. For such sentiments Mr Cobb was charged with being a German sympathizer when he was merely an open-minded reporter. But if any doubt exists in anybody's mind as to the real state of the author's mind, the reading of his little book will rapidly dispose of it."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 J 17 '17 270w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Those times and these. *$1.35 (1½c) Doran 17-16321

Ten of Irvin S. Cobb's stories are collected in the volume. In several of them he returns to his native Kentucky and to Judge Priest. The first story, "Ex-fightin' Billy," is a tale of Judge Priest's youth, of the time at the close of the war, when, refusing to be reconstructed, he had tried to become a citizen of Mexico. One of the later stories relates an episode of the present war. Contents: Ex-fightin' Billy; And there was light; Mr Felsburg gets even; The garb of men; The cure for lonesomeness; The family tree; Hark! from the tombs; Cinnamon seed and sandy bottom; A kiss for kindness; Life among the abandoned farmers.

A L A Bkl 14:26 O '17

+ Boston Transcript p6 J 18 '17 320w

"Every story is well written, and, as Judge Priest would say, 'is as clean as a hound's tooth.'"

+ Cath World 106:109 O '17 190w

Cleveland p103 S '17 40w

"These tales belong more to the surface of things than did certain of the earlier ones; they are less dramatic and less gripping. Nevertheless, they are very well worth reading, even Mr Cobb's worst being above the best of the great majority of short-story writers. And the volume closes with a bit of satirical foolery which is thoroughly joyous and amusing."

+ N Y Times 22:230 Je 17 '17 990w

"In many respects these stories do not measure up to those going before. They are reminiscent and genial as of yore, but their insistently reminiscent qualities give them something of a superficial and not infrequently forced tone."

+ -- Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 5 '17 560w

COBBETT, LOUIS. Causes of tuberculosis; together with some account of the prevalence and distribution of the disease. (Cambridge public health ser.) il *$6.50 Putnam 616.2 (Eng ed SG17-322)

Dr Cobbett is lecturer in pathology at Cambridge university and an authority on the subject whereof he treats. Some of the many important problems discussed by him are: "(1) the causes of the steady decline of consumption, since 1863, in spite of the growth of cities and of industrialism; (2) the fact that most of us, without any memory or reminder of it, have at some time or other been infected; (3) the question how far this infection confers immunity against re-infection; (4) the fact, or strong probability, that the risk of infection depends on the dosage—i.e., that we can deal with small doses of the bacilli, but not with 'massive' doses." (Spec)

"His experience of experimental work and its pitfalls, and his acquaintance with the difficulties that face the practical sanitarian and those who are engaged in the treatment of tuberculous patients, enable him to bring to bear a keen critical faculty on the experience and experiments of other investigators, with the result that the work now before us may be looked upon as a 'classic,' and one that for years to come will, probably, remain the reference-book for those interested in tuberculosis."

+ Nature 100:301 D 20 '17 1350w

"Dr Cobbett's is one of the very best books of its kind, alike in its wealth of knowledge, in its clear, quiet style; its orderly marshalling of the legions of references, and the exact drawing of conclusions so inevitable that they seem to come of themselves. . . . And it is for everybody to read who has had a grounding in the principles of bacteriology."

+ Spec 119:118 Ag 4 '17 1200w

COBERN, CAMDEN MCCORMACK. New archaeological discoveries. il *$3 Funk 225

17-15313

The author, who holds the chair of English Bible and philosophy of religion at Allegheny college, Pa., tells us that he is the first to attempt "to give a summary of all the discoveries in all lands, so far as these in any important way have cast light upon the New Testament writings or the life of the primitive church"; that the mass of new information utilized by him comes from the recently unearthed Greek and Coptic papyri; that "many of the texts are here translated into English for the first time"; and that his "semi-popular summary of important results" has been written "primarily for Bible teachers and ministers." Dr Cobern shows that the papyri recently discovered in Egypt "prove conclusively that the Greek in which the New Testament was written was . . . the vernacular of the day." (Lit D) and that this "has led, not only to a rewriting of the New Testament grammars and lexicons but to a general recasting of very many phrases in the gospels and epistles, some of which were formerly obscure." (Boston Transcript) A list of Scripture texts, illustrated is given on pages 687-8. There is an introduction by Edouard Naville, professor of archeology at the University of Geneva.

"Dr Cobern has produced a monumental work, in which he has brought down even to the opening of the current calendar year the richest and fullest knowledge which sheds light upon hitherto dark places in the Bible story." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Je 27 '17 1150w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

COBERN, CAMDEN MCCORMACK—Continued

"The fact that Dr Naville has written the introduction is sufficient guarantee of the scholarly character of Dr Cobern's work. The present volume will prove of the greatest utility to the large number of readers who look for just such a ready reference to the scientific discoveries of modern times, and scholars, too, with large libraries at their disposal, will welcome the main facts presented in this condensed form."

+ Cath World 106:244 N '17 360w

"While filled with illuminating material that will be prized by scholars and Bible students, it is written in a style so popular as to make a strong appeal to every book-lover. . . . The illustrations are exceptionally fine, showing numerous portrait busts, recently excavated temples, and other buildings, frescoes, sarcophagi, etc."

+ Lit D 55:32 J1 14 '17 659w

"Dr Cobern brings the life and the customs of the early Christians before us in astonishing detail."

+ Lit D 55:41 D 8 '17 230w

+ N Y Times 22:326 S 2 '17 90w

Outlook 117:219 O 10 '17 100w

Pittsburgh 22:658 O '17 50w

"It is manifestly unfair to write what purports to be a scientific study and to twist facts and give far-fetched interpretations of facts to fit a preconceived system of ideas. Camden M. Cobern has written a compendious work in which he is carried much too far by prepossessions. He at times makes astonishing statements and neglects to give the slightest authority or evidence therefor."

— + Springf'd Republican p15 Ja 13 '18 880w

COCHRAN, MRS EVE OWEN.

Wilderness rose; a play in four acts especially adapted for the use of American historical societies and chapters of the D. A. R. (American dramatists ser.) *$1 Baiger, R; G. $12

17-10377

A pageant-play designed for amateur production. It tells a story of colonial New England in the days of the witchcraft delusion. Naomi Dickinson, a young girl, is accused of witchcraft. She flees from her native village and finds shelter with friendly Indians. Repentance on the part of the woman who had cast suspicion upon her and the efforts of her lover to find her result in her return and a happy ending.

COCKE, SARAH COBB (JOHNSON) (MRS

LUCIAN HOWARD COCKE). Master of the hills; a tale of the Georgia mountains. *$1.50 Dutton 17-17974

"Mrs Cocke [relates] the adventures of two generations of the old Georgian family of Warner, whose lives are curiously interwoven with those of the family of the sturdy mountaineer, 'Gray Eagle,' known to his clan as 'the Master of the hills.' The story opens just before the outbreak of the Civil war, when, after finishing their education in Europe, the son and nephew of Judge Warner have returned to the little Georgian university town. . . . With them comes the young Marquis de Layne, whose advent brings about an undreamed-of complication involving not only the Warners and their friends, but the family of the mountaineer Gray Eagle."—Boston Transcript

"The changed conditions in the South, after the war, are well indicated. And although they are presented from a southern point of view, they are free from those mannerisms which often make pictures of the kind valueless. The story is agreeably told, sustaining its quiet interest to the end."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 22 '17 250w

"The book proves, if it proves anything at all, that an author may be fairly truthful in regard to history, geography, and dialect, and yet completely miss the essential characteristics of a people."

— Dial 63:163 Ag 30 '17 80w

"To call it unreal is to insult reality. We marvel most at its finding a publisher." Clement Wood

— N Y Call p14 S 2 '17 330w

"The author's style is poor."

— N Y Times 22:286 Ag 5 '17 250w

"The book shows immature workmanship."

— Springf'd Republican p15 S 23 '17 270w

COCROFT, SUSANNA. Growth in silence; the undertone of life. il *$1.50 (5c) Putnam 131 17-25740

A cheerful, demonstrable theory of life underlies these helpful sermonettes. Women who owe Mrs Cocroft a debt of gratitude for demonstrating the way to fuller physical perfection will turn with confidence to what she has to say on the subject of Mental and physical poise, Happiness, Mental atmosphere, Health, Nerve control, Freedom of thought, and kindred themes. The philosophy is a philosophy of optimism which if put into practice develops the harmonies of the soul, and in turn manifest harmony in the body. A book for both men and women.

COESTER, ALFRED LESTER. Literary history of Spanish America. *$2.50 (2c) Macmillan 860 16-18492

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"One pays tribute to the author's labor, and also to his scholarship. In his printing of Spanish names and quotations, he is singularly accurate, only a negligible number of trifling errors having fallen under the reviewer's eye. . . . It may be that, in the course of his long poring over South American writers, and his epitomes of their books, Dr Coester sometimes loses his sense of proportion; is betrayed into calling a poet great because his admiring fellow-countrymen did so. But as a whole he keeps his head and his poise."

+ — Am Hist R 23:202 O '17 550w

"Mr Coester's book fills an inestimable place as a guide and counselor in this otherwise uncharted study." T. Walsh

+ Bookm 45:318 My '17 830w

"A closing chapter on the contemporary Modernista movement is especially valuable for its appreciation and criticism of the work of the brilliant Nicaraguan lyric poet, Ruben Darfo, who died recently. Used in conjunction with the author's bibliography of Spanish-American literature, published in the Romanic Review, we have here the best available guide, in English, for the novice in this field."

— Ind 89:457 Mr 12 '17 280w

"Devoting some forty pages to what he has called the 'Colonial period' of Spanish-American literature, the author exhibits with a wealth of interesting detail the origins of one of the most fascinating of literary epochs. The average reader will here find an unexplored mine of information. He will gain some idea of Spain's eminence in the field of literature."

+ Lit D 54:2009 Jc 30 '17 470w

"Dr Coester is a young Harvard man, corresponding member of the Hispanic society of America, and author of a 'Practical Spanish grammar,' and kindred text books."

— N Y Times 22:109 Mr 25 '17 770w

"Mr Coester gives a chapter to each country. The average reader is surprised to learn that there is a school of realistic novelists in Mexico, which most Americans cannot think of as a literary nation."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Je 24 '17 220w

COHEN, ISRAEL. Ruhleben prison camp. il *$2.50 (25c) Dodd 940.91 (Eng ed 17-18379)

Ruhleben is a race course outside Berlin that is now used as a concentration camp for British civilians. The author was interned there for nineteen months, from November 6, 1914 to June 6, 1916. He says, "In the following pages I have endeavoured to set forth as faithfully as my memory would permit the varied vicissitudes through which I passed from the outbreak of the war down to my arrival in London. I have confined myself as much as possible to a record of my own experiences and observations, supplemented only to a small extent by the information I gleaned from trustworthy fellow-prisoners." He writes of: The act of internment; Rules, regimen, and rumours; The segregation of the Jews; Administration, discipline, and punishment; Communal organization; Social amenities and characters; Intellectual activities, etc.

+ A L A Bkl 14:18 O '17

"The experiences related have naturally a good deal in common with those described by Mr Geoffrey Pyke in his book published in February, 1916, but Mr Cohen's way of meeting troubles and difficulties does not appear to us to have been so commendable."

Ath p258 My '17 43w

Ath p346 Jl '17 330w

+ Cleveland p130 D '17 80w

"The whole story is told dispassionately and with a charm of manner and power of description that make the recital one of the most vivid and fascinating chapters yet written in the history of the great war."

+ Dial 63:68 Jl 19 '17 330w

"It is owing to Mr Cohen's faculty of conveying these impressions vividly as well as to his graphic descriptions of external conditions that his book has such great human interest."

+ Nation 105:44 N 15 '17 210w

+ N Y Times 22:215 Je 3 '17 150w

Pittsburgh 22:761 N '17 60w

Pratt p39 O '17 10w

"An accomplished journalist, he has none of the higher gifts of writing which stir and thrill the heart. Rather he has written a sober and comprehensive history which will survive as a permanent document of the war when the brilliant sketches are, perhaps, forgotten. . . . The illustrations are well chosen and serve to complete a remarkably full book, so thick with detail that it is somewhat difficult to read."

+ Sat R 123:368 Ap 21 '17 1900w

+ Spec 118:676 Je 16 '17 150w

"Of all the books so far printed about Ruhlben it is the most complete, though it could not, in the nature of the case, tell all that there is to be told. It has, no doubt, the defects of its qualities. . . . One must go elsewhere for a study of the effect of too much barbed wire upon the human mind."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p122 Mr 15 '17 1050w

COHEN, JULIUS HENRY. The law; business or profession? *$2.50 Banks 340 16-23082

"The law: business or profession?" raises and answers the question of the ethics of law practice. Mr Cohen finds the case hopeful. He does not blink the bad reputation which lawyers as a class have gained with the common people, and he does not assert that it is unjustified by facts. But he points out a growing spirit within the bar to cleanse itself of undesirable practitioners, and to keep the law as a profession free from business entanglements and from corruption through financial interests."—Springf'd Republican

"Mr Cohen writes with earnestness and vigor. His plea for the recognition of the law as a profession and not a business will benefit every lawyer and layman who reads it."

+ Nation 105:127 Ag 2 '17 670w

"It is not to be thought that there is anything local about the book. It is even broader than the nation, many leading countries being searched for cases affording a basis for the principles which control the lawyer's professional ethics everywhere, and in all times."

+ N Y Times 22:14 Ja 14 '17 800w

"Sound doctrine for both the profession and the public."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Je 1 '17 270w

COIT, STANTON. Is civilization a disease? *$1 (6c) Houghton 302 17-13984

In this essay, presented first at the University of California in the series of Barbara Weinstock lectures on the morals of trade, the author uses the term trade in a broad sense to include our whole system of socialized wealth. Civilization is defined as "the organization of man's mastery over nature on a basis of self interest," and modern trade is said to disclose civilization in its acutest form. Civilization, the author points out, is a mushroom growth. It is already beginning to crumble, and will in time be superseded by a new order which is already in process of creation. The title of the little book is suggested by Edward Carpenter's "Civilization; its cause and cure."

"These lectures bear the earmarks of shallow thinking, as well as the defacements of fulsome expression." Archibald Henderson

— Bookm 46:275 N '17 300w

Reviewed by H. M. Kallen

Dial 63:445 N 8 '17 580w

Ind 90:555 Je 23 '17 50w

"If the Barbara Weinstock lectures are to be the vehicle for such wild surmises as those displayed in 'Is civilization a disease?' the founder's money might have been put to much better uses."

— Nation 105:350 S 27 '17 230w

R of Rs 56:327 S '17 250w

"Dr Coit is evidently one of those sociological rhetoricians who preach eugenics in season and out of season. Otherwise he might have been graciously willing to discuss the very interesting subject proposed by the foundation of lectures which he was the first to adorn."

— Springf'd Republican p17 N 18 '17 280w

"Dr Coit, in this essay, provides a stupendous idea in tabloid form." Bruno Lasker

+ Survey 39:201 N 21 '17 400w

COLE, NORMAN BROWN, and ERNST, CLAYTON H. First aid for boys. il *$1.25 Appleton 614.8 17-14057

"A manual for boy scouts and for others interested in prompt help for the injured and the sick." (Sub-title) Contents: A handful of signs; What to do; Shock and fainting; A little about the blood and more about bleeding; Sunstroke and heat exhaustion; Concussion, skull fracture, apoplexy, alcoholic intoxication, and epilepsy; Infection and "staphy"; Burns and frostbites; Poisoning; Bandages and carries; Fractures and dislocations; Drowning and artificial respiration; Minor emergencies. There are fifty-one illustrations from drawings by Walt Harris. The book is endorsed by James E. West, chief scout executive of the Boy scouts of America.

"Directions well given and simplified by diagrams."

+ A L A Bkl 14:64 N '17

"Dr Cole and Mr Ernst have been active workers in the scout movement, and have made their book not only sound technically but adapted psychologically to the interest of the boy reader. . . . Similarly, the drawings by Walt Harris reinforce the text accurately and ingeniously."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 20 '17 300w

+ Lit D 55:59 D 8 '17 60w

Pratt p20 O '17

COLEMAN, ALGERNON, and LA MESLÉE, A. MARIN. Le soldat américain en France. map *50c Univ. of Chicago press 448 17-22278

A French reader containing "chapters on France, transports, hotels, railroads, manners and customs, food, money, army, etc., with a vocabulary giving the article with all nouns and indicating pronunciation."—A L A Bkl

"To be used in connection with either of the University of Chicago manuals."

A L A Bkl 14:9 O '17

"For the green student, this little book would be wholly useless, unless studied with a teacher. The figured pronunciation, even with the instructions given would be an unsolvable mystery. . . . The verb is the back-bone of a language; but not a hint is given as to the in-

COLEMAN, A., and LA MESLÉE, A. M.—Cont. flections. The chapters that follow the elaborate statement of pronunciation are written in idiomatic French and are a mixture of the commonplace and the valuable.

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 22 '17 220w
Pittsburgh 22:693 O '17 20w

COLEMAN, FREDERIC ABERNETHY. With cavalry in the great war; the British trooper in the trench line. il *$1.50 Jacobs 940.91 A17-1461

"A phase of the fighting on the western front, of which we have known little, is covered by Mr Coleman in this personal narrative of the exploits of the British cavalry through the second battle of Ypres. Some of our readers may recall Mr Coleman's earlier book entitled, 'From Mons to Ypres with General French.' The present volume takes up the story where its predecessor left it—with the closing days of 1914."—R of Rs

Reviewed by C. M. Francis
— Bookm 46:450 D '17 300w

"Mr Coleman's book is copiously illustrated with excellent photographic views."

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 19 '17 130w
+ Dial 63:589 D 6 '17 150w
R of Rs 56:549 N '17 150w

COLERIDGE, STEPHEN. Evening in my library among the English poets. *$1.25 Lane 821 17-13371

An essay on English poetry, with many quotations. The author says, "I invite the reader to spend an evening in my library, drawing down a volume here and a volume there, following no definite order either of date or subject, guided only by a desire to estimate without prejudice the quality of the verse." Among the poems selected for quotation are many that are not universally known. Among these are a few of the more exquisite of modern poems. With the radical departures in verse-making, the author has no sympathy.

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 5 '17 700w

"This book is rather a personal expression of likes and dislikes in the field of poetry than a work of genuine criticism, that will have an abiding value in one's own library."

+ Cath World 105:687 Ag '17 280w

"The anthology on the whole is fair, and something more than that. It includes poems from little-known authors, which any reader will be glad to have brought to his notice. The book leaves an impression in harmony with its title."

+ Nation 104:661 My 31 '17 300w
N Y Br Lib News 1:61 Ap '17

"A book which definitely assists in the development of literary taste."

+ R of Rs 56:104 J1 '17 70w
+ Sat R 122:148 N 4 '16 2200w

"A very unconventional anthology, interspersed with some candid criticism. The modern apostles of 'force' like Mr Muscfield, and the late Rupert Brooke, and Francis Thompson in his highly rhetorical mood are sternly re-proved. . . . For our part, we could wish that Mr Coleridge had not included second-rate modern verse like 'The rosary,' and that he had hesitated before asserting that Goldsmith's 'Deserted village' was inspired while Gray's 'Elegy' was not."

+ Spec 47:660 N 25 '16 110w

"Some of the poems, too, are worthy of rediscovery and deserve a popularizing of their merits. But most of them are less unfamiliar than Mr Coleridge seems to think."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Je 21 '17 350w

"What are the principles that guide Mr Coleridge in choosing selections for our improvement and delight? It is not difficult to discover them. The prize always goes to the poet of finish and scholarship, who observes the laws of prosody and elevates and refines the passions, which is Mr Coleridge observes, the 'true function of the poet.' And with this for his standard he moves his poets up and down like boys in a class. . . . Enough has been said, perhaps, to show that, though we should not allow Mr Coleridge to choose our new poets for us, he is a very vigilant guardian of the old."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p523 N 2 '16 850w

COLLIN, CHRISTEN CHRISTIAN DREYER. War against war, and the enforcement of peace; introd. by W. Archer. *$0c Macmillan 341.1 (Eng ed 17-18476)

"Professor Collin, of Christiania, is one of the most eminent of Norwegian writers. . . . In these eleven essays he writes with much force in support of the allied cause, and deals effectively with the utterances on the other side in his own country and in Germany—his view of the future being that 'universal peace will be secured not by disarmament but by joint armament.'"—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"An excellent statement of our cause by a detached observer. . . . Perhaps the most interesting chapter in the book is the essay on Kant's 'Perpetual peace.' Prof. Collin fixes on the ironical fact that it was Kant, a German, who first promulgated the idea of the gradual federation of the free nations of the world into a world-republic."

+ Ath p296 Je '17 480w

"Prof. Christen Christian Collin, of the University of Christiania, is an acknowledged authority upon Greek, Norwegian, French, and English literature, and an ardent sociologist."

+ Ath p301 Je '17 100w

"A very sensible plea for the cause of the Entente Allies."

+ Ind 92:60 O 6 '17 50w

Nation 105:182 Ag 16 '17 100w

"Nearly all of the essays take up the idea of a league of nations as an outcome of the present war whose function it would be to lessen the danger of war in the future and perhaps even prevent its recurrence."

N Y Times 22:269 J1 22 '17 570w

Pratt p29 O '17 50w

+ Spec 118:616 Je 2 '17 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p215 My 5 '17 270w

COLLINS, ARCHIE FREDERICK. Home handy book. il *$1.10 Appleton 650 17-14069

"A compendium of useful things to do around the average house and how to keep it in repair." (Sub-title) The author advises every man to learn how to do his own repair work on two counts; first, he will save money, second, he will take pride and pleasure in doing things for himself. He writes of: Tools everyone should have; Indoor mechanics; Be your own locksmith; Doing electrical jobs; The amateur plumber; The handy glazier; The furniture repairer; The home decorator; Handy helps for the house; Odds and ends.

+ Pratt p24 O '17 20w

Quar List New Tech Bks O '17 20w

"Just the thing for the man who likes to 'putter around,' or the growing boy who wishes to make himself handy."

+ R of Rs 56:535 N '17 40w

COLLINS, ARCHIE FREDERICK. Magic of science. il *$1.25 Revell 530 17-19333

"In 'The magic of science,' A. Frederick Collins has compiled, largely from manuals of his own writing, a book of scientific amusements which can be performed with simple apparatus. Practical glimpses are provided into the mystery of light, heat, sound, magnetism and electricity, and a successful effort is made to set the experiments in an orderly sequence that should make for the positive instruction of the youthful experimenter. Many of the processes are already familiar, but they lose none of their interest from that fact. There are numerous illustrations."—Springf'd Republican

"It will interest and spur boys' curiosity in spite of its unattractive make-up."

+ A L A Bkl 14:136 Ja '18

"His latest volume deals with scientific facts, novel and delightful facts many of them, and small boys with average intelligence aged from eleven to fifteen will read it with eagerness."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 1 '17 100w

"We are sorry for the boy who cannot own a copy of this fascinating book."

+ Ind 91:265 Ag 18 '17 30w

Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 26 '17 90w

COLLINS, ARCHIE FREDERICK. Money-making for boys. il *$1 (2c) Dodd 658 17-31276

Practical money-making schemes for boys in the country, village or city based on the best business ethics. The value to the boy is that the instruction tends to train him to put a value on whatever is sold that is fair to both customer and to himself. The training itself forms the foundation of a business career; it brings into play all of the ingenuity of the boy and helps him direct it into profitable channels. Contents: Why every boy should make money; Ways a boy can make money; How to start an agency business; Running a messenger service; Getting and doing trade jobs; There's money in refreshments; Raising small live stock; In partnership with the earth; Fishing, hunting and trapping; Making things to sell; Working for other people; What to do with your money.

COLLINS, ARCHIE FREDERICK, and COLLINS, VIRGIL DEWEY. Boys' book of submarines. il *$1.35 (3c) Stokes 623.8 17-31264

A book for boys, made up of the following chapters: The first of the submarines; How to make and work a model submarine; How a real submarine is made and works; The heart of the submarine; Making and shooting the torpedo; Making the submarine deadlier; The wonderful eye of the submarine; The marvelous tongue and ears of the submarine; The crew of the submarine; How the submarine attacks; The new submarine chasers; The last word in submarines. There are illustrations from photographs and numerous figures and diagrams.

"A book that is a help to the understanding of war news."

+ N Y Times 22:591 D 23 '17 30w

"A splendid book for the boy who is interested in boats and mechanics."

+ R of Rs 57:215 F '18 190w

COLLINS, CHARLES WALLACE. National budget system. *$1.25 (4½c) Macmillan 351.73 17-20555

"This work is an attempt to show in as brief a compass as possible what the budget system is, why it is said to be needed for the United States, and what adjustments could possibly be made short of a constitutional amendment to secure its adoption. . . . The writer has attempted, even at the risk of the loss of scientific technique, to make this exposition readable. The work is not intended to be original or exhaustive. . . . In the preparation of this work the author has used portions of an article of his, 'Constitutional aspects of a national budget system' in the Yale Law Journal for March, 1916, and another, 'The coming of the budget system' in the South Atlantic Quarterly for October, 1916." (Preface) A short list of authorities is appended.

"The intricacies of national finance are not easily expressed in simple terms but the author of the present volume set out to do this and on the whole he has succeeded. This is not because he has evaded or glossed over the difficulties but because he first explains with sufficient detail just how each of the great countries prepares its financial program for the year and then indicates where our own shortcomings are. His criticism of the American system is incisive and to the point, but not overdone."

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:791 N '17 120w

+ Cath World 166:257 N '17 450w

"On the whole the argument presented is excellent, but some of the difficulties which would be involved under our present system of Federal government are passed over with slight or no consideration."

+ J Pol Econ 25:1058 D '17 230w

"Mr Collins' book is a distinctly valuable contribution. It contains little original material. All the data he uses lay undigested in the forbidding tangle of committee reports, statutes and treatises on political science. But, except for Professor Ford's 'Cost of our national government,' little of this has been predigested for popular consumption. Mr Collins' book is more up to date, has a wider sweep and contains more definite proposals for change, while it avoids even more successfully the pitfalls of technical lingo and involved exposition." Evans Clark

+ N Y Call p11 O 21 '17 1150w

+ N Y Times 22:483 N 18 '17 1250w

"Public finance is generally a dry subject, but Judge Collins has managed with rare ability to make his volume interesting and comprehensive. It should appeal to the ordinary reader as well as to students. Not the least interesting part of the work is the author's description of the various budget systems of foreign governments."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 O 11 '17 250w

"This compact little book admirably fulfils the purpose of its author. Much stress is properly laid upon the history and budget practice of Great Britain and while all that the author says in praise of the English budget system is true, he has missed the significance of the treasury as a great independent department of administrative or business management. He has likewise failed to call attention in his references to authorities and sources for further study of budget systems to the remarkable collection of literature on this subject edited and published by the New York Bureau of municipal research." S. M. Lindsay

+ Survey 39:266 D 1 '17 300w

COLLINS, FRANCIS ARNOLD. Air man. il *$1.30 (4c) Century 629.1 17-21113

The conquests of the air man in peace and war are told by the author of "The camera man," "The wireless man," etc. The opening chapter on Learning to fly describes and compares the methods of teaching in use in America and in France, and enumerates the requisites for obtaining an American flying license. Other chapters are: The aero-sportsman, Aero-exploration and adventure; Aerial transportation; Embattled air-fleets; Air duels; American airman under fire; The chivalry of the air. The final chapter, American air forces, tells of what has been accomplished in, and is planned for, aviation in America.

"A book to arouse enthusiasm and confidence in aviation."

+ A L A Bk1 14:44 N '17

Reviewed by C. H. P. Thurston
Bookm 46:286 N '17 30w

"With its interesting text and graphic illustrations from over fifty photographs, 'The air man' ranks among the extremely few books upon aviation that appeal to the average American who wants the thrill of his story free of the dry-as-dust of equations and diagrams."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 21 '17 240w

"Of interest to boys and adults."

+ Cleveland p103 S '17 20w

Nation 105:349 S 27 '17 540w

"Mr Collins's book is very opportune, and the fact that it is so well done, gives so comprehensive a view of the general subject of aeronautics and of what has been already accomplished therein and is written with accuracy, although it is not too technical for the ordinary reader, will help to give it the popularity it deserves."

+ N Y Times 22:291 Ag 12 '17 800w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Mogu, the wanderer; or, The desert; a fantastic comedy in three acts. *$1 Little 822 17-8575

Padraic Colum has been closely associated with the Irish dramatic movement, but in this play he leaves his native Ireland to write a drama of the East. The scene is laid in Persia. Mogu the wanderer is a beggar from the desert who at one stroke of fate is elevated to the viziership, made second in power to the king. By an equally sudden chance he is restored to his former lowly position, to return to his desert a beggar.

COLUM, PADRAIC—Continued

"Full of authentic oriental color."

+ Dial 62:445 My 17 '17 210w

"On the stage, when properly presented in accordance with Mr Colum's directions, it would make a remarkable picture. There is, unfortunately, in the early act an element of uncertainty as to how far the imagination is to play a part in the development of the plot, as to where the audience is to be serious or not, that somewhat confuses the dramatic action."

+ — N Y Times 22:168 Ap 29 '17 160w

"The play is fascinating and it presents a new phase of Mr Colum's dramatic invention. The key to this phase is in his volume of poems, 'Wild earth.'"

+ R of Rs 55:441 Ap '17 210w

+ Springf'd Republican p19 My 20 '17 250w

COLVIN, IAN D. Unseen hand in English history. *7s 6d National review office, London (Eng ed 17-25264)

"Mr Colvin's 'Unseen hand in English history' is a continuation of his book 'The Germans in England.'" (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "He reviews the chief events of English history since the Tudors with the object of showing what the traditional English policy is." (Sat R) "The bulk of the book is a plea on not very novel grounds for a protective system, or, as he . . . prefers to call it, 'national industry.'" (The Times [London] Lit Sup)

"The book is not history; it is not even good honest fiction. It is simply a pamphlet decked out with an apparatus of learning. . . . It is, however, well worth perusing as a study of Jingo psychology. Mr Colvin, whose incisive style may be recognized in the leading columns of the Morning Post, [draws] his ideas not from Britain, but from Berlin."

— Ath p399 Ag '17 570w

"The book is well worth reading. A lively style, adroit selections, an instinct for contemporary sources and authorities, distinguish Mr Colvin from most of our professional historians, who fear they will lose their name for science if they cease to be dull. . . . He argues strongly for a tariff, and he chooses the best arguments for his case."

+ — Sat R 124:50 Jl 21 '17 780w

"Mr Colvin is too much in the grip of Germany."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p302 Jo 28 '17 1050w

COLVIN, SIR SIDNEY. John Keats; his life and poetry. *$4.50 Scribner 17-30270

"Besides presenting for the first time in full and consecutive detail the history of Keats's life and poetical activity, the new book discusses with a fullness which has not hitherto been attempted his relations both to his Elizabethan masters and some of his Victorian followers, and relates the slow and gradual growth of his fame after his death. It moreover throws, with the help of various illustrations from prints, pictures, and the antique, new light on some of the sources of his inspiration; and aims at calling up the circle of his friends in their human lineaments about him, as well as at making felt the various and conflicting currents of the critical and poetical atmosphere amid which he lived."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"A scholarly, full and connected account."

+ A L A Bk 11:127 Ja '18

"Sir Sidney Colvin, in this fine reassertment of the facts of Keats's life, seems to us to be insufficiently content with Keats's actual performance. He is eager to introduce an ethical nobleness into the portrait such as certainly is not reflected in Keats's greatest poetry."

+ — Ath p664 D '17 1400w

"This careful, thorough, tactful, and exhaustive work renders obsolete all previous expressions of opinion upon Keats; it deserves, indeed, to be labelled with the final word, 'definitive.' If this monumental volume is, in any way, disappointing to the present commentator, it is only because Sir Sidney Colvin—actuated by his trained and careful sense of literary values—has avoided sedulously many manifest temptations to assert and to insist upon the prime importance of his hero. And, to my mind Sir Sidney says, if anything, too little in praise of Keats." Clayton Hamilton

+ — Bookm 46:609 Ja '18 1570w

"A biography to which the very name and chronicle of the subject could not help but add its atmosphere of charm; but it is not a 'life' of Keats, because the biographer gets too near his subject without getting inside of it. It is always in the negative qualities of Keats, both as a man and poet, that Mr Colvin is best in his biographical and critical treatment." W. S. B.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 D 8 '17 2050w

"It is a book to read with delight; better still, it is a book that compels one to turn back and reread the poet himself." W. C. Greene

+ Dial 64:64 Ja 17 '18 1050w

"Until some chance discovery of fresh material antiquates it, this must remain the standard authority upon Keats, as accurate as patient scholarship can make it, and interesting to all scholarly and unscholarly lovers of poetry." P. L.

+ Nsw Repub 13:219 D 22 '17 1500w

"The author's monograph on Keats in the English men of letters series, published thirty years ago, has heretofore been the chief authority upon his life, character, and achievements, but compared with the full-length portrait, complete, detailed, and authoritative, presented in this volume, the other makes of him hardly more than a sketched vignette. It is a notable and distinguished piece of biographical writing that is worthy to be classed among the great biographies of English literature."

+ N Y Times 22:542 D 9 '17 1950w

"Manifestly a labour of love, this admirable work, illuminated throughout with thorough knowledge and fine critical acumen, deserves to take high rank in the select company of kindred classics. But the book is not only of absorbing interest as a masterly presentation of the poet and his work; it also teems with vivid studies of the circle in which he lived."

+ Sat R 124:440 D 1 '17 1550w

"A special feature of the book is the remarkably full treatment of the sources of his inspiration in literature. Another strong point is the helpful interpretation of the obscurities of Keats's symbolism, with the result of enabling the reader to form a truer estimate of 'Endymion' than was before possible. And if the book has been a labour of love, it is love which is this side idolatry." There is plenty of severe criticism of Keats's lapses from good taste and clear thinking—his amorous mawkishness, his lax phrasing, and intellctious coinages. Sir Sidney Colvin is scrupulously fair in his handling of Keats's critics; if he lets himself go about Byron, the provocation is irresistible."

+ Spec 119:601 N 24 '17 2050w

"In a book that is itself a poem, so fine and true is its penetration, so full and sensitive its expression. Sir Sidney Colvin has assembled all the essential, one is tempted to say the quintessential, facts relative to the poet Keats."

+ Springf'd Republican p13 Ja 20 '18 800w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p425 S 6 '17 260w

"The new matter adds light and shade to the already vivid portraits of the poet and his friends, and examines his art more closely, both in itself and in its relation to the development of English poetry as a whole. In its pages the life and character of Keats stand out clear in all their subtle and tragic beauty."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p573 N 29 '17 3550w

COMPLETE United States infantry guide; arr. by Major J. K. Parsons. il *$6 Lippincott 356 17-21916

"This volume, for officers and noncommissioned officers, is said to include all the War department publications relating to the infantry arm of the service. It is profusely illustrated with charts and diagrams.

"In this very formidable volume is all information required to make the infantry soldier efficient. His convenience will surely be served by this opportunity to learn what must be learned from one work, instead of being compelled to familiarize himself with twenty-five books."

+ Lit D 55:48 D 1 '17 150w

"This encyclopedic volume should be in every military man's library."

+ R of Rs 56:442 O '17 80w

"The material is well selected and arranged and the book contains a detailed index. The only difficulty results from the size of the publication with its 2074 pages."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 9 '17 200w

COMSTOCK, DANIEL FROST, and TROLAND, LEONARD THOMPSON. Nature of matter and electricity; an outline of modern views. il *$2 Van Nostrand 530.1 17-8751

"This is a book on the modern physics of matter intended for the general reader and written without mathematics. The authors have collaborated by writing different parts of the book. A large number of topics are presented to the reader in semi-popular form. The treatment is descriptive, aided by diagrams and chemical formula groupings, and technical terms have been avoided as far as possible. Part 1 is divided into eleven chapters on the following topics: Introductory, the ultimate realities, atoms and their behavior, the nature of heat and allied phenomena, the electron and its behavior, electrons, chemical action and light, electrons and magnetism, radio-activity, the structure of the atom, recent discoveries concerning atomic structure and radiation. Part 2 deals briefly in turn with fifty-six subjects and in a manner somewhat more advanced than that of part 1."—Elec World

Elec World 70:24 J1 7 '17 170w

N Y Br Lib News 4:76 My '17

St Louis 15:326 S '17

COMSTOCK, MRS HARRIET THERESA. Man thou gavest. il *$1.35 (2c) Doubleday 17-11705

The story opens in the southern mountains. Here Conning Truedale has come to regain his health, and here he meets little Nella-Rose. The witch-like, mountain child fascinates him, and the marriage vows they exchange under the open sky are as sacred to him as they are to her. Then he goes away, promising to return. He keeps his promise and is stunned to learn that the girl has married her outlaw lover and gone away over the mountains. This is what he is told, and believing it, he goes back to New York and in time marries. But the mountain people had been mistaken about Nella-Rose. She had been in hiding, waiting for the man she called her husband to return and for her child to be born. This child, "Lil' Ann," later comes into the lives of Conning Truedale and his wife, Lynda.

"The fatal weakness in this story is not its artificiality of plot and excess of emotion so much as the hollow elaboration of its characters. We might have enjoyed the romance if the author had not tried to make it a vehicle of realism." H. W. Boynton

— Bookm 46:208 O '17 380w

"Southern mountain dialect as it is not spoken is amply illustrated in Miss Comstock's latest tale of involved heart interest."

— Boston Transcript p6 Je 20 '17 200w

"The primitive life and character of the mountains are forced into the office of pointing up and giving a sort of exotic relish to an es-entially and even conventionally 'modern' story. Against an action artificially contrived, the figure of Nella-Rose stands out with a good deal of vigor and clarity."

+ Nation 105:317 S 20 '17 310:7

"As a whole the characters, like the tale, belong to melodrama. Ingenuity is shown in the management of the incidents which separate Truedale and Nella-Rose and some of the descriptions are well done."

— + N Y Times 22:218 Je 3 '17 200w

CONNOLLY, JAMES. Labour in Ireland; with an introd. by Robert Lynd. *1s Munnell & Co., London (Eng ed 17-25871)

"Although James Connolly acted for many years in connection with the extreme Socialistic party in Scotland, the United States, and Belfast, it was not until the Dublin strikes of 1913 that he attracted much attention from the English public; and even then he was overshadowed in the popular judgment by the more spectacular 'Jim' Larkin. When the strikes collapsed he passed again out of general notice except in Dublin, where it was known that the nominal second-in-command of the Irish transport workers' union was the real contriving head and driving-force of the movement. . . . When the Sinn Fein rebellion broke out in Easter week of 1916, he appeared as 'Commandant-General of the Dublin division.' . . . The present volume is made up of reprints of two of his works, 'Labour in Irish history' and 'The reconquest of Ireland.' The first and more elaborate of the two is based on the thesis that the key to the secret of Irish history is the exploitation of the poor by the rich. . . . The second part of the volume depicts, in the darkest colours, the condition of the working class in Dublin and Belfast at the present day."—Spec

"Given the point of view, the book is ably and not intemperately written. The author fairly admits difficulties in his theory—such, for example, as the inefficiency of local administration in Dublin, where the machinery of government is controlled by a democratic body democratically elected. His bias appears more in his selection and suppression of facts than in his presentment of them; he thinks he does well to be angry. But if you write history remembering only the severities used to restore law and order, and forgetting or justifying the outrages which provoked them; approving of force when used against the rich, and condemning it when used against the poor; assuming as a matter of course that a man of property always and necessarily acts from the basest of interested motives—you may produce a very vivid picture, but it will not bear much relation to the events and men it professes to portray."

Spec 118:702 Je 23 '17 1000w

"'Labour in Ireland' cannot be overlooked by any one interested in Irish problems."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p221 My 10 '17 800w

CONNOLLY, JAMES BRENDAN. Running free. il *$1.35 (2c) Scribner 17-24272

This volume includes ten stories of the sea or of seamen ashore, copyrighted 1913-17 by Charles Scribner's sons, 1912-17 by P. F. Collier & son, 1916 by the Curtis publishing company. "A bale of blankets" is a story of American naval life; "The strategists" and "Breath o' dawn" are naval romances, with the fleet in the background. Other stories are: The weeping Annie; The bull-fight; Peter stops ashore; The sea-birds; The medicine ship; One wireless night; Dan Magee; white hope.

"Ten live sea stories told with humor and pathos."

+ A L A Bkl 14:59 N '17

"In all these brief, sometimes sketchy, but always effective picturings of life, the one sure, detectable Connolly touch is the signet-ring stamp of individuality. And it is an individuality born of the sea and of a deep, passionate, unalterable love of the sea."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 10 '17 290w

CONNOLLY, JAMES BRENDAN—Continued

"The wind whistles vigorously through Mr Connolly's pages, they drip with brine; and the threat-ning face of death frequently interrupts the grim humor of the old salts. This good, clean, virile look, like the others that preceded it, will help to keep his fame afloat."

+ Cath World 1:6:412 D '17 129w

"Sensationalism is absent, but there is humor, human appeal and the real salty flavor."

+ Cleveland p132 D '17 49w

"The author is unhappy in the choice of the first story to appear in this book. . . . But Mr Connolly is at home in the succeeding stories. They are strong, and the sharp tang and clean breath of the sea are beside the reader till the book is finished. Perhaps 'Seabirds' contains more real character than the others, but 'One wireless night' is the story of the book."

+ New Repub 13:sup14 N 17 '17 199w

"'Running free' is devoid of sensationalism, free from melodrama. . . . You will find a crowd of thoroughly human and humorous, un-sentimentalized men of the sea. . . . There is heroism as well as humor in these stories, but it is an unassuming, casual sort of heroism."

+ N Y Times 22:365 S 30 '17 699w

"The frequent assertion that romance disappeared from the sea with the advent of steam vessels is abundantly disproved in the ten short stories of 'Running free.' In spite of the apparent absence of artificial color, the stories are dramatic and thrilling."

+ Springfield Republican p19 D 2 '17 490w

CONNOR, RALPH, pseud. (CHARLES WILLIAM GORDON). The major. ff. *$1.40 (1c) Doran 17-50122

The motif of Mr Connor's story is one whose patriotic climax and poignant ending echo in the souls of millions of men and women the world over today. Canada furnishes the scene and the characters, but the sentiment portrayed belongs to the whole wide world at war. The hero is a fine type of methodical, the best that countries can produce. He passes thru the period of bewilderment and misery, which thousands have gone thru, when the burden of his thought is, "That great people upon whose generous ideals and liberal Christian culture he had grounded a sure hope of permanent peace, had flung to the winds all the wisdom, and all the justice, and all the humanity which the centuries had garnered for them, and following the primal instincts of the brute, had hurled forth upon the world nothing else." Then came the succession of events chief among which were the Belgian atrocities, which kindled slowly in the hero's heart the purpose to have a part in ridding the earth of a system that could produce such horrors. Many a young man will read in these pages his own reactions to the call to the colors.

"The story-teller is successful in welding all his material into the substance of a spirited romance." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 16:663 Ja '18 389w

+ Nation 165:667 D 13 '17 490w

"While Mr Connor's new novel cannot be said to amount to much as a story, the picture of Canada in the early days of the war, with which it concludes, is quite interesting."

+ N Y Times 22:156 D 16 '17 599w

"The story has the directness and 'punch' of earlier R. W. Connor books. It has also a sound and deep patriotic spirit."

+ Outlook 117:611 D 12 '17 59w

"It is almost startlingly incommensurate times, but as a whole vigorous and life-like."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p68 D 29 '17 16w

CONRAD, JOSEPH. Shadow line; a confession. *$1.25 (31c) Doubleday 17-41155

The shadow line marks the boundary between youth and maturity. Its approach is heralded by extreme boredom, weariness, and dissatisfaction. It is a time of rejections, getting married and only, or throwing up one's job without reason. The young seaman who is hero of this tale of the Malay Archipelago leaves his ship on a sudden impulse, intending to take passage for home. While idling about in an eastern seaport, opportunity comes his way and he finds himself captain of a sailing vessel whose master had but recently died. He is in command of this ship for twenty-one fever-ridden and ghost-haunted days, and at the end of his voyage he finds that the boundary line has been crossed. Youth lies behind him.

"Gives somewhat the same sense of the power of the sea and the wonder of human nature as 'Youth' and 'The typhoon.'"

+ A L A Bkl 13:402 Je '17

"The atmosphere and the portraiture are masterly, but the book seems to us more the elaboration of a short story than an actual novel."

+ Ath p253 My '17 90w

"The subtitle, 'A confession,' may lead us to surmise that the tale may be bound with special closeness to Mr Conrad's own experience."

H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:536 J1 '17 450w

"Nothing written by Mr Conrad during his twenty years of fame as a maker of English fiction is more characteristic than 'The shadow line.' It is an epitome of his manner and a summary of his method."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 5 '17 1450w

"For Conrad, 'the most unliturgical of writers,' is no more nor no less unliturgical than Meredith or Swinburne or Shakespeare. No other writer I do not except the poets—has a richer variety of verbal resource or uses his power with more careful command." J. Macy

+ Dial 62:412 My 17 '17 700w

+ Ind 99:437 Je 2 '17 139w

+ Lit D 55:36 O 27 '17 290w

"The tale is quite straightforward, with a sort of breathless simplicity and candor. . . . It is told by a master."

+ Nation 104:760 Je 28 '17 730w

"Indeed, it might fairly be offered as a 'first degree' for the novice seeking initiation into the Conradian mysteries. The menace and the glamour of his ocean are here, the humanly strange yet strangely human atoms with which it plays." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 105:669 N 29 '17 100w

"Mr Conrad has given us two superb pictures of courage." Q. K.

+ New Repub 11:194 Je 16 '17 730w

"About 'The shadow line' there is an extraordinary atmosphere of beauty. . . . It is a beauty deeper than mere words go."

+ N Y Times 22:157 Ap 22 '17 1700w

"'The shadow line' is as vivid and as haunting as 'The ancient mariner.' What is more, it is thoroughly real and profoundly true."

+ No Am 295:919 Je '17 700w

+ Outlook 116:116 My 16 '17 70w

"This is a story for the present times, a gospel searching down into the hearts of men to awaken their potentialities in this period of world disaster and send them forth to fight valiantly against their ill-luck, their muddling and mistakes, and to bear with consummate courage the heavy responsibilities thrust upon them."

+ R of Rs 55:663 Je '17 250w

"But Mr Conrad the great object of love and admiration is the ship which he came to know so intimately in his twenty years of seaman-ship. On the title page [of the English edition] of this book is the sentence, 'Worthy of my undying regard,' and underneath stands no firm name, but a ship with sails set. Here, once more Mr Conrad shows that he loves a ship as a lover does his mistress, and so his latest book is an essential piece of himself, a return to earlier triumphs."

+ Sat R 123:281 Mr 21 '17 950w

"Mr Conrad's new sea story may best be described as a Conradian version of 'The ancient mariner.' . . . The volume is the first of a new 'Conrad library,' including several of his previous novels, but we cannot share the publishers' satisfaction with the 'specially attractive binding' prepared for the series. Messrs Dent have deserved so well of the public in this respect that they must not complain if they are judged by their own high standard."

+ Spec 118:391 Mr 31 '17 720w

"It is books of this kind that earn for Conrad the epithet 'Philosophic adventurer,' and quicken one's hope that he may be the chosen artist to achieve the final synthesis of realism and romance, toward which modern fiction has so long and uncertainly evolved."

+ Spring'd Republican p19 My 27 '17 100w

"The serene assurance of the imagination which is the outcome of all the finest work of Mr Conrad's genius is here broken and uncertain. The moral over-balances the story. That deepest meaning which haunts the solemn beauty he has created, simply because, it may be, it has been pursued too consciously or too familiarly, has all but eluded him."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p138 Mr 22 '17 1000w

CONRAD, ALBERT FREDERICK, and THOMAS, WILLIAM ANDREW. Farm spies; how the boys investigated field crop insects. il *50c Macmillan 632 16-19964

"This is a collection of brightly written, well-illustrated 'story-articles' on various common injurious insects of North America, designed to catch the attention and enlist the sympathies of 'boys and girls and those persons who know nothing about insects and how to fight them.' Among the pests described are the cotton boll-weevil and root-louse, chinch-bugs, grasshoppers, and the black corn weevil."—Nature

"For fifth or sixth grade."

A L A Bkl 13:130 D '16

"Points in the breeding and feeding habits that bear on farm practice are often cleverly emphasised, and some of our British students might be well occupied in compiling for the home country a somewhat similar work." G. H. C.

+ Nature 99:23 Mr 8 '17 250w

N Y Times 22:165 Ap 29 '17 50w

CONWAY, AGNES ETHEL. Ride through the Balkans; on classic ground with a camera; with introd. by Sir Martin Conway. il *$1.75 (3½c) Sturgis & Walton 914,96 (Eng ed 17-10195)

A novel story told in the fashion that best suited a woman traveler, who with another traveler of her own sex, in the months immediately succeeding a bloody war, wandered unescorted thru regions but recently disturbed, and met with kindness and hospitality at the hands of the people. Instead of an exhaustive treatment of objects of interest in the towns visited we find in the short chapters crisp, informing bits of history, description and comment that stand out with the definition of a photograph. The cities which occupy the leisurely tourists are Athens, Corinth, Constantinople, Salonica, Tempe, Thessaly, St Luke of Stiris, Delphi, Mistra and Sparta, Megalopolis, Bassæ, Yanina, Cettigne, Scutari and Dalmatia. The book is beautifully illustrated from photographs.

"An ordinary narrative of travel, with plenty of human interest. Certain of the views leave something to be desired in regard to clearness of detail."

+ Ath p254 My '17 80w

"Miss Conway's book is very good reading, and all too brief."

+ Spec 118:441 Ap 14 '17 150w

"The work is lightly written, and archæology, which was the inspiration of the journey, is left in the background, as is explained in an excellent introduction by Sir Martin Conway; but it will appeal to the Antikajis, even amid their martial labours, as well as to the ordinary reader."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p.46 Mr 29 '17 470w

CONWELL, RUSSELL HERMAN. Observation.—every man has his own university. il *$1 (3c) Harper 374 17-26979

By the author of "Acres of diamonds" this book is sent out "to induce people to look at their own eyes, to pick up the gold in their laps, to study anatomy under the tutorship of their own hearts." Observation, the writer believes, is the key to success. This key is viewed in the light of a prized possession and the reader points the way to using it intelligently. Contents: Observation—the key to success. Who the real leaders are. Mastering natural forces; Whom we should spell love. Need of orators; Woman's influence; Every man's university; Animals and "the least things"; The bottom rung; Home teaching; Thoughtfulness, instincts and individuality; Women; Musical culture; Oratory; School help; Some advice to young men.

+ A L A Bkl 11:115 F '18

CONWELL, RUSSELL HERMAN. What you can do with your will power. 750c (6c) Harper 174 17-9814

The author says, "The message I would like to leave with the young men and women of America is a message I have been trying humbly to deliver from lecture platform and pulpit for more than fifty years. . . . The message is this: Your future stands before you like a block of unwrought marble. You can work it into what you will. Neither heredity, nor environment, nor any obstacles superimposed by man can keep you from marching straight through to success, provided you are guided by a firm, driving determination and have normal health and intelligence."

A L A Bkl 13:373 Je '17

Pratt p5 Jl '17 30w

+ Spring'd Republican p17 Jl 8 '17 130w

CONYNGTON, THOMAS. Corporate organization and management. $5 Ronald 317.1 17-24990

Mr Conyngton's two earlier books "Corporate management" and "Corporate organization," published respectively in 1903 and 1904, have been revised and combined into one volume by Miss Helen Potter of the New York bar. "All duplicated and obsolete material has been deleted, and the volume as a whole has been brought sharply up to date. While this has been done, no necessary material has been omitted, all the valuable features of both volumes being retained." (Preface) In its present form the work is made up of five parts: The corporate system; Corporate organization; Corporate management; Special corporate topics; Forms and precedents. The volume is indexed.

St Louis 15:341 S '17 20w

COOK, ARTHUR LEROY. Interior wiring and systems for electric light and power service. il *$2 Wiley 621.31 17-7827

"This book is intended as a guide to modern practice in electric lighting and power applications, and in the design and installation of the wiring for such purposes." (Preface) It has been written particularly for electrical workers but is also adapted for use in schools. The author is head of the department of applied electricity at Pratt Institute. The book is made up of three parts: Electric lighting systems; Electric power systems; Interior wiring.

"Valuable to electric workers occupied with only interior wiring, industrial works, office buildings, or dwellings. Covers this subject more fully than Croft."

+ A L A Bkl 11:115 Ja '18

Cleveland p199 S '17 26w

"Examples illustrate each step. Of particular value to the electrical worker are the many diagrams of connections, illustrations of electrical apparatus and fixtures, curves and tables."

+ Elec World 69:1268 Je 30 '17 150w

N Y Br Lib News 5:76 My '17

COOK, ARTHUR LEROY—Continued

"Practical and free from troublesome mathematics. A wealth of clearly expressed and definite information and instruction compressed into a volume of pocket size."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p8 Ap '17 120w

"Treatment of lighting is especially good. . . . Principles of illumination are taken up in a clear and concise manner. The thirty-three pages on calculation of illumination are eminently suited for the busy architect and contractor. . . . The characteristics and advantages of various types of motors are given. Control devices are well treated. . . . The chapter on selection of motors is good. . . . Interior wiring forms the last section. . . . A very useful feature is the chapter on examples of actual wiring systems."

+ Pittsburgh 22:448 My '17 130w (Reprinted from Electrical Age p56 Ap '17)

Pittsburgh 22:658 O '17

+ Pratt p17 Jl '17 40w

+ Quar List New Tech Bks Ap '17 130w

St Louis 15:364 O '17 20w

COOK, CARROLL BLAINE (DIXIE CARROLL, pseud.). Lake and stream game fishing; with an introd. by James Keeley, and a foreword by Jack Lait. il $1.75 (3c) Stewart & Kidd 799 17-20655

This book, by the president of the American anglers league, conveys much practical instruction in matters of fresh-water angling. It includes "Stories of big fish as told by their captors"; "One hundred questions and answers on tackle, fish and fishing"; and "Poems of the water trails," by Albert Jay Cook. There are ten full-page illustrations.

+ A L A Bkl 14:48 N '17

"More useful than many recent books on angling in that it gives minute and specific instructions, some of them intended for the mere novice, some valuable to the experienced sportsman. A student of Walton is tempted to the cynical remark that the English is what might be expected of a man who favors self-thumbing and self-spooling reels; but this doubtless betrays a hopelessly old-fashioned taste in both tackle and literary style."

+ — Dial 63:408 O 25 '17 130w

"Doubtless the novice who wishes to learn how to catch pike or bass in Wisconsin streams and lakes will get more out of Dixie Carroll to that immediate end than he could extract in any available allowance of time from Izaak Walton. But slang is a vehicle of expression all too easily overworked."

+ — Natlon 105:229 Ag 30 '17 130w

Pittsburgh 22:351 O '17

"Conceived in the spirit of Izaak Walton but actually written in the modern vernacular of the disciples of the rod and reel. A delightful book to read if you do not fish. The amusing introduction is by Jack Lait."

+ R of Rs 56:333 S '17 50w

COOK, SIR THEODORE ANDREA. Mark of the beast. il *5s Murray, London 910.91 17-13400

"The author's object in collecting and arranging the facts marshalled in this book is to drive home the lesson that an inconclusive 'peace with the German empire will be a disastrous defeat.' The three main subjects are 'German kultur,' 'German history and diplomacy,' and 'German atrocities.' The prophecies of Bernhardt, the work of Col. Frobenius, and similar pronouncements, are submitted to illuminative criticism; the tortuousness and duplicity of German diplomacy are described at length; together with the appalling events at Louvain, Aerschot, Audenne, Dinant, &c." (Ath) The illustrations are reproductions from Holbein's "Dance of death."

"As a cumulative indictment of German methods this work is impressive and of deep gravity."

Ath p106 F '17 100w

+ Sat R 123:87 Ja 27 '17 870w

"Our chief criticism of this book is that Sir Theodore Cook is not dealing quite fairly with his readers, for a very brief examination is sufficient to show that a considerable portion of it has already been republished in book form. Page after page of this work is identical with a large part of his previous book, 'Kaiser, Krupp, and kultur,' including the quotations with which each chapter is headed; and of this fact no warning is given to the reader."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p56 F 1 '17 650w

COOK, SIR THEODORE ANDREA. Twenty-five great houses of France; the story of the noblest French chateaux; with an introd. by W. H. Ward. (Country life lib.) il *$16 Scribner 728.8

"Sir Theodore Cook is an enthusiast for certain phases of French architecture, and he knows his subject. He is also an assiduous student of the romance of history, and he has given the results of his researches and wanderings in France in this handsome and attractive volume." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "The author has described houses ranging in character from the citadel of a royal borough to the country seat of a minister of state, from a great fortified monastic establishment on its wind-swept cliff to a substantial burgher's residence in the heart of a great city. In date the houses described range over five centuries." (N Y Times)

"The splendid page, the open type, the broad margins, the host of full page plates and the greater host of cuts of details make this study by T. A. Cook a thoroly delightful and valuable work on the chateaux."

+ Ind 88:411 D 4 '16 110w

"To architects and students of architecture and to all who have looked upon the noble buildings that made France lovely, even before the war had revealed her heroic soul, this book has an irresistible appeal. . . . The text conveys a clear idea of the characteristic architecture of the buildings to even those readers who lack special knowledge of this subject, and the 380 illustrations are a joy to the eye."

+ N Y Times 21:512 N 26 '16 150w

Pittsburgh 22:39 Ja '17 20w

"Sir Theodore Andrea Cook is the best of guides, for he is equally interested in history and in architecture. The letterpress exactly reflects in this respect the fascination of the chateaux."

+ Spec 117:833 D 30 '16 1550w

"Sir Theodore Cook is always sympathetic, sensitive to impressions, tolerant, and eminently readable, even if he sometimes loses touch of his critical sense in his full-blooded enthusiasm for all the pagantry of the past. But his chief concern is with people, with those who owned and those who lived in these great houses, rather than with the humble artist who designed them."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p5 Ja 4 '17 1600w

COOKE, JOSEPH BROWN. Baby, before and after arrival; intimate talks with prospective mothers in plain, non-technical language. il *$1 Lippincott 618.2 16-23365

"This book deals chiefly with the mother, before and after the baby's arrival, and the title is therefore somewhat misleading. Recent statistics would seem to indicate that child-bearing is still quite hazardous. . . . While infant mortality has been reduced almost 50 per cent within the last generation, the death rate of child-bearing mothers has remained stationary. Dr Cooke points out that, while the medical profession is chiefly to blame for this state of affairs, the public is responsible for a good many impediments it has put in the way of the conscientious physician in the scientific performance of his duties. He details the essential facts about pregnancy and childbirth, and indicates the necessity for cooperation between physician and patient."—N Y Call

"Written in not too technical language, adapted for mothers and nurses. . . . It is blunter than Simons and not so full as Davis."
+ A L A Bkl 13:294 Ap '17

"The entire problem is treated by the author in a practical and sensible fashion." Medicus
+ N Y Call p14 F 18 '17 200w

"In many ways it is an admirable presentation. . . . It is encouraging to find another straightforward, thoroughly scientific popular book on the subject of childbearing." D. R. Meadenhall

+ Pittsburgh 22:334 Ap '17 30w (Reprinted from Journal of Home Economics p144 Mr '17)

COOKE, MARJORIE BENTON. Cinderella Jane. il *$1.35 (2c) Doubleday 17-11703

By day Jane Judd cleaned studios in the Washington Square neighborhood. By night she devoted herself to the art of letters. For, unknown to the "Studio colony," Jane had not only ambition, but ability of a rare order. Jerry Paxton, for whom she had worked for six years, had never taken any notice of Jane. To him she was a quiet, undemonstrative, domestic woman—the ideal wife for a popular society painter, unhappily beset by the women who fell victim to his charm. Unexpectedly Jerry asked Jane to marry him, and she accepted. Interesting developments follow; Jane's first novel is published, and Jerry, who believes that a woman's one career should be her husband, finds himself married to a woman who is famous. Their adjustment is the substance of the latter half of the story.

"Will be popular. Appeared in the American Magazine."

A L A Bkl 13:449 J1 '17

"The truth is, genius apart, Jane is a rather tiresome and irritating person—to the male observer, at least." H. W. Boynton

— Bookm 45:534 J1 '17 500w

"The plot is admirably worked out, with a surprise in every chapter. . . . Jane is the super-woman type, a trifle too calm to be human. But she is an excellent girl and teems with lessons. Besides, she finally learns a few for herself."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 25 '17 280w

"One is not sure about 'Cinderella Jane.' The writer is so set upon being modern, so enthusiastic about the current doctrine of marriage as a mutually free state, that she strains the point at the expense of her Jane and her husband."

Nation 104:737 Je 21 '17 380w

"The best part of the book consists of the remarks made by Jane and the author regarding women's careers and economic position, and in these there is nothing which will not prove entirely familiar to any one who has given any attention to these subjects."

N Y Times 22:166 Ap 29 '17 330w

Spec 119:741 D 22 '17 30w

"The theme is now a common one, but the qualities that made this author's 'Bambi' so pleasing to many are here in even greater measure."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 Je 10 '17 350w

"A novel of New York life, with a good deal of the unabashed emotional appeal one expects from so representative an American writer as the author of 'The girl who lived in the woods.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p602 D 17 '17 130w

COOLIDGE, ARCHIBALD CARY. Origins of the Triple Alliance. (Univ. of Virginia, Harbour-Page foundation) *$1.25 (3/4c) Scribner 940.9 17-20014

This volume is based on three lectures given before the University of Virginia, in 1916, by Professor Coolidge of Harvard university, "pointing out the causes, personal and international, that led to the formation of the alliance. The author disclaims having made any startling discoveries or any new theories; his object is to set out the interplay of political forces, the aims of statesmen, and the aspirations of peoples in Europe after the Franco-Prussian war as an indispensable study for anyone who wishes to understand even in a superficial way the causes that have brought about the present world-conflict." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) Two appendices give the terms of the Austro-German alliance and the terms (so far as known) of the Triple alliance.

"Its outstanding merit is lucidity of presentation and in this respect the book, considering its small compass and the involved nature of its subject, is a model of exposition. The ordinary student would have been grateful for a list of authorities other than the few referred to in the sparse footnotes."

+ Am Hist R 23:430 Ja '18 180w

"Short but adequate and very lucid account of the origins of the Triple alliance."

+ Ath p520 O '17 170w

"The book is of general interest just now, when especial need is felt of a readable and accurate account of the political forces at work among the central European powers following the Franco-Prussian war." L. E. Robinson

+ Bookm 46:272 N '17 350w

Cleveland p138 D '17 40w

Ind 91:475 S 22 '17 170w

"Though Professor Coolidge modestly disclaims having made any startling discoveries, his little volume is probably the clearest, sanest, and most objective brief account of the most important permanent results of European diplomacy between 1866 and 1882. Its value lies in the discriminating judgment, based on wide reading and personal acquaintance, with which he handles such elusive questions as the war scare of 1875, the personal relations between the old Kaiser and the Czar, and the devious motives of Bismarck, Gortchakov, and Andrassy. . . . Professor Coolidge has also been wise in giving an unusually full analysis of the Russian and Balkan factors in the origins of the Triple alliance. These have ordinarily been much less appreciated than the Italian and French elements."

+ Nation 105:223 Ag 30 '17 650w

"It is pleasant to recognize a book in which Bismarck as a statesman is not, if the expression may be used, melodramatized out of all lifelikeness."

+ N Y Times 22:383 O 7 '17 500w

Pittsburgh 22:678 O '17

"One of the best books to help one understand how the present way came about." P. E.

+ St Louis 15:353 O '17 30w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p395 Ag 16 '17 90w

COOLIDGE, DANE. Rimrock Jones. il *$1.35 Watt 17-13184

"'Rimrock' is a young Arizona prospector, possessing all the vices and virtues of his kind—the magazine and moving-picture kind. He discovers a fabulously rich copper mine. A young woman stenographer gives him her small savings to assist in establishing his claim, in return for which he gives her a one per cent interest in the property. He interests an eastern capitalist, but past experience has taught him to be wary of surrendering his control. Eventually, a fault develops in his filing and a man jumps one of his claims. Jones kills the man and is jailed. Until he is acquitted the girl watches over his interests, but afterward he becomes infatuated with an eastern woman, follows her to New York and there pursues a round of dissipation and seriously involves himself in disastrous stock speculation. In the meanwhile, the fault in his mining claim once more crops up in Arizona. This the girl uses to advantage in bringing him to his senses."—Springf'd Republican

"The story is vigorously written, as befits its subject, and will especially appeal to those acquainted with mining manipulations."

+ N Y Times 22:274 J1 23 '17 120w

"It is a breezy story of its kind, and its rapid action creates a high degree of interest."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 19 '17 220w

* This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

COOLIDGE, LOUIS ARTHUR. Ulysses S. Grant. il *$2 (1c) Houghton 17-4331

"No man who ever gained enduring fame was more the sport of chance than Grant," says his biographer. "No character in history has achieved supreme success in war or the supreme reward of politics who owed less to his own ambition or design. . . . He was the child of splendid opportunities which came to him unsought, for which he never seemed to care, and which he met with calm assurance of his own capacity." It is a well-written work based on trustworthy sources and it treats adequately of what the author calls Grant's two distinct careers, devoting more space than is usual to Grant's presidency.

"Mr Coolidge has used the best books relating to the subject, and particularly everything personally relating to Grant, except the material in the Civil war records. He has not, however, familiarized himself with recent monographic literature, or with the economic and social movements of the time, which emphatically influenced Grant's career, although they left his personality untouched. . . . He seems also not to possess a sufficient background of military knowledge to give force to his military criticism. Grant, however, both man and boy, by quotation and incident, stands out more clearly than in any previous account. . . . The study of Grant in some respects is apt to prove final." C. R. Fish

+ Am Hist R 22:885 Jl '17 1156w

"General King and Mr. Edmonds devote but a small portion of their books to Grant's life after the close of the Civil war. While not an absolutely necessary biography, would be of use as viewing Grant from this angle."

+ A L A Bkl 13:351 My '17

"The more important and distinctive part of Mr Coolidge's work lies in the last third of it. . . . Scant justice is done to the character of Carl Schurz in this review of Grant's life."

Mr Coolidge's book fails to achieve its evident purpose to set Grant among the few great presidents; it was not needed to place him among the country's greatest soldiers. U. S. K. Boston Transcript p8 F 7 '17 909w

"Mr Coolidge presents an interesting and, on the whole, judicious account of Grant's presidency. The student of our history knows that it is no easy task. One of the best features of this excellent biography is the liberal quotation from Grant's letters and state papers, written in that simple and forceful style which proceeded from his integrity and strength of character."

+ Dial 34:76 Ja 17 '18 639w

+ Ind 91:31 Jl 7 '17 60w

"If it cannot be said that Mr Coolidge's biography altogether explains the man Grant and his career, . . . he has nevertheless narrated the events of a difficult historical period with a skill which gives to the present generation a rapid and comprehensive account of much with which it should be acquainted, while older persons familiar with the story can read it once more with renewed interest."

+ Nation 101:759 Jo 28 '17 1355w

"The biography, while it embodies in notation or paraphrase all that is most significant in Grant's narrative, has abundant freshness and vitality of its own; it is written with more than a touch of eloquence. Not merely because of its fullness and accuracy, but also through its literary qualities, its verity and incisiveness, it is not unworthy to stand beside the 'Memoirs' as a companion piece."

+ No Am 205:897 My '17 1150w

"It comes just short of 600 pages, as long as a one volume biography can afford to be, and a study of its proportion, reveals good judgment on the part of the author. . . . The value of the volume is enhanced by the portraits, seven of Grant alone, one in a group of officers, all but one of these are from the collection of Frederick Hill Meserve of New York and some of them have not hitherto been published. Five of them are of the soldier, one of the president, two of the veteran."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Jl 20 '17 43w

COOMARASWAMY, ANANDA KENTISH. Buddha and the gospel of Buddhism. il *$3.75 (3½c) Putnam 294 A16-1519

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

A L A Bkl 13:240 Mr '17

"There is nothing scholarly about this book; as a contribution to scientific knowledge, it is nil. Its accounts of the legendary life of Gautama and his teaching, the discussions of the contemporary religious systems of India and of the later developments of Buddhism, as well as the concluding chapters on Buddhist art, are all a hotch-potch of quotations from modern scholars. . . . If one wishes to get a general view of Buddhism, he will do better to turn to any popular manual, say the one by Mrs Rhys Davids in the Home university library, which is far better than the present work, and only costs one-seventh as much. . . . The book is confessedly a work of propaganda. As an argument for Buddhism, it is not particularly convincing."

+ Dial 62:405 My 3 '17 750w

"We have many expositions of Buddhism, but few possess either the charm or the forcefulness of this."

+ Lit D 54:913 Mr 31 '17 320w

"This book, dealing, as it does, very largely with metaphysical speculations, is, of course, not very easy reading. But the author's style is admirably clear. It is illustrated with a number of fine plates, some in color, others in black and white."

+ NY Times 22:357 S 23 '17 500w

St Louis 15:17 F '17

"The author's previous work and his peculiar fitness to write authoritatively on this subject should go far to recommend this book for serious consideration by all students of the Buddhist religion."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Mr 12 '17 300w

COOPER, CLAYTON SEDGWICK. Brazilians and their country. il *$3.50 (3c) Stokes 9481 17-29767

"The writer contends that in a period when territorial borders are being so rapidly dissolved and when national and social conditions are being so deeply stirred by the greatest human conflict of all ages, isolation and localism are no longer possible for any thoughtful person. He offers this contention as an apology for a North American's presumption in writing about a South American people. Contents: Moral hospitality; Brazilian traits; Portugal and Brazil; The Brazilian empire; The oriental-ism of Brazil; Republican government; A Brazilian country; Education; Brazilian home life; The triumph of the engineer; Seeing Rio de Janeiro by trainway; Electric energy trans-fering Brazil; The racial melting pot; In the land of the Paulistas; The awakening of southern Brazil; Trade and transportation; Outdoor sports and lotteries; Rio de Janeiro, city of enchantment; Bahia, odd and bizarre; Parana-gua; Fernandopolis and Central Brazil; Para and the rubber workers of the Amazon; The Brazilian Indian; Languages, libraries and literature; Brazil's army and navy; The Latin American view of North Americans; The newspaper as an international medium; Brazil's tomorrow."

"We have as a result a history with science, observation and experience combined in a really valuable volume." T. Walsh

+ BookM 46:606 Ja '18 110w

"The frequent comparisons between North American and South American ways of looking at life and of carrying on the business of living are always interesting and ought to prove useful to all business men, especially young men, who hope to enter into trade relations with South America."

+ NY Times 22:579 D 30 '17 360w

"Exceptional among serious descriptive works in being readable as well as full of useful information. A business man with South American trade in the back of his mind might well invest in this book. It gives a striking picture of our great southern neighbor and ally."

+ Outlook 117:519 N 28 '17 50w
+ R of Rs 57:219 F '18 60w

COOPER, ELIZABETH (MRS CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER), Heart of O Sono San. il $*1.75 (3½c) Stokes 17-28073

The heart of O Sono San is not only the heart of every Japanese girl, but the heart of woman the world over. The customs, the ceremonies, the superstitions and traditions that dominate the environment in which O Sono San is reared are those which now stifle, now strangely quicken the development of Japanese women. From babyhood to motherhood we follow her. In her maturity when she gives her boy to her country, while she lives thru the uncertainties and terrors of the struggle for Japan's life, when her boy falls serving his country, she rallies from the staggering blow with the heroism that is no more Japanese than French, English, German or American. It is the old Spartan heroism of universal womanhood. The illustrations are excellent reproductions in duo tone from photographs.

+ A L A Bkl 14:130 Ja '18

"The author's 'The lady of the Chinese court yard' was an interesting piece of work. It was brilliant, but not so fine as 'The heart of O Sono San,' because the latter book possesses rare ethical and spiritual beauty."

+ N Y Times 22:578 D 30 '17 770w

"If the illustrations do not always illustrate the accompanying text, they are in themselves exquisite. The book is worth owning."

+ Outlook 117:510 N 28 '17 50w

COOPER, JAMES A. Cap'n Abe, storekeeper; a story of Cape Cod. il $*1.25 (1½c) Sully & Kleinteich 17-14190

Louise Grayling decides suddenly to spend the summer on Cape Cod with an uncle she has never seen, Cap'n Abram Silt. She finds Cap'n Abe to be a mild and peaceful old gentleman who for many years has entertained his neighbors with tales of the wild adventures of his seafaring brother, Cap'n Amazon. Louise has never heard of this brother and is amazed to learn that she has another uncle. There are others, too, who have begun to express polite doubt as to his existence. So to silence these doubters, Cap'n Abram arranges for the appearance of Cap'n Amazon. His own disappearance is coincident with the arrival of the swarthy-skinned, black-haired, red-turbaned seaman who can be no other than the legendary captain. The village accepts the stranger at his face value but is sorely puzzled to know what has become of the gentle Cap'n Abe. The reader will anticipate Louise in guessing the secret, but the curious villagers are kept in doubt for some time.

+ A L A Bkl 11:26 O '17

"Mr Cooper is to be credited with some ingenuity of plot and with holding concealed until almost the closing chapter a climax which can fairly claim originality. . . . There is a conventional love romance in the book."

Boston Transcript p6 Jl II '17 250w

"If your last trip to the Cape has lost any of that delicious odor of clams and seaweed that clung even to your shoelaces, you can get a new whiff of it here, with a great deal of pleasure."

+ Dial 63:354 O 11 '17 100w

"The sea and the seafolk give the breezy atmosphere which makes it pleasant reading for a summer's day."

+ N Y Times 22:258 Jl 8 '17 130w

+ Springf'd Republican p13 Je 17 '17 220w

COOPER, LANE, ed. Concordance to the works of Horace. pa $7 Carnegie inst. 874 16-20920

"With this monumental volume a great labor of love on the part of the professor of the English language and literature in Cornell university has been finished, and a new and advanced position in the progress of classical scholarship has been gained. . . . The text on which the 'Concordance' is based is that of Vollmer's 'Editio maior' of 1912. Contrary to the usual practice, Mr Cooper has maintained a purely alphabetical sequence in the arrangement of Horatian forms, as, for instance, 'sum, eram, esse, fui,' etc., rather than listing all these under the basis of 'sum' or 'esse.' The advantage of this plan is that the student can at once detect the presence or absence of any given form in Horace. The work is a concordance and not a mere index. Each word is quoted in connection with a whole line (or more if necessary) of its context, which makes it possible, not only instantly to identify the passage, but also to study the word or phrase in question without turning it up in the original text. . . . Mr Cooper has issued with the 'Concordance,' for the benefit of those engaged in a similar task, a list of instructions for preparing the slips used in the compilation of this great work."—Class J

"We, who up to date have had no index to Horace except those of the Zangemeister-Bentley type, works ill printed and out of print at that, will have constant cause for gratitude to Mr Lane and to his 'Maecenas,' the Carnegie institute of Washington, for his scholarly, handsome, and entirely usable volume. It is a royal octavo, on heavy durable paper, printed with type unusually large and clear for such a work." F. J. Miller

+ Class J 63:609 Je '17 530w

"To review a concordance exhaustively one must have thumbed it in long service. I have tested this one only by rapid reading of a hundred pages selected at random. I have observed no misprints and no instances of unintelligent or misleading delimitation of the excerpts. They are always so made as to indicate sufficiently the metrical, the grammatical, and the substantive context. . . . An interesting page of the preface describes the method by which the forty-five thousand slips were prepared by eighteen collaborators." Paul Shorey

+ Class Philol 12:311 Jl '17 150w

COOPER, LANE, ed. Greek genius and its influence. $*3.50 (2½c) Yale univ. press 913.38 17-29847

Select essays and extracts that interpret the life and genius of classic Greece. The work aims to supply "a part of the necessary background for the study of Greek and Latin masterpieces, . . . and to stimulate and rectify the comparison of ancient with modern literature." The characterizations of the Greek race which are assembled here have special interest for students of literature, and the writer hopes, for the geographer and anthropologist. A penetrating study of the traits of the Greek race, at its best, furnishes an introduction to the volume. He finds the Greek the most versatile and evenly developed of any race nature has brought forth; they were religious and intellectual; remarkable was their scientific interest in human conduct. The writer, who is professor of the English language and literature in Cornell university, offers the volume as a stimulus to the study of standard English translations of the classics.

"Certainly the reading is good reading, for the whole two hundred odd pages. Only—and one must ask it—why isn't it edited?" H. B. Alexander

+ — Dial 64:63 Ja 17 '18 1250w

"While this book lacks the unity that a single authorship would compel, it is none the less abundant in interest and in wisdom."

+ Educ R 55:78 Ja '18 80w

COOPER, LENNA FRANCES. How to cut food costs. il 75c Good health pub. 641 17-19175

"In this little book, the director of the Battle Creek sanitarium school of home economics gives a popular explanation of a balanced diet and provides a guide to the selection of low cost foods. It contains a large number of recipes and a list of economical menus for ten days. The seasonal factor in food economy is brought out, and the part played in cost by transportation and selling charges illustrated by telling examples. The emphasis is laid on wise buying rather than waste in the kitchen which, so far as working class households are concerned, is apt to be exaggerated by the critics."—Survey

COOPER, LENNA FRANCES—Continued

Cleveland p131 D '17 40w

+ Ind 91:353 S 1 '17 70w

"The book closes with a complete bibliography on kindred subjects."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 O 28 '17 140w

"Though this book cannot take the place of verbal instruction and practical demonstration in the education of the less educated housewives, it may be recommended as a trustworthy manual for those already interested in the subject." B. L.

+ Survey 39:73 O 20 '17 130w

COPPING, ARTHUR E. Souls in khaki; with a foreword by General Bramwell Booth. *$1 (2c) Doran 940.91 17-17990

"Mr Copping's book presents a series of pictures of his personal investigations into spiritual experiences and sources of heroism in the English army. [With the assistance of the War office and the Salvation army] he visited the training camps in England, went to France, tarried in the hospitals, went through the trenches, was under fire, talked with numberless soldiers, whole and wounded, spent much time in the Salvation army huts, and everywhere made it his chief purpose to find out what quality it is in the British soldier that enables him to face calmly and smilingly the horrors and the perils of battle. It is his conclusion that at the front 'the spirit is supreme and the flesh subordinate,' and he bears witness to what so many other observers have noted, the reality of religious faith among the soldiers."—N Y Times

Ath p420 Ag '17 100w

"In spite of the incessant and aggravating recurrence of adjectives—"piteous" seems to appear upon every other page—the writer has achieved a very readable war book and one that ought to find a place in the libraries of our Sunday schools."

+ Bib World 50:375 D '17 380w

"Chatty and interesting but marred by occasional sentimentality."

+ Cleveland p118 N '17 40w

"It is a chatty and very readable little book and shows in a graphic way how spirit can rise above material conditions and make them contribute to its own good, no matter how abhorrent they may be. And that is something that ought, just now, when our own men are soon to be in the trenches, to be a consoling message to Americans."

+ N Y Times 22:261 J1 15 '17 330w

"The book is full of stirring anecdotes of heroism and exalted Christian service. It is well put together and is free from any suspicion of special pleading. Mr Copping has done his best to get at the facts. His material is fresh and, in the main, convincing."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 1 '17 280w

CORBETT, JULIAN STAFFORD. England in the Mediterranean [1603-1713]. 2d ed 2v *$5 Longmans 942.06

"Once to grasp the Mediterranean point of view is to be dominated by its fascination," wrote Julian S. Corbett a dozen years ago in the preface to his admirable work on "England in the Mediterranean, 1603-1713." He went on to give the first satisfactory account of that important bit of English naval and political history by which England first established her sea-power within the Pillars of Hercules, occupied for a while Tangier, and finally fixed her unshakable hold on the Rock of Gibraltar."—Nation

"Today the Mediterranean is more than ever the 'Key-board of Europe,' and the history of the seventeenth century strategists who secured it for England must always be of deep historic interest. Some of the episodes discussed in the book are 'Sir Walter Raleigh,' 'England and the Venice conspiracy,' 'The navy under James I,' 'The Spanish succession,' 'Marlborough and the navy,' and 'The congress of Utrecht.'"

+ Cath World 105:539 J1 '17 320w

+ Ind 91:187 Ag 4 '17 40w

"With unusual success he has kept the complicated politics of the period in close relation to the naval history. With their readable style and their sense of the romance of the sea in its embodiment in English sea-fighters, Mr Corbett's volumes are again welcome."

+ Lit D 54:1428 My 12 '17 280w

"The great war, which has again centered men's minds on England's sea-power and her position in the Mediterranean, has called forth a second edition of Professor Corbett's authoritative story of those small beginnings in the seventeenth century. It is reprinted in smaller format, but otherwise there is no change from the first edition."

— Nation 104:553 My 3 '17 140w

CORBETT-SMITH, ARTHUR. Retreat from Mons. il *3s 6d Cassell & co., London 940.91 (Eng ed 16-2253)

"The book deals with Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien's corps more than with Sir Douglas Haig's, and even on its own ground does not attempt a connected narrative. It gives us specimen episodes in the fighting; but these are so well chosen that they do in effect convey to us an accurate idea of what the whole strategical issue was." (Spec) "Much of the book is anecdote; stories of heroism; stories of the irrepressible humor of the British soldier; stories of the capture and summary execution of German spies." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) On p. xi-xvi the roll of honour of the First expeditionary force is given.

"He is particularly skillful in describing individual feats and incidents."

+ Ath p156 O '16 40w

"If we were asked how to get the best idea of the early fighting by our small but immortal Expeditionary force, we would say: Read Lord Ernest Hamilton's book, 'The first seven divisions,' for the facts, and Major Corbett-Smith's book, 'The retreat from Mons,' for the spirit."

+ Spec 117:585 N 11 '16 1800w

"He gives us one of the most graphic accounts which we have read of the German mass attacks at Mons."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p471 O 5 '16 900w

CORBIN, THOMAS W. Marvels of scientific invention. (Marvels ser.) il *$1.25 Lippincott 608 17-4604

"Some of the 'Marvels of scientific invention' are collected in this interesting account by Thomas W. Corbin. The subjects include guns, torpedoes, the use of high explosives on farms, submarines, protection in mines, smelting, freezing, color photography, and electrical testing. These inventions and their uses are told in a pleasant fashion and their scientific aspects are described accurately in non-technical language."—Nation

+ A L A Bk1 13:336 My '17

Natlon 104:346 Mr 22 '17 60w

N Y Br Lib News 3:189 D '16

St Louis 15:363 O '17 30w

"Mr Corbin's book is briefer than Mr Talbot's, and covers a smaller range. On the other hand, it has an index, and it goes more fully into the chemistry and science of the subject."

Sat R 122:sup10 D 9 '16 150w

"On the whole Mr Thomas W. Corbin achieves considerable success. But he is not entirely free from mistakes in fact."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p612 D 14 '16 120w

Wis Lib Bul 13:154 My '17 30w

CORCORAN, TIMOTHY, comp. State policy in Irish education, A. D. 1536 to 1816; exemplified in documents collected from lectures to postgraduate classes. *$2 Longmans (Eng ed E17-153)

"The professor of education in the National University has printed a series of documents illustrating the chequered history of Irish education, hampered for centuries by racial, linguistic, and religious differences. The first of them is Henry VIII's admonition to Galway 'that every inhabitant within the saide towne indevor theym selfe to speke Englyshe,' and it is characteristic. . . . Dr Corcoran's historical introduction, written from the Roman Catholic standpoint, is instructive, but the documents tell their own tale."—Spec

+ Educ R 54:95 Je '17 70w

"It has been necessary to point out that Dr Corcoran mutilates or omits important documents—a practice which might be further illustrated from this book. But, notwithstanding this, all students of Irish history will be grateful for what he has given them. To much of it, no doubt, the criticism which has been made does not apply." E.

* + — Eng Hist R 32:309 Ap '17 650w
Spec 117:sup533 N 4 '16 140w

CORIAT, ISADOR HENRY. What is psychoanalysis? *75c (5½c) Moffat 131 17-10883

This little book consists of questions and answers on psychoanalysis. Such general questions as, What is psychoanalysis? Where and under what conditions did it originate? Can psychoanalysis be harmful? What is the cause of certain failures in psychoanalysis? are answered together with many more specific questions relating to definite neurotic ills. The author is first assistant visiting physician for diseases of the nervous system, Boston city hospital, and he has written other books on "Abnormal psychology," "The meaning of dreams," etc.

"A straightforward clear exposition of the general procedure of psychoanalysis and of the technical terms that have arisen in connection with it."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 12 '17 470w
+ Ind 91:512 S 29 '17 40w

"Dr Coriat answers questions that have been in the minds of many persons. All this information is presented in simple terms quite within the understanding of persons of ordinary intelligence."

+ N Y Times 22:432 O 21 '17 60w

CORKERY, DANIEL. Munster twilight. *$1 (2c) Stokes

A collection of Irish tales possessing all of the qualities we have now come to associate with things Irish, mysticism, pathos, poetry and humor of the sort that is more grim than jovial. Six of the stories are grouped together under the title The cobbler's den. They are the stories drawn from the reminiscences of a group of cronies who come together nightly in the cobbler's shop.

N Y Times 22:202 My 20 '17 270w

"Whether he has been influenced by the study of Gorky and others of this violently depressing school of realists we cannot say. It may be merely an unconscious convergence, but the resemblance is sufficiently striking. . . . Mr Corkery has put nearly all his gloom in the van, a method to be deprecated on prudential grounds, for while it may impress the critic who admires strong meat, it is apt to choke off the plain and gentle reader, especially at the present time. But we recommend the reader to persevere, for he will be rewarded."

+ — Spec 118:109 Ja 27 '17 1200w

"Not all of these stories are violent or harshly humorous. Some are warm and tender, with a deep, queer insight into the hearts of old and gentle and afflicted people."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p19 Ja 11 '17 500w

CORNELL ERA. Above Cayuga's waters; comp. by the editors of the Class of 1917. il $1 Cornell era, Ithaca, N. Y. 378 16-19647

A selection of articles and poems that have appeared in the Cornell Era since its founding in 1868 to the present day. It has been the policy of the magazine to obtain for publication articles by prominent men on all phases of college life. "As a result," says the preface, "the bound copies of the Era, covering nearly fifty years, are a storehouse of articles valuable for all who may be interested in that wonderful phenomenon, the American university." With few exceptions the authors of the selections are either Cornell graduates or members of the Cornell faculty. Among those represented are Andrew D. White, Goldwin Smith, David Starr Jordan, Hugh Black, Arthur Brisbane, Norman Hapgood, Dana Burnet, Liberty Hyde Bailey, and Jacob Gould Schurman.

"This little book will have interest not only for all Cornellians, graduate as well as undergraduate, but also for many others who busy their minds much or occasionally with the problems of student life and the relations between that life and the world life."

+ N Y Times 21:576 D 31 '16 550w

"The book has little general appeal, but is valuable to students because of its treatment of their problems, and to Cornell men because of the memories it preserves."

Spring'd Republican p19 My 20 '17 200w

COSMOS, pseud. Basis of durable peace. *50c (1c) Scribner 940.91 17-3465

A series of articles written for the New York Times in November and December, 1916. As a starting point the author examines statements at that time recently made by the German chancellor and the British prime minister. Finding the two statements strikingly similar in outward appearance, he discusses the meaning of such expressions as "rights of small nations," "freedom of the seas," etc., from both the German and the British points of view. He discusses further the principles of the new international order that may be established after the war and the place of the United States in it. Victory for the Allies is the first essential for a durable peace. The second is the stamping out of the military ideal, not in Prussia alone, but in all the countries of the world. "The spirit and the point of view which manifest themselves in militarism, in the subordination of civil to military authority and policy, and in the setting of right below might, must be driven out of the hearts and minds of men. . . . The basis of sound international policy will be found in sound domestic policy, and in sympathy with equally sound domestic policies in other lands."

"The writer who offers his work under the title of Cosmos, and who is undoubtedly ex-President William H. Taft, has given us probably the sanest discussion of the terms of peace that the nations must agree upon at the close of the war. The articles show sound judgment and as far as the settlement of the war is concerned, great practicability."

+ Cath World 106:111 O '17 250w

"Much information clearly and briefly given."

+ Ind 89:362 F 26 '17 40w

+ N Y Times 22:29 Ja 28 '17 800w

Pratt p36 Jl '17 40w

"One of the ablest expositions of the subject that has appeared in small compass. Much less technical than Lafontaine's The great solution." L. A. Mead

+ Survey 38:552 S 22 '17 290w

COULT, MARGARET, ed. Letters from many pens. (Macmillan's pocket American and English classics) *25c Macmillan 826

17-7943

"Miss Coult has followed a plan of her own in selecting the letters, and her collection is variously lively, informing and inspiring. It is an admirable book for use in schools. . . . There is a group devoted to chat about home matters, another group of letters from young people to their elders and another of letters

COULT, MARGARET, ed.—Continued
from grown people to children (including some of Phillips Brooks's and Lewis Carroll's), a group of letters addressed to strangers, a long collection of sketches from many lands, a section about tastes and a group of letters expressing emotions. A capital group is that of 'Other times, other manners,' which runs from classical times through the 18th century.—Spring'd Republican

"While the educational use of the work is perhaps most important, many persons will find it profitable and delightful for casual reading."
+ Spring'd Republican p10 My 18 '17 190w

COUPERUS, LOUIS MARIE ANNE. Twilight of the souls; tr. by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. *$1.50 (2½c) Dodd 17-25859

This is the third of a series of four novels, "The book of the small souls." It carries on the story of the various branches of the Van Lowe family. Ernst becomes temporarily deranged, Gerrit, the "healthy brute" of a soldier, who figures largely in this volume, has a severe illness; suffering and death come also to other of the Van Lowses, and the "family group" that "Mamma" Van Lowe has tried so hard to hold together, seems to be breaking up. Constance, who, in the two preceding volumes, has been passing through a period of spiritual evolution, and has reached "the happiness of accepting one's own smallness . . . and of not being angry and bitter because of all the mistakes . . . and of being grateful for what is beautiful and clear and true," has a bitter disappointment when her son, Adrian, tells her that he cannot carry out his parents' long cherished plan and enter the diplomatic service, because he has become absolutely convinced that he should be a doctor. But the mother understands, forces down her disappointment and encourages her boy to follow his deepest conviction.

"It is a depressing chapter in the family history, yet not without its glimmer of happier light. Constance sees it as that atom, that 'grain of absolute truth and reality' which even small souls may possess, and may impart to others." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm P 488 D '17 60w

"The general tone is pessimistic but it is remarkable in its human sympathy and has touches of fine idealism."

+ Cleveland p2 Ja '18 150w

"In 'The twilight of the souls' Mr De Mattos translates with his accustomed skill the third of those linked 'Books of the small souls' in which the Dutch realist Couperus has embodied so searching and sympathetic an interpretation of human nature and of modern life."
+ Nation 105:511 N 8 '17 350w

"Among the three volumes of the series which have now appeared, this, the third, ranks second in merit, above 'The later life' and below the 'Small souls.' This because, while very much better in every way than the former, it has less variety than 'Small souls' and less of inevitability."

+ N Y Times 22 416 N 1 '17 1050w

COURVILLE, E. H., comp. Autograph prices current. 255 E. H. Courville, 35 Rumsey Road, Erixton, London, S. W. 017

"The records in the volume are stated to have been extracted from the catalogues of about sixty-five days' sales and to represent a sum of more than £25,000. Among the entries we notice autograph letters of Rossetti, Swinburne, Sir Walter Scott, Samuel Johnson, R. L. Stevenson, Louis XIV, Napoleon, Washington, and others. . . . Numerous quotations from letters are embodied in the text" (Ath) The compilation is to be published annually and is "a complete alphabetical and chronological record of all autograph letters, documents, and many crypts, sold by auction in London, with the date and place of sale, name of purchaser and price of each lot together with a comprehensive reference index" (Sub-title). Sales from August, 1914 to July, 1916, inclusive, are compiled in this first issue.

+ Ath p425 S '16 140w

"His scholarly catalogue will be welcomed by the student, the collector, and the dealer alike."

+ Spec 117:419 O 7 '16 190w

"On every page of this carefully edited volume there is something to arrest the attention, and we can only express the hope that it may become as hardy and as vigorous an annual as 'Book prices current.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p428 S 7 '16 950w

COUSINS, FRANK, and RILEY, PHIL. M. Wood-carver of Salem; Samuel McIntire, his life and work. il *$7.50 Little 16-23955

"The wood-carver of Salem' is a well-deserved tribute to Samuel McIntire, of Salem, whose distinction as an architect and designer, as well as a craftsman, is preserved in many of the stately houses of the third colonial period that still adorn the ancient streets of Salem. . . . McIntire passed his whole life and did all his work in Salem, never having had an opportunity to see the productions of Wren and other contemporary English architects. Yet he attained high rank as a designer and, in the opinion of the authors of this book, he was our foremost colonial architect of domestic buildings."—R of Rs

"To anyone that loves New England and is familiar with its widespread excellence of old architecture such a book as 'The wood-carver of Salem' affords pleasant entertainment. . . . It is a book to read beside a fireplace such as those fireplaces that it pictures and describes." W. A. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 27 '16 400w

+ Cleveland p80 Je '17 30w

"A plentiful index and 127 plates give added importance to a work that is replete with vital interest."

+ Int Studio 60:95 Ja '17 200w

"It appears as a limited edition, carefully and elaborately prepared."

+ Lit D 54:567 M 3 '17 200w

+ R of Rs 55:105 Ja '17 150w

COX, KENYON. Concerning painting; considerations theoretical and historical. il *$1.75 (1c) Scribner 750 17-24869

"This book is the result of such thinking as I have been able to do on my own art of painting. It divides itself into three parts; the first is an inquiry into what painting essentially is and into the nature of its appeal to humanity; the second is an attempted account of what painting was in the golden age, from the beginning of the sixteenth century to nearly the end of the seventeenth; the third deals with some aspects of the painting of the more immediate past. Part first was originally given in the form of lectures at Union college. Parts second and third were delivered at Yale, in the Trowbridge course on the history of art, and at the Metropolitan museum and other institutions. The three chapters on 'The golden age of painting' have appeared in Scribner's Magazine, and the other five in the Art World" (Preface) There are thirty-two reproductions of typical works from the older and from contemporary artists.

"The suggestions are clear and not too technical in form so that they will interest the intelligent layman as well as the student."

+ A L A Bkl 11:83 D '17

"I find the first division of the book, devoted to a general consideration of what painting is according to Cox, the most arresting part of the discussion; probably because it is most Cox, whereas the historical survey puts him in a vast field where the competitors are numerous." R: Burton

+ Bookm 46:478 D '17 550w

"Dr Cox elsewhere has not kept to himself his opinions regarding the vagaries of futurism, cubism and the other extreme manifestations of erratic individualism but he refrains from even recognizing in this book the existence of such a school or even mentioning the name of its votaries. He waxes quite enthusiastic over John La Farge, having evidently fallen under the sway of the personality of that brilliant genius." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 27 '17 750w

+ Cleveland p136 D '17 10w

"The eight essays are of unequal interest. Mr Cox has done nothing better than the two studies 'Painting as an art of imitation' and 'Painting as an art of relation.' . . . There is a clearness and trenchancy about this work which is beyond the range of any other American critic of art. Where Mr Cox's admiration is fully aroused there is also a great sensitiveness. This quality Mr Cox keeps for his favorites. The rest get a rather schoolmasterly report."

+ Nation 105:545 N 15 '17 290w

"If he wrote only of the technical side of his art he would be an absorbingly interesting author; but he is too much of an artist to stop with this. Not only the form but the meaning interests him, and he connects his comments on the detail of the workshop with observations on persons and schools and countries as catholic and sound and sincere as they are learned. . . . His arguments have lost the bitterness that once diminished the force of their effect on his readers."

+ N Y Times 22:417 O 21 '17 530w

+ Outlook 117:514 N 28 '17 50w

"In his chapters on the Italian renaissance and the Venetian school, Mr Cox is at his best. His brief, crisp summing up of the four great masters, Da Vinci, Michelangelo, Raphael and Correggio, is luminous with clear, incisive judgments. . . . It is in the third division of this work, devoted to certain aspects of 19th century painting, that we find Mr Cox somewhat disappointing. He has tried to crowd too much into inadequate space. . . . Perhaps the most disappointing of all the essays is that relating to the mural painters." F. T. Cooper

+ Pub W 92:817 S 15 '17 1000w

"The book is valuable to teachers and students for several excellent reasons: It is accurately informative, intelligently analytical, and stimulating to the cultivation of æsthetic conceptions that are in harmony with our ideals concerning the newer civilization that we hope to see emerge out of the present chaos of thought."

+ School Arts Magazine 17:226 Ja '18 300w

COXON, MURIEL (HINE) (MRS SIDNEY COXON). Autumn. *$1.40 (1c) Lane 17-9809

After ten years of an unhappy marriage, Deirdre Caradoc thought that the best of life was over for her. She was midway in her thirties, she had no child, and her love for her husband was dead. She decides to separate from him, and takes a house in the country where she hopes for uninterrupted quiet. Here she makes two friends, a father and his young daughter, who become of momentous importance in her life. Between the man and herself a deep and sincere love comes to life, but the course of their future is influenced by the daughter, who, in falling in love with a married man older than herself, seems to be giving them a replica of their own situation.

"This work carries the evidence of some originality. But the action does not progress with the desired celerity."

Boston Transcript p8 Ap 14 '17 220w

"It has to do with several charming people who seem unable, either by sin or by virtue, to solve their problems practically, ethically or sentimentally. Puppets of circumstance are they, whose perfervid loves play havoc with them. One wishes that they were all set to earning their living."

+ Ind 90:594 Je 30 '17 60w

"If the closing chapters of 'Autumn' do not quite fulfill the promise of its earlier portion, the novel is, nevertheless, one of unusual merit. . . . It has that nameless distinction which, for want of a better word, we term quality."

+ N Y Times 22:136 Ap 15 '17 600w

Spec 119:93 Jl 28 '17 20w

"What one complains of chiefly is, first, that the main events of the story do not happen inevitably, but only because the author makes them happen, and that they are, therefore, unconvincing. One's second ground of complaint is the author's constant evasion."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p281 Je 14 '17 820w

COXWELL, CHARLES FILLINGHAM.
Through Russia in war-time. il *$3.50
Scribner 914.7 (Eng ed 17-18477)

"It was on May 22, 1915 that the author, an Englishman, sailed from New York for North Cape and Archangel." (N Y Times) "He describes with full appreciation for the wonders of Russia his journey and the various cities and sections he visited. He entered at Archangel, and travelled from north to south and from east to west of Russia. Much space is given to Petrograd and Moscow. He describes Holy Kiev, Odessa with its busy life, the beauty of the Crimea, the antiquities of Kertch, the Cossack country, the wonderful Georgian military road over the Caucasus, as well as the less-known parts of Russia. At the end he passes through Finland and through the country of the Lapps."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 14:56 N '17

"In spite of his limited Russian vocabulary and in spite of war-time restrictions, he nearly always manages to get into actual touch with the natives, and ultimately to persuade them to pose for him. The result is a collection of unconventional photographs which help to impress on the mind a vivid picture of all those who came within Mr Coxwell's view."

+ Ath p342 Jl '17 700w

"An amusing account is given of the author's difficulties at the outset with the Russian language."

+ Ath p364 Jl '17 80w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 22 '17 250w

"Political Russia is of more vital interest than physical Russia; but at the moment when the fate of that nation seems to center in one city, it is not amiss to remember that Petrograd is one of the least representative cities of the new republic and that behind all its changes and its transitory emotions there lies the great mass of the Russian people, sturdy, industrious, and immovable. To consider them steady one's sense of proportion. Mr Coxwell's book enables one so to consider them."

+ Dial 63:276 S 27 '17 230w

"The main impression it conveys is that the war in 1915 had hardly ruffled daily existence in the smaller Russian towns, and was little regarded in such important centres as Petrograd and Moscow."

+ N Y Times 22:294 Ag 12 '17 480w

"Mr Coxwell is almost a Pickwickian tourist—so simple-minded, so easily pleased, so little subjective in his observations, that he might seem to have just set out from Goswell street. But there the resemblance ends. Adventures crowded on Mr Pickwick at every turn, but not one befell Mr Coxwell. Mr Coxwell is happier, however, with his camera than with his pen."

+ Sat R 124:250 S 29 '17 350w

"In the main, of course, the narrative is personal, but personal narratives may be of absorbing interest when the writer is an experienced traveler. Added value is given in the liberal space devoted to details of Russian life and customs and to historic incidents."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 S 6 '17 230w

"No doubt students of Russian life will find nothing interesting in these pages and the book is not for those who wish to estimate political, economic, or military forces, or for those who look to Russia for spiritual guidance or inspiration. But it is for the not-too-serious tourist and those who are like the author in spirit. . . . There is a slight misconception, perhaps, in the title of the book. It has little or nothing to do with the war, and does not describe special war conditions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p268 Je 7 '17 1050w

CRABB, GEORGE. English synonyms. rev and enl ed *$1.25 Harper 424 17-10873

The first edition of Crabb's "English synonyms explained" was published one hundred years ago. The preface to this centennial edition says, "It is an exceptional tribute to Crabb's scholarship that during an entire century his masterful work has continued to hold the regard of the English-speaking world, and that to-day it is consulted with probably more appreciation than ever before." Of the changes and additions made for the new edition the preface says further, "Nothing has been eliminated from the master's explanations of his chosen words, and his style of presentation has been followed as closely as intervening conditions would permit. The entire body of the original words and explanations has been supplemented by a large number of words with their applications that have grown into the language within recent years, besides many that came to have a deeper significance than before because of the great European war." Another important feature of the new edition is a complete system of cross references. The work has an introduction by John H. Finley.

"Revised and brought up to date by unnamed editors whose work, one cannot help feeling, is considerably inferior to that of the original author in natural feeling for words, in comprehension of philological niceties, and in insight into derived meanings."

Spring'd Republican p8 My 31 '17 430w

CRAGIN, LAURA ELLA. Sunday story hour. il *$1.25 (3c) Doran 372.6 17-13402

The author has written these stories for Sunday telling, either at home or in the Sunday school. They are planned for the younger children and are grouped under the headings: Our Heavenly Father's care; Our Heavenly Father's protection; The loving care of Jesus; Prayer; The sabbath; Helpfulness; Kindness; Obedience; Easter; Thanksgiving; Christmas. Many of the stories were written for the Beginner's leaflets issued by the Presbyterian Boards. Other books by the author are "Kindergarten stories for the Sunday school" and "Kindergarten Bible stories."

"The way in which the child is led to see how God is in his world makes the book especially fitting for Sunday reading, as it is designed to be."

+ Spring'd Republican p15 Ag 26 '17 100w

CRAIG, AUSTIN, ed. Former Philippines thru foreign eyes. *$3 (3c) Appleton 919.14 A17-1007

This volume, edited by Professor Craig of the University of the Philippines, consists of a series of reprints of original documents and other out-of-print material bearing on the early history of the Philippines. Contents: Feodor Jagor's travels in the Philippines; The state of the Philippines in 1810, by Thomas de Comyn; Manila and Sulu in 1842, by Charles Wilkes, U.S.N.; Manila in 1819, by John White, U.S.N.; The peopling of the Philippines, by Rudolf Virchow; People and prospects of the Philippines, by an English merchant, 1778, and a consul, 1878; Filipino merchants of the early 1890s, by F. Karuth. The volume was first published by the Philippine education company of Manila.

"Taken together, these descriptions form an exceedingly valuable lot of material regarding the Philippines. Of them all, the first is the most valuable, because of the intimate touch it gives of conditions and its excellent descriptions. The translation, which was made especially for this work by a young German, one of the victims of the Japanese onslaught on Tshng Tau, is immensely improved over the defective English translation published in London in 1875. By choosing descriptions on the whole favorable to the Filipinos, Professor Craig has presented but one side of his thesis, although it must be confessed material on the other side is easily available to whoever wishes to study the question from other points of view." J. A. Robertson

+ Am Hist R 23:197 O '17 900w

"Only where there is special interest."

A L A Bkl 13:442 J1 '17

"A republication of valuable and rare documents which is intended to correct the wrong impressions in the minds of students, concerning the Filipino and his islands." M. C. T.

+ St Louis 15:185 Je '17 20w

CRAIG, AUSTIN, and BENITEZ, CONRADO. Philippine progress prior to 1898. $1.25 Philippine education co., Manila 991.4 17-31047

The purpose of this source book of Philippine history, prepared by two members of the faculty of the University of the Philippines, is "to supply a fairer view of Filipino participation and supplement the defective Spanish accounts." The book consists of two parts. Part 1, The old Philippines' industrial development, by Conrado Benitez, has chapters on: Agriculture and land-holding at the time of the discovery and conquest; Industries at the time of discovery and conquest; Trade and commerce at the time of discovery and conquest; Trade and commerce: the period of restriction; The 19th century and economic development. Part 2, The Filipinos' part in the Philippines' past, consists of documents and reprints, edited with introduction and notes by Austin Craig.

CRAM, MILDRED. Old seaport towns of the South. il *$2.50 (3½c) Dodd 917.5 17-28900

The rain that falls in the first few chapters of this leisurely narrative dampens not at all the ardor of writer, illustrator and reader as they fare forth together on a journey southward from New York to Baltimore, Norfolk, Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, St Augustine and Galveston. The writer is visiting the South of her parents for the first time—the South that had come to mean "the place of sun, chivalry, romance and Uncle Remus." With freshness of outlook, therefore, the prominent points of interest are viewed. There is a good deal of history thrown in, some illuminating generalizations about social problems, the whole being interspersed with crisp dialog, clear description and entertaining comment. Good illustrations, the work of the author's brother, accompany the text.

+ A L A Bkl 14:91 D '17

"She catches the spirit of the cities, Baltimore, Charleston, Norfolk, and others, with remarkable accuracy. . . . 'Old seaport towns of the South' is a thoroughly delightful book. The publishers have issued it in most attractive form, making a feature of the unusual and striking illustrations." A. M. Chase

+ Book M 46:335 N '17 190w

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 3 '17 600w

"America is being discovered by its own people. The experiences and discoveries of one pair of explorers—brother and sister—are here related in sprightly detail, and the account is dressed by the publishers in the best product of the printing press. The historical facts woven into the narrative are at times somewhat mixed."

+ Dial 63:592 D 6 '17 280w

+ Lit D 55:39 D 8 '17 120w

"She has brought together a great variety of bits of history, tradition, reminiscence, and description which make of each place that she visits a very interesting, attractive, and colorful picture."

+ N Y Times 22:482 N 18 '17 100w

CRAM, RALPH ADAMS. Substance of Gothic. il *$1.50 (4½c) Jones, Marshall 723.5 17-25630

"I have called these lectures, given during the winter of 1916-17 in the Lowell institute course in Boston, 'The substance of Gothic,' because in them an effort is made, though briefly and superficially, to deal with the development of Christian architecture from Charlemagne to Henry VIII, rather in relation to its substance than its accidents; to consider it as a definite and growing organism and as the exact and un-escapable exponent of a system of life and thought antipodal to that of the modernism that began its final dissolution at the beginning of August A.D. 1914, rather than in the light of its accidents of form and ornament and details of structural design." (Preface) The author devotes five pages of his preface to listing and characterizing non-technical, easily available books, written in English, for those who wish to follow the subject further.

A L A Bkl 14:83 D '17

"It is a truly eloquent book, and regarded as a piece of writing will give pleasure to the layman as a literary performance, quite aside from his interest in the theme or his agreement with the view presented." R. Burton

+ Bookm 46:477 D '17 640w

"In Mr Cram's presentation of structural details we are given at last to realize how incomplete, how downright misleading has been the method which presented the material progress, and left altogether out of account the spiritual forces which made that progress possible. . . . The importance of such critical method in this day and age is tremendous. . . . He is pointing the way to a new understanding of the middle ages upon much more solid foundations. Beneath him is the support of such exhaustively scholarly works as Henry Osborn Taylor's 'The mediæval mind,' and of such penetrating analysis as has been made by Mr Henry Adams. . . . Mr Cram is, on the other hand much inclined to treat the faults and the blemishes of the modern age as though they were the only things visible in all the recent centuries. In this view is much error." J. E. K.

+ + Boston Transcript p 6 S 26 '17 1350w

"The volume, though evidently the work of an accomplished and enthusiastic student of architecture, is by no means a dry text-book abounding in technicalities. Its chief appeal may be to the specialist, nevertheless it will be perused with profit and pleasure by every intelligent reader."

+ Cath World 106:389 D '17 230w

"Mr Cram writes not alone from the point of view of an ardent Gothickist, but from that of an ardent churchman as well, and this contributes both to the strength and to the weakness of his book—to its strength because he has so keen and constant a realization of the nobility and vitality of the essential spirit of Catholicism; to its weakness because all those who fail or have failed of that realization are to him either heretics, heathen, or pagans, bent on establishing the kingdom of Satan on earth." Claude Bragdon

+ Dial 63:517 N 22 '17 900w

R of Rs 57:216 F '18 170w

CRAM, RALPH ADAMS, and others. Six lectures on architecture. il *$2 (6c) Univ. of Chicago press 720.4 17-4209

This volume contains the Scammon lectures for 1915, the lectures delivered at the Art Institute of Chicago as the eleventh series under the Scammon foundation. Contents: The beginnings of Gothic art, and The culmination of Gothic architecture, by Ralph Adams Cram; Principles of architectural composition and Modern architecture, by Thomas Hastings; Organic architecture and The language of form, by Claude Bragdon. There are forty-five illustrations.

A L A Bkl 13:387 Je '17

"Mr Bragdon's first lecture, entitled 'Organic architecture,' is an unusually clear statement of the condition of modern architecture. . . . His second lecture, on 'The language of form,' is a valuable and suggestive exposition of his views as to possible sources of new forms in art and ornament." P. E. Wight

+ Architectural Record 41:370 Ap '17 1400w

"Mr Cram's two lectures, which it is rather hard to judge fairly, as he covers an immense field in a few pages, are admirably written. Mr Hastings's two have some carelessnesses in style. . . . There is a good deal of practical advice and of suggestive information in all six. The volume would have been improved had an index been added." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p 8 Mr 14 '17 1050w

"Stimulating discussion of conflicting ideals in American architecture."

+ Cleveland p114 S '17 70w

"Mr Cram summarizes the evolution of the characteristic features of Gothic construction in paragraphs bristling with names, dates, and technical terms. The effect is sufficiently cryptic even on the printed page. Yet the treatment, on the whole, is stimulating and suggestive. No one in the world to-day—certainly not in this country—is, perhaps, better qualified than Mr Cram to interpret the Gothic spirit. It can hardly be said that Mr Hastings presents a very strong brief for his cause." W. A. Bradley

+ Dial 63:110 Ag 16 '17 1050w

"Well worth reading as examples of three wholly different attitudes and methods of approach to the subject. . . . The minds of auditors who heard all six lectures must have been left at the end in a somewhat bewildered state, for the book is full of contentious and provocative suggestions. It is hardly milk for babes in architecture, but it is good reading for those who are already somewhat instructed in the subject, and may well set the mature architect to thinking."

+ Nation 104:437 Ap 12 '17 420w

N Y Br Lib News 4:75 My '17 30w

"The doctors disagree, but it is the disagreement of living thought, and from the series of lectures the public receives a lively thrust toward the act of original thinking which is the desired result in all educational work."

+ N Y Times 22:415 O 21 '17 400w

Pittsburgh 22:316 Ap '17

Pratt p29 O '17 50w

+ Spec 118:732 Je 30 '17 140w

Springf'd Republican p 6 N 9 '17 290w

CRANCH, CHRISTOPHER PEARSE. Life and letters, [ed.] by his daughter, Leonora Cranch Scott. il *$3.50 (3c) Houghton 17-8755

Altho Christopher Pearse Cranch was born in Virginia, he was closely associated with the literary life of New England. As a young man he entered the Unitarian ministry, but left it after a time to follow an artist's career. He devoted himself to landscape painting and wrote poetry for the Atlantic Monthly, the Dial and other papers of the time. He was the friend of Emerson, James Freeman Clarke, George William Curtis and other distinguished Americans and in his travels abroad he formed friendships with men of letters in Europe, among them Thackeray, and the Brownings. In this book his daughter presents a selection from his letters, joined together by extracts from an unpublished autobiography.

+ A L A Bkl 13:399 Je '17

"Christopher Pearse Cranch finds a place in many anthologies, and his books are on the shelves of numerous libraries, public and private, that preserve the relics of bygone literary accomplishment. . . . It is regrettable that his daughter, despite the abundant material in her possession and her liberal use of it in this volume of 'Life and letters,' has thrown it together so carelessly, and has made no attempt, either in her own words or in the words of others, to tell a well-ordered and coherent story of his life. . . . As a miscellany of incidents in the inconspicuous life of an American man of letters and leisure, Mrs Scott's record of her father is valuable despite its incompleteness. . . . As material for a biography, Mrs Scott's volume will serve. It is also an excellent memorial tribute to a worthy life." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p 8 Mr 24 '17 1450w

"By far the most valuable part of the book is made up of the letters he received from others. Besides early notes from James Freeman Clarke and Emerson, there are several letters in Lowell's happiest manner, several from the Brownings . . . and many from W. W. Story and George William Curtis. A few, like those of

CRANCH, CHRISTOPHER PEARSE—Continued
Curtis from Berlin, are valuable for themselves; but most are of the sort that reveal the recipient as well as the author."
+ Dial 63:69 J1 19 '17 430w

"His personality was well worth studying, but the greatest charm of the book lies in the intimate view we get of such friends as Curtis, James Russell Lowell, Mr and Mrs Browning, Ralph Waldo Emerson, W. W. Story, Margaret Fuller, and others famous in art, music, and literature. . . . It is a very readable biography."
+ Lit D 54:2007 Je 30 '17 180w

"The reader who wishes to find a picture of the pale, reflected, undisturbed, and comfortable condition of American arts and letters of the period will do no better than to turn lightly the pages of this volume. But if he is looking for the impact upon a man of varied culture of the forces that were to shake artists, composers, and writers out of their traditional ease, he will turn away as from a sago pudding."
+ Nation 105:697 D 20 '17 440w

"Mr Cranch was one of the most interesting Americans of the last generation."
Outlook 115:668 Ap 11 '17 30w

Pittsburgh 22:525 Je '17 90w

Pratt p47 O '17 30w

"His relations with New England transcendentalism and with Emerson form an entertaining chapter of the book."
+ R of Rs 55:667 Je '17 50w

"If the material gathered in this volume had been thoroughly sifted and digested into a book of half the size, two objects would have been probably attained: We should have had a sufficiently detailed life of the poet, and his life would be likely to interest more readers. As it is, the volume is formidable because of its size and because of the method of presentation of its subject matter."
+ Springfd Republican p8 Je 15 '17 1600w

CRANDALL, LEE SAUNDERS. Pets: their history and care. il *$2 (24c) Holt 636 17-13515

This book on pets and their care is divided into four sections; Mammals; Birds; Reptiles and batrachians; The aquarium. As this division will indicate, the term pet has been given a rather wide interpretation. The author says, "To give, in a single volume, full and efficient directions for the treatment of so many diverse creatures, means that the space devoted to each must be no greater than necessary. For this reason rare or particularly delicate members of the various groups have been excluded. . . . On the other hand, many of the birds, such as the pheasants, cranes and waterfowl, cannot be considered as pets in the sense that they may be fondled, but they are widely kept for ornamental purposes, and their proper treatment is a matter often not well known." (Preface) Theories of breeding are discussed in an appendix. There are many illustrations from photographs, a bibliography and index.

"It covers about the same number of animals as Comstock and is, therefore, fuller in treatment than Verrill. Has fifteen more illustrations than Comstock and a general bibliography at the end of the book instead of the references for each animal discussed in Comstock."
+ A L A Bki 14:44 N '17

Cleveland p111 S '17 30w

N Y Times 22:461 N 11 '17 70w

"As an introduction to the practical knowledge of pets, Mr Crandall's book will well serve. As assistant curator of birds in the New York zoological park he speaks with the weight of an authority behind him. . . . There are nearly 100 excellent illustrations."
+ Springfd Republican p19 My 27 '17 230w

CRANE, FRANK. Christmas and the year round. *$1 (2c) Lane 170.4 17-29490

"Christmas means the supreme fact about life, namely: that it is joyful," writes Dr Frank

Crane in the first of these essays. Others in an equally optimistic vein follow. The art of quietness, Life an adventure, The man who keeps his word, Democracy, The postponement of life, The delusion of safety, are some of the titles.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 9 '18 100w

"Dr Crane puts a great deal of common sense philosophy into his essays in a spirited, readable form and this newest product is packed with optimistic humanism and wisdom."
+ Ind 92:604 D 29 '17 130w

"He is always brisk, and the ideal of life to which he calls his readers is always democratic, independent, contented, and sturdy."
+ N Y Times 22:564 D 16 '17 370w

CRANE, FRANK. Looking glass. *$1 (2c) Lane 170.4 17-13215

A book of short essays on such subjects as: The secrecy of goodness; The art of being cheerful; The higher probabilities; Keeping young; Amusements; The fear of deciding; The new teacher; The theatre and morals; The immorality of fear; A consumer's views on salesmanship; Democracy and organization, etc.

+ A L A Bki 13:423 J1 '17

"Dr Crane's devoted admirers will receive with joy a new contribution to his list of books. Like his other offerings, this volume is crammed with spicy essays in tabloid form."
+ Boston Transcript p7 Je 2 '17 190w

"Brisk, wholesome, direct, this spicily served advice is all the better for not taking itself too seriously."
+ Ind 90:517 Je 16 '17 40w

"His short essays express, in terse phrase, the brisk American optimism. It is not mawkish or spinless; on the contrary, it is vigorously upstanding. But it is determined to see 'good in everything.' But we cannot all agree in finding cause for happiness in the 'number of things' of which the world is full today. And there is something more than irritation—there is something ghastly—in Dr Crane's exuberant cry of all-inclusive gladness: 'Thank God for now!'"
+ N Y Times 22:278 J1 29 '17 360w

CRANE, UTLEY EDWIN. Business law for business men. *$3.50 Winston 347 17-1500

A work on business law, "covering all the states and territories in the Union, with abstracts of commercial law in every state and territory and legal forms for many transactions." (Title-page) The author, a judge of the municipal court of Philadelphia, says, "Recognizing that the average business man has neither the opportunity nor inclination to pursue a systematic study of business law, this work has been specially prepared to meet the requirements of the busy man of affairs. Omission of any citation of authority and all legal technicalities has been for the purpose of rendering the work interesting as well as instructive." Contents: Contracts; Partnerships; Corporations; Negotiable instruments; Real estate and conveying; Bankruptcy; Insurance; Common carriers; Patents; Trade-marks; Copyrights; Sales; Business crimes; Domestic relations; Building and loan associations; Architects and builders; Money; Executors and administrators; Constitutional law; Banks and banking.

"It is a practical book for practical business. It will also be of 'handy reference' value to lawyers. It is easy to read and well arranged, so that the layman will have no difficulty in finding the information which he desires."
+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 18 '17 380w

"One of the commendable features of the work is its national application. . . . As an exposition of the legal principles involved in ordinary mercantile transactions, the work can be commended as sufficiently simple and untechnical to meet the requirements of the busy man of affairs."
+ Springfd Republican p17 Ap 29 '17 130w

CRANMER-BYNG, LAUNCELOT ALFRED, t.
Feast of lanterns; rendered with an introd.
*80c Dutton 895 (Eng ed 17-6225)

"In 'The wisdom of the East series,' edited by L. Cranmer-Byng, and Dr S. A. Kapadia, there is now published a treasure for students of poetry, 'A feast of lanterns,' translations from the work of twenty Chinese poets. The introduction explains the tenets of Chinese poetic art, their reverence and love for flowers, symbolism in poetry, and the lore of the dragon, one of the four spiritually endowed creatures of China. There are also interesting comments on the epochs of Chinese poetry, and on the great storehouse of verse that remains untranslated into western tongues."—R of Rs

A L A Bkl 14:14 O '17

+ Ind 91:78 JI 14 '17 60w

"The reader of these graceful relics of the thought of an alien race in by-gone centuries echoes the sentiment of Sir John Davis, quoted on the title-page of this volume. 'As our gardens have already been indebted to China for a few choice flowers, who knows but our poetry may some day be under a similar obligation?'"

+ Lit D 54:1862 Je 16 '17 500w

+ N Y Times 22:290 Ag 5 '17 430w

+ R of Rs 56:105 JI '17 90w

CRAVATH, PAUL DRENNAN. Great Britain's part. *$1 (8c) Appleton 940.91 17-7951

These "observations of an American visitor to the British army in France at the beginning of the third year of the war," were written first for the New York Times. They are republished in the hope that they may "aid a few Americans to a better appreciation of the greatness of England's achievements in the European war." The author says, "The British people and press have so liberally exercised the Englishman's inalienable right to abuse the government that we in America often hear more of England's mistakes than of her achievements. As a result, there is, I find, real misapprehension among Americans as to England's part in the war."

+ Cleveland p82 Je '17 50w

+ Dial 63:212 S 13 '17 170w

"Hardly more than a magazine article, Paul D. Cravath's little book makes clear methods of organization and the way work is done behind the British lines."

+ Ind 90:297 My 12 '17 30w

"A thin book of not two hours' reading, which is far too sketchy and meagre to justify a defiance of the high cost of paper by adding another pebble to the mountain of war-books. But one conviction strongly and instinctively held by Mr Cravath catches our interest. The conviction is that England will win, that nothing can stop the new army. Since we have ourselves entered the war, we have been glad of any reassurance, however uncritical or dogmatic. Mr Cravath's conviction is both, yet he has the power to convey his conviction to his readers."

New Repub 10:330 Ap 14 '17 230w

Pittsburgh 22:528 Je '17 40w

"His account of the businesslike methods by which a modern battle is fought makes good reading."

+ R of Rs 55:445 Ap '17 100w

"Largely a reiteration of what we already know. But it makes an interesting reiteration because it is the result of personal, inexpert observation."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 Ap 27 '17 170w

CREAGER, WILLIAM PITCHER. Engineering for masonry dams. il $2.50 Wiley 627 17-17759

"A concise handbook treating first of dams in general, choice of location, preliminary and final investigations, choice of type, and forces acting on dams with tables and equations for computing them; second, of particular types with examples of each and the calculations for their construction. The three final chapters are concerned with the preparation and protection of the foundation, flood flows, details and accessories."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

"The 229 pages of the volume are full of valuable information, made easy of access by the methodical arrangement of the material. The assumptions and recommendations are consistent with good conservative practice. . . . If the reader feels any regret it is because he does not find treated one of the difficult problems of engineering of masonry dams—outlet control." F. Teichman

+ — Engin News-Rec 79:562 S 20 '17 580w

N Y P L New Tech Bks p6 JI '17 60w

CREELMAN, HARLAN. Introduction to the Old Testament; with a foreword by Frank K. Sanders. *$2.75 Macmillan 221 17-12733

"After about thirty pages of discussion of questions of general introduction the outline of biblical material is given chronologically, and divided into ten periods. The materials of four of these periods are found in the Hexateuch; and they are the primitive, the patriarchal, the exodus and the conquest of western Palestine periods. Then follow successively the periods of the judges, of the united kingdom, of the divided kingdom, of the exile, of Persian rule and of Grecian rule. All of this mass of material is analyzed, dated and described. Each section, paragraph, verse and part of a verse is carefully marked, so that the student of the English Bible may test for himself the data upon which the modern view of the Old Testament rests."—Boston Transcript

"Its general point of view, of course, is that of the historical school, and the author's conclusions, in so far as they are indicated, are of the cautious type represented by such scholars as Driver and the contributors to Hastings' 'Dictionary of the Bible.' But the critical literature so abundantly cited, if used by the inquiring reader, will bring him into touch with every shade of opinion." J. M. P. Smith

+ Am J Theol 21:608 O '17 430w

"There are three indexes which will prove very helpful to the student. For those who wish to study the Old Testament as an original source this is the best volume that has been published in English."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 16 '17 470w

CREEVEY, CAROLINE ALATHEA (STICKNEY) (MRS JOHN KENNEDY CREEVEY). Daughter of the Puritans. il *$1.50 (2c) Putnam 17-6643

The author of "Recreations in botany," "Harper's guide to wild flowers," and other books, writes here of her girlhood. The years covered are those from her childhood up to her marriage in 1866 at the age of twenty-three. Of particular interest is her account of the religious training of New England children in her day and of its effect on the child mind. She herself, she says, lived two lives "one natural and childlike, the other terrified and unnatural."

+ A L A Bkl 13:351 My '17

"The childish attitude towards religion and God as it existed more than a half century ago could not be better epitomized." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 20 '17 1600w

"Mrs Creevey is not only a botanist and a writer on botany, with several handy and useful books to her credit on our native flora and the pleasures of its study, but also an agreeable chronicler of events in the animate world of human beings. . . . Her account of her education and her school-teaching is good reading—truthful and richly human, with a spice of humor."

+ Dial 62:316 Ap 5 '17 230w

+ Ind 90:473 Je 9 '17 40w

"All except the very young will find in this autobiography their own experiences mirrored."

+ Lit D 54:1088 Ap 14 '17 180w

CREEVEY, CAROLINE ALATHEA—Continued

"There are three chapters on Wheaton seminary (now college) at Norton, Mass."

R of Rs 55:667 Je '17 30w

CREHORE, ALBERT CUSHING. Mystery of matter and energy. il *$1 (6c) Van Nostrand 530.1 17-28773

In the first chapter of this little book the author says, "One of the purposes of the following lines will be fully accomplished if we succeed in presenting to those who have given little thought to this subject some conception of what is implied by the words 'the problem of the structure of matter.'" Among scientists this problem has gradually increased in importance to such an extent that it may now be said to be the problem of problems." Discoveries of recent years have advanced the problem to a point where its solution becomes a possibility. "The improbability of its solution in the eyes of a former generation has, it may be said, been changed into a probability in the eyes of the present generation." The problem is stated, recent steps in its development traced, and the field for future effort outlined.

"A fascinating little volume. . . . The book is written without algebra, but it contains some beautiful geometrical drawings and atomic-model pictures. The volume is to be recommended to all educated persons possessing some general knowledge of physics who are interested in the most recent investigations within the microcosmic world."

+ Elec World 71:50 Ja 5 '18 340w

CREIGHTON, LOUISE (VON GLEHN) (MRS
MANDELL CREIGHTON). Life and letters of Thomas Hodgkin. il *$4.50 Longmans

Thomas Hodgkin, an English banker, historian and antiquary who died in 1913, is allowed to tell his life story largely in his own words, Mrs Creighton having drawn on his extensive correspondence and his private journals and diaries. She says, "My object has been to give a portrait of a man, not an account of the various causes in which he was interested, nor even, in the first place, of the work which he actually achieved." Thomas Hodgkin was a Quaker and the record of his association with the Society of Friends is given in the words of fellow members of that faith. A bibliography, giving a list of all Dr Hodgkin's writings is included in the appendix. Mrs Creighton is also author of the "Life and letters of Mandell Creighton."

"The record of a life such as Dr Hodgkin's belongs among the notable biographies of men of thought and action." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 9 '18 1350w

"The portrait she presents is serene but a trifle monotonous. There are too many birth-day letters, written in a tone of affectionate retrospect, and a superabundance of religious discussions with Sir Edward Fry and other intimates."

+ Sat R 121:485 D 15 '17 350w

+ Spec 119:679 D 8 '17 1800w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p557 N 15 '17 50w

"It is natural that to Mrs Creighton, who so admirably revealed the many-sided powers of the bishop [Bishop Creighton] who 'tried to write true history,' should be given the opportunity of preserving for posterity the lovable character of his friend. In this she has succeeded. . . . There is no criticism, no endeavour to analyse his purpose, or assign him rank among the great historians."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p565 N 22 '17 1400w

CRIME, The, by a German; tr. by Alexander Gray. 2v v I *$2.50 (1½c) Doran 940.91 17-26980

A book called forth by the criticisms of the author's earlier book "J'accuse," with answers to the objections of German critics, among them

Dr Karl Helfferich, Dr Theodor Schiemann, Paul Rohrbach, and Houston Stewart Chamberlain. The author's chief aim has been to bring new evidence to bear on the thesis of the first book.

"A far better appreciation of the present work is possible to those who have studied 'J'accuse' than to readers imperfectly acquainted with its subject-matter. 'The crime' will be widely read, and will deepen the impression made by the author's previous book."

+ Ath p684 D '17 210w

"Had his first chapter been written without epithets, declamation, and self-laudation, the whole work would have gained in dignity and force. It is unnecessary explicitly to damn opponents whom your sober arguments render so ridiculous as this author renders the Teutonic apologists. Apart from this blemish the book is unanswerable."

+ Lit D 56:32 Ja 26 '18 580w

"The author lays no claim to be in possession of any material which is not universally accessible, but in very patient and thoroughly German fashion he has made the most of what is available. It must be admitted that his method becomes at times wearisome. Those chapters which are freshest and will be most read deal with the relations between Lord Grey of Faldoon and Count Lichnowsky, the German ambassador in London, before the actual outbreak of war, and discuss the German claim that Russia, by being in so great a hurry to mobilize, was really the European 'incendiary.'"

+ Spec 119:sup550 N 17 '17 220w

CROFT, TERRELL WILLIAMS. Electrical machinery; principles, operation and management. il *$2 McGraw 621.31 17-19176

"Avoiding the use of difficult mathematics, this well known author aims to explain to the 'average' man the theoretical principles and the essential operating facts relating to alternating-current and direct-current generators as well as to motors and similar machinery, with consideration of control apparatus. Design is not discussed. There are chapters on troubles, testing, and the determination of motor drive requirements. [There are] clear cut illustrations and practical examples with solutions."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

A L A Bkl 14:45 N '17

N Y P L New Tech Bks p7 Jl '17 70w

Pittsburgh 22:658 O '17 10w

+ Power 46:238 Ag 14 '17 500w

+ Quar List New Tech Bks O '17 70w

CROFT, TERRELL WILLIAMS. Wiring for light and power. il *$2 McGraw 621.31 17-11353

"The 'National electric code' which this book explains and illustrates is a set of rules prepared by the National board of fire underwriters for the purpose of insuring safe electrical installation. The aim of the author of the present book is to make plain just how the work should be performed to meet the requirements of the 'Code.' The 'Code' itself may be had gratis from the National board of fire underwriters, 76 William st., New York city."—Quar List New Tech Bks

"Valuable reference manual. Covers outside and theater lighting which Cook does not, is better illustrated and a little less technical."

+ A L A Bkl 14:115 Ja '18

"Exceptionally well illustrated and indexed."

+ Bul N Y Public Library 21:482 Jl '17 120w

"Valuable reference manual."

+ Cleveland p109 S '17 10w

N Y Br Lib News 4:105 Jl '17

"Mr Croft, who has several other excellent handbooks to his credit, has in this practical and clearly written work supplied the desirable explanations and elaborations."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p8 Ap '17 120w
Pittsburgh 22:517 Je '17
Pratt p21 O '17 30w
+ Quar List New Tech Bks Jl '17 90w

CRONAU, RUDOLF. German achievements in America. il $1 R. Cronau, 340 E. 198th st., N.Y. 325.7 16-16931

"Written as an answer to what the author terms 'unwarranted insinuations questioning the loyalty of the German-Americans toward the land of their adoption,' this book brings together brief records of German achievements in America, from the days of the Palatines to the present, and covers achievements in pioneer life, war, politics, industry and commerce, science and engineering, literature and the press, music and drama, philanthropy and women's work, including also a chapter on the National German-American alliance and its purposes, and The future mission of the German element in America."—Cleveland

Cleveland p159 D '16 90w
Pittsburgh 22:213 Mr '17
St Louis 14:386 N '16

CROSS, HÉLÈNE (FODOR) (MRS C: E: CROSS). Soldiers' spoken French. *60c Dutton 448 17-22899

This book is a "short-cut to the amount of French which it is necessary that our men who go to France should be able to speak." It has been "compiled from a real course of spoken lessons as given to New Zealand's soldiers." The author states: "The approximate pronunciation of each word will be found, as the sound would be spelt in English, in brackets beside it." The binding is said to be waterproof and the book will fit the pocket of a uniform.

+ A L A Bkl 14:9 O '17

"It was an oversight, however, on the part of the American publishers not to give the equivalent of the French money in American, as well as in English currency."

+ Cath World 105:847 S '17 120w

+ N Y Call p15 Ag 19 '17 60w

R of Rs 56:325 S '17 30w

St Louis 15:361 O '17 20w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p347 Jl 19 '17 30w

CROSWELL, JAMES GREENLEAF. Letters and writings. il *$2 (3c) Houghton

17-13972

James Greenleaf Crosswell became in 1887 head-master of the Brearley school for girls in New York city. His letters fill a little more than half of the present volume. "Many are written to relatives; some to literary and other friends; the majority, perhaps, to present and former pupils." (Nation) These are followed by about one hundred pages of the author's writings in prose and verse. Then come some seventy pages of "Recollections and appreciations" of Mr Crosswell. The book is illustrated with three portraits of the author, a picture of his summer home and a facsimile of a letter to a child.

"Evidently we have to do rather with a somewhat miscellaneous collection than with a book. Yet it contains enough interesting matter to give the reader no little insight into Mr Crosswell's character. Most interesting, naturally, to teachers are the letters exhibiting Crosswell's views on his own profession, as shown by allusions here and there in them—rarely by more elaborate or formal statement." E. D. Perry
+ Educ R 54:419 N '17 1450w

"Even to one who had never before heard of Mr Crosswell or of the Brearley school, the book would be sure to be interesting, because there is a man in it. . . . The more formal 'Writings'—a couple of addresses, a fable or two, and a few translations and poems—add little to the picture, but do nothing to injure it. In the letters especially, which fill rather more than half the volume, one meets a personality of genuine and most winning humility, of entire unselfishness and a kind of appealing wistfulness, yet not without subtlety; and this corjoined with a mind of extraordinary keenness, flexibility, and refinement. . . . It would be impossible to imagine better letters to young girls than many of these."

+ Nation 105:228 Ag 30 '17 550w
Pittsburgh 22:743 N '17 70w

CROW, MRS MARTHA (FOOTE), comp. Christ in the poetry of today: an anthology from American poets. $1 Woman's press 811.08 17-21868

The compiler of this volume, aroused by Dr Josiah Strong's allusion to "the return to Christ that is now taking place," decided to try out the truth of his statement in modern poetry. In fifty volumes of poetry of about 1890, she found few or no poems about Jesus; in 1895, a few; in 1900, many more; while in 1910, times had distinctly changed. In her introduction the compiler says: "Selecting, then, from the superabundant wealth of poetical material on this theme, written by the poets of the United States of America, since about 1900, and arranging them in the order of the events of his life, we have here a sort of new biography of Jesus, each chapter of which consists of a poem written by a different author, and the whole forming the poetic reaction of our time to the thought of Jesus. . . . Jew and Gentile, Protestant, Roman Catholic, Neo-Pagan, Socialist, Emersonian—all sorts and conditions of lovers and admirers of Jesus are represented in this collection."

"A most useful book for all having to do with programs for church, schools and societies."

+ Ind 91:477 S 22 '17 70w

CROWELL, BERTHA. Wings of the cardinal. *$1.35 (1½c) Doran 17-25293

Ferol Rankin, a beautiful red-haired, seventeen year old Texas country girl, to get money for her mother, became the mistress of Berry Ward, a rich New Yorker, with tuberculosis, who was seeking a divorce from a cheap actress whom he had married when he was drunk. Ward promised to marry Ferol when he got his divorce, and kept his word. After spending some time in Kansas City, in California and in New York, the Wards settled in San Vincente, New Mexico. Here Ward had an affair with Julia Brace, a married woman, though he was still in love with his wife. Meanwhile James Sanger, a sculptor, fell in love with Ferol and tried to make her go away with him, but although she loved Sanger, she decided that she couldn't "be a quitter" and elected to stay with her husband. Ward, however, divined the state of the case, told Sanger that he would "play to lose" and that Ferol would be free in six months. He stayed alone in a hunting camp and died of hemorrhage. The "Texas Cardinal" then cabled Sanger, who was in Algiers, that he might return in a few months.

"The novel reads very like a first book, but though it is deficient in artistry and in interest, it has some clever bits, usually descriptions of places and environments. Especially good is the sketch of San Vincente and its health colony, outwardly so light-hearted and careless, really engaged in a plucky fight against the one real enemy, tuberculosis."

N Y Times 22:326 S 2 '17 300w

CROY, MAE SAVELL. 1000 hints on flowers and birds. *$1.50 Putnam 716 17-17297

Uniform with "1000 hints on vegetable gardening." Treats of The art of growing flowers, Essentials in gardening, Special features of the garden, The lawn, Shrubby and trees, Insects and sprays, Color scheme, List of common and botanical names of flowers mentioned in the text, List of flowers arranged according to the blossoming period, List of perennials, also annuals, arranged according to colors, Flowers for cutting, Flowers requiring little sunlight, Flowers that thrive in damp places, Flowers for the old-fashioned garden, and a List of evergreen shrubs and trees. The last thirty pages are concerned with "A plea for the birds."

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

CROY, MAE SAVELL—Continued

"The indexing of the helpful information is scholarly and invaluable."

+ Lit D 56:40 Ja 12 '18 130w

"An almost dishonestly misleading title. The impression of coordination that is conveyed is belied when it turns out that the birds receive only thirty-two pages in a volume of 359 pages, or one chapter among twenty-one. This chapter, it should also be said, is of no value to the field student, concerning, as it does, only such matters as bird houses and food. The justification of the book (it does justify itself) is in the highly condensed information on gardening and full index that renders this information quickly accessible. The author's information, though generally correct and serviceable, is more than once careless."

+ — Nation 105:610 N 29 '17 130w

"An indispensable guide for the amateur gardener and home-builder, equally suited to the needs of those who have a large acreage at their disposal and for the person with the modest backyard or the narrow window-box."

+ R of Rs 56:221 Ag '17 70w

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 25 '17 60w

CROY, MAE SAVELL. 1000 hints on vegetable gardening. *$1.50 (3c) Putnam 635 17-18609

Uniform with "1000 shorter ways around the house," and "1000 things a mother should know." There is a chapter whose tabulation is alphabetical which groups under each vegetable the hints for the planting, care, cooking and preservation of that vegetable. There are chapters on: Soil and fertilization; The hotbed and cold-frame; Seed; Planting; Thinning and transplanting; Cultivation; Watering; Weeds; Insects and sprays; Fruit; Small fruits; Nuts; Trees; Miscellaneous hints; List of agricultural experiment stations; Plan for a family garden; Table denoting how much space should be devoted to various vegetables; Convenient lists for gardeners; Index.

CROY, MAE SAVELL. 1000 things a mother should know. *$1.50 (3c) Putnam 649

17-13344

The suggestions the author has brought together have reference "to tiny babies and growing children; their clothes, their care, their food, their training, and their entertainment." As in her earlier book, "1000 shorter ways around the house," she has arranged a large amount of miscellaneous material under convenient subject headings. Contents: Pregnancy; Clothing; The nursery; Health rules and medical care; Hygiene and sick-room suggestions; Food; Habits and training; Amusements; Miscellaneous.

Cleveland p110 S '17 30w

"A large amount of miscellaneous information conveniently arranged."

+ Pratt p25 O '17 20w

CRUMP, IRVING. Boys' book of policemen. ll *$1.35 (2½c) Dodd 352 17-13226

A companion volume to "The boys' book of firemen," by the same author. It will give a new idea of the policeman's duties and of the wide variety of the opportunities offered by the calling. Contents: The call of adventure; "Pounding the pavement" with the patrolman; The six-foot guards of traffic; In action with the mounted men; Mile-a-minute motor patrol; The four-footed police of the dog patrol; The pirate-fighting marine division; The sleuths of the secret service; The riot call and other police signals; Police preparedness; Policemen in the making; Your big brother—the cop.

+ A L A BKl 13:453 JI '17

"Besides all the practical information, stories are told of many adventures and thrilling incidents."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 27 '17 90w

+ Cleveland p127 N '17 30w

+ Pratt p9 O '17 20w

CUBBERLEY, ELLWOOD PATTERSON, and others. School organization and administration. (Educational survey ser.) ll $1.50 World bk. co. 371 16-17381

The report of a school survey conducted by Dr Cubberley in Salt Lake City in 1915. "The survey concerned itself especially with the form or organization and administration under which the schools were operated, the system of supervisory control by means of which the superintendent of schools worked, the progress in the fundamental subjects being made by the children in the schools, and the problem of adequate finance. . . . The report contained, in addition, a number of features which were quite distinctive. . . . Among these should be mentioned the detailed explanation of the tests made and the results obtained, the study of the instruction of retarded pupils, the work in health control, the school building and site problem, and the peculiar financial problem, presented by this city." (Preface) The first edition published by the Board of education of Salt Lake City was early exhausted and this second edition is now printed with some revisions and additions by the author.

"A great mass of educational literature is accumulating, some of it of dubious value, which may or may not be useful hereafter as material or sources for students in educational administration and practise. A painstaking example of a work of this type is 'School organization and administration.'"

Educ R 53:199 F '17 70w

"Will be useful to any school officer or parent who wishes to work out an intelligent view of his own school situation."

+ Ind 89:196 Ja 29 '17 70w

Reviewed by B. C. Gruenberg
 N Y Call p12 F 4 '17 430w

CUMBERLAND, WILLIAM WILSON. Cooperative marketing. *$1.50 Princeton univ. press 334 17-23662

"In 'Cooperative marketing: its advantages as exemplified in the California fruit growers exchange' Prof. W. W. Cumberland has written the history of the exchange since its beginnings in the early nineties, outlined its methods of work, summarized its benefits, and said a few words of its pertinence to cooperative marketing in other fields. . . . It consists, essentially, of 8,000 orchardists united into 117 local packing exchanges, each handling fruit on a cost basis; of 17 district selling exchanges, or clearing-houses; and of the central exchange, which, under president and directors, provides market facilities, issues daily bulletins of market information, advertises, owns the 'Sunkist' trademark, handles litigation, and maintains an organized selling force of 75 offices and 200 salesmen in the principal European, Canadian, and American markets."—Nation

"Comprehensive, suggestive, candid and rational. This book should give a great stimulus to the one phase of cooperation."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 8 '17 150w

"Professor Cumberland tells his story lucidly and comprehensively."

+ Nation 105:571 N 22 '17 470w

CUNNINGHAM, WILLIAM. Progress of capitalism in England. *30c (3c) Putnam 330 9 (Eng ed 17-15935)

This book contains the substance of lectures delivered in the London school of economics and political science in 1915, and is "published in the hope that it may prove a useful appendix to the author's 'Growth of English industry and commerce.'" (Preface) The book is divided into three sections: Economic history and empirical economic science; The development of the body economic in England; Lessons from experience. "One-third of it is devoted to the general philosophy of the subject. . . . The development of industrial capitalism in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries is touched upon only by a brief discussion of 'laissez-faire.' A contribution to the economic problems of the future is offered in the final chapter on 'Lessons from experience.'" (Eng Hist R)

"Much material of great interest to students of economic history is presented in brief compass, particularly in the second part of the book which deals with 'The progress of capitalism in mediæval cities.'" + Am Pol Sci R 11:597 Ag '17 80w

"The many students of Archdeacon Cunningham's 'Growth of English industry and commerce' will not find anything new in his lectures on 'The progress of capitalism in England' but those who desire a very brief summary of his views on this aspect of economic history will find this little book helpful." G. U.

+ Eng Hist R 32:316 Ag '17 170w

"Besides an instructive summary of our economic development, this little book contains an earnest plea for the study of economic history." + Spec 118:341 Mr 17 '17 80w

CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM, ROBERT BONTINE. Brought forward; Charity; Faith; Hope; Progress; Success. ea $*1.35 Stokes (Eng ed 17-11795)

"Of the six volumes which are now being brought out in a uniform edition in this country, one, 'Brought forward,' is published for the first time. The other books, although they have been appearing one by one in England since the early years of the century, have never before been issued here. The present edition amounts, therefore, to an introduction, for American readers, to a large part of a well-known British writer's work. Of the fifteen stories in the new volume, three are Scotch, three English, one a story of the Arabs, one a story of Spain; the others take the reader to scenes past and present in Latin America. . . . The name of the volume 'Charity' is taken from the initial story of the book, but nearly all the tales have charity, sometimes in an odd form, as motif. . . . 'Faith' and 'Hope' form the keynotes of the volumes of those titles, though sometimes faith and hope show themselves, and play their parts in men's and women's lives, in strange and sad ways. . . . 'Progress,' a long story in the book of that name, is a horrible record of the putting down of a rebellion in Mexico. . . . His sympathies are always with the simple people, the oppressed, the misunderstood."—N Y Times

"Keen as is the sympathy that marks his pictures of simple folk in England and Scotland, his stories of Latin America are really the most interesting in the book, with a few brief sketches of Spaniards and Moors following close behind. Yet the whole book is a series of delightful portraits, both of men and of horses. The earlier volumes show the same understanding that marks 'Brought forward.'" + N Y Times 22:393 O 14 '17 1000w

"He has irony, pity, and wit. He is the master of the telling phrase, and can produce a convincing picture with the utmost economy of words. Our delight in this book is tempered only by the fear that it is to be, according to rumour, Mr Cunningham Graham's last." + Sat R 122:417 O 28 '16 470w (Review of "Brought forward")

"We need only say that they are as attractive as ever—especially 'El tango Argentino'—and commend them to his many faithful readers, who will be grieved to learn from the preface that the author will write no more." + Spec 117:sup609 N 18 '16 70w (Review of "Brought forward")

The Times [London] Lit Sup p511 O 26 '16 1200w (Review of "Brought forward")

CURLE, RICHARD. Echo of voices. $*1.50 (2c) Knopf 17-13448

Richard Curle is author of a critical study of Joseph Conrad, and Conrad has stood sponsor for this book of short stories. "I think your taking him up is a good move," he wrote to the publisher. "He has brains; he has also a writer's temperament." The short stories that compose the book are serious studies of life and character. Most of them have a commonplace London setting. One, His kingdom, is a story of South Africa; another, Nineteen, of the South seas. The other titles are: The two dependants; Midnight; The would-be friends; General service; Monsieur Clavel; Deep down.

"The book is, it is easily apparent, not strikingly of the 'wholesome' breed. It is not likely to please those who lack a relish for the eccentric and somewhat bitter. But the tales, for all their lack of the conventionalities of structure and content, have a certain power and self-sufficiency." F. I.

Boston Transcript p6 Je 23 '17 550w

"There is perhaps more than a suggestion of Mr Conrad's own method, and more than a trace of the influence of the great Russians, especially Dostoevsky. But what then? These are no bad models for a young writer with a temperament, and Mr Curle has had the strength to put his individual stamp on all but one of these tales."

+ Dial 63:353 O 11 '17 530w

CURRAN, WILLIAM TEES, and CALKINS, HAROLD A. In Canada's wonderful northland. il $*2.50 (2c) Putnam 917.1 17-5856

A book devoted to the northern part of the province of Quebec, a country now being opened to settlement by the construction of a railroad to Hudson bay. It is an account of eight months of travel by canoe, motorboat and dog-team. The authors were continuing studies made earlier by Mr Curran and summed up in "Glimpses of northern Canada, a land of hidden treasure," a work issued by the Canadian government. The book is well illustrated and supplied with maps.

"An unassuming and interestingly written record of a trip taken by the authors in 1912."

+ A L A Bkl 13:349 My '17

"The book prefigures, in all likelihood, a remarkable expansion northward in the near future."

+ Dial 62:531 Je 14 '17 270w

+ Nation 105:323 S 20 '17 350w

"From the intimate manner in which the narrative is set forth, the reader seems to live in the region through which he passes. The sixty illustrations and maps are illuminating and well chosen."

+ N Y Times 22:196 My 20 '17 170w

"It is not as well written as it might have been; the illustrations are exceptionally good and, on the whole, the book is one of the best volumes of Canadian travel in some time."

+ Ontario Library Review 1:112 My '17 50w

R of Rs 55:555 My '17 50w

+ Spec 119:sup630 D 1 '17 80w

"Those who wish a true and vivid picture of the vast region known as northern Canada cannot do better than read 'In Canada's wonderful northland.'" + Springf'd Republican p8 My 29 '17 270w

"This being a book for the general reader, Mr Curran does not give details about his technical work. It contains an appendix giving new and valuable information about the harbours discovered."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p398 Ag 23 '17 600w

"Covers some of the ground of Leith's 'Summer and winter on Hudson bay.'" + Wis Lib Bul 13:183 Je '17 80w

CURRIE, BARTON WOOD. Tractor and its influence upon the agricultural implement industry. il $*1 (2c) Curtis pub. co., Independence square, Philadelphia 631 16-15374

A series of papers on the development and use of farm implements, with particular reference to the tractor, reprinted from the Country Gentleman. Part 1 consists of a miscellaneous collection in which the author deplors the "senseless diversification" of farm machinery and argues for standardization. Part 2 is devoted to the tractor and its place in agriculture.

R of Rs 54:459 O '16 50w

CURRIE, JOHN ALLISTER. Red watch; with the first Canadian division in Flanders. il *$1.50 Dutton 940.91 (Eng ed A17-37e)

"Colonel Currie's book deals concretely with but one regiment of the many that have gone out from Canada. But in its careful and representative detail it offers us much information about the part played in the war by Canada as a whole." (N Y Times) "The 'Red watch' is the term applied to the 48th Highlanders. After the battle of Langemarck only 212 out of the 1034 members of this regiment responded to the muster call." (R of Rs)

+ A L A Bkl 13:394 Je '17
Cleveland p102 S '17 50w

"The men under his command were certainly a band of heroes, and the story of their heroism stirs the blood. The pictorial feature is prominent." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 62:306 Ap 5 '17 130w

"Colonel Currie is particularly emphatic in praising the temperance and careful living of his men, and denying reports that British, French, or Canadian soldiers are given rum or drugs 'to keep up their courage.' . . . There is much that is thrilling in this clean-cut soldier's chronicle, much that is inspiring and fine. It is a soldier's record, through and through."

+ N Y Times 22:57 F 18 '17 330w
R of Rs 55:445 Ap '17 40w

CURTIN, DANIEL THOMAS. Land of deepening shadow; Germany-at-war. il *$1.50 (2c) Doran 940.91 17-13672

The author is a young American war correspondent who went to Germany late in 1915. His purpose in the book is to give a general picture of conditions in that country under the stress of war. In the early chapters he aims to show how all Germans were "made to think as one man," in other words, "how the German government creates unity." It is done by utilizing all the forces that mold public opinion, schools, pulpit, theatre, and press. In the later chapters he describes "the forces tending to disintegrate that wonderful unity." Among the chapters are: A Land of substitutes; The gagging of Liebknecht; Spies and semi-spies; The iron hand in Alsace-Lorraine; The war slaves of Essen; Germany's human resources; In the deepening shadow.

"Evidently authentic, it gives many informing and probably unique experiences."

+ A L A Bkl 13:443 Jl '17

"Some books dealing with the internal condition of Germany convey an impression that the colours are too liberally spread upon the palette. The supply of horrifying and sensational facts occasionally forces on the reader the suspicion that the authors have kept the probable demand rather too prominently in view. Mr. Curtin's book is free from that sort of thing."

+ Ath p258 My '17 280w
Ath p346 Jl '17 320w

"Mr Curtin is one of Lord Northcliffe's young men; and he has his patron's faculty of making our flesh creep with quite exceptional hideousness. The book he has written will tell any reader what Mr Curtin says he saw inside the German empire; but I think that he will conclude that his author has still to learn the value of historic and psychological light and shade." H. J. Laski

Dial 63:15 Je 28 '17 60w
Ind 90:470 Je 9 '17 280w

Lit D 55:42 O 13 '17 300w

"A frank, well-informed, and brightly written, though egotistical, book by a Germanophile Irish newspaper reporter for the Northcliffe press."

+ Nation 105:204 Ag 23 '17 500w

"Under the disguise of a seemingly frank and dispassionate analysis of conditions, the facts are carefully selected and presented with true journalistic cunning in contrast and climax. One hesitates to term this technique dishonest even in a minor sense, for the chances are that it results more from an unconscious bias than from any deliberate attempt to deceive. . . . The whole force of Mr Curtin's book comes from making vivid the truth of the chancellor's utterance in the Reichstag when he said, apropos of the complete blockade of Great Britain by submarines, 'We are staking all on this throw.'"

+ — New Repub 12:54 Ag 11 '17 650w

"It is a depressing or inspiring picture, just as the inclinations of the reader are 'pro-Ally' or 'pro-German.' But it is well written, and seems to be the work of a trained observer, even if his impartiality be questioned." J. W.

+ — N Y Call p14 S 16 '17 750w

"Since thorough knowledge of an enemy is the first essential of efficient warfare, the intimate, first-hand view which he offers ought to have wide reading."

+ N Y Times 22:215 Je 3 '17 800w

"The reader will find the information collected and classified; he will find the facts reported in an impartial and historical spirit; and he will find the reports characterized by a degree of reality and authority not always, perhaps not often, to be found in newspaper correspondence. The author reports, not what he was given every facility to see, but what was often carefully hidden from him."

+ Outlook 117:102 S 19 '17 340w
Pratt p39 O '17 10w

"Of special interest are his chapters on educational and publicity methods employed by the government."

+ R of Rs 55:668 Je '17 120w

"It gives the most complete account at present procurable of the internal conditions of [Germany]. . . . The fact that the author's country was not involved in the conflict enabled him not only to see more than an Englishman would have been allowed to see, but also to take a more objective view of the phenomena which he observed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p134 Mr 22 '17 900w

CURTIS, LIONEL. ed. Commonwealth of nations. pt 1 *$2.50 (1c) Macmillan 325.3 (17-1660)

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"The lay-reader, despite the clearness of style, the auxiliary plans, and the handsome appearance of the book will hardly be attracted to the seven hundred pages of solid matter. Nor will the scholar be apt to find it of great use. It is essentially an edition of reports, lengthy but marked by serious omissions, made by industrious and intelligent laymen, and drawn from familiar secondary material. The purpose of the work is warmly to be commended but its value to historical scholars is at least questionable." C. Seymour

Am Hist R 22:644 Ap '17 700w

"There is great ability in his statement, and a very wide knowledge is implied in his treatment of imperial history. Given the limitations he has himself imposed, the development of the present situation is truly rendered; and the volume is one which no intelligent British citizen can afford to neglect. . . . The fundamental fault of Mr Curtis is provincialism. . . . His geography would have to be revised for an American edition of his book; and perhaps even his history is tainted with the same provincialism of outlook. . . . The sum of our criticism is this: there is ability in the marshalling of facts and the urging of a political programme, but the moral attitude implied is ingeniously primitive." C. D. Burns

+ — Hibbert J 15:344 Ja '17 1650w

"The real significance of the present study is that it is to be regarded as a counterblast to such writers as Jebb and others who believe in Britannic alliance and conceive the future of Britain to be an alliance between the mother-country and the self-governing dominions. . . . Indeed, the completeness with which it collates such material and the convenient form in which it presents it make the volume a handy treatise on the failure of contract or treaty to insure permanency of political relationships. At this time, too, the subject is of wider interest than its immediate problem; the volume might be read as a sufficient antidote to a good bit of the literature put forth by the League to enforce peace. On the other hand, the study suffers from a failure to look at the history and evolution of the self-governing dominions. The American colonies, Ireland, Scotland, and the United States are treated, but the history of Canada and Australia is almost completely ignored. In the background of these ideas is Treitschke rather than T. H. Green. They go with a temper rather out of style at present—too little in sympathy with the common people." D. A. MacGibbon

J Pol Econ 25:512 My '17 1150w

"The chapters on the American revolution (from the British point of view) and the relations between England and Ireland are specially interesting. The book is weighty, and may be recommended to students of history and imperial politics. It is liberally supplied with elaborate maps and diagrams."
+ Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 1 '17 170w

CUSHMAN, ROBERT EUGENE. Excess condemnation. *$2 (2½c) Appleton 336.1
17-21830

Mr Cushman, who is instructor in political science in the University of Illinois, treats his subject from the standpoint of the American city, the experience of European cities being introduced merely for illustrative and comparative purposes. He defines excess condemnation as, "the policy, on the part of the state or city, of taking by right of eminent domain more property than is actually necessary for the creation of a public improvement, and of subsequently selling or leasing this surplus." (Engin News-Rec) He discusses the three main objects of excess condemnation: "(1) to solve the vexing problems of remnants of land; (2) for the protection of improvements against the prejudicial use of adjacent land; (3) to take for the benefit of the city the increase in values of land adjacent to public improvements, due to the improvements themselves, and thus pay or help pay for the cost of the improvements. . . . He then takes up 'gains and risks' administration, and the constitutionality of excess condemnation. A few bibliographical references and a list of cases cited are given." (Engin News-Rec) The editor of the National municipal league series, in which this is the third volume, states in his introduction that this is the first work in the English language on the subject.

"It presents ample data on the many perplexing phases of the subject and discusses in a judicial spirit the evidence on both sides of controverted questions. . . . The book deserves the careful attention of engineers and other city officials concerned in planning, financing and protecting municipal improvements, broad-minded real estate men and all who are interested in helping on the orderly and economical growth of municipal improvements."
+ Engin News-Rec 79:751 O 18 '17 500w

+ Nation 106:69 Ja 17 '18 210w

"With its historical and illustrative material and general citation of cases the book will prove helpful to all students of the subject. . . . The slow movements of our cities towards fundamental improvements is primarily because of the expense involved. The volume will by many be considered lacking in its handling of this." E. T. Hartman
+ Survey 39:202 N 24 '17 400w

CUTLER, FREDERICK MORSE. Old First Massachusetts coast artillery in war and peace. il *$1 (2c) Pilgrim press 353.9
17-12948

Lieutenant Cutler gives the history of the "Old First" from its origin in 1784 to January, 1917. There are many pictures showing the changes in uniform and in artillery with the passing generations. The first appendix gives the Genealogy of the coast artillery; the second a bibliography.

"No Massachusetts militia unit has enjoyed a more interesting history, or has been more actively engaged in the country's defence, than the Old First."

Boston Transcript p6 J1 18 '17 250w

"It will be news to many to find that in 1784 the general apathy toward military affairs in the United States was so marked that the total regular army was comprized within a single company, now Battery F of the field artillery."
Ind 91:31 J1 7 '17 100w

"Lieut. Cutler, who, by the way, is pastor of the Congregational church of Wenham, has told his story with a wealth of anecdote and in a style that will commend the volume beyond its particular clientele."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 27 '17 200w

CUTLER, ROBERT. Louisburg square. il *$1.50 (2c) Macmillan 17-10857

First of all this novel is a picture of Boston society. Old Boston names, Cabot, Quincy, and Copley, appear in its pages. Secondly, it is a story. Rosalind Copley, the heroine, is a beautiful and popular young girl who interests herself in charities, acting as a volunteer worker in a settlement house. She has entered into a tentative engagement with Ben Cary, a promising young lawyer, when she meets Eric Roland. Love between the two springs up quickly, but Rosalind feels that Ben has claims on her. Circumstances solve her problem.

"Mr Cutler knows whereof he writes. But the value of his novel does not rest on a knowledge of Beacon street and Commonwealth avenue. . . . 'Louisburg square' starts where many of its unsuccessful competitors stop. Its universal elements bring it to the goal they miss." R. W.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 11 '17 770w

"The author makes some attempt at characterization, but the result is not very convincing. The whole with its irritating self-immolation is somewhat too suggestive of an 'Elsie' book to be pleasant."

+ Dial 62:483 My 31 '17 120w

+ Ind 81:188 Ag 4 '17 70w

"All the old ingredients are here; there is a certain vigor about the telling, but why waste it on this trivial skeleton of an unreality?" C. W.

+ N Y Call p13 Ap 22 '17 120w

"A first novel and the product of an author so young that he was graduated from Harvard only last year, 'Louisburg square' shows a great deal of promise and a quite commendable present achievement."

+ N Y Times 22:125 Ap 8 '17 570w

+ Outlook 116:32 My 2 '17 50w

"There is quite enough in 'Louisburg square' of the quiet insight into and keen appreciation of that Boston culture which Mr Cutler understands well to make us hope for his early return from soldiering to writing—for him, evidently a field of promise."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 J1 29 '17 700w

D

DALE, ROBERT BURDETTE. Drawing for builders. (Wiley technical ser. for vocational and industrial schools) il *$1.50 Wiley 692 16-20746

"This book is intended to serve as a basis for a problem course in elementary architectural drawing, and to be especially useful to the practical builder and to the ambitious young man who wishes to become an architect's draftsman. . . . Its aim is not only to teach the student to make drawings, but to instruct him to read and use them. It is written for use in home-study instruction, either with or without assistance, and it is hoped that it may find a place in high schools, vocational schools, night schools and industrial classes." (Preface) Contents: Introduction; Drawing instruments and materials; How to make a drawing; Architectural

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

DALE, ROBERT BURDETTE—Continued
free-hand lettering; Straight-line projection; The problems. These problems take up about one-half of the book. The author is assistant professor in charge of vocational courses in engineering at Iowa state college.

"The same author's 'Arithmetic for carpenters and builders' is an excellent book for the same type of reader."
+ Quar Llst New Tech Bks Ap '17 50w

DALRYMPLE, LEONA. Kenny. il *$1.35 (2c)
Relly & B. 17-21645

This story is by the author of the $10,000 prize novel, "Diane of the green van." "Kennicott O'Neill is [the hero's] full name, and he is a famous painter and as richly endowed with temperament as he is entitled to be by his double birthright of Celt and artist. Nevertheless, every one calls him 'Kenny,' even to his 23-year-old son, Brian. . . . It all begins because Kenny, being more impecunious than usual, has taken Brian's shotgun out and sold it, and Brian, being much annoyed, has thrown his paint brush across the studio and smashed a statuette." (N Y Times) The two quarrel and Brian leaves his father "to tramp off into God's green world of spring." Kenny, homesick for the boy, follows him later, and they both find Joan, the girl in gold brocade, and her young brother, Don. Many things happen, and "finally Kenny realizes that the time has come for him to be 44 years old and for Brian, at last, to be 23 years young." (N Y Times)

"Entertaining, sentimental, and in parts delightfully humorous."
+ A L A Bkl 14:59 N '17

"If, not being too particular about facts, one likes occasionally a bit of Irish blarney and a bit of a romance with fairies lurking around the corner, then one should most certainly read about Kenny, artist, lover, and father to his son."
+ Boston Transcript p6 S 26 '17 200w
+ Cleveland p132 D '17 100w

"Leona Dalrymple has written an American E. Temple Thurston novel; and although the comparison between the two may not be wholly in her favor, it is not meant to be derogatory. For nothing is so difficult—as an American writer, so relentlessly difficult—as the expression of charm in personality. Mr Merwin has given us his interpretation of New York's bohemia; Miss Dalrymple now gives us hers, and, to tell the truth, it pleases us more."
+ Dial 63:251 S 27 '17 140w

"A slight, wind-woven, gay story, with a touch of pathos toward the end."
+ N Y Times 22:302 Ag 19 '17 600w

"Miss Dalrymple tells her very light story with zest, and there are pleasant bits of outdoor description. As a picture of Irish character it is highly conventional."
+ Spring'd Republican p15 D 23 '17 250w

D'ALTON, J. F. Horace and his age. *$2 (3c)
Longmans 874

A study in historical background intended to encourage consideration of the character of the age in which Horace lived and wrote. The writer says, "I have tried to view him in the light of the various movements of his time, to recapture, as it were, the atmosphere in which he moved, to estimate a portion at least of the influences under which many of his thoughts were bodied forth." Contents: Horace and Roman politics; The Augustan revival; Horace in religion and philosophy; The period of the Epistles; Horace and social problems; Horace and popular beliefs; Literary criticism.

"Prof. D'Alton, with a careful endeavour to steer clear of Procrusteanism, and from evidence mainly derived from the poet's writings, has in considerable measure succeeded in placing before us, not indeed a new Horace, but one whose mentality is perhaps a little easier to understand than was previously the case."
+ Ath p594 N '17 130w

"It is a particular pleasure to call attention to a genuinely distinguished contribution to the understanding of Horace."
+ Educ R 55:77 Ja '18 140w

"To a certain extent he is successful, for he has great knowledge and great love of his subject, he writes admirably, and throws light on many particular points; but the total effect is that he presents the reader rather with an excellent book of reference than with an effective portrait."
+ Spec 119:647 D 1 '17 1650w

"It displays industry, accuracy, and temperate judgment. It does not go wandering after paradoxes like that which ensnared so brilliant a scholar and so keen a critic as Ver-rall. And by its seriousness it is a good corrective to the superficial view of Horace as an elegant trifler, a preacher of pleasure, one whose ideals of life were low. The defect of these qualities . . . is that the book is rather useful than stimulating, and leaves no clear total impression."
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p484 O 11 '17 2000w

DALY, JOSEPH FRANCIS. Life of Augustin Daly. il *$4 (2½c) Macmillan 17-25827

The brother of Augustin Daly has written this intimate biography which is not only a full record of the life and work of America's greatest theatrical manager but is an important contribution to the history of the American stage. During his early years, Mr Daly was dramatic critic for several of the New York papers. In this field he developed taste and genius not only for theater management but for play writing. In 1859 he entered the theatrical business when he leased the Fifth Avenue theater for a term of two years and advertised to produce "whatever is novel, original, entertaining and unobjectionable," and to revive "whatever is rare and worthy in the legitimate drama." Mr Daly's sincere, unflagging devotion to the cause of establishing the theater on a successful basis of high excellence furnishes the theme of the larger part of the work which cannot fail to find a large audience among producers, managers, playwrights, actors and, as well, the general public.

"Augustin Daly did a great service for the American stage, a service made all the more important by the influence of his own sterling character and single-eyed purpose, and this account of it deserves to have a place among the interesting records of American achievements."
+ F. F. Kelly
+ Bookm 46:328 N '17 270w

"A sympathetic appreciation by a brother. The reader is therefore offered a mass of interesting personalia, in lieu of any profound critical estimate of Augustin Daly's influence on the American theater."
+ Lit D 55:39 N 17 '17 350w

"The author has succeeded in rearing a notable monument of fraternal affection. But, though a respected and capable judge, he had little skill in bookmaking. The legal habit of his mind is betrayed in the accumulation of the smallest details, rather than in orderly and discriminating use of them. His relation, especially in some of the earlier chapters, is often exceedingly confused and rambling."
+ J. R. Towse
+ Nation 106:71 Ja 17 '18 1300w

"So broad, indeed, is the book's scope that it becomes almost a history of the New York stage through the middle and later decades of the nineteenth century. And there are numbers of photographs of the stars of the seventies, eighties, and nineties, pictures which will arouse a flood of recollections in the breasts of middle-aged theatregoers."
+ N Y Times 23:13 Ja 13 '18 1150w

"An admirable biography. The author has used his ample material with tact and taste."
+ Outlook 117:432 N 11 '17 50w
Pittsburgh 22:503 D '17 90w

"The book singularly and regretably fails to give the intimate view we expect in biography. . . . He has made a ship-shape lucid biography with the personal equation of both brothers left out. To this end he seems to have deliberately foregone the abundant anecdotal charm of theatrical books. But he has made a valuable statistical contribution to the history of the American stage." Algernon Tassin

+ — Pub W 92:1383 O 20 '17 720w

DAMPIERRE, LÉON MICHEL MARIE JACQUES DE, marquis. German imperialism and international law; based upon German authorities and the archives of the French government. II *$3.50 Scribner 940.91 (Eng ed 17-15316)

"In the first chapters M. de Dampierre devotes himself to an investigation of the theories which have gone to build up the principles of German imperialism, contrasting them with the opposed doctrines which have found their expression in the attempts to build up a system of international law. . . . He then proceeds to show how all that has happened in this war. . . . is the logical and inevitable consequence of the teaching of German writers before the war. . . . He has read widely and . . . his illustrations from the works of German writers are always supported by full references. . . . The two last chapters, 'The German war and spoliation' and 'German terrorism,' are almost entirely occupied with a discussion of the diaries of German soldiers, which afford irrefutable evidence regarding what took place during the months of August and September, 1914."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

A L A Bkl 14:52 N '17

Dial 63:214 S 13 '17 330w

+ — Educ R 54:422 N '17 40w

Pratt p13 O '17 20w

R of Rs 56:214 Ag '17 100w

"M. de Dampierre proves quite conclusively that the annexation of Belgium was the direct objective of the war."

+ Sat R 123:601 Je 30 '17 1000w

"Able and temperately written book, fortified throughout by the evidence of enemy literature and documents."

+ Spec 118:392 Mr 31 '17 130w

"He writes as one who brings to the study of contemporary history the habits formed in the great school which has grown up round the study of the French archives, and his work is as scientific, as documented, as that of any German. . . . It is much to be regretted that there is no index to the book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p99 Mr 1 '17 1250w

DANA, MARVIN. Perfect memory. *$1 (7c) Clode, E: J. 154 17-24845

How to have and keep a perfect memory is the thesis of Dr Dana's hundred forty pages of practical instruction. He believes that whether a memory is good or bad anyone can improve it one thousand per cent. or more, by following the methods set forth in these pages. The scheme of mental control upon which he bases his instruction stresses concentration, visualization, necessity for the concrete, association of ideas and avoidance of the abstract. He points out the best results, and way to secure them, from memorizing lists, dates, names and faces. He says that the right kind of memory "means a mind in the plenitude of its vigor, growing, serene, energized, competent to every task; a mind that compels the respect of others, and, what is of deeper worth, maintains to the full one's own self-respect, which is the foundation-stone whereon content is builded."

DANE, CLEMENCE. Regiment of women. *$1.50 (1c) Macmillan 17-3574

This book by a new writer recalls Hugh Walpole's early novel "The gods and Mr. Perrin." It is a study of the unwholesome conditions that may exist in a large school where pupils and teachers are so isolated from the active life of the world that emotional reactions are intensified to a dangerous degree. In this case it is a girls' school and the teachers are women. Clare

Hartill, a brilliant, selfish woman, who attracts girls to her, accepts their devotion for a time and then casts them off, is the central figure. One of the younger teachers, Alwynne Durand, becomes attached to her in much the same way that the sentimental schoolgirls do. The unnatural friendship is fortunately brought to an end by the intrusion of a more healthful outside influence. In an unobtrusive way the story offers an argument for co-education.

"A detailed, well written study. . . . Interesting, shows a real danger and suggests a remedy."

+ A L A Bkl 13:266 Mr '17

"The unsound morale of girls' schools is caught powerfully. The morbid, unhealthy association of women among themselves, the strong affections, the intrigue, the jealousies, and the influence of the mistresses on the immature pupils, are admirably suggested. The atmosphere is heady. The reader longs for a man."

Boston Transcript p8 F 7 '17 350w

"The book's striking merit lies in the extraordinary fidelity of its picture. It does for the English girls' school much what Mr Walpole's 'The gods and Mr Perrin' did for the English boys' school. The theme in both instances is the life of the teachers, rather than of the pupils."

+ Nation 104:432 Ap 12 '17 650w

"In a larger way, the book interprets the in-growing emotionalism and moral sterility to which any community lacking the leaven of the opposite sex is prone." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 105:601 N 29 '17 90w

"Miss Dane does not make manifest to the American reader sufficient reason for the fascination which her Miss Hartill is able to exercise over her associates in the school. Otherwise, it is a noteworthy picture of a scheming, clever, selfish, vain woman who has become, temperately, more or less abnormal. . . . The book takes its title, in which 'regiment' is used in its old English sense of 'rule,' from John Knox's 'First blast of the trumpet against the monstrous regiment of women.'"

+ — N Y Times 22:33 F 4 '17 400w

+ R of Rs 55:555 My '17 80w

"It is hard to believe that 'Regiment of women' is the first novel that its author, Clemence Dane, has written. . . . This power of 'creating' and expressing character is usually the reward of nothing but long labour. . . . The chief impression is one of wisdom: a shrewd penetration into human minds and the circumstances that mould or fix them, combined with an admirable 'all-roundness' of outlook upon human life."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p44 Ja 25 '17 550w

DANILEVSKII, GRIGOVII PETROVICH. Moscow in flames; tr. from the Russian by Dr A. S. Rappoport. *$1.40 Brentano's 17-31035

"This is not, as the translator states, the first novel by this author to appear in English. Danilevsky (1829-90), already known in English by a novel dealing with Pougachev's rebellion, called 'The Princess Tarakanova,' here presents the French invasion from the Russian point of view. The story covers the period 1812-53, and follows the fortunes of a young nobleman and his betrothed, a society beauty."—Ath

"It is vivid, full of historical detail, and a good specimen of its class, and is, of course, crammed with historic names."

+ Ath p471 S '17 90w

"The characters in 'Moscow in flames' are drawn with the flatness and remoteness of fresco; its incidents are strikingly unoriginal. But his comments on Russian life and character are not without shrewdness and piquancy."

+ — N Y Times 22:570 D 23 '17 450w

"Allowing for the difficulties of translation, the author's style is a little crude, judging by severe standards, and his character sketches weak. On the whole, however, the book is interesting, typifying, as it does, a popular Russian novel."

+ — Springf'd Republican p15 Ja 13 '18 160w

DARBISHIRE, ARTHUR DUKINFIELD. Introduction to a biology, and other papers. il *$2.50 Funk 17-15695

"The late Mr Darbishire, an accomplished young Oxford biologist, died of illness contracted in camp before he could complete his book. He had written a lively criticism of the materialistic theory of life, and just as he came to face the constructive side of his essay—"Is the soul a mere aggregate symptom of a mechanism—the body? Or is the body not rather the instrument of the soul?"—he had to lay his pen aside. The scattered papers which have been collected by his sister, with a brief memoir, hint at the answer which he would have given. He was strongly influenced by Samuel Butler and by M. Bergson, but he was an original and fearless thinker and inquirer whom English science could ill spare."—Spec

Boston Transcript p7 Ap 11 '17 550w

"Unhappily the work is but a fragment. . . . The essay, however unconvincing, is brightly written, for the author had a style of candid freshness and a gift of investing even trivial things with humorous interest. The charm of his personality is well brought out in the brief biographical sketch by his sister."

+ Nature 99:304 Je 14 '17 320w

+ Spec 118:441 Ap 14 '17 120w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p65 F 8 '17 1690w

DARIO, RUBÉN. Eleven poems; tr. by T. Walsh and Salomón de la Selva; introd. by Pedro Henríquez Ureña. (Pub. of Hispanic Soc. of Am.) pa *75c Putnam 861 16-22622

Rubén Darío was born near León in the republic of Nicaragua in 1867, and died in that city in 1916. The introduction to this small book of poems says, "With the death of Rubén Darío, the Spanish language loses its greatest poet of to-day,—the greatest because of the æsthetic value and the historical significance of his work." He visited the United States twice, and in 1915 was awarded the honorary medal of the Hispanic society of America. In this volume of poems the original Spanish text and the English translation are given on alternate pages.

"They have that downpour of imagery, that cascade of beauties, of which the northern temper is slightly distrustful. Eleven poems, however, cannot embrace or test a man, particularly when the reader hesitates between the rush-light of his own imperfect Spanish and the charity of English renderings which are sometimes of real worth, sometimes had beyond credence or pardon." O. W. Firkins

+ — Nation 105:176 Ag 16 '17 170w

Reviewed by Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p11 Mr 4 '17 150w

Pittsburgh 22:408 My '17

DARK, SIDNEY. Afraid. *$1.35 (1½c) Lane 17-2344

"Courage is so common a quality," says the author in one of the early chapters of this story, "that experience justifies us in believing that every one possesses it." The story is a study of a boy who seemed born without it. From childhood Jasper Sedley had been afraid. Moral courage and intellectual honesty were his to a high degree, but the thought of physical suffering made him weak and helpless. His life at home and at school was made miserable. He made no friends and at a critical moment lost the woman he loved because he failed to go to her aid. One is made to feel that sympathetic treatment in childhood might have overcome the obsession, but it is left for the war to call out the latent courage in the boy's soul.

A L A Bkl 13:315 Ap '17

"Real as may be his idea, I feel a lack of reality in the way he presents it. His people are too much the characters needed to enforce his idea, too little actual personalities with whom Jasper Sedley chanced to come in contact. . . . More important than all this, the final event seems suggested by sentiment rather than a knowledge of what life actually is." E. E. Hale

Dial 62:145 F 22 '17 550w

+ N Y Times 22:31 Ja 28 '17 350w

"We doubt if Mr Dark has solved his own problem, for his coward turns out to be no coward. The question really is whether it is a right instinct which leads society to ostracize the coward without considering his character as a whole."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p560 N 23 '16 350w

DASENT, SIR GEORGE WEBBE. East o' the sun and west o' the moon, and other Norse fairy tales. il *$1.25 (1½c) Putnam 17-11576

Thirty and more Norse fairy tales are brought together in this book. Gnomes and trolls and other figures of northern fancy appear in the tales. Some of them are new, others are variations of the familiar themes, among them the story of Snow-white and Rose-red.

"These quaint tales will prove of interest to older readers as well as to the children for whom they were written. For some of them are reminiscent of 'fairy stories' of other lands, and prove again the common origin of the folklore of the European nations."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 4 '17 420w

"Altogether charming."

+ N Y Times 22:233 Je 17 '17 220w

"Short, easily memorized fairy tales that will prove treasures to persons who have a knack of telling stories to children."

+ R of Rs 55:664 Je '17 40w

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 15 '17 130w

"The tales themselves are delightfully old world in flavor and of appealing quaintness. This characteristic is occasionally marred by colloquialisms in which the translator indulges in order to make his meaning clear to young readers. The striking feature of the book consists of the bizarre illustrations by Kay Nielsen, a Danish artist, who, by going back to the original source of the stories, the Norske Folkevæntyr of Asbjørnsen and Moe, has been able to get the utmost significance of the original rendering."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 D 21 '17 350w

DAVIES, GEORGE REGINALD. Social environment. (National social science ser.) *50c (2c) McClurg 301 17-10388

"How far does the accumulated knowledge and experience of the world modify the individual and give him control over biological factors?" is the question considered by the author of this book. He feels that the biological factor, with its emphasis on struggle and the survival of the fittest, has been too strongly stressed in reading the story of human development. His purpose is to set forth the importance of the spiritual factors, using the term spiritual to cover "the intellectual, artistic, and moral achievements of civilization." Contents: The biological point of view; The evolution of the theory of evolution; The nature of society; Social environment and eugenics; The outlook for social organization. The author is assistant professor of history and sociology in the University of North Dakota and the book is published in a series of which Frank L. McVey, president of the University, is general editor.

Reviewed by U. G. Weatherly
Am J Soc 23:558 Ja '18 280w
A L A Bkl 14:5 O '17

"Professor Davies has hardly been fair to biology, while his emphasis on the 'spiritual' forces of society contributes nothing essentially new." R. T. B.

+ — Ann Am Acad 73:245 S '17 130w

"Hitherto there has been a dearth of literature emphasizing environmental forces in society. This little book should be welcome for its contribution to that neglected field."

+ Dial 63:72 Jl 19 '17 180w

R of Rs 56:440 O '17 70w

St Louis 15:169 Je '17

Springf'd Republican p8 Ap 20 '17 90w

DAVIES, GERALD STANLEY. Renaissance tombs of Rome. il *$6 Dutton 718

"An unusual field, indeed one never before explored, is covered by this sumptuous volume, written by the master of Charterhouse school and published originally in England [in 1910]. (Boston Transcript) The volume is divided into two parts, of which the first is given to discussion and criticism of the tombs and the artists who worked on them, with vivid biographical and historical comment, and the second to alphabetical and chronological lists of the churches and tombs; brief histories of the men in whose honor the monuments were designed, and the special and general indexes. The illustrations are half-tone reproductions from photographs, sufficient in number and, of course, indispensable as reference." (N Y Times)

"The beautiful illustrations add much to the descriptive nature of the text. Mr Davies writes with enthusiasm and with rare critical perception of values in this decidedly unusual field of examination." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 31 '17 880w

"Mr Davies has broken what is practically new ground with his valuable book, which, in addition to cautiously authenticated information, contains art criticism of the most brilliant and original character."

+ N Y Times 22:357 S 23 '17 420w

R of Rs 56:219 Ag '17 110w

DAVIES, WILLIAM HENRY. Autobiography of a super-tramp; with a pref. by Bernard Shaw. *$2.50 Knopf 17-13447

"The simple and quiet chronicle of a young man who tramped and begged—and now and then worked for a few weeks at a time—in America and England for many years. . . . He tells us how tramps live, how they talk, what their ideals and their habits are. He has pictures of American 'living conditions'—as the somewhat sententious phrase goes—that are nothing short of astonishing. He has had adventures, to boot. He has much to tell of cattlemen, of berry-pickers, of longshore labor camps on the Mississippi, of tramping and working and begging in city and country and summer resort through most of the eastern half of the United States and on into Canada, of remarkable beggars and expert thieves. Strange characters live in his pages. And his own life story is itself most strange."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 13:399 Je '17

"A human document in the best sense of that much abused phrase. Not a phrase of it is overdone, not a word in it is egotistical, not a letter in it but spells the truthful story of a life that the world wants to know about." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 18 '17 1100w

"A rather colorless narrative of unimpeachable verbal propriety relating the day-by-day experiences of the Welshman, who seems to have been an ordinary tramp until he began at thirty-four to write in really exquisite verse. The preface by Bernard Shaw, while it reveals still further the genial tolerance of that author, is not a particularly illuminating commentary on Mr Davies' work or psychology."

Cleveland p83 Je '17 70w

"Mr Davies is now an established poet, who no longer has to hawk his verses from door to door. His reputation, indeed, is considerable, and it may seem unfair to consider his first book of prose quite apart from his poetry. But if 'The autobiography of a super-tramp' has special interest, it is precisely because it shows how completely an unfamiliar medium may refract and distort the image of himself which a writer would convey. It is another lesson in sticking to one's last." G: B. Donlin

— Dial 62:338 My 3 '17 1200w

"His account is so casual that you would think he was living a regular, conventional life instead of that of a hobo. The book is unique."

+ Lit D 56:42 Ja 12 '18 240w

"He never grew into much of a Socialist; he has too much of the pure poet, yet reading his strong and simple picture of the incredible life of the poor, we become reconfirmed in our faith that the world must be set free, and society made friendly to the life of the tenderest and most innocent temperaments." Irwin Granich

+ Masses 9:29 O '17 1650w

"Mr Davies's simplicity stands out delightfully with Bernard Shaw as sponsor. . . . He will be read, and reread, for the sheer charm of his style. Yet, withal, he has so much to say that is of absorbing interest."

+ N Y Times 22:159 Ap 22 '17 650w

"His experiences are told realistically, but would be better for judicious condensation."

+ — Outlook 116:32 My 2 '17 40w

Pittsburgh 22:670 O '17 80w

St Louis 15:153 My '17 20w

"All I have to say by way of recommendation of this book," says Mr Shaw (and his conclusion shall be mine), 'is that I have read it from beginning to end, and would have read more of it had there been more to read.' L: Untermeyer

+ Yale R n s 7:199 O '17 750w

DAVIES, WILLIAM HENRY. Collected poems. il *$1.25 Knopf 811 16-23556

"This is not a complete edition of the poems of Mr Davies, as many people would gather from its title. It is what is probably a better thing: a book of poems selected by the poet from all the volumes he has published. He tells us in the prefatory note that it contains 'what I believe to be my best pieces.' A poet is not always the best judge of what is finest in his own work. But no one can know so well as he what best represents his own mind and mood, what gave him at the time of writing, and gives him still, the greatest pleasure, what is, if not his best, at least his most characteristic, poetry. That is what we get here from Mr Davies."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

+ A L A Bkl 13:256 Mr '17

"Mr Davies has learnt much from Herrick, and uses his learning well—not in the least in the sense of plagiarizing, but by his clever choice and treatment of his subjects. The book is well worthy of a place in the library of any lover of poetry."

+ Ath p592 D '16 50w

"Mr Davies's 'Collected poems' has the same magical expression as Mr de la Mare's art, but with a firmer background in experience. . . . The best critical opinion admits that the poems of William H. Davies are as likely to live as those of any English poet of his day." W: S. Braithwaite

+ Bookm 45:436 Je '17 190w

"The 'Collected poems' of William H. Davies will give pleasure to lovers of the lyric. Mr Davies, who tramped over most of this country and Canada as hungry and thrifless as other tramps, established confidential relations with birds and beasts, with flowers and trees on 'the open road.' Perhaps this is why his lyrics celebrate the minute, beautiful things of the ancient out of doors with effervescent joy."

+ Ind 89:556 Mr 26 '17 150w

+ Lit D 54:134 Ja 20 '17 400w

"Some of his little songs catch the charm of Herrick and Lovelace. . . . His 'The sleepers,' 'The little ones,' 'Whom I know,' and other poems, show a deep sympathy with suffering humanity; but the intellectual understanding is not here. Davies is a delight; but the stuff is slight and echoey." Clement Wood

+ — N Y Call p12 F 4 '17 400w

+ R of Rs 55:438 Ap '17 250w

"This truly lyrical poet has everywhere a definite utterance. It is rarely complex, but it is always beautiful. . . . Mr Davies, by the way, who is not so well known in this country as he deserves to be, will soon have an opportunity to broaden his acquaintance when a contemplated trip to America becomes a reality."

+ Springfd Republican p6 F 5 '17 300w

"A book of the most companionable poetry that any living man has given us. Mr Davies has not the encephalic, the eloquence, or the passion of Mr Masfield; he has not the scholarly workmanship which half adorns and half conceals the true imagination of Mr Binyon; he has not that magical charm, as of some singularly gifted and beautiful child, which is the special secret of Mr de la Mare. But none of these, nor anyone else, perhaps, manages to convert so much of ordinary life into poetry as Mr Davies. And that is the essence of poetic companionship."

DAVIES, WILLIAM HENRY—Continued

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p7 Ja 4 '17 1500w

"Here is one of the most truly lyric voices in the world to-day. Lacking the sudden magic or the individuality of either Walter de la Mare or Ralph Hodgson, he shares with them an unstudied and always singing beauty." L: Untermyer

+ Yale R n s 7:201 O '17 480w

DAVISS, MARIA THOMPSON. Heart's kingdom. il *$1.35 (1½c) Reilly & B. 17-25432

Charlotte Powers, a beautiful agnostic with a gift for leadership, returned from a winter in New York to her home in Harpeth Valley to find that a Methodist minister, Rev. Gregory Goodloe, who "resembled one of the big gold-colored lions that lived in the wilds of the Harpeth mountains," had brought her circle of friends under his spell, so that they had taken to attending prayer meetings instead of dances, and had started to reform her father, for twenty years a drunkard. The book gives the story of her attempted marriage to Nickols Powers, his death, her conversion, and her conquest by the "Harpeth Jaguar" (as she called the Rev. Gregory) with the "Jeweled eyes" to whom she "gave back a betrothal kiss that was as complete as a great red flower."

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Bookm 46:340 N '17 30w

"A doubtful mixture of poor theology and insipid romance."

— Boston Transcript p6 O 24 '17 190w

"The best thing in the book is the sketch of the youthful Charlotte, the heroine's 'name-daughter,' and her child companions."

— + N Y Times 22:373 S 30 '17 260w

Reviewed by Doris Webb

Pub W 92:806 S 15 '17 250w

DAVISS, MARIA THOMPSON. Out of a clear sky. il *$1 (3c) Harper 17-13185

With a beautiful Belgian countess lost in the Tennessee forests, a very good looking young Tennessee farmer ready at hand to act as rescuer, and a search party, with authority from the Kaiser, in pursuit, you have the material for a modern romance. Céleste, countess of Berseck and Krymn, had fled to America after the fall of Louvain. The young prince, Louis Augustus, whom she had seemed fated to marry, was not at all a bad sort, but he was a German, and the marriage had been arranged by the hated Kaiser who had robbed her of all she loved. So the Countess fled—with a wicked uncle and other enemies following after. To evade them she drops off the train into an unknown world, which happens to be Tennessee, and there she finds Mr Bob Lawrence, his horse and his dog, all equally willing to serve her.

"A charming little tale, bearing little apparent relation to the everyday affairs of reality, but full of tenderness and romance, and told with a very pretty naïve quality in its careful foreign English."

+ N Y Times 22:218 Je 3 '17 230w

"A romantic, improbable, modern fairy tale."
+ Pratt p50 O '17 6w

DAVIS, ARTHUR POWELL. Irrigation works constructed by the United States government. il *$4.50 Wiley 626.8 17-14071

"Within less than fifteen years after the date of the first enabling legislation, the U.S. reclamation service expended about $100,000,000 on the construction of numerous irrigation systems scattered over our vast western domain. . . .

Arthur P. Davis, chief engineer of the U.S. reclamation service, has described twenty-one of the twenty-five projects in the volume under consideration. . . . Except for a brief introduction and a short final chapter summing up the achievements of the Reclamation service in terms of ultimate aim—"Settlement and cultivation"—the entire book is devoted to descriptions of the various projects. The plan followed is to give the history and a general description of each project in a few sentences, and then to describe the works in their natural order, from dam and storage reservoir to water delivery to each farm unit. Besides the descriptions of structural works, the volume contains information on a variety of special topics."—Engin News-Rec

"Besides its value as an account of governmental enterprise in the reclamation of land, the book is a welcome addition to the literature of irrigation, and of dams, canals, pipe lines, and other structures common to hydraulic works."

+ Engin News-Rec 79:939 N 15 '17 500w
Pittsburgh 22:662 O '17 20w

DAVIS, CALVIN OLIN. Public secondary education. $1 Rand 379.774 17-11119

"The correct title of this book is 'Public secondary education in Michigan.' After devoting three chapters to the colonial Latin school, the middle period, and the early Northwest, the author begins his discussion with a chapter on early Michigan. Five chapters follow this one, the three most significant being one each on the academy movement, the union schools, and the high schools. It is in these chapters that one finds the explanation of current practices in secondary education in Michigan and to a certain extent in the nation at large." (School R) "There is no attempt to bring the story down to date, contemporary tendencies being left to another book to be published later." (El School J)

"The first two chapters contain a short statement largely abstracted from Brown's 'The making of our middle schools.' One is impressed with the fact that, in order to get a background for the detailed story of secondary education in Michigan, Professor Davis has felt obliged to condense an already available and almost classic discussion of the development of our secondary schools. The hurried reader, however, will find in these preliminary chapters a clear, fairly concise, and interestingly written background story which will orient him in his consideration of the problem of secondary education in Michigan."

+ El School J 17:690 My '17 400w

— School R 25:462 Je '17 200w

DAVIS, CHARLES BELMONT. Her own sort, and others. il *$1.35 (2c) Scribner 17-7925

Ten stories reprinted from Scribner's, Collier's and other magazines. The first is the story of a society girl who, deciding to earn her own living, becomes a moving picture actress. She is quite happy in her work till chance throws her in with her old associates. The old lure of the idle life calls her and she goes back to her own sort. Many of the others are stories of society, or at least of city life. Contents: Her own sort; The octopus; God's material; The joy of dying; When Johnny came marching home; The professor; The twenty-first reason; Side-tracked; The men who would "die" for her; Her man.

"Mr Davis has the gift of seeing the humorous situations in every day life."

Boston Transcript p6 Ap 11 '17 400w

"The make-up is always there: the puppets never become quite human. In the light of the author's imagination 'The octopus' and 'The professor' may seem real, but to the rest of us they are stogy and do not arrive; they merely grimace and gesticulate." Exception may be made to 'The joy of dying.' It is a pathetic and gruesome little tragedy."

— Dial 62:484 My 31 '17 150w

N Y Br Lib News 5:73 My '17 30w

"They are human and interesting stories, for all the cynicism in their picture of 'the pleasure world.'"

+ — N Y Times 22:93 Mr 18 '17 320w

"Short stories worth reading."

+ Outlook 115:622 Ap 4 '17 4w

DAVIS, GEORGE BRECKENRIDGE. Elements of international law with an account of its origin, sources, and historical development. 4th ed *$3 Harper 341 16-16751

The fourth edition of this work has been prepared for publication by Gordon E. Sherman, formerly assistant professor of comparative and international law at Yale. Changes in the text have been slight. New matter added to the book is contained in appendices. The extradition treaty between the United States and the Dominican republic, and the text of the Declaration of London are among the documents included. A supplementary bibliography is also added.

"Professor Sherman found it necessary to rewrite important parts of the first two chapters. This he has done with discrimination and good judgment. In printing the Declaration of London he has added notes, referring to the bearing of its dispositions on the present war, as wrought out in practice. One could wish that his annotations of this nature had been more numerous, if not more extended."

+ — Am Hist R 23:128 O '17 650w

A L A Bkl 13:188 Ja '17

"The most valuable additions are those in the appendix." D. G. M.

+ Ann Am Acad 71:236 My '17 200w

+ Educ R 52:529 D '16 30w

"The treatise of the late judge advocate general of the United States, and its representative abroad upon several occasions, is an authoritative and systematic statement of the best international practice of nations during both war and peace."

+ N Y Times 21:406 O 8 '16 300w

DAVIS, J. MERLE. Davis, soldier missionary. il *$1.50 (1½c) Pilgrim press 16-24706

Jerome D. Davis, the subject of this biography was a lieutenant-colonel of volunteers in the Civil war and for thirty-nine years a missionary in Japan. This story of his life is written by his son, who is secretary of the International committee of Young men's Christian associations in Tokio. In Japan Dr Davis was one of the founders of Doshisha university and the book gives a full account of the development and achievements of this institution.

+ Bib World 49:187 Mr '17 309w

"Mr Davis has succeeded admirably. His father becomes to the reader a living person, the soldier who had the missionary spirit, the missionary who never lacked a soldier's valor, a true man, of heroic temper shown in great deeds."

+ Boston Transcript p12 Ap 7 '17 480w

"A substantial volume of 350 pages, well illustrated and of compelling interest. . . . Incidentally one gets in these chapters a history of the famous Doshisha controversy."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 4 '17 400w

DAVIS, JOSEPH STANCLIFFE. Essays in the earlier history of American corporations. 2v ea *$2.50 Harvard univ. press 338.8 17-12885

"This group of studies is presented as a modest contribution to the economic and social history of the United States before 1800, especially for the last decade or two of the eighteenth century." (Preface) Volume 1 contains three studies: Corporations in the American colonies; William Duer, entrepreneur, 1747-99; The "S. U. M."; the first New Jersey business corporation. Volume 2 is devoted to Eighteenth century business corporations in the United States. The author is instructor in economics in Harvard university and the work is published as volume 16 of the Harvard economic studies.

"The work bears evidence of large and minute investigations of original sources. It is not taken for granted that standard authors are always accurate in their statements or conclusions. Errors in the dates assigned in compilations of high authority to some important papers are fearfully corrected." S. E. Baldwin

+ — Am Hist R 23:185 O '17 1150w

"In each volume there are appendices of useful illustrative material, and the second volume has an extensive bibliography. The work as a whole represents a comprehensive, if not an exhaustive, treatment of the topics considered; and should form an authoritative source of information." J. A. F.

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:589 Ag '17 420w

"The author has done his work well. These volumes make a distinct and welcome contribution to American economic history." F. R. J.

+ Ann Am Acad 74:299 N '17 150w

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 29 '17 700w

Cleveland p107 S '17 30w

"Mr Davis's treatment of these subjects is such as to merit the gratitude of students both of economics and of history. Of the four essays of which the work is composed, the second and third, though not the most valuable, are certainly the most interesting. In these two essays we are brought face to face with many of the leading characters of the period. They are as valuable for the sidelights which they cast upon the politics of the day as for the economic information which they impart."

+ Nation 105:511 N 8 '17 1550w

"Two very interesting volumes which are based on statute books, letters, financial records, newspapers, reports, etc. The work is, indeed, an important contribution to the industrial and social history of the United States before 1800, and it should have a lasting and well-deserved reputation. . . . There is a complete bibliography at the end of the second volume."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Je 11 '17 220w

DAVIS, KARY CADMUS. Productive plant husbandry. (Farm life text ser.) il *$1.75 Lippincott 630 17-19170

A text-book for high schools into more than 4,600 of whose curricula have been introduced courses in agriculture. The first six chapters are devoted to plant life and growth, and methods of improving plants; the next four, to soils and their improvement and maintenance; the body of the text deals with the various farm crops including fruits, vegetables, field crops and forestry; then follow three chapters on the enemies of crops—weeds, insects and diseases. In conclusion the writer discusses the business of farming and the rural community.

Pittsburgh 22:664 O '17 30w

"From the standpoint of its pedagogical merits the book is rather superior. . . . The illustrations are numerous and clear and really illustrate the text. Teachers interested in texts in agriculture providing material for a one-year course will do well to examine Professor Davis' book with some care before they select a text for their course."

+ School R 25:612 O '17 220w

DAVIS, RICHARD HARDING. Adventures and letters of Richard Harding Davis; ed. by C. B. Davis. il *$2.50 Scribner 17-30256

"Richard Harding Davis was almost a legendary figure from his boyhood, and certainly no American has ever known how to extract so much adventure from life. As newspaper man, war-correspondent, soldier of fortune, and storyteller he had an unerring knack of being on the spot where the greatest possible interest and excitement were going forward. But few of his readers, perhaps, knew that he was also an inveterate and a capital letter-writer. His brother, Charles Belmont Davis, has now collected his correspondence and woven it about the personal narrative of the author's life. The book is copiously illustrated with portraits and photographs, many of them taken in various parts of the world by Davis himself."—Lit D

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

DAVIS, RICHARD HARDING—Continued
 "They form a very interesting biography."
 + A L A Bkl 14:127 Ja '18
 Boston Transcript p10 N 28 '17 1700w
 Lit D 55:41 D 8 '17 130w

"His letters present an array of delightful, amusing, exciting adventures. The book is excellently edited, with a running narrative that is altogether readable and informative, and the photographs are really vivid illustrations of the matter of the book. We know few books more interesting."
 + N Y Times 22:495 N 25 '17 1100w

"Unconventional, lively letters."
 + Outlook 117:614 D 12 '17 110w

"Readers will lay down the book with the feeling that they have become personally acquainted with an interesting man. The explanation of this feeling of intimacy with the subject of the book is that his letters, a large portion of them written to his mother, reveal him as a likable man who loved human companionship, who made friends easily and who possessed many of the attractive and worth-while qualities which have made the heroes of fiction so deservedly popular."
 + Springf'd Republican p6 D 17 '17 1000w

DAVIS, RICHARD HARDING. Boy scout, and other stories for boys. ll *$1.25 (2½c) Scribner 17-24696

Five stories that "go with especial directness to a boy's heart and sympathies" have been chosen for inclusion in this book. They are: The boy scout: The boy who cried wolf; Gallagher; Blood will tell; and The bar sinister. "Gallegher" is an old favorite. "The bar sinister" has also had a number of years of popularity. The other stories are of later date.

A L A Bkl 14:135 Ja '18

"They are for readers of any age, boys included." J. Walcott
 + Bookm 46:498 D '17 140w

"One cannot be too enthusiastic in recommending the story-telling power of Mr Davis. His dog story, 'The bar sinister,' is an ideal tale for boys who love a good and spirited account of animal nature."
 + Lit D 55:54 D 8 '17 70w

Outlook 117:219 O 10 '17 20w

DAVISON, THOMAS RAFFLES. Port Sunlight. ll *$2 Scribner 710 17-14401

"Port Sunlight is a model village established in England in 1888. As students of sociology are already familiar with its great practical and economic success, it is the purpose of this book to emphasize the artistic and picturesque qualities of the village." To this end the book includes a little descriptive matter and a great many illustrations, photographs, sketches and plans. These show most conclusively the charming old English type of village which has been attained, a pleasure to the eye, an uplift to the spirit, without decreasing, but rather enhancing the practical value of the town.—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 14:48 N '17

"We are extremely sorry that the author limited himself to a record of the artistic and pictorial aspect of Port Sunlight, a subject so closely associated with the economic aspect of the place as to leave the reader unsatisfied if this also is not described."
 + Boston Transcript p6 Ap 18 '17 180w

+ Int Studio 61:145 My '17 200w

DAVRAY, HENRY D. Lord Kitchener: his work and his prestige; with a prefatory letter by Paul Cambon. 2s 6d T. Fisher Unwin, London (Eng ed 17-20979)

"The well-known French littérateur gives us a graphic and effective portrayal of Kitchener's work—a hastening, in some half dozen pages, over his earlier military career, and getting on page 29 to the outbreak of the European war and appointment of Kitchener to the war office.

... Appendices reproduce speeches by Lord Kitchener, memorial speeches in the House of commons, etc.—Ontario Library Review

"H. G. Croser's 'Lord Kitchener' contains more biographical facts of his earlier career; Harold Begbie's 'Kitchener, organizer of victory' is more popular, but, like this, only a sketch."
 + Cleveland p126 N '17 60w

+ Ind 91:293 Ag 25 '17 110w

"M. Davray followed events in England closely and on the spot; he has a keen eye and a gift of making the most of what he sees, and he applies these gifts successfully to Kitchener's achievement in organizing the British military force."
 + Ontario Library Review 1:115 My '17 100w

+ R of Rs 57:221 F '18 30w

"It is probable that one object of this life of Kitchener was to reassure the people of France in regard to Britain's part in the war and Lord Kitchener's ability and devotion at a time when the war minister was being violently assailed by Lord Northcliffe's press."
 + Springf'd Republican p17 My 6 '17 400w

DAWSON, ALEC JOHN. For France ("C'est pour la France"); some English impressions of the French front. ll *$2 (6c) Doran 940.91

"No other claim is made for the pictures, drawn and written, which are presented than that they record a few of the entirely independent and unbiassed impressions formed by two English officers who were very kindly permitted by the French authorities to see something of the French army in the field." (Preface) Captain Bairnsfather's sketches of the "poilu" deal with him "often with a slight touch of caricature and always with humor and tenderness." (N Y Times) The spirit of the French army is well brought out as is also the spirit of what Capt. Dawson calls "the reserved fighting line that is so finely held by the women of France." One chapter, "The joyous ones" describes a battalion "recruited entirely as regards its rank and file, from the ranks of convicted criminals." Some other chapters are: Paul Dupont, grocer; Paris; Dogs of war; One trench and another, and Verdun.

+ Ind 91:471 S 22 '17 150w

+ Lit D 55:48 O 13 '17 260w

+ N Y Times 22:261 Jl 15 '17 170w

+ Pittsburgh 22:680 O '17 50w
 St Louis 15:385 N '17 30w

"The chapter on the war dogs is capital, as might be expected, since the author is an expert in that line. . . . Captain Bairnsfather has made an effort to restrain his gift for comic types of a special English kind, and his best pictures are better, we think, than his English caricatures."
 + Sat R 123:504 Je 2 '17 330w

"While in the preface both disclaim any pretention at more than a cursory glimpse of a few aspects of France in war time, as seen through uninformed English eyes, yet the reader will feel that much of the real spirit of the land and her people has been caught by these sympathetic visitors."
 + Springf'd Republican p8 O 26 '17 600w

DAWSON, CONINGSBY (WILLIAM). Carry on: letters in war-time; with an intro. and notes by his father, W. J. Dawson. ll *$1 (4c) Lane 940.91 17-15170

The author is a graduate of Oxford university who, after one year at Union theological seminary, New York, decided to be novelist rather than a preacher, a decision which resulted in the publication in 1913 of his "Garden without walls." But in 1916 after the publication of "Slaves of freedom," he left his home in Taunton, Mass., for the trenches, accepting a commission in the Canadian field artillery. The letters, which are most intimate and personal, were written to his family from dugouts on the Somme battlefield in the intervals of artillery fire. Their general point of view is well expressed by the Canadian slogan "Carry on" which the novelist's father, W. J. Dawson, has used as the title of the book. "We've got to win," writes Lieutenant Dawson, "so that men may never again be tortured by the ingenious inquisition of modern warfare."

+ A L A Bkl 14:18 O '17

+ — Cleveland p130 D '17 140w

"He is particularly effectual in putting himself on paper, and his book affords a clear view into the theological soul. The best part of it is that his letters are so full of incident that unless you are particularly interested, you need not bother with the theological interpretation at all."

+ — Dial 64:31 Ja 3 '18 650w

— New Repub 11:340 Jl 21 '17 600w

"From a literary point of view these intimate letters, written in dugouts by the light of a single candle and without thought of publication, are far and away the best work that Mr Dawson has ever done."

+ N Y Times 22:257 Jl 8 '17 500w

"They are characterized by vividness of impression, reality, sympathetic insight, and literary grace, and breathe the spirit of heroism, and are a challenge to heroism in others."

+ Ontario Library Review 1:114 My '17 40w

+ Outlook 116:376 Jl 4 '17 40w

Pittsburgh 22:661 O '17 30w

Pratt p39 O '17 10w

+ R of Rs 56:325 S '17 40w

+ St Louis 15:314 S '17 30w

"His letters are those of a serious, full-hearted young man, devoted to his own family, and endowed with a natural gift for writing."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p479 O 4 '17 90w

DAWSON, CONINGSBY (WILLIAM). Pincher Martin. O. D.; a story of the inner life of the Royal navy. il *$1.50 Houghton (Eng ed 17-22561)

"The cryptic—at least, to an American—letters after Pincher Martin's name are English navy slang for ordinary seamen, and this book, by the author who prefers to be known as "Taffrail," is an entertaining account of navy life in peace and war, as experienced by an ordinary bluejacket. The story opens about a year or two before the outbreak of the war, and we meet Martin at the moment when he joins his first ship, the predreadnought battleship Belligerent. He remains on her until she is torpedoed and sunk, then serves on board a torpedo boat destroyer, the Mariner. As one of the Mariner's crew he takes part in the Jutland fight, but before that occurs he has quite a number of adventures."—N Y Times

"There is, however, more comedy than tragedy in this tale of Pincher Martin, and some of it is very amusing."

+ N Y Times 22:166 Ap 29 '17 330w

"The book is a welcome tribute to our navy, and bears everywhere the signs of intimate knowledge."

+ Sat R 122:sup6 D 9 '16 350w

+ Spec 117:809 D 23 '16 850w

"Makes good its claim to be 'a story of the inner life of the Royal navy.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p572 N 30 '16 450w

DAWSON, CONINGSBY (WILLIAM). Seventh Christmas. il *50c (8c) Holt 17-29180

This is the story of the seventh birthday of Jesus. His mother Mary tells him the story of his birth, and the golden caskets given him by the Three wise men of the East are opened.

— N Y Call p18 D 15 '17 130w

"Coningsby Dawson's 'The seventh Christmas' is so sweet a little legend that it has a value beyond the celebration of any particular feast."

+ N Y Times 22:563 D 16 '17 410w

"The delicate style of Coningsby Dawson, compact of feeling and fancy, would seem to have a congenial field in a legend about the boyhood of Jesus, but 'The seventh Christmas,' while it presents a pathetic picture of Joseph's poverty-stricken home, does not rise to that imaginative 'saturation' essential to the undertaking."

— + Springf'd Republican p17 D 9 '17 140w

DAWSON, WILLIAM HARBUTT, ed. After-war problems. *$2.50 Macmillan 304

17-24513

"The four main sections of this important volume—'Empire and citizenship,' 'National efficiency,' 'Social reform,' and 'National finance and taxation'—are headed, respectively, by chapters on 'Imperial federation,' by the late Lord Cromer; 'National education,' by Lord Haldane; 'The rehabilitation of rural life,' by the Bishop of Exeter; and 'National taxation after the war,' by Prof. Alfred Marshall. The remaining fifteen chapters, which deal with a variety of topics, are by recognized authorities on the several subjects. Thus the two chapters treating of the relations between capital and labour are contributed by Mr G. H. Roberts, who writes from the standpoint of labour, and by Sir Benjamin C. Browne, who states the capitalist's view; Mrs Fawcett writes on the position of women in economic life, Miss Margaret McMillan on the care of child life, Lord Meath on the cultivation of patriotism, Mr W. Joynson-Hicks on the land question; and so on. The introduction is contributed by the editor."—Ath

"The general impression left on the mind is that the essayists are satisfied with the 'status quo ante' in its main outlines, but seek for improvements in it. There is no deep analysis of the social and industrial system, and no questioning of its fundamentals. The book is, however, much more comprehensive in its scope than any that has previously appeared, and many of its chapters are worth careful reading."

— + Ath p341 Jl '17 1400w

"These essays are weighty pronouncements, and the volume in its entirety demands careful study."

+ Ath p355 Jl '17 180w

"One receives from the reading of these candid, revelatory documents a feeling of pride in England's willingness to learn, to adopt new methods, to look to the future with undaunted courage." S. A.

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 27 '17 500w

"While the book presents a constructive national policy for England, it seems addressed to Englishmen not vitally interested in securing a vision of the needs of the British empire as a whole, or really concerned with international welfare. The spirit is, a world safe for England. But one raises the question, if each nation at the conclusion of war deliberately embarks upon a policy of national efficiency prompted solely by the desire to acquire foreign markets and to attain self-sufficiency at home, what will become of the fruits of the war to end wars, and will such a world be safe for anybody?" V. T. Thayer

— + Dial 63:391 O 25 '17 1800w

"Of particular interest is the study of imperial federation by the late Earl of Cromer, altho it comes to no particular conclusion."

+ — Ind 32:58 O 6 '17 130w

"We can do no more than commend the book to all who would understand the momentous social changes with which England is confronted, and what is being thought and planned regarding them. A survey on similar lines of our own after-the-war problems would be a task well worth undertaking."

+ Nation 106:67 Ja 17 '18 750w

"A certain lack of definiteness can be charged against some of the contributors; indeed, the book as a whole does not attain high importance. But changes are coming, and those who will be responsible for these changes will profit by the spirit of some chapters of the book, even if they are not always illuminated by the proposals. . . . Among the most valuable

DAWSON, WILLIAM HARBUTT, ed.—Cont. chapters in the book because the most concrete is that of Viscount Haldane, whose subject is 'National education.'

* + Springf'd Republican p15 S 16 '17 1550w

"All of them are full of suggestions, most of them directed towards immediate practical ends. Perhaps that is regrettable; for it gives to the program as a whole too conservative a tone. National progress may be sustained for a time by various elements in the nation uniting upon the eradication of old and obvious evils; but a more sweeping fight of the imagination is required, a more prophetic vision of the future, if the magnificent mutual loyalty of the people shown during the war is to be translated into deeds for lasting human betterment. Margaret McMillan, for so many years ridiculed as a dreamer, until she proved by her work that vision and practical achievement go together, alone unveils new horizons." Bruno Lasker

+ — Survey 39:255 D 1 '17 720w

"Of the many publications dealing with after-war problems this volume is the fullest and most comprehensive that has yet appeared. Its scope is, of course, limited. . . . The most serious omission is the absence of any reference to the development and utilization of the resources of the Empire. . . . In the first group Lord Cromer's examination of the relations between the United Kingdom and the other component parts of the Empire has the most actual value and interest. No man was better qualified to form a sound judgment on the subject."

* + The Times [London] Lit Sup p266 Je 7 '17 1850w

DAWSON, WILLIAM JAMES. Robert Shenstone. *$1.50 (1c) Lane 17-24210

"In the midst of horrors, I have written this tale of joyous and adventurous youth." The author is the father of Coningsly Dawson, now at the front, who wrote "Carry on." Robert Shenstone, son of a country school-master, destined by his father for a clergyman, but preferring to be a poet, tells his own story. At sixteen, he is master in a boy's school on the outskirts of London; later, he becomes secretary to a Mr Heron, an eccentric and a recluse, with a fine taste in literature and art. Shenstone perseveres with his own writing and finally has a play accepted by Henry Irving. Other characters are Robert's father, who never realizes his own ambitions; his mother, who believes that "the life that gives is so much more than the life that gets"; his widowed aunt, Mrs Tabitha Shanley, to whom "the great thing in life is never to lose the spirit of adventure"; the other masters in the school; Edith Hopper, "lineal descendant of Lillith and Cleopatra," who tries her wiles on them all; and Lucille Overberg, the beautiful girl, who tempted to renounce life thru fear, because of her mother's expiation of a crime, finally decides "to accept thankfully the joy of the common day."

A L A Bkl 11:34 D '17

"Robert Shenstone" is good. It is good—item one—as the pleasant and leisurely tale of a man's young life. And it is good—item two—because, in addition to that, it is a mystery story of unusual plot."

+ N Y Times 22:412 O 21 '17 1250w

DAY, HOLMAN FRANCIS. Where your treasure is; being the personal narrative of Ross Sidney, diver. il *$1.50 (2c) Harper 17-17281

A story of adventure by land and sea. It opens in the small eastern village where Ross Sidney spends his boyhood. He is a poor boy with little prospect in life, and he gives all his youthful adoration to Celene Kingsley, the daughter of the one wealthy man of the community. Circumstances drive him from home and he joins a wrecking crew along the Atlantic coast. When he returns to his home town it is to find Judge Kingsley in a difficulty from which he helps to extricate him. A misunderstanding with Celene, which her father might have explained away, again sends him on his wanderings. This time he goes to the Pacific coast where he ships as a deep sea diver. Here he meets another girl, who proves to be his real treasure, and he sees that his feeling for Celene was only a boyish fancy.

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 11 '17 380w

+ Cleveland p103 S '17 50w

"The masculine sort of nonsense, the 'rattling' sort. As usual, Mr Day makes spirited work with his men, and tame and perfunctory work with his women. It is a long yarn, somewhat too long to rattle freely from start to finish. . . . What one has to complain of is that so much of the fantastic tale is set ashore; for Mr Day's illusion, his glamour at least, is soaked in salt water."

+ Nation 105:149 Ag 9 '17 200w

"It is a full-blooded, hot-headed story, told with all the naive zest of youth, filled with the slang and the expletives and the picturesque similes of many kinds of hustling life, both honest and dishonest. There are graphic accounts of the diver's work."

+ N Y Times 22:245 Jl 1 '17 570w

"The vigorous language of his sea faring folk is always amusing and in depicting their pursuits, whether ashore or afloat, he is faithfully realistic."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 Jl 15 '17 420w

DEAN, RUTH. Livable house—its garden. (Livable house ser.) il *$2.50 Moffat 716 17-16081

"A companion work to Aymar Embury's 'Livable house' is provided by Ruth Dean in 'The livable house, its garden.' In sympathy with the spirit of efficiency, the author aims to combat indifference or ignorance in the development of grounds about the home. A secondary purpose is to aid the amateur landscape architect in avoiding the mistakes into which his ignorance of plant life and values are likely to lead him. . . . One hundred photogravures effectively illustrate the results for which the author gives the fullest directions. The book is divided into five sections: The garden as a whole; General planting; The flower garden; Times and seasons, and Garden architecture."

+ Cleveland p113 S '17 20w

"Miss Dean is a landscape architect of experience, and her suggestions are invariably practical."

+ N Y Times 22:331 S 9 '17 270w

Pittsburgh 22:651 O '17 20w

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Je 3 '17 500w

DEANE, RICHARD BURTON. Mounted police life in Canada. il *$1.50 Funk 971.2 17-1608

"From an experience of thirty-one years in the mounted police service, the author gives an account of pioneer days in the great Canadian Northwest and of the feats of daring which invested the force with the glamor of romance." (A L A Bkl) "A long account is given of the trial of Louis Riel for treason." (Ath)

"A vigorous, manly style makes the book very readable."

+ A L A Bkl 13:394 Je '17

+ Ath p483 O '16 20w

Pratt p11 O '17 30w

+ Spec 117:480 O 21 '16 160w

"A document which will be invaluable to the historian that is to come of the Last West. It is full of episodes and thronged with personalities, introduced in a soldier style with an occasional touch of the parade rasp, which would help a modern variant of Francis Parkman to many a stirring, significant passage."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p463 S 28 '16 600w

DEEPING, WARWICK. Martin Valliant. *$1.40 (1½c) McBride 17-10202

A historical romance of the time of Richard III. Martin Valliant is a monk. The son of a notorious old fighter, young and full of life and strong of arm, Martin spends his days in a priory, telling his beads and mortifying the flesh to save the soul. His monkish companions, holy men in name only, have laid a plot to try Martin's virtue. He puts temptation away from him. Then Mellis Dale comes his way. She is a girl, tho a brave one, and alone and beset by enemies, and in taking her part, Martin comes out of his cell and throws off his monk's robe to become a man.

"Lovers of realism and of nothing but realism will not be pleased with this story. It is not for them. But to those who have the zest of adventure in their souls, to those who believe in the brave old school of fiction that leads man and woman onward through the old world of imminent dangers, it will make an intimate appeal. It is a story without a problem and with no mission but to entertain. And what better mission could it have?" E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 28 '17 1100w

"With 'Unrest' labelled for America 'Bridge of desire,' Mr Warwick Deeping recently made a not very happy attempt to pin us down to our own world. There he deliberately threw over the romantic code to which, in his tales of old time, he had dutifully clung. . . . He has returned to his machine. . . . But the whole thing is a contrivance, rather cynically rigged up by an expert."

— Nation 104:459 Ap 19 '17 400w

"Never, unless memory be at fault, has he given us a romance in which, with no abating of swift movement or of the number of thrilling episodes, the characters were at once so human and so likable as are the hero and heroine in this tale."

+ N Y Times 22:94 Mr 18 '17 500w

DEFENDERS of democracy; ed. by the Gift book committee of the Militia of mercy. President's ed il *$2.50 Lane 940.91

17-27863

This anthology of miscellaneous contributions has commendatory forewords by Woodrow Wilson, Lord Northcliffe, Theodore Roosevelt and others. Many countries besides our own are represented in the table of contents, among them Belgium, China, France, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Japan, and Latin America. Among the American contributors are Charles W. Eliot, Mary Austin, Robert W. Chambers, Louis Untermeyer, Fannie Hurst, Amy Lowell, Myron T. Herrick and Amélie Rives. A frontispiece in color by Childe Hassam is one of the pictorial features. The proceeds from the sale of the book go to the aid of needy families of the men of the naval militia.

"Contains much of valuable information, many a stirring paragraph of description, appreciation, or narrative, and, not least surely, more than one challenge to thought."

+ N Y Times 22:540 D 9 '17 950w

"There is something here to entertain every one, even if he opens the book with a prejudice against such collections."

+ Outlook 118:32 Ja 2 '18 60w

DE GROOT, CORNELIA. When I was a girl in Holland. (Children of other lands books) il *75c (2½c) Lothrop 914.92 17-24724

The author of this book for American boys and girls was born in Deersum, a village in the province of Friesland, and there are a number of photographic illustrations showing scenes from this childhood home. She writes of: Our house; How we dressed; Our village school; Some of our games; Our holidays; Farm life; The kermls; Our canal-boats; On skates, etc. When she was twenty-one the author came to America and she now makes her home in California.

"A matter-of-fact account. It is none the less interesting and will give children about eleven or twelve some idea of actualities beyond picturesque wooden shoes and windmills."

+ A L A Bkl 14:136 Ja '18

"The book bears the mark of genuine experience and faithful observation."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 10 '17 30w

"Altogether delightful. The illustrations from photographs are well chosen."

+ Ind 92:448 D 1 '17 40w

"Her chapters descriptive of Holland are full of color and information, and her literary style is simple and direct."

+ Lit D 55:54 D 8 '17 96w

N Y Times 22:389 O 7 '17 50w

"What a child saw and heard in Holland makes a particularly interesting narrative, and the book will be read by children and older people alike with pleasure."

+ Outlook 117:100 S 19 '17 50w

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 1 '17 110w

DEJEANS, ELIZABETH (JANES) (MRS SIDNEY BUDGETT). Tiger's coat. il *$1.50 (1½c) Bobbs 17-7810

A Nebraska city gives this story its setting but the woman of mystery who is its central character has a background that includes Mexico, Paris and Belgium in the early days of the war. Driven out of the war-ridden countries she comes to Laclasse, presenting herself to Alexander MacAllister as his kinswoman and showing letters that support her story. But one doesn't know how much of the story is to be believed, and one doesn't know whether to like or dislike Marie. This is the interest that holds the story together, but it has other points deserving of notice, one of them its excellent character portrayal, another the author's fairness in her attitude toward the German-Americans of the Middle West.

"A rather lifeless affair of good promise and of weak fulfilment. . . . The story may be described as a series of anticlimaxes."

— Dial 62:403 My 3 '17 110w

N Y Times 22:258 Jl 8 '17 180w

"The romance is well built up, and, on the whole, well written, though a trifle feverish in parts."

+ — Outlook 115:668 Ap 11 '17 50w

"While the plot is of the stuff from which melodramas are made, the generally good character drawing gives the book substantiality." R. D. Moore

Pub W 91:584 F 17 '17 400w

"The story, though not without vigor, is more romantic and less restrained than this author's previous novel."

+ — Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 1 '17 400w

DE KOVEN, ANNA (FARWELL) (MRS REGINALD DE KOVEN). Counts of Gruyère. il *$2 (6c) Duffield 949.4 17-93

The author has written the history of Gruyère, a town in the canton of Fribourg, Switzerland. In a prologue the "little castled city" is described. Then come the following chapters: Origin of the people; Influence of the church; Sovereignty of the House of Savoy; Foreign wars; The Burgundian wars (Count François I); The Burgundian wars (Count Louis); Struggle for succession; Religious reform; The fall of the House of Gruyère; Gruyère without its counts. There is a bibliography of three pages. The book is beautifully illustrated, with a frontispiece in color.

"Mrs de Koven has the instinct for historical narrative, together with a comprehension of the human side of the matter. She shows us how character and historical fact inter-act; she helps us to live in the times of which she writes." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 F 10 '17 450w

+ Ind 89:273 F 12 '17 60w

+ Lit D 54:770 Mr 17 '17 140w

"Mrs de Koven, who, in addition to her other literary work, established herself a few years ago as a biographical authority upon the life of John Paul Jones, gives fresh proof in this charming volume of her marked gifts as a historian."

+ N Y Times 22:6 Ja 7 '17 450w

DE KOVEN, ANNA—Continued

"The story of the long reign of the Counts of Gruyère is most picturesque. In no other way do we get so clear a picture of feudalism in Switzerland or so graphic an interpretation of its spirit."

+ R of Rs 55:217 F '17 110w

DELAFIELD, E. M. Zella sees herself. *$1.50 (2c) Knopf (Eng ed 17-24709)

Zella de Kervoyou, child of a French father and English mother, educated in a convent school, "from the time she is seven years old . . . is constantly shifting her standards to conform to those of the particular environment in which she happens to find herself. The book is practically the story of the lies, the evasions, the hypocrisies, the heartaches which spring from Zella's desire to be always charming, agreeable, superior." (N Y Times)

"It has none of that shallow brilliancy, that self-conscious cleverness, that clap-trap humour, which marks in every age the work of the tribe of gentlemen (and ladies) who write with ease. It turns a clear, warm, smiling gaze on life and interprets it to us in the very act of making us, too, smile at it. That was Jane Austen's white magic." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:189 D '17 550w

"It is a comedy of youth, in the sense in which Jane Austen's stories may be so called. It has a certain analogy to what was probably also Miss Austen's first effort, 'Northanger abbey,' and in its quiet precision of characterization and dialogue as well as in its well-nigh unerring satirical touch, it measurably suggests the great mistress of British fiction."

+ Nation 105:515 N 8 '17 360w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 105:601 N 29 '17 90w

"This unusual and complex study of character is told with a lightness and mastery of touch and a delightful, pervasive humor not often met in the ordinary run of novels."

+ N Y Times 22:380 O 7 '17 550w

"Miss Delafield has drawn her heroine with sympathetic understanding."

+ Sat R 123:sup4 My 19 '17 230w

DE LA MARE, WALTER JOHN. Peacock pie. il *$2 Holt 821 (Eng ed 16-21123)

A book of rhymes for children, with illustrations by W. Heath Robinson. There are nonsense verses, romantic tales, and lovely lyrics. Up and down, Boys and girls, Three queer tales, Places and people, Beasts, Witches and fairies, Earth and air, and Songs, are the divisions of the book.

A L A Bkl 13:439 Jl '17

+ Ath p51 Ja '17 40w

"Yet even in his poems for children he is more than a poet for children. Each year-laden reader who can look through the magic casement of Mr de la Mare's verses will see among the shadowy figures that flit about the moon-silvered lanes a tiny ghost that was once himself." M. M. Frank

+ Bookm 46:89 S '17 950w

"Mr de la Mare is not an innovator, and his scope is not great; but within his scope he has no superior." Conrad Aiken

+ Dial 63:150 Ag 30 '17 160w

"Mostly they are nothing more than the pleasing little fancies which Mr de la Mare can so well conjure out of fancy, fashioned with that lyric felicity which is not the least notable attribute of all the Georgians whose names are worth recounting and of Mr de la Mare in special." J. T. W.

+ New Repub 12:279 O 6 '17 450w

"Peacock pie was once a royal dish; this book is a royal dish." Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p14 Je 24 '17 200w

"One might exhaust lists of adjectives and yet fail to bring the reader the flavor, the awe, the delight, the haunting terror of this collection of verse, 'Peacock pie.'"

+ R of Rs 56:217 Ag '17 220w

"From cover to cover, the most captious critic may hardly find a poem that is not a joy to meet and to keep."

+ Sat R 123:232 Mr 10 '17 950w

"In the years that have passed since Stevenson brought out his 'Child's garden of verses' we have not seen a prettier book of rhymes for children than this. . . . The poet, in this new edition, is fortunate in his sympathetic illustrator, Mr W. Heath Robinson, whose charming designs reflect by turns the gaiety and sentiment of the verses."

+ Spec 118:21 Ja 6 '17 200w

"The poetry in these two little volumes is, perhaps, the purest poetry for children that has ever been made; Blake and Stevenson not forgotten."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p604 D 14 '16 850w

DELAND, LORIN FULLER. At the sign of the dollar, and other essays. *$1.25 (3c) Harper 304 17-8762

The title essay, a discussion of advertising and an appeal for more attention to human nature on the part of those engaged in business, is reprinted from Harper's Magazine for March, 1917. Some of the other papers have appeared in the Atlantic Monthly. The complete table of contents reads: At the sign of the dollar; Football at Harvard and at Yale as seen in 1910; Some have greatness thrust upon them; A plea for the theatrical manager; The Lawrence strike; a study; Concerning X107.

A L A Bkl 14:14 O '17

St Louis 15:183 Je '17

"Mr Deland's study of the Harvard-Yale football situation is one of the most interesting things he has to offer, but it must have been written before Harvard's string of successes in the last five years. Mr Deland makes it plain that he considers Walter Camp the genius of American football."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Je 25 '17 420w

DELANO, MRS EDITH (BARNARD). Tomorrow morning. il *$1.35 (2½c) Houghton 17-25434

This, "a chronicle of the new Eve and the same old Adam," is the story of the married life of a young couple in the thirties, which, in spite of complications that threaten to make trouble between them, ends happily. Martha, the "new Eve," devoted both to her children and to social work, discovers that although it is already in the affairs of men and women "tomorrow morning," "the millenium is a long way off," and so to keep the love of the "same old Adam," she models her conduct for a time upon that of the "old Eve."

A L A Bkl 14:130 Ja '18

"Martha is an attractive heroine, and little Cecily, whose passion for telling the truth made her a most disconcerting person to have about, a real and amusing child. The life of the little western city in which the action takes place is well portrayed, and the busy life of the modern woman neatly and sanely sketched."

+ N Y Times 22:169 N 11 '17 370w

"A domestic comedy written with charm and humor."

— Outlook 117:510 N 28 '17 8w

"Quite aside from the message that it carries, Mrs Delano's book is interesting for the skill with which she has managed her characters. The study of Bob Ramsey with his blundering, masculine ways, is particularly well done, Martha Ramsey, with her brilliant intellect, her self-control and her uncanny shrewdness, is a little overdrawn."

— Springf'd Republican p17 N 11 '17 310w

DELL, ETHEL MAY. Hundredth chance. il *$1.50 (1c) Putnam 17-10669

The hero of Miss Dell's latest story is a horse trainer and accustomed to work to win even if he sees only the "hundredth chance" of success. This is all that is his when he loves Maud Brian, the beautiful but penniless daughter ter of Sir Bernard Brian. But the marriage of her mother to a scoundrel and the dependence of her lame brother cause the girl to accept marriage with him on terms of her own choosing. An added obstacle to the trainer's hopes is the appearance of Lord Saltash, his employer and the former fiancé of his wife. In spite of the heavy odds against him, his patience and devotion at last break down social differences and win him the deep affection of his wife.

"Readers of popular fiction will no doubt revel in the rough-diamond hero and the plausible villain, the atmosphere of the racing stable, etc.; but the whole has been much better done many times already, and if this sort of book did not continue to appear, classics might receive more attention."

— Ath p311 Je '17 100w

"Once the major premise of her story is accepted there is nothing forced or unnatural in the situations themselves."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 26 '17 330w

"Her method proves that Victorianism is by no means played out, may indeed be rendered freshly effective by a slight tincture of modern 'frankness' in the treatment of sex. Her present heroine is the chill, snobbish little prude whom our fathers admired—at least in fiction."

— Nation 105:16 Jl 5 '17 250w

"The chief criticism of the book lies, not in its conventional situation and artificial character treatment—for neither of these detract seriously from the simple enjoyment of it as an entertaining story—but in the undeniable and glaring fact that none of its people seem to know the most fundamental standards of behavior or of speech. They irritate and alienate where they should hold the novel reader's sympathy."

+ — N Y Times 22:202 My 20 '17 280w

"A strong and interesting story, developed with skill and good taste, and is by all odds the best the author has ever written."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Jl 8 '17 400w

"It is all a wonderfully exciting length of distressing misunderstandings, but we are upborne throughout by the confident anticipation that Miss Dell will never balk us of a happy ending. . . . There is equal certainty, too, that though often dealing with the most delicate and difficult situations Miss Dell will skim over the thin places without ever offending our taste."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p236 My 17 '17 400w

DELL, ETHEL MAY. Safety curtain, and other stories. il *$1.50 (1½c) Putnam 17-29862

The title story of the five in this volume introduces as the principals a man and woman quite out of the ordinary. He is a major in the Indian army—home on leave. She is an elf-like dancer. The safety-curtain that dropped behind her at a moment when the stage is aflame is symbolized by the act of the man whose rescuing of her marks the beginning of a new sensation—that of protection. How, in India whither she goes as a bride, her odd little nature expands in the warmth of the new influence; how ghosts of the past try to rob her of her happiness; and how the strength of the man overcame them is all told in spirited fashion. The other stories are: The experiment; Those who wait; The eleventh hour; The place of honour.

+ Ath p679 D '17 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p542 N 8 '17 150w

DELLENBAUGH, FREDERICK SAMUEL. George Armstrong Custer. (True stories of great Americans) il *50c (1c) Macmillan 17-1602

Elizabeth B. Custer, herself the author of one of the best known accounts of her husband's campaigns, has written a preface to this book, commending it for its accuracy and fairness. The story of General Custer's boyhood is told briefly and this is followed by a very full account of his services in the Civil war and on the plains.

"Written chiefly for young people by a man who knew the West of Custer's day and was an early explorer of the Grand Canyon."

+ Cleveland p83 Je '17 40w

+ Cleveland p127 N '17 30w

+ N Y Times 22:181 My 6 '17 60w

+ R of Rs 55:442 Ap '17 140w

"Gen. Custer's biographer is a man who knew the West in Custer's day and who had even less sympathy than honest Custer for the abuses of the Indian agencies where Indians and government were alike robbed by the most flagrant of grafters. . . . It is a chapter of national dishonor that Mr Dellenbaugh relates. But the picture of Custer is always that of a hero."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Mr 6 '17 300w

DEL MAR, ALGERNON. Tube milling; a treatise on the practical application of the tube mill to metallurgical problems. il *$2 McGraw 622.7 17-13102

"The author states that in the preparation of ores for concentration, cyanidation, and flotation, intermediate grinding by conical and cylindrical tube mills will eventually supersede the work now largely done by stamps, rolls, and chilian mills. General principles are discussed and the construction and operation of the different types explained. Chapter 5 deals with the adaptability of wrought iron and alloy steels as materials of construction."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

Cleveland p110 S '17 20w

"Mr Del Mar's book is worth placing in every millman's library, where it will serve as a ready reference for the tube-mill operator."

+ Engineering and Mining Journal 103: 1083 Je 16 '17 100w

N Y P L New Tech Bks p18 Jl '17 70w

Pittsburgh 22:662 O '17 10w

DENCH, ERNEST ALFRED. Advertising by motion pictures. *$1.50 Standard pub. cb. 659 16-25184

"The use of motion pictures as an advertising medium is not confined to any one business or profession. It is adapted to wholesale as well as to retail business. Moreover, it possesses unique 'business-pulling' properties. It has, however, like all methods, limitations. These as well as its far greater number of advantages, Mr Dench sets forth with admirable brevity and candor."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 13:295 Ap '17

"Extremely up-to-date book."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 31 '17 250w

"Despite a curious belief in the value of slang as a medium for imparting information and ideas, the subject is comprehensively and authoritatively treated."

+ Ind 90:556 Je 23 '17 60w

N Y Br Lib News 4:59 Ap '17

DEPORTATION of women and girls from Lille. *50c Doran 940.91 A17-371

A volume containing a translation of "the note addressed by the French government to the governments of neutral powers on the conduct of the German authorities toward the population of the French departments in the occupation of the enemy," together with "extracts from other documents, annexed to the note, relating to German breaches of international law during 1914, 1915, 1916." (Title-page) Both French and German documents are presented; also private letters. The title is inexact since the deportations included men and boys as well as women and girls.

A L A Bkl 13:395 Je '17

"The chief value of this collection lies in the fact that it presents original data with little or no comment. Unlike the many books which have been published on this phase of the war, it is not sensational but aims to be a plain statement of fact."

DEPORTATION of women and girls from Lille
—Continued

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:363 My '17 150w
Cleveland p58 Ap '17 40w

"In the letters it is more than once stated that German officers and soldiers refused to carry out the deportation order and were confined for disobedience within the fortress of Lille."

Ind 90:298 My 12 '17 50w

"The entire compilation comprises one of the most striking illustrations of the horrors of war that has yet been published." J. W.

N Y Call p14 Mr 11 '17 330w

DE SÉLINCOURT, HUGH. Soldier of life.
*$1.50 (1½c) Macmillan 17-2025

Outwardly this is a pathological study of a crippled soldier's mental state, but, more deeply, it cuts down into human nature to reveal the eternal conflict between the great constructive force, love, and the destructive forces that find their final and supreme expression in war. This revelation comes to James Wood thru Corinna Combe, and it comes only after he has struggled against the menace of depression and threatened insanity, after he has failed to find consolation in a common-sense view of life, which urged marriage with a cheerful, trivial, common-sense sort of girl, or comfort in religion. War has been to him a horror and a desecration, and his sanity is saved only when, thru Corinna, he comes to understand its basic origin.

+ A L A Bkl 13:402 Je '17

Reviewed by I. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:96 Mr '17 400w

"It can scarcely hope to find a universal appeal, but will undoubtedly, be of interest to those who enjoy the abnormal." R. W.

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 24 '17 300w

+ Ind 90:257 My 5 '17 70w

"Whatever weakness the book may have as a story, however, it throws raw light, in its picture of the moral and spiritual disintegration which war may bring to the unhappy warrior, upon a common horror which the belligerent world, waving its flags and chorusing its mottoes, chooses to leave in darkness."

+ Nation 104:369 Mr 29 '17 350w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Nation 104:404 Ap 5 '17 140w

"It will not be strange if Mr de Sélincourt's book turns out to have been one of the most significant of all that come out of the war.

. . . It is the quintessence of war literature. . . . It traces the delicate spiritual effects as no other book has yet succeeded in doing.

. . . You have only to compare it with Mr Britling to get the contrast of its fineness with Wells's blowness of spirit, that utterly pedestrian and easy way in which the re-discoverer of God dresses up again the rumbled soul of middle-class Britain and sets her decently on parade again. . . . Mr de Sélincourt, perhaps unconsciously, has done in the novel what Bertrand Russell is saying impersonally." Randolph Bourne

+ New Repub 11:85 My 19 '17 1200w

"One cannot read it without being stirred to deeper thought and higher feeling."

+ N Y Times 22:33 F 4 '17 500w

"From the very first, its dramatic and analytical power hold the reader's attention and carry him thru the hero's struggles with an interest seldom roused by such a subject. It is more plain human than abnormal. . . . This is as deeply thoughtful a book as any the war has inspired, and one, besides, of beautiful texture and style." E. P. Wyckoff

+ Pub W 91:587 F 17 '17 350w

"A soldier of life' is a thoughtful—almost spiritual—study of the effect of war, and affords food for thought."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 Mr 25 '17 460w

"Perhaps its differentia and its most notable merit are its success in expressing high and difficult matters in terms of a mere man and his human affairs, linked by a carefully forged chain of thought and incident to the complete 'normality' of the opening chapters."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p560 N 23 '16 560w

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:127 Ap '17 90w

DESSON, GEORGES. Hostage in Germany:
auth. tr. by Lee Holt. *$1.50 Dutton
940.91 (Eng ed War17-84)

"A graphic account, by a distinguished French engineer, of his detention as a hostage in Germany for eleven months, with a number of his compatriots. The hardships and sufferings endured by the party were exceedingly severe. The pretext for the imprisonment was that some German subjects were alleged to have been ill-treated in Morocco. The illustrations show some of the places of confinement."—Ath

"He records the suffering and misery of his experiences with the relieving brightness and humor that characterized him and his nine companions in their otherwise unendurable imprisonment."

+ A L A Bkl 14:88 D '17

+ Ath 25:3 My '17 50w

Outlook 117:144 S 26 '17 40w

Pittsburgh 22:761 N '17 60w

DESTRÉE, JULES. Britain in arms (French title, L'effort britannique). *$1.50 (3c)
Lane 940.91 17-25445

"M. Destrée—a Belgian writer who, during a stay of some months in Italy, came to the conclusion that England's efforts in the war were not sufficiently realized by our Italian allies, and was thus led to lay the facts before them—has written a French version of 'Cio che hanno fatto gli Inglesi.' The translation, by Mr J. Lewis May, is now before us. How England, though anxious for peace, found herself involved in the war; her naval, military, financial, and industrial efforts; the union of kingdom and empire; and the reasons why our Allies should have confidence in England, are some of the topics to which M. Destrée addresses himself." (Ath) The preface is by Georges Clemenceau.

A L A Bkl 14:88 D '17

+ Ath p475 S '17 100w

"If an Englishman had written this book we would regard it as a piece of self-satisfied laudation. Coming from a Frenchman, who has given the widespread patrol work of the British fleet and the astonishing development of the British army careful investigation, the book falls short of overpraise, but is singularly just."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 27 '17 250w

"The book, by the author's confession, was hurriedly written; it is propagandist; but its laudable object is to fortify international confidence as 'a preparation for the better days to come'; and it makes inspiring reading."

+ Dial 63:591 D 6 '17 420w

R of Rs 56:549 N '17 30w

"M. Jules Destrée discovered a suspicion in Italy that England was not 'pulling her weight' in the war. It is a suspicion at which we have no right to be angry, for very similar suspicions of Italian slackness have sometimes been entertained in ill-informed circles in England; and this suspicion, in both cases, has been due to misapprehensions arising out of an excusable ignorance. . . . He could have got a preface from no more appropriate author than M. Clemenceau, who has frequently insisted, in L'Homme Enchaîné, that an estimate of our contribution to the war must take cognizance of work done in the factories as well as in the field."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p302 Je 28 '17 750w

DEWEY, JOHN, and others. Creative Intelligence. *$2 (1½c) Holt 104 17-6640

Eight modern thinkers contribute papers to this volume. The subtitle "Essays in the pragmatic attitude," indicates that the unity of the work is one of attitude rather than of conclusions. The first essay, by John Dewey, on The need for a recovery of philosophy, serves to introduce those that follow. It is a statement of the pragmatic purpose, to emancipate philosophy from its attachment to traditional problems. "What serious-minded men not engaged in the professional business of philosophy most want to know," Professor Dewey says, "is what modifications and abandonments of intellectual inheritance are required by the newer industrial, political, and scientific movements." The remaining essays are concerned with some of the specific applications of philosophy to present-day problems. They are: Reformation of logic, by Addison W. Moore; Intelligence and mathematics, by Harold Chapman Brown; Scientific method and individual thinker, by George H. Mead; Consciousness and psychology, by Boyd H. Bode; The phases of the economic interest, by Henry Waldgrave Stuart; The moral life and the construction of values and standards, by James Hayden Tufts; Value and existence in philosophy, art, and religion, by Horace M. Kallen.

"Some of the essays have appeared in the various philosophical journals."

A L A Bkl 13:423 J1 '17

"To the general reader, perhaps the papers on ethics, by Professor Tufts, and economics, by Professor Stuart, will make the widest appeal, though all will enjoy the concluding paper by Dr Kallen." R. C. Lodge

+ Bellman 22:300 Mr 17 '17 470w

"The book is specially noteworthy for its importance as a contribution to American philosophic thought." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 45:181 Ap '17 580w

- Cath World 105:393 Je '17 480w

Cleveland p75 Je '17 40w

Reviewed by M. C. Otto

* Dial 62:348 Ap 19 '17 2450w

Reviewed by R. B. Perry

* Int J Ethics 28:115 O '17 3400w

N Y Times 22:141 Ap 15 '17 450w

Pittsburgh 22:328 Ap '17

Pratt p6 O '17 20w

Springf'd Republican p8 F 3 '17 30w

"There is not an abundance of good philosophy or good writing in this volume. The contributions of Profs. Dewey and Moore are not without interest as statements of method."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 19 '17 200w

"'Creative intelligence,' in spite of its attractive title, is not a treatise for beginners in humanistic philosophy. Yet there are some who like to begin, as it were, at the top of the pyramid and work down—who like the intellectual tussle of difficult beginnings. To these, and to anyone familiar with the concepts of humanism, 'Creative intelligence' is to be recommended. . . . In spite of these appreciative remarks, one cannot help sighing for that exposition at once vivid as lightning and picturesque as romance, which William James was always able to provide for anything he had to say." J. Collier

+ Survey 39:326 D 15 '17 600w

DE WINDT, HARRY. Russia as I know it. II *$3 Lippincott 914.7 18-1412

"The author was previously employed by the Russian government to investigate (for the benefit of English-speaking people) the Siberian exile system and reported not unfavorably on it. His findings caused controversy in the London press. His book deals mainly with European Russia, although there are separate and interesting chapters on Siberia, Darker Siberia, Frozen Asia, the Crimea, Finland, and last but not least, the Russian army. Mr De Windt also describes the characteristics and life of the Russian people."—Springf'd Republican

"If Mr De Windt had made the most of his opportunities what splendid material he had ready to his hand! Instead, we are given a superficial account of men and manners, well flavoured with anecdotes of social life and morals, and strongly redolent of the countless excellent restaurants and menus the author was lucky enough to meet with."

- + Ath p342 J1 '17 800w

+ Ath p364 J1 '17 50w

"Interesting as it is, the material shows every evidence of having been collated with less thought of homogeneity than of producing a book that would sell."

- + Dial 63:526 N 22 '17 500w

+ N Y Times 22:579 D 30 '17 150w

"In telling what he has learned of the Russian character by long-continued observation Mr De Windt helps his readers to a clearer understanding of the problems and perplexities which the new Russia is facing at this moment."

+ R of Rs 56:552 N '17 80w

"His book is no globe-trotter's journal, but a considered view of the various facets of Russian life."

+ Sat R 124:250 S 29 '17 320w

"We could wish that there had been less about Russia as a playground and more about her political, artistic, and intellectual qualities, but only one who knows Russia as a man of the world could have written this book, and it can therefore be safely recommended as valuable of its kind."

+ - Spec 119:12 J 7 '17 1500w

"Although the author may be congratulated on having produced a readable work, one questions whether it has its permanent historical value."

+ - Springf'd Republican p15 D 1 '17 230w

"He can tell as readable a story as anybody could wish to read."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p266 Je 7 '17 400w

DIBBLEE, GEORGE BINNEY. Germany's economic position and England's commercial and industrial policy after the war. *Is Heinemann, London

"This is one of the publications of the Central committee for national patriotic organizations. . . . His analysis (to which the first four chapters are devoted) in headed paragraphs, of German industrial expansion, of the influence of the German government and character on industry, and the dangers of German aggression, is impartial and instructive. Mr Dibblee deals with our economic policy after the war in a cautious spirit. He foresees a tariff, but a strictly moderate one, and a moderate duty on corn. . . . Among 'internal measures of defence' he urges the establishment of a foreign trade office and a system of licenses for employment, transfer of land, company promotion, export of raw material, &c."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"This very shrewd and able little book deserves attention."

+ Spec 118:209 F 17 '17 380w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p638 D 28 '16 160w

DICK, JOHN HARRISON, ed. Garden guide; the amateur gardener's handbook. II 75c; pa 50c De La Mare 710 17-11482

The publishers claim for this book a larger aim than that indicated by the title. They hope "through its medium to win thousands from crowded city homes to the free air of the open country." Among the contributors are F. F. Rockwell, A. J. Loveless, and Charles Livingston Bull. The subjects taken up include: Planning the home grounds; Lawns and grass plots; Hedges and fences; Trees and shrubs; The rose garden; Among the hardy flowers; Annuals and biennials; Garden furniture; Fruit for the small garden; Vegetable garden; Pruning, etc. There are numerous illustrations, diagrams and tables.

"Its twenty-four chapters deal in a way easily understood with the many perplexing problems which confront the beginner and often the professional as well. A calendar of operations contains much useful information, while the chapters on garden furniture and accessories will be eagerly absorbed by the reader who is mechanically inclined."

* This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

DICK, JOHN HARRISON, ed.—Continued

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 1 '17 140w

DICKINSON, ASA DON, and DICKINSON, HELEN WINSLOW, eds. Children's book of patriotic stories; the spirit of '76. 11 *$1.25 (3c) Doubleday 17-25380

Among the stories selected for this volume are: Jabez Rockwell's powderhorn, by Ralph D. Paine; Old Esther Dudley, by Nathaniel Hawthorne; The battle of Bunker's Hill, by Washington Irving; The little fifer, by Helen M. Winslow; Paul Revere's ride, by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow; A venture in 1777, by S. Weir Mitchell; The little minute-man, by H. G. Paine; Washington and the spy, by James Fenimore Cooper. For each story there is a brief introductory note and the table of contents indicates the stories suitable for older and for younger children.

"Good reference material for any children's library."

+ A L A Bkl 14:172 F '18

"A book confessedly more patriotic than historical, since the seeker of sober truth does not interpret the year '76 quite in the spirit of '76." J. Walcott

— Bookm 46:496 D '17 60w

"These are good stories for the children of 1917 to read, both because they are good stories and because, later, the spirit of '76 and the spirit of '17 will have much in common."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 10 '17 30w

"The work of selection has been well done, and the book may be recommended for juvenile libraries, public or private."

+ Cath World 106:551 Ja '18 100w

DICKINSON, GOLDSWORTHY LOWES. Choice before us. *$2 Dodd (*6s Allen & Unwin, London) 172.4 17-29267

"The author's purpose is to describe briefly the prospect before the world if the armed international anarchy is to continue, and to be extended and exasperated, after the war. The origin of the war, and our participation in it, are not discussed; though the author is of opinion that we could do 'no other.' He seeks to analyse and discuss the presuppositions which underlie militarism, and arguing both that international war as it will be conducted in the future implies the ruin of civilisation, and that it is not 'inevitable,' he sketches the kind of reorganization that is both possible and essential if war is not to destroy mankind." (Ath) "Mr Dickinson nurses the belief, not very strongly it seems to us, that wars may be prevented by a system of international leagues and international councils of conciliation. . . . He is quite clear that internationalism can effect nothing unless all the great powers are members of the league. He says plainly that if Germany and Austria are to be left out of this league the thing is hopeless, and there is a vista of wars before us. He also argues with much force that if the Entente powers persist in waging an economic war against the Central European powers, then the economic must be followed by a military war." (Sat R)

A L A Bkl 14:111 Ja '18

Ath p355 Jl '17 110w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:286 N '17 150w

+ Cleveland p131 D '17 60w

"With regard to militarism in England, Mr Lowes Dickinson lays undue stress on an entirely unimportant and forgotten book by Captain Ross in his attempt to find evidences of militarism in countries other than Germany. The value of the book lies in its appeal to realities; its criticism of unreal standards and ideals." M. J.

+ Int J Ethics 28:287 Ja '18 330w

"On the whole, Mr Dickinson presents a strong case against the militarists. A valuable service performed by the author is his collection of scattered statements made by prominent representatives of the allied nations into a formidable body of militaristic doctrine. It is a dangerous plant in whatever soil it may be rooted."

+ Natlon 106:19 Ja 3 '18 520w

"All who respect clear thinking, large-hearted zeal, and generous common sense must respect his expression of his views

+ N Y Times 22:579 D 30 '17 1200w

"Every thinking man and woman should read Mr Dickinson's book, which is a series of powerful arguments, written by a most accomplished disputant, in favour of a combined endeavour by the civilized world to put an end to war. There is, however, one indispensable condition to the success of Mr Dickinson's ideas—international leagues must be in the hands of responsible statesmen, and not under the control of the secret societies or led by cosmopolitan anarchists."

Sat R 124:129 Ag 18 '17 1050w

"We find these books exceedingly exasperating. . . . Their theory of joint responsibility, with Germany as the worst sinner because the most completely militarized, ignores the whole history of Prussia as a predatory Power. . . . Books like these should be read—for even in the worst of them there is much good sense—though their tone and the attitude of the writers towards the mass of their countrymen make the reading rather repulsive."

Spec 119:189 Ag 25 '17 1200w

"The case against militarism—obvious militarism, and the militarism which stalks under the guise of imperialistic policy—has seldom been thought out with keener analysis and closer logic."

+ Springfd Republican p6 D 25 '17 1150w

"His purpose is so manifestly good, his temper is so reasonable, he is so desirous to see things as they are that even those who differ from some of his conclusions, and the many others who miss in his volume a sense of true proportion, will listen attentively to his argument and agree with much of it. There are many pages in this volume which express admirably the opinions of calm, clear-thinking men as to the outlook and our duties as a nation. . . . But the reader who lays down the volume with the sense that he has learned much from it, and who agrees that there are in all countries traditions, interests, prejudices, and illusions making for war," may very likely think that there is a want of perspective in the treatment of the subject, and that certain facts, fit to be noted in season, are pushed into undue prominence."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p303 Je 28 '17 1800w

DICKINSON, THOMAS HERBERT. Contemporary drama of England. (Contemporary drama ser.) *$1.25 (2c) Little 822 17-7563

Beginning with a chapter on The early Victorian theatre, the author covers the whole field from the beginning of the second quarter of the nineteenth century to the present. The chapters following the first are: The decline of the romantic tradition; Adaptation and experiment; Toward a new English theatre; Dramatists of transition; Henry Arthur Jones; Arthur Wing Pinero; The busy nineties; New organization; George Bernard Shaw; Dramatists of the free theatre; The challenge of the future. There is a bibliographical appendix. The author is professor of English in the University of Wisconsin and author of "The case of American drama."

A L A Bkl 14:14 O '17

"A book of quite extraordinary merit." Clayton Hamilton

+ Bookm 45:538 Jl '17 470w

"In a comprehensive bibliographical appendix is given an index of English plays of the past eighty years, arranged alphabetically by authors, and a list of books and magazine articles on the drama."

+ Boston Transcript p7 F 17 '17 750w

Pittsburgh 22:312 Ap '17

"The eleventh chapter, on the 'Free theater,' and the twelfth, which estimates the dramatic labors of Galsworthy, Harkln, Barrie, Craig, and Barker, will assist both the average theater-patron and the dramatic student in discerning the trend of modern plays and give them a better idea of the aims of modern stage producers."

+ R of Rs 55:662 Je '17 100w

St Louis 15:182 Je '17

"Its historical information is interestingly presented, and it is much more meaty and detailed than many works of the kind. There are a few surprising mistakes. . . . In interpretation and criticism Mr Dickinson, while sometimes shrewd and apt, is less satisfactory. He is frequently too abstract, and finespun in his characterizations. . . . This is Mr Dickinson at his vaguest, and it would be unfair to judge the book by such instances of strained and pointless criticism. Yet one fears that these sentences are typical of the instruction which Drama league audiences and literary clubs are getting in this country."

+ — Spring'd Republican p6 F 26 '17 400w

DICKINSON, THOMAS HERBERT. Insurgent theatre. *$1.25 (2½c) Huebsch 792 17-30696

A concise, comprehensive discussion of the artistic and practical sides of the non-commercial theatre. At the outset the point of agreement taken for granted is the conviction on the part of workers that the things of the old theatre must be destroyed and a new theatre be built up in its stead. Without censure against the older order, the writer confines himself to the struggle for the new theatre,—the purposes of those who have started out in revolt; its problems of financial support including experiments in subsidy; the responsibility of audiences to support a theatre intelligently; early experiments showing that the machinery was not ready to carry out the new enterprises; the little theatre; laws that affect management of theatres, for instance, laws against Sunday performances and child-labor; dramatic laboratories; the children's theatre; some of the pioneers of the insurgent theatre, and a closing chapter on the "Art and outlook of the insurgent theatre."

Reviewed by Algernon Tassin

Bookm 46:347 N '17 250w

"It is interesting to compare the attitudes of Professor Dickinson and Cheney. The two volumes make an admirable combination for the theaterlover. . . . The question of subsidy, direct and through subscription audiences, is ably handled by Professor Dickinson, as is the relationship of the college to dramatics in the matter of experimentation." L. Gardy

+ N Y Call p15 Ja 12 '18 250w

"The book is, perhaps, the most comprehensive exposition that has yet been made of what is generally known as the 'modern movement.'"

+ N Y Times 22:578 D 30 '17 160w

+ R of Rs 57:108 Ja '18 110w

"Mr Dickinson is so familiar not only with the subject of the community theater, but also with the ordinary commercial enterprise and the lore and philosophy of the drama, that he has a background for understanding what he is talking about. No wild beliefs in the efficacy of new amateur theaters to build up a new social stratum in America tinge his views."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 D 6 '17 950w

"But this is more than a chronicle of the pioneers and their ventures; it is a clear, balanced and broadminded critique, helpful alike to the play-lover, the actor, the playwright and the producer. The responsibility of the audience is well-defined, the artistic devotion of those who are working out little theaters in town and country is keenly appreciated, and an encouraging outlook for the future is entertained." M. H. B. Mussey

+ Survey 39:447 Ja 19 '18 310w

DICKSON, HARRIS. Unpopular history of the United States by Uncle Sam himself; as recorded in Uncle Sam's own words. il *75c (3c) Stokes 355 17-25097

The manuscript of Upton's "Military policy of the United States," based on Civil war experience, lay filed and forgotten amongst millions of documents in the archives of the War department for twenty-five years. Then it saw the light. It was published by Mr Dickson. He says, "Every word that I have spoken here you will find in there; it has my official endorsement, printed on my presses, franked thru my mails, and sent free to my people. It's true gospel, but folks say it doesn't taste good." Uncle Sam does the talking and he spares no forcible language to take the brag and bluster out of Americans who complaisantly think our war system is equal to the emergency of today. It is an arraignment of the volunteer service idea underlying military policy and a plea for universal, compulsory military service for both war and peace.

A L A Bkl 14:75 D '17

Cleveland p131 D '17 30w

"It is poorly written; the writer, making Uncle Sam the speaker, rips out regular goshing stuff. But the facts are interesting. For one who thrills at military victories, and is ashamed of military defeats, this book is a bit of a tonic. But for one whose interest is in the welfare of the people of the nation, rather than their Prussian prowess, this work is but an interesting sidelight into national psychology." W. M. Feigenbaum

+ — N Y Call p14 O 14 '17 500w

"The general effect of having these facts known to the people should be wholesome and in every way stimulating to patriotism and efficiency."

+ R of Rs 57:104 Ja '18 70w

DIDEROT, DENIS. Early philosophical works: tr. and ed. by Margaret Jourdain. (Open court ser. of classics of science and philosophy) il *$1.25 (2½c) Open ct. 194

This little volume includes the "Philosophic thoughts," the "Letter on the blind," together with its "Addition," and the "Letter on the deaf and dumb," published with notes and an appendix. In the "Philosophic thoughts" Diderot "still figures as a deist." The "Letter on the blind" treats both of the theory of vision and of the argument from design, while the "Letter on the deaf and dumb" deals largely with esthetics. The introduction of twenty-five pages is by the translator and editor.

"Diderot's range is extraordinary, as within this small volume he breaks ground in ethics and aesthetics, in the criticism of religion and of art. The 'Letter on the deaf and dumb' is full of interesting speculations upon aesthetics, which Lessing afterwards turned to account, and the 'Philosophic thoughts,' burnt by the Parliament of Paris in 1746, has still its interest as a breviary of philosophic scepticism."

+ Int J Ethics 27:538 Jl '17 220w

"The main philosophical point treated in the volume is the relation between mental development and sensuous endowment, a point on which some diversity of opinion is still maintained. His conclusion is that 'the state of our organs and our senses has a great influence upon our metaphysics and our morality.' . . . To most modern psychologists Diderot's principle will seem so manifestly true as scarcely to admit of discussion. Nevertheless, the principle has been called into question recently by the new realists, who argue that the human mind is in immediate contact with objective truth. For the confutation of such views Diderot's acute observations upon a blind man and a deaf-mute of his acquaintance are not without value at the present time."

Nature 99:343 Je 28 '17 230w

"This collection of Diderot's 'Early works' is worthy to be studied in connection with Morley's book on 'Diderot and the Encyclopedists,' but it will be found interesting for its religious and esthetic speculations by all readers of intellectual tastes."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Ag 23 '17 170w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p136 Mr 22 '17 1250w

DILNOT, FRANK. Lloyd George: the man and his story. Il *$1 (2c) Harper 17-10671

The author has written of the career of the man who now rules England "with an absoluteness granted to no man, king or statesman, since the British became a nation," as he himself has watched it. Among the chapters are: The village cobbler who helped the British empire; How Lloyd George became famous at twenty-five; Fighting the lone hand; The daredevil statesman; The first great task; How Lloyd George broke the House of lords; At home and in Downing Street; A champion of war; The alliance with Northcliffe; At high pressure; His inconsistencies; How he became prime minister; The future of Lloyd George. Lloyd George's Lincoln day message is reprinted in an appendix.

A L A Bkl 14:23 O '17

"The book will well repay perusal."
+ Ath p473 S '17 50w

"Mr Dilnot has given us, not a critical estimate of the great English leader, for that is, at a time when men feel rather than think, impossible, but a clear, journalistic, if you will, and sympathetic account of the man as he appears to a newspaper writer who has had an unusual opportunity for following his career and a capacity for its interpretation. He is frankly an enthusiastic believer in the man and his policies." J. T. Gerould

Bellman 22:438 Ap 21 '17 700w

"Our thanks are due to Mr Dilnot for the most plausible picture yet given us of the most extraordinary man of the epoch." G. I. Colbron
+ Bookm 45:415 Je '17 1900w

"Mr Dilnot has had first-hand acquaintance with British politics and political leaders for two or three decades, and he has written a substantial book on the dramatic contest over the Lloyd George budget of 1909. The present biography is a simple chronicle, highly laudatory, yet hardly more than the subject seems to demand."

+ Dial 62:529 Je 14 '17 300w

"The Prime minister of the British empire has had a career so meteoric and possesses a personality so unusual that biographers are likely to swarm about his story for many a day. Mr Dilnot's, which is one of the best thus far, is brief, less than 200 pages, but graphic, and aims less to give a conventional account of his life than to present a picture of him that will make understandable his character and career."

+ N Y Times 22:140 Ap 15 '17 1100w

"Lloyd George will be chiefly known, we believe, as the friend of the poor, and this is the thread which runs through the volume, especially accentuated as to labor influence."

+ Outlook 116:32 My 2 '17 220w

Pittsburgh 22:526 Je '17 50w

+ R of Rs 55:666 Je '17 50w

St Louis 15:186 Je '17

"He writes as a candid friend, and devotes a whole chapter to Mr Lloyd George's 'Inconsistencies,' but for all that he contrives to suggest that the history of England for the last ten years has centred in his hero. The future historian will, we think, take a different view."

+ Spec 119:192 Ag 25 '17 120w

Springf'd Republican p17 My 6 '17 550w

DITCHFIELD, PETER HAMPSON. England of Shakespeare. Il *$2 Dutton (*6s Methuen & Co., London) 822.3 (Eng ed 17-17653)

"Mr Ditchfield has provided here a series of pen-sketches depicting in a popular and readable way the England that was Shakespeare's, its religion, the court, the capital, the poet's home, travelling, the great country-houses, the navy and army, agriculture and trade, dress, literature, and the drama, the people's games and sports, the prevalent roquetry, vagabondage, and punishments, and the current superstitions, such as beliefs in necromancy, astrology, and witchcraft. The book includes twelve illustrations."—Ath

Ath p201 Ap '17 80w

+ Boston Transcript p7 J1 7 '17 550w

"Every student of Shakespeare, and, indeed, every student of Elizabethan literature, should read this book. It contains much rare and curious information helpful for the interpretation of the literature of the time. We hope that the author, in a second edition, will expurge the offensive expression 'papists' which constantly disfigures the pages of his book, and substitute the true appellation 'Catholic' instead."

+ — Cath World 106:396 D '17 410w

"The kindly country clergyman shows his real quality when he describes what he calls the country of 'leafy Warwickshire,' as typical of the rest of rural England in Shakespeare's time. 'The England of Shakespeare' is a book that no lover of Shakespeare can afford not to read."

+ N Y Times 22:318 Ag 26 '17 550w

"Making all due allowances for the exigencies of war time, we must still consider Mr Ditchfield curiously careless in small details. Any Latin scholar could make obvious emendations in the lines on p. 200, and there are several misquotations of passages and names that should be familiar as household words. His selections from representative views of the period are the strong point of his book."

+ — Sat R 123:257 Mr 17 '17 1250w

"All the main facts are well known already. But Mr Ditchfield retells them with such enthusiasm and in a setting of such pleasant anecdote and quotation that they must make an appeal of freshness even to the mind saturated in seventeenth-century history."

+ Spec 118:415 Ap 7 '17 1900w

"Especially graphic are the pen pictures which the author gives of the famous queen herself."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 J1 8 '17 250w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p83 F 15 '17 100w

DIVER, MRS KATHERINE HELEN MAUD (MARSHALL). Unconquered; a romance. Il *$1.50 (1½c) Putnam 17-23756

Mrs Diver has written in "Unconquered" a war novel of conventional type. It tells the story of Sir Mark Forsyth's infatuation for Bel Alison, a selfish young beauty, his return from the war with an injured spine, the exit of the beauty from the scene and the entrance of Sheila Melrose, the sweet young girl who has always loved Sir Mark and who is his mother's choice for him.

A L A Bkl 11:130 Ja '18

"As a love-story the book, despite its wordiness, should prove of interest to those who like their war literature flavoured with romance. As an indictment of democratic government it has too much the air of being wise after the event."

+ — Ath p596 N '17 90w

"Mrs Diver has done this part of her story especially well, for it requires skill to make so vivid and yet so restrained a drawing of those early war days." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ja 16 '18 1450w

Natlon 106:95 Ja 24 '18 170w

"The novel is too long, and the latter part of its drags more than a little, but it is written with sincerity."

+ N Y Times 22:468 N 11 '17 500w

"In spite of the thin motif, the book has merits. . . . Moreover, in an age overgiven to revolt against anything which makes for a standard or for discipline, it is refreshing to find an advocate of 'the brave old wisdom of acceptance' as a philosophy of life."

+ — Sat R 124:311 O 20 '17 250w

"As we read the book we live through once again those summer and autumn months of 1914. It is a true picture of the early phases of public opinion in regard to the war, as well as a good love-story."

+ Spec 119:451 O 27 '17 750w

"The only touch of individuality anywhere is Bel's pacifism. The other characters are just puppets trained to make a continual call upon the admiration of the reader. What is still more unfortunate is that Mrs Diver has bespattered her pages with serious discussion in the manner of the most commonplace leading articles of three years ago. . . . We are treated by these solemn talkers to all the old truths which have now become truisms, and the old clichés which have become banalities."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p194 O 11 '17 250w

DIXON, ROYAL. Human side of birds. il *$1.60 (3½c) Stokes 598.2 17-29555

An original study of birds which characterizes them according to their activities. Some are artists, cliff-dwellers and mound-builders, policemen, dancers, athletes and musicians; while others are scavengers and street cleaners, aviators, fishermen, mimics, ventriloquists and actors. The bird court of justice and the bird beauty parlor also come in for a share of novel treatment. Mr Dixon says, "It should be remembered that birds have a life, a point of view, and a destiny of their own, and that our failure to comprehend them in no way justifies us in concluding that they are in every sense below us in the scale of existence. . . . There are birds of as many shades of character and disposition as there are types of people. There are the gay, the sad; the sociable, the reserved; the trustful, the shy; the frank, the deceitful; the honest, the dishonest; the gentle, the violent; the peaceful, the quarrelsome; and so on. However, it should be emphasized that the prevailing note of birddom is one of happiness and good cheer."

"Mr Dixon has a fertile imagination, but he also has a wide knowledge of nature and he is very enthusiastic." N. H. D.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 D 15 '17 950w

"It contains much curious information, scientific and historic, and some that is neither, in a strict sense, but is none the less readable."

+ Dial 63:537 N 22 '17 180w

"Colored plates and many photographs add to the attractiveness of the pleasantly chatty and at times quaintly imaginative papers."

+ Ind 91:189 Ag 4 '17 30w

"It is a very interesting book and one which ought to open the eyes and sharpen the perceptions of most people to whom a tree is just a tree. The last chapter, on 'Trees and civilization,' is full of facts, eloquently presented, to show how great is the necessity that the human world and the tree world should co-operate for the good of civilization."

+ N Y Times 22:289 Ag 5 '17 450w

"The book has a unique interest. The pictures are excellent."

+ Outlook 117:577 D 5 '17 50w

+ Pratt p19 O '17 20w

DIXON, ROYAL, and FITCH, FRANKLYN EVERETT. Human side of trees; wonders of the tree world. il *$1.60 (4c) Stokes 582 17-10453

"Man is the highest form of animal life and the trees are the highest form of vegetable life. They have much in common," say the authors of this book. It is a companion volume to "The human side of plants" and its purpose is "to present the trees as living, lovable personalities—working and playing in a world quite as real and vital as our own; and possessing many habits and attributes which we often imagine are exclusively human." Among the chapters are: Trees that build cities; Trees with a personality; Tree physiology; Trees that are fashionable; Trees with a college education; Trees and their business methods. There are over thirty illustrations, some of them in color.

"The illustrations are good and facts are authentic, but scientists may take exception to the method of presentation."

A L A Bkl 13:381 Je '17

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 3 '17 380w

N Y Br Lib News 5:76 My '17

+ Outlook 115:761 Ap 25 '17 30w

+ R of Rs 55:665 Je '17 230w

"The book is, of course, rather entertaining than scientific, but the devices which it employs are legitimate apart from their object in interesting the student in a further pursuit of the science of dendrology."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 My 4 '17 130w

DIXON, WILLIAM MACNEILE. British navy at war. il *75c (3c) Houghton 940.91

18-1524

The professor of English language and literature in the University of Glasgow has given a graphic account of the work of the British navy during the war. He considers The war at sea—New problems—German tactics; tells of The ocean battles—Coronel and the Falkland Isles; of the North sea battles—the Dogger Bank and Jutland; of the work of the Submarines; of Blockade and bombardment; pays a tribute to the Grand fleet and ends with a summary of What the British navy has done for the world. The author acknowledges his indebtedness to the correspondence columns of the Times and to the Cornhill and other magazines for a number of descriptive quotations.

"Before the United States entered the great war we heard now and then that question of unpardonable ignorance: 'What is the British fleet doing?' . . . The author has with remarkable brevity and brilliancy told the real story of the British navy in the recent war. It thrills the reader, and it is as authentic as it is inspiring."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 15 '17 700w

"Every word of it makes interesting reading; and not a small part of the pleasure the book imparts, is due to the author's clear and flowing style."

+ Cath World 106:265 N '17 250w

+ Ind 92:301 N 10 '17 70w

"As a chronology of events it is of considerable value." J. W.

+ N Y Call p14 S 9 '17 170w

N Y Call p14 S 16 '17 300w

+ Pittsburgh 22:681 O '17 20w

R of Rs 56:325 S '17 40w

"This is a handy little book for the general reader who finds it hard to keep in mind a connected account of British naval operations simply from reading the papers. But if one is looking for a critical analysis of these operations, one must turn elsewhere. As history it is simply a hymn of praise." W. O. Stevens

— + Yale R n s 7:418 Ja '18 950w

DOBBS, ELLA VICTORIA. Illustrative hand-work for elementary school subjects. il *$1.10 Macmillan 371.3 17-13974

This desk manual discusses "the use of sand tables, pictures, and construction work in developing a clear understanding of history, geography and literature." (Ind) "There are about twenty selected projects in detail besides lists of projects carried out by fifth, sixth and seventh grades." (School Arts Magazine)

+ Ind 91:294 Ag 25 '17 70w

N Y Br Lib News 4:103 J1 '17

"Every classroom teacher should have this manual on her desk."

+ School Arts Magazine 17:44 S '17 120w

DODGE, HENRY IRVING. Skinner's baby. *$1.25 (3c) Houghton 17-25433

The Skinners had distinctly "arrived" since the first dress-suit was bought but husband and wife are still dividing "fifty-fifty." How would it be over the baby? Would he be Skinner's or Honey's? He was to be a "regular boy." So much was agreed. And a "regular boy" must have "a clean mind, a stout heart, and a strong body." Could they make him one by working together or must each do a separate part? It took some adjusting but in the end it was "fifty-fifty" still. For his mother taught him to pray while his father showed him the way to the old swimming-pool and to the use of the boxing-gloves. And together husband and wife solved the puzzles that will fall to the share of, if not every reader, at least to every reader's neighbor.

DODGE, HENRY IRVING—Continued

A L A Bkl 14:131 Ja '18

"The little tale is amusing, and the account of Skinner's dreams before the baby came at once funny and pathetic. Baby Skinner himself is no supernaturally virtuous cherub, but a sturdy youngster, energetic, inquisitive, and possessed of that appalling logic which some children wield, to the utter dismay of those who endeavor to cope with them."

+ N Y Times 22:500 N 25 '17 210w

DODGE, LOUIS. Children of the desert. *$1.35 (2½c) Scribner 17-7927

This is the story of Harboro and Sylvia. Harboro was forty when he met Sylvia. He had led the adventurous life of a railroad man in the Southwest and in Mexico. He was solid and substantial, a very rock of firmness and integrity. Sylvia was—there is no other word for her—a light woman. Harboro married her, knowing nothing of her past, and the men who did know and the woman who suspected kept silent out of respect for Harboro. Out of such a situation tragedy must inevitably come. The amazing thing about the story is the appealing sweetness of Sylvia. As the author draws her character, it is impossible wholly to condemn her. The action is played out in two towns that face one another across the Rio Grande.

"Mr Dodge makes both the woman and the man wholly plausible, and it is obvious that he seeks to present them as the victims of an inexorable fate." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 21 '17 350w

"A work of intense concentration and elimination. . . . The author has shown in this latest novel an underlying strength and determination that ought to carry him a long way, and that should also lead him to overcome the looseness of writing that is such a blot upon his careful structure."

+ Dial 62:402 My 3 '17 330w

"The author of 'Bonnie May' has written another book. And a greater difference can scarcely be imagined than that which exists between Louis Dodge's first published novel and this second book which has just appeared. 'Children of the desert' is a study of character and of a problem which has been studied before and which will probably be studied for many a long year to come; it is set in the crudity and the wildness of Mexican border life; it is profoundly simple; and it is sheer tragedy."

+ N Y Times 22:83 Mr 11 '17 700w

"While it is remarkably restrained in tone, free from gunfire and all traces of flashiness, some of its vital features belong to melodrama, and its dénouement, the tragic in Hardy's second best manner, is brought about by a potentially melodramatic device. On the one hand the book inspires serious comparisons; and on the other it makes one wonder whether it is justified beyond the furnishing of an evening's excitement." Joseph Mosher

Pub W 91:972 Mr 17 '17 500w

"Louis Dodge's purpose in portraying the type of woman whose behavior is the central thread of 'Children of the desert' is not clear. Her portrayal proves nothing more valuable than it is possible for a human being to be without moral sense. Mr Dodge handles his theme with considerable skill, but his instinct to drown the novelist in the essayist will not down."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 S 30 '17 220w

DOMESTIC service, by an old servant; with a preface by Mrs George Wemyss. il *$1 (4½c) Houghton 647 17-24417

"This is not a manual of domestic service, but recollections, reflections, and advice to young servants by an old servant who has been in nineteen situations—nine in Scotland, and ten in England—covering a period of fifty-two years." (Ath) "It gives a realistic picture of life as it is lived and thought about by the typical well-behaved, well-treated servant of the old school, rather prosily contented in the lot whereto God has called her, happy to be remembered in the blessings of a considerate master or mistress." (Springf'd Republican)

"The 'old servant's' account, which is carefully edited, is a pleasing record of good feeling on the side both of employers and employed."

Ath p411 Ag '17 60w

"It is a delight to read this simple, moving record. There is emphasis in each chapter on the enduring value of loyalty in every walk of life."

+ R of Rs 56:555 N '17 40w

"With all proper respect for the virtue of contentment there is genuine pathos in the sheeplike quality of the nameless author's devotion to duty. The editor of the book has shown doubtful wisdom or kindness in leaving the author's English at its original loose ends." Springf'd Republican p15 Jl 29 '17 160w

DOMINIAN, LEON. Frontiers of language and nationality in Europe. il *$3 Holt 940 17-15963

"This book is submitted as a study in applied geography. Its preparation grew out of a desire to trace the connection existing between linguistic areas in Europe and the subdivision of the continent into nations. The endeavor has been made to show that language exerts a strong formative influence on nationality because words express thoughts and ideals. But underlying the currents of national feeling, or of speech, is found the persistent action of the land, or geography. . . . Upon these foundations, linguistic frontiers deserve recognition as the symbol of the divide between distinct sets of economic and social conditions." (Preface) The author is a graduate of Robert college, Constantinople, and he has given particular attention to the Turkish situation because of its importance in the whole European entanglement. The book is an outgrowth of a series of articles written for the Bulletin of the American Geographical Society. The several colored maps of the book have been prepared under the direction of the American geographical society, and Dr Madison Grant, its president, has written the introduction.

"Seems qualified to become a standard source of information on the topics in the field it covers." C. D.

+ Am Econ R 7:811 D '17 60w

"A full linguistic atlas of Europe is a desideratum, and the author has come so near to supplying it that one regrets he did not go further and include many more of the available but scattered linguistic maps of different sections. In matters touching the character, history, and relationship of languages, there are not a few remarks which savor of uncritical popular philology, some merely naive in expression, some positively erroneous. But these do not seriously affect the main purpose and value of the book." C. D. Buck

+ Am Hist R 23:171 O '17 900w

+ A L A Bkl 14:19 O '17

"When the author leaves the task of analysis to outline the application of what racial and linguistic conditions he considers the proper bases for boundary-making and their application to present-day political problems, his discussion becomes less convincing." C. L. Jones

+ Ann Am Acad 73:238 S '17 450w

Reviewed by Albert Schinz

+ Bookm 46:293 N '17 550w

"Excellent maps, showing in colors the distribution of peoples, and also showing languages having political significance, greatly aid in presenting the results of the author's study. . . . In size, type, illustrations and mechanical work the book is excellent." H. S. K.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 6 '17 450w

+ Cleveland p115 S '17 30w

"The author is decidedly at his best in treating of the racial situation in Turkey."

+ Ind 91:265 Ax 18 '17 120w

"The material here gathered is of great value to the student of history, diplomacy, and language, and this service does not depend upon the author's theories and solutions."

+ Lit D 55:43 O 13 '17 370v

"Mr Dominian is well-fitted to perform his task because of his familiarity with European languages, geography, and politics; and his work is a valuable contribution to that large mass of data, literary and otherwise, which undoubtedly will play an important part in the readjustment of national boundaries in Europe at the termination of the war."

+ Nation 105:637 D 6 '17 850w

"Supplies a pressing need. In any circumstances the appearance of this book would have been an event of importance to scholars since it is by far the most competent work on the subject available in English. Just now its practical value is so great that it ought not to become a scholar's monopoly." A. J.

+ New Repub 11:337 J1 21 '17 1050w

"The author deserves a special word of commendation for the impartial attitude of mind with which he has faced his facts and endeavored to give to each one its full significance."

+ N Y Times 22:256 J1 8 '17 430w

+ Outlook 116:451 J1 18 '17 150w

Pittsburgh 22:760 N '17 50w

+ Springf'd Republican p15 J1 15 '17 700w

"Anyone who thinks it will be quite easy to adjust boundaries after this war so as to insure stable equilibrium through any simple formula like 'respect for the rights of small nationalities' should read this careful and scholarly study." K. H. Claghorn

+ Survey 38:553 S 22 '17 500w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p599 D 6 '17 130w

"The book is full of learning interestingly expressed, cleverly arranged, and adequately illustrated with typical photographs and careful maps, in one of which he is at pains to leave uncoloured the uninhabited areas, a lesson in accuracy to be learned by many ethnographical cartographers. East of the Aegean, however, Mr Dominian's work is more open to criticism than when he deals with Europe."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p611 D 13 '17 2000w

DONHAM, S. AGNES. Marketing and household manual. il *$1.50 Little 640 17-31012

Here is offered the benefit of twenty years of study and experiment in scientific household management. The instruction covers the following phases of home activity: General rules for marketing; Marketing charts; Menu making; Menu and order sheets; How to select foods—what the body needs; Food inventory; The cellar and laundry; The kitchen and kitchen pantry; The dining room, pantry and dish washing; The dining room and table service; The living room; The chambers and bed making; The bathroom and storage closets; General cleaning—sweeping, dusting; To open and close a house; House inspections; Small repairs, plumbing troubles; The reading of gas and electric meters; Program of work; Household pests.

DORLAND, WILLIAM ALEXANDER NEW-
MAN. Sum of feminine achievement. *$1.50
Stratford co. 396 17-24822

A critical and analytical study of woman's contribution to the intellectual progress of the world. This is "the century of the women," the writer avers. "The course of development of the education of women has been by cycles, and at the present time there appears to have been reached an unusual wave, sweeping on the movement with unusual force and energy." The chapter headings suggest the scope of the volume: Genius and femininity; A galaxy of talent; The mentality of famous men and women compared; The achievements of women in youth and old age; The sum of feminine achievement; Woman's contribution to science; The feminine side of art; Woman in literature; The intellectual correlation of the sexes. An alphabetical table is appended of the famous women of modern times.

Pittsburgh 22:765 N '17 80w

DORR, MRS RHETA (CHILDE). Inside the Russian revolution. il *$1.50 (2c) Macmillan 947 17-31172

A clearly written, popular, first hand account of the dramatic happenings in Russia, during the past few months of revolution and upheaval. Liberal, democratic inclinations furnish the writer standards of measurement and criticism. She points out the underlying aims of the Bolsheviks or Maximalists and comments upon their unfitness for leadership. Among the events which she reviews are the July revolution, the striking activities of Marea Botchkareva, the modern Joan d'Arc who commanded the Battalion of death, the treachery of Rasputin and his tragic death, the part that Anna Virubova played in the revolutionary drama, the passing of the Romanoffs and the leadership of Kerensky. The closing chapters consider Russia's greatest needs—leadership, education, wholesome popular amusements, soda fountains—and venture a conjecture or two concerning what could happen in Russia next. At the moment when the Bolsheviks are attracting favorable notice many of Mrs Dorr's statements and prophecies seem obsolete.

"Does not reflect the changed conditions."

— + Boston Transcript p7 D 26 '17 240w

"An important book of the Russian situation and events leading to it."

+ Ind 93:151 Ja 26 '18 30w

"It furnishes most excellent reading for the host of half-baked reformers who imagine that the world can be created anew overnight, and deserves a wide circulation both among these and among readers who take a saner point of view."

+ Outlook 118:68 Ja 9 '18 100w

R of Rs 57:214 F '18 100w

"Vivid and most instructive narrative. Mrs Dorr's book is an excellent piece of reporting."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 4 '18 730w

DORSEY, GEORGE AMOS. Young Low. *$1.50
(1c) Doran 17-18356

It is for the most part the life of an average young American under average conditions that the author describes. Young Low spends his boyhood and youth in a small town in Ohio. His home is the commonplace, middle-class home, his parents are not without understanding of boy nature, and his childhood is on the whole happy. Yet in two matters, religion and sex, the handicap of his early training remains with him for many years, if not for life. Much of the latter half of the story has to do with the agencies that were helpful in overcoming the effects of his narrow training in religion and his utter lack of training in regard to sex. The person who helped clarify his ideas on this question was Alexandra Lanfere. This woman, who stood in a relation to him that his early standards would have condemned, is represented as the best and finest influence that had come into his life.

"The publishers announce that 'you have never read a book like this. You have never read so frank a revelation of a young man's life—a boyhood and youth intensely American, both in ancestry and surroundings.' This exaggerates matters a little, since we may recall a number of stories of recent years which approach this one in realism of setting and 'frankness,' not to say grossness, of detail. Part 1 of this book gives an uncommonly vivid picture of certain aspects of childhood and boyhood in a small Ohio community. We have already had such a picture, frank without grossness, in Mr Howells's 'A boy's town,' and the two pictures might well be compared as illustrating the difference between protestant and catholic methods of literary art." H. W. Boynton

— Bookm 45:646 Ag '17 450w

DORSEY, GEORGE AMOS—Continued

"There is nothing more remarkable in the story than the way in which the author gets under the mental attitude of Young Low and makes us see its naturalness and its inevitability." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 22 '17 850w

"It is unfortunate that the really excellent presentation of matter should be marred by a vast amount of modern Freudian dogma, which has not yet worked down to reasonable proportions."

+ — Dial 63:163 Ag 30 '17 200w

"Here, for a recent American example, is the 'Young Low' of a 'new' writer who essays to be extremely American in the continental manner—or, it is more just to say, in the continental mood. . . . It refreshingly lacks the Russo-Gallic accent which our laid young 'realists' so frequently affect. It has an excellent autobiographical style, free from bookishness on the one hand and from the conventionalized vernacular of the magazines on the other."

— + Nation 105:177 Ag 16 '17 600w

"The story has the faults that are inherent in its method. . . . Nevertheless, it is an interesting tale, written with vigor and sincerity and a wide and varied knowledge of American life. . . . The author's sense of character is stronger than his ability in its portrayal. . . . He writes with plainness of language upon the sexual impulses, inhibitions, experiences, and knowledge of the boy, the adolescent, and the young man, but there is in all his pages no taint of the lascivious. . . . Artistically the finest feature of the book is the sense of the urge of dynamic forces in American life, in both society in general and in the individual."

+ N Y Times 22:230 Je 17 '17 750w

DOSTOEVSKII, FEDOR MIKHAILOVICH.

Eternal husband, and other stories. (Novels of Fyodor Dostoevsky, v. 8) *$1.50 (1c) Macmillan 17-17080

Three stories newly translated from the Russian by Constance Garnett are included in this volume: The eternal husband; The double; A gentle spirit. In the first story a woman is characterized as "one of those women who are born to be unfaithful wives." The woman herself is dead at the opening of the story, which thereafter has to do chiefly with a man who had once been her lover and his relations with her husband. The husband is he who is characterized in the title, a man who all his life is a husband and nothing more. He is the complementary type to the woman referred to.

"Confused, occasionally incoherent in style."

— Cleveland p103 S '17 30w

"All of Dostoevsky's qualities are in this latest volume, The eternal husband. But so concentrated are they that the Dostoevsky novice would better begin with that poignant, but less extravagant, story, The insulted and injured, or that epic of frustrated aspiration, The brothers Karamazov. . . . Such stories as in The eternal husband, however fantastic the problems of the soul, get deeply into us. We cannot ignore them, we cannot take them irresponsibly. We cannot read them for amusement, or even in detachment, as we can our classics. We forget our categories, our standards, our notions of human nature. All we feel is that we are tracing the current of life itself. . . . If we are strong enough to hear him, this is the decisive force we need on our American creative outlook." Randolph Bourne

+ Dial 63:24 Je 28 '17 1500w

"The eternal husband and The double are over long, and loosely constructed. They are both excellent studies of the abnormal, as is usual Dostoevsky; but they possess one quality which is not at all usual with him, or indeed with any other Russian novelist—the quality of humor. An ironic and rather sneering humor, to be sure, but still undoubtedly humor."

+ — Ind 93:150 Ja 26 '18 150w

+ R of Rs 56:102 Jl '17 150w

"The three long short-stories that make up this volume hardly rank with the best of Dostoevsky's work—although they belong to the greatest period of his genius—but they are interesting as illustrating his methods. . . . The eternal husband is a powerful psychological study of a man of unpleasant type. . . . The second story in the volume, The double, is the least successful, but the last, The gentle spirit, which deals with a man's sensations after his wife's death, is unforgettable."

+ Sat R 123:343 Ap 14 '17 600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p91 F 22 '17 1750w

"The double, was published the same year as Poor folk, but not even Mrs Garnett and Dostoevski together can make it worth reading. The eternal husband is a later work, and the exceedingly powerful close atones for much indifferent matter in the course of the story."

W: L. Phelps

— + Yale R n s 7:188 O '17 190w

DOSTOEVSKII, FEDOR MIKHAILOVICH.

Gambler, and other stories; from the Russian by Constance Garnett. *$1.50 (1c) Macmillan

The ninth volume of Mrs Garnett's translation of the works of Dostoevsky. It contains three stories, The gambler, "Poor people", and "The landlady". The title story follows the fortunes of a poor Russian tutor at a German resort where the roulette table furnished the main diversion—nay more, obsession. The best of him is his love of Follna. Under his eye she debases herself. Disillusionment leaves him easy prey for the fitful caprice of the roulette board. He is drawn into the vortex when the reader leaves him. "Poor people" portrays the struggles of folk of humble life. The story is told in a series of letters between an elderly clerk and a young girl who turns from him to marry a prosperous tradesman. The third tale, "The landlady", tells the symbolic story of a luckless student who was baffled in liberating the girl he loved from the prison house that bound her.

+ Ind 93:151 Ja 26 '18 220w

"Had Dostoevsky never written anything else these stories would suffice to give him rank among the great writers. They are not 'pleasant' tales, they are tales of the kind described by the quotation which heads "Poor people", tales that 'unearth all sorts of unpleasant things,' and therefore the lovers of sugary fiction will do well to avoid them. But those who care for human nature and for the art of writing will find them distinctly fascinating."

+ N Y Times 22:516 D 2 '17 1300w

"The first story in particular seems to us to have a sharpness and clearness of outline which is sometimes lacking in the author's more elaborate works."

+ Outlook 117:614 D 12 '17 80w

"Mrs Garnett is one of the two best translators from the Russian that live to-day, but even she cannot make The gambler, and other stories anything but dull. It is at least pleasant to have in our hands a trustworthy and complete translation of the tales."

— + Sat R 124:311 O 20 '17 70w

"The gambler' is evidently based on a French model, and the humor is forced and metallic, as if the author were not really interested in his theme. The best story in the book is Dostoevsky's first work, "Poor people."

— + Spec 119:359 O 6 '17 920w

"The gambler' will throw a good deal of light upon the processes of the mind whose powers seem almost beyond analysis in such works as The idiot and The brothers Karamazov. If we call it second rate compared with these, we mean chiefly that it impresses us as a sketch flung off at tremendous and almost inarticulate speed by a writer of such abundant power that even into this trifle, this scribbled and dashed-off fragment, the fire of genius has been breathed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p489 O 11 '17 1100w

DOSTOEVSKII, FEDOR MIKHAILOVICH. Pages from the journal of an author; tr. by S. Koteliansky and J. Middleton Murry. (Modern Russian library) *$1.25 (5c) Luce, J.: W. 891.7 (Eng ed 17-20968)

This book contains two selections. Of the first, "The dream of a queer fellow," Mr Murry in his introduction says, "It is an epitome of the problems which tormented him." With this dream allegory is included the speech on Pushkin, delivered on June 8, 1880 at the meeting of the Society of lovers of Russian literature, with additional notes.

Cleveland p64 My '17 70w

"The little story or essay of sombre intensity is a key to Dostoevsky's works." Nellie Poorman

Dial 62:481 My 31 '17 800w

"In the beatific vision described with such felicitous simplicity in 'The dream of a queer fellow,' the quintessence of Dostoevsky's questionings, desolation, strivings and mental sufferings is revealed. One gets the strange feeling that he is telling truths beyond which there are no others." D. Rosenstein

+ N Y Call p14 J1 29 '17 2300w

DOTY, ALVAH HUNT. Good health; how to get it and how to keep it. il *$1.50 (2c) Appleton 613 17-19827

This book by the former health officer of the port of New York tells the layman, in simple terms, how to get well and how to keep well. "It has been the aim of the author to include in this book the essential and salient points in the construction of the body and function of its various parts; also to discuss public health problems, the maintenance of individual physical well-being, the means by which infectious diseases are transmitted and how they may be prevented, the importance of pure air, good water and nourishing food, as well as other matters connected with the subject of hygiene." (Preface) The last chapter deals with "Prompt aid to the injured."

"No better or more authoritative book of this sort has appeared. It is thorough in its treatment of the subject, accurate in its statements and considers with much detail every phase of the question. Dr Doty takes nothing for granted as to how much his readers may know already."

+ N Y Times 22:541 D 9 '17 470w

R of Rs 56:555 N '17 50w

DOTY, MADELEINE ZABRISKIE. Short rations; an American woman in Germany, 1915-1916, il *$1.50 (3c) Century 940.91 17-8352

An account of two visits to the warring countries. "It is the story of what happens at home when men go to war," says the author. She adds a significant paragraph in explanation of her title: "While the men at the front slaughter one another, at home the mothers and children, the sick, the aged, the prisoners, are starved spiritually, intellectually, and physically. Life becomes a fight for existence, a struggle for one's self and not for humanity." The first visit was made at the time of the Woman's peace conference at The Hague. The second was made in 1916. Of particular interest is the account of the second visit to Germany.

"A popular and moving appeal for a speedy cessation of war."

A L A Bkl 13:345 My '17

Ath p368 J1 '17 200w

Boston Transcript p7 Ap 4 '17 550w

"An emotional book, obviously overdrawn, but moving in the extreme."

Cleveland p82 Je '17 70w

"By means of a very feminine degree of intuition, a journalistic sense of observation, a telegraphic style, and a purely American sense of humor, Miss Doty has achieved one of the most suggestive reports of conditions inside the German empire that it has been our fortune to see."

+ Dial 62:484 My 31 '17 370w

"If Miss Doty had entered Germany less prejudiced against the government and the people and with some knowledge of the German language—she was entirely dependent upon interpreters—her book would have gained much in authority. At the same time her experiences are interesting, often exciting, and they are told with eagerness and zest."

+ Nation 105:129 Ag 2 '17 200w

"In spite of the false vividness and foreshortening of reality that is at a premium in American newspaper offices, in spite of occasional 'worked up' sentimentalism and a rather cheap-jewelry style, in spite of trivialities fused with basic interpretations in a common amalgam, 'Short rations' is a moving book. Miss Doty has a real passion for life, the woman's horror at wasted flesh and broken bodies."

+ New Repub 10:sup3 Ap 21 '17 400w

"It is, so far as we know, the best account yet written by any woman on the subjects dealt with." Joshua Wanhope

+ N Y Call p15 Ap 15 '17 350w

+ N Y Times 22:98 Mr 18 '17 380w

+ Spec 119:390 O 13 '17 80w

"Her views are not official. Therein lies their value. But the danger is that, moving largely among the people who have suffered most acutely from the war, she has given a one-sided picture. . . . Miss Doty's treatment of details is so incisive and vivid that the reader seems to share her experiences. Possibly in the long run her tone may strike one as slightly high-pitched."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Mr 27 '17 1000w

"The present volume belongs to that category of books whose chief raison d'être is the reluctance of many educated persons to throw away notes made during travel and copies of letters written home. . . . Not knowing the German language well, Miss Doty got a good many false impressions, and hands on some hearsay of doubtful authenticity." B. L.

— Survey 38:174 My 19 '17 280w

"She writes vivaciously, and observes shrewdly where minor matters are concerned; but her vision of the larger issues is sadly blurred by sentimental tears."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p308 Je 28 '17 670w

DOUBLEDAY, NELTJE BLANCHAN (DE GRAFF) (MRS FRANK NELSON DOUBLEDAY) (NELTJE BLANCHAN, pseud.). Birds worth knowing. (Little nature lib.; Worth knowing ser.) il *$1.60 (2½c) Doubleday 598.2 17-13205

The author has made selections from four of her previous books, "Bird neighbors," "Birds that hunt and are hunted," "How to attract the birds," and "Birds every child should know." Her aim has been to include in this single volume the "birds most worth knowing." There are forty-eight illustrations in color, provided by the National association of Audubon societies.

"The descriptive tables make the book more useful for bird study than 'Birds every child should know,' although, because the birds are grouped under families rather than colors, it has more worth as general interesting information than as an aid to identification. Illustrations are colored but are not as good as those of the other books. Color key and index."

+ A L A Bkl 13:457 J1 '17

+ Ind 91:109 J1 21 '17 60w

"There is a very interesting and informing introductory chapter on 'What birds do for us,'

DOUBLEDAY, NELTJE BLANCHAN.—Cont. that tells concisely their many activities in insect destruction and their consequent commercial value to man."

+ N Y Times 22:254 J1 8 '17 140w

"Compact, but not skeletonized, condensation of a book that has already won its place."
+ Springfd Republican p6 Je 8 '17 110w

DOUBLEDAY, NELTJE BLANCHAN (DE GRAFF) (MRS FRANK NELSON DOUBLEDAY) (NELTJE BLANCHAN, pseud.). Wild flowers worth knowing. (Little nature lib.; Worth knowing ser.) il *$1.60 (2½c) Doubleday 580 17-13204

This volume of the Little nature library has been adapted from the author's "Nature's garden" by Asa Don Dickinson. The flowers are arranged in families, the nomenclature and classification of Gray's "New manual of botany" as revised by Professors Robinson and Fernald, being used. There are over forty illustrations in color.

A L A Bkl 13:457 J1 '17

"Well printed, well illustrated, and admirably adapted for home and school use."

+ Outlook 116:116 My 16 '17 30w

+ Springfd Republican p6 Je 8 '17 110w

DOUBLEDAY, ROMAN. Green Tree mystery. il *$1.40 Appleton 17-24164

"Upon the body of a man found dead by the roadside is a notebook in which is written a confession that he has killed the deservedly unpopular rich man of the village. The search for an adequate motive opens up so many possibilities that the daughter of the murdered man employs a detective to discover the truth. The solution will come as a surprise to most readers."—Cleveland

"The interest is well sustained."

+ A L A Bkl 14:91 D '17

"A conventional detective story, following its tangled clues with indifference to anything but the pursuit in hand, and making a very pretty chase of it."—H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:312 N '17 30w

+ Cleveland p128 N '17 70w

"Its interest is largely due to the skill with which the author keeps the reader guessing as to the outcome."

+ Dial 64:78 Ja 17 '18 30w

"The little tale is entertaining and sufficiently baffling."

+ N Y Times 22:413 O 21 '17 250w

+ Springfd Republican p13 D 30 '17 160w

DOVER, ALFRED T. Electric traction; a treatise on the application of electric power to tramways and railways. il *$5.50 Macmillan 621.3 17-19497

"The author of this book is a lecturer on electric traction at the Battersea Polytechnic, London, and the text is about what one would expect to find in a comprehensive course of lectures on electric traction. The style is appropriate to such a lecture course. In preparing the material for a wider audience Mr Dover had in mind that the book would be useful to engineers as well as to advanced students. A considerable number of illustrations of present practice are naturally drawn from that of Great Britain and the Continent, but American railways have by no means been neglected. The fundamental principles are, of course, applicable everywhere. The author has treated the main subject with the following topics as subdivisions: Mechanics of train movement; motors; control; auxiliary apparatus; rolling stock; detailed study of train movement; track and overhead construction, and distributing systems and substations. He has not tried to cover generating stations and transmission lines. . . . The book is profusely illustrated with pictures and diagrams, covers direct-current and alternating-current railways, contains a great deal of comment as well as descriptive matter, and should prove a valuable reference work."—Elec World

"Noteworthy are the line drawings especially those showing the details of electric locomotives."

Bul N Y Pub Library 21:483 J1 '17 80w
Cleveland p93 J1 '17 60w

+ Elec World 70:216 Ag 4 '17 480w

"We congratulate the author on having succeeded in writing a treatise which engineers and advanced students will find most useful. He is evidently well read in the literature of the subject, most of which is published in the Proceedings of various engineering societies and technical journals, both in this country and abroad, and is therefore inaccessible to many. . . . We have satisfactorily checked some of the calculations, and the book is laudably free from misprints. . . . The numerous references form a useful feature of the book."—A. Russell

+ Nature 99:341 Je 28 '17 1200w

N Y Br Lib News 4:105 J1 '17

"Noteworthy are the line drawings, especially those showing the details of electric locomotives."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p9 Ap '17 100w
Pittsburgh 22:658 O '17 20w

DOWD, EMMA C. Polly and the princess. il 2 *$1.35 (1½c) Houghton 17-29865

The June Holiday home is a sort of glorified old ladies' home. Little Polly is a young philanthropist who, because she is Dr. Dudley's daughter, is a privileged visitor at the home. She interests herself in the group of women, singling out for special attention, Juanita Sterling, a sweet, neurotic woman of forty-one, whose youth and charm were still with her in spite of the loveless loneliness that had tried to rob her of both. Polly must have been born with the reformer's spirit and more than average tact. She was too young to have developed them. She puts to shame many an institution manager and makes a substantial contribution to desirable constructive methods on the human side of institution management. And what of her Miss Nita? Polly caps the program of happiness which she puts into action in the home by a real romance. She sees a prince overcome the dragon superintendent of the home and carry off the princess. What better ending could her lively imagination picture?

DOWDEN, EDWARD; GARNETT, RICHARD, and ROSSETTI, WILLIAM MICHAEL. Letters about Shelley; interchanged by three friends; ed. with an introd., by R. S. Garnett. *$2 (3c) Doran (Eng ed 17-30909)

"The three friends were brought together by their common interest in Shelley, an interest not merely in his poetry, but in every detail of his life. Mr Rossetti and Professor Dowden both wrote lives of Shelley. Dr Garnett meant to write one, and was always collecting materials for it; but he was too busy in the British museum ever to do so. Still, to the other two he was the great authority on Shelley, always ready to help them with his knowledge." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) The letters, the first of which is dated 1869 and the last 1906, have been brought together by the cooperation of Mr W. M. Rossetti, Mrs Dowden, and the editor, the eldest son of third correspondent. The introduction, by R. S. and M. Garnett, gives brief biographies of the three letter-writers.

"Although in recent years we have had many books about Shelley, it is doubtful if we have had any at all comparable to the compilation of letters made from the correspondence of these three Shelley workers and enthusiasts.

. . . In its way, their book is a revelation of the art of biography making."—E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 17 '17 1500w

Cleveland p133 D '17 70w

"It comprises the greater part of the correspondence of three notable authorities on the poet, and reflects the broad-minded interest of each in literature and life in general. The most important general fact to be elicited from them is that of Dowden's independence of the poet's family. These letters show clearly that he followed his own opinion in essentials."

+ Dial 63:645 D 20 '17 400w

"The letters interchanged by Dowden, Garnett and Rossetti communicate something that a biography can hardly communicate; they tell something of the spirit in which such work ought to be done; they make the reader collaborate in imagination with the biographer—make him an apprentice to a master."

+ No Am 206:956 D '17 670w

"They contain some interesting matter in regard to Shelley, as well as speculations on the meaning of Shakespeare's 'Sonnets' and other literary problems."

+ Spec 119:145 Ag 11 '17 90w

"An interest which produces relations so charming must be good in itself; and the record of it puts one in love with human nature, even though it may sometimes set one smiling at the minute labours of the scholar and his mysterious, incorporeal passions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p331 J1 12 '17 980w .

DOWNER, EARL BISHOP. Highway of death. il *$1.50 Davis 940.91 16-21959

"When the last battle of the war is fought and the casualties are figured up it is not likely that the doctors, nurses and hospital assistants who have sacrificed their lives will be forgotten. . . . Dr Downer gives many enlightening facts about them. Among other things he describes the makeshift accommodations where, with inadequate help, the doctors have been forced to undertake almost impossible tasks. . . . Dr Downer had unusual facilities of studying this momentous conflict. During a nine-months' stay in Belgrade he saw the varied changes of occupation of that embattled city."—Springf'd Republican

Cleveland p159 D '16 40w

St Louis 15:3 Ja '17

"The book, which is unusually interesting as a record of real experiences, is illustrated with many photographs taken by the author himself."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 25 '17 200w

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. His last bow; a reminiscence of Sherlock Holmes. *$1.35 (2c) Doran 17-28603

The inventor of Mr Sherlock Holmes and of Dr Watson has again given us a series of sketches relating their detective experiences. Seven of the eight sketches have, however, as Dr Watson states in his preface, lain long in his portfolio. The incidents narrated date back to 1892. The last adventure, from which the book takes its title, occurred on August 2, 1914. In it Sherlock Holmes has placed his genius at the service of his country for the undoing of the agents of the Kaiser. Contents: The adventure of Wisteria Lodge; The adventure of the cardboard box; The adventure of the red circle; The adventure of the Bruce-Partington plans; The adventure of the dying detective; The disappearance of Lady Frances Carfax; The adventure of the devil's foot; His last bow.

+ A L A Bkl 14:95 D '17

"Every story is told with the author's admirable mastery of the narrative art; but it cannot be said that all the riddles worked out by the great detective are, intellectually, worthy of his immense reputation."

+ Ath p630 D '17 180w

"The disappearance of Lady Frances Carfax and 'The adventure of the devil's foot' reveal Sir Arthur at his best, although this cannot be said of the opening stories in the collection. But the detective story writer must have his ups and downs, and the creator of Sherlock Holmes can easily stand ahead of any of his rivals or imitators."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 27 '17 1550w

Cleveland p132 D '17 30w

+ Dial 64:78 Ja 17 '18 70w

+ Ind 92:385 N 24 '17 100w

"It is a good curtain for our hero, and we are not sure that Sir Conan would not be wise to leave him 'at that.'"

+ Nation 105:694 D 20 '17 200w

"These new stories are written with as much vigor and spontaneity as if they had been composed in the first flush of the author's delight in his creation of that notable character. The formula in accordance with which the tales are written, of course, varies little, but the tales themselves are as interesting, as full of ingenuity and unexpected developments, as were the earliest of the adventures in which Dr Watson assisted Mr Sherlock Holmes."

+ N Y Times 22:433 O 28 '17 1050w

"The story of the European war that gives the volume its title is quite the weakest and most obviously forced of the whole lot. . . . The sheer horror; and yet convincing explanation of the apparently inexplicable in 'The adventure of the devil's foot' has not been matched by Doyle since 'The adventure of the speckled band.'" Fremont Rider

+ Pub W 92:2026 D 8 '17 270w

"As for the stories, their impressiveness is somewhat impaired by the frequency with which they end in a confession. The best of them, to our way of thinking, is the tale of the abstraction and recovery of some important documents from the admiralty."

+ Spec 119:718 D 15 '17 600w

"Notwithstanding that the episodes comprising the volume have something of a common atmosphere and a predetermined course of development, the situations are sufficiently diverse to give a keen edge to the reader's anticipation. The author shows wisdom in not placing the action in the present and giving Holmes a hand in ferreting out war plots."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 11 '17 260w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p516 O 25 '17 500w

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. History of the great war. v 2 *$2 (3c) Doran 940.91 17-21928

v 2 The British campaign in France and Flanders, 1915.

"This second volume of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's history of the war relates exclusively to the campaign of 1915. The author roughly divides the three years of war into 'the year of defence, the year of equilibrium, and the year of attack'; and the events of the second were naturally less dramatic than those which more nearly followed the outbreak of war. Nevertheless the present volume comprises narratives of the engagements at Neuve Chapelle and Hill 60; the second battle of Ypres; the conflicts at Richebourg, Festubert, and in the trenches of Hooge; and the long-drawn-out fighting at Loos. The occasions are described when the Germans first used poison gas and the flame of burning petrol, and there is incidental reference to the torpedoing of the Lusitania. From beginning to end the volume is an unadorned but impressive record of gallantry and 'grit' on the part of the troops engaged."—Ath

A L A Bkl 14:53 N '17

+ Ath p420 Ag '17 150w

"This is an important book. It bears evidence of much research and has an authoritative tone. So far as is possible at this stage, it is real history. Such a work will be read with more interest in England than in America. The evolutions of the Durham light infantry and the First royal Irish will naturally appeal more to those who know them than to us who do not. But the book as a whole leaves a powerful impression hardly to be obtained from any other work thus far published."

+ Dial 63:592 D 6 '17 300w

Ind 92:60 O 6 '17 150w

"While the events of the year 1915, in view of all that has happened since, seem nowadays rather like ancient history, it is only by the careful reading in cold blood of such pains-

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN—Continued
takingly written accounts of what actually took place that we can arrive at a correct estimate of the great struggle in its earlier stages."

+ Lit D 55:46 D 29 '17 370w

"It is somewhat of a pity that more illuminating maps have not been provided for an otherwise important and notable historical volume."

+ — New Repub 13:sup18 N 17 '17 180w

+ R of Rs 57:214 F '18 50w

"In his first volume the author described the doings of the British Army in France and Flanders during 1914, and he is able to say in the preface to his second volume which is before us that no serious correction has been made of any of the facts in the first volume. That is a proud statement for any writer to be able to make in the circumstances. We can premise that Sir A. Conan Doyle will be able to say the same thing of his second volume, and be able to say it in an even higher degree, because when an author has established his reputation for correctness, and for a safe and just handling of his material, information flows into him. That is his proper reward. We imagine that Sir A. Conan Doyle has been freely given official information, and certainly we have read nothing about the second battle of Ypres and Loos which can compare for completeness with the narratives in the second volume."

+ Spec 118:88 JI 28 '17 1350w

"The narrative reduces itself to a catalogue of the doings of battalions, of the names of the individuals who principally distinguished themselves, and of the casualties of different units. Probably Sir Arthur, knowing the limitations of his material, attempted no more than this; and we may say at once that he has been successful in weaving his scanty matter into a lively and spirited story."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p333 JI 19 '17 1600w

DRESSER, HORATIO WILLIS. Handbook of the new thought. *$1.25 (3c) Putnam 131 17-13214

In his exposition of new thought, which forms the first chapter, the author differentiates it from Christian science, the Emmanuel movement, etc. The author says, "The 'old' thought against which the 'new' reacts is any form of authority, whether medical or ecclesiastical, in so far as physicians and churches keep people in subjection to creeds." The second chapter gives a historical sketch of the movement. This is followed by chapters on: The silent method; Estimate; The mental theory of disease; Reconstruction; Practical suggestions.

A L A Bkl 13:423 JI '17

"Will, no doubt, be helpful to many readers but it is a balling attempt to show that theories do not matter, so long as one has the right 'point of view.' Its logic is distressingly confusing to one who has been contaminated by materialist science; but there must be something in it, since Mr Dresser's books—more than a dozen of them—are widely read by all sorts and conditions of men and women."

+ — Ind 91:512 S 29 '17 80w

"Is to be especially commended to those who desire a brief but comprehensive view of the nature, history, and aims of the movement. No one is better qualified than Dr Dresser to present an authoritative account of the new thought, both because of his long association with it and also because of his very reasonable and even empirical way of looking at the whole subject."

+ Natlon 105:698 D 20 '17 400w

"Does away with misunderstanding."

+ R of Rs 56:106 JI '17 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p432 S 6 '17 80w

DRESSER, HORATIO WILLIS, ed. Spirit of the new thought. *$1.25 (2½c) Crowell 131 17-14165

Twenty-two messages from original leaders of new thought. The editor contributes an introduction which traces the movement from its beginning, showing that the term was first used in 1895 as the name of a little periodical issued in Melrose, Mass., and later by the adherents who practiced mental healing. The influence of Quinby upon the movement is traced and the essential difference between new thought and Christian science is pointed out. Some of the essays are: The gospel of healing; Can disease be entirely destroyed? The disease of apprehensiveness; Concentration; Is mental science enough? Criticisms of the new thought; The metaphysical movement; The new thought today; The laws of divine healing.

Nation 105:698 D 20 '17 230w

"This greatly needed volume should dispel a widely prevalent misunderstanding and neglect of the revival of primitive Christianity now advancing under the banner of new thought."

+ Outlook 117:144 S 26 '17 150w

"Nearly all of the essays have a bearing on the life of everyday and are vivified by a spirit of helpfulness and optimism."

+ R of Rs 56:106 JI '17 60w

DRESSER, HORATIO WILLIS. Victorious faith; moral ideals in war time. *$1 (2c) Harper 172.4 17-24116

A helpful analysis of the modification of duties which the changing order of the things in the world today makes imperative. Some old philosophies must be scrapped according to the Shavian method and created new; while others must be readjusted to meet new conditions. We need a new method of thought to face new conditions with efficient hope. The mind must be alert to seek amidst present confusion new signs of the eternal values. The discussion offers constructive suggestions for meeting the new problems of the day which demand poise as a basis for service and an inner life that will be efficient. Contents: The sources of faith; Tendencies of the age; The psychology of war; The higher resistance; The moral values; The new idea of God; Christianity in war-time; The pathway of faith; Spiritual democracy.

"The author offers a constructive faith which may help the world work its way to a final spiritual democracy."

+ A L A Bkl 14:73 D '17

Bookm 46:230 N '17 20w

"The viewpoints of the essays are finely optimistic. Strength-giving to those whose faith in Christianity needs strengthening. Splendidly vivifying to those Americans who 'creditably or discreditably' felt they had no share in the world war, before April, 1917."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 3 '17 310w

+ Outlook 117:184 O 3 '17 150w

DROWN, EDWARD STAPLES. Apostles' creed to-day. (Church principles for lay people) *$1 (4c) Macmillan 238 17-3743

In his first chapter the author asks the question: Is a creed a restraint on religious liberty? His consideration of the nature of freedom leads him to the conclusion that "Freedom exists in proportion as the community has come to a true realization of itself, and has expressed itself in true laws. Freedom consists in right relation to law." He finds the Apostles' creed a true expression of man's relation to God and therefore a guarantee to religious freedom. The five chapters of the book are: Creeds and Liberty; The origin and character of the Apostles' creed; The creed and the Bible; The interpretation of the Apostles' creed to-day; The value and use of the creed to-day.

"The author summarizes Dr McGiffert's theory of the origin of the creed; and then seeks to reinterpret its clauses in terms of modern thought."

Ind 90:474 Je 9 '17 50w

"The book is an earnest contribution from the Episcopal church to conservative theological thought."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Mr 16 '17 520w

DRUMMOND, HAMILTON. Greater than the greatest. *$1.50 Dutton A17-1641

"A tale of the thirteenth century struggle between emperor and pope. It is not a story of men and women whose lives merely touched the great events of the time, but of those great events themselves and of the people who actually played the leading parts therein. Across the stage of Mr Drummond's book go pope and emperor, cardinal and warrior of mediaeval Rome. . . . The heroine of the novel is Bianca Pandone, a beautiful girl of the Marches, whose uncle, risen to eminence as a cardinal, forgets her and her poverty until he needs a tool for his ambitious schemes."—N Y Times

+ Boston Transcript p12 Ap 7 '17 200w

"A harmless romance. . . . It lacks imaginative power, and so makes no deep impression."

Ind 90:594 Je 30 '17 50w

+ Nation 104:460 Ap 19 '17 200w

"The story has the prime characteristic of a good historical novel; it presents an atmosphere. And it has a quality, besides, that is not always found in stories of adventures—their characters are exceedingly well-drawn."

+ N Y Times 22:178 My 6 '17 350w

"A workmanlike historical tale."

+ Outlook 115:622 Ap 4 '17 10w

DRYDEN, JAMES. Poultry breeding and management. il *$1.60 (1½c) Judd 636.5

16-23156

The author teaches poultry husbandry in the Oregon agricultural college. The book is planned for the student and for the practical poultry farmer. Contents: Historical aspect; Evolution of modern fowl; Modern development of industry; Classification of breeds; Origin and description of breeds; Principles of poultry breeding; Problem of higher fecundity; Systems of poultry farming; Housing of poultry; Kind of house to build; Fundamentals of feeding; Common poultry foods; Methods of feeding; Methods of hatching chickens; Artificial brooding; Marketing eggs and poultry; Diseases and parasites of fowls. The book is fully illustrated.

"A reliable, popular yet scientific treatment."

+ A L A Bkl 13:295 Ap '17

DUBNOV, SEMEN MARKOVICH. History of the Jews in Russia and Poland, from the earliest times until the present day; tr. from the Russian by I. Friedlaender. 2v v 1 $1.50 (1c) Jewish pub. 296 (16-16352)

v 1 This is the first of two volumes covering the history of the Jews in Russia and Poland. The Russian work of which it is a translation was prepared, Mr Friedlaender says, especially for the Jewish publication society of America. The author had treated the subject earlier in a general history of the Jewish people in three volumes, and that work has been drawn on in preparing the present work. Volume one carries the history down to the death of Alexander I in 1825 with chapters on: The Jewish Diaspora in eastern Europe; The Jewish colonies in Poland and Lithuania; The autonomous center in Poland at its zenith (1501-1648); The inner life of Polish Jewry at its zenith; The autonomous center in Poland during its decline (1648-1772); The inner life of Polish Jewry during the period of decline; The Russian quarantine against the Jews (till 1772); Polish Jewry during the period of the partitions; The beginnings of the Russian régime; The "enlightened absolutism" of Alexander I; The inner life of Russian Jewry during the period of "enlightened absolutism"; The last years of Alexander I.

"It is surprising and disappointing that in a work of this kind there is no attempt made to discuss in an impartial and in an intelligent manner the Jewish problem, which is neither simple nor one-sided. . . . Although authorities are not always quoted there is no reason to question the author's accuracy and honesty and one may accept his statements of fact. The work is valuable so far as it goes; but the reader cannot help wishing that the author had gone deeper and had given something more than mere information. The translator seems to have done his work well, and it is probably not his fault that the book does not read more easily."

+ Am Hist R 22:626 Ap '17 500w

"A full account, by the best authority on the subject, of the political conditions under which the Jews have lived. . . . It is much more detailed than Friedlaender's 'Jews of Russia and Poland' and is valuable to anyone interested in the subject."

+ A L A Bkl 13:329 My '17

+ Ind 90:517 Je 16 '17 60w

N Y Br Lib News 3:167 N '16

Pittsburgh 21:516 N '16

+ R of Rs 54:458 O '16 100w

DUBOIS, JAMES T., AND MATHEWS, GERTRUDE SINGLETON. Galusha A. Grow, father of the homestead law. il *$1.75 Houghton 17-11003

"Galusha A. Grow, while never occupying a place in the front rank of American statesmen, was yet a prominent man during the Civil war—he was speaker of the national House of representatives in 1861 and 1862—and the years immediately preceding it. . . . Before the passage of Mr Grow's 'Homestead act,' the public lands had been sold by the government to speculators, who disposed of them, sometimes at extortionate profits, to the needy settlers. . . . After years of setbacks and disappointments, Mr Grow's measure finally passed in 1861. Before that time, however, it had become inextricably mixed up with the Kansas-Nebraska and slavery questions. In the opinion of President Lincoln, the 'Homestead' act was the most beneficent legislation ever passed by a law-making body."—Springf'd Republican

"As a life of Grow this book will hardly justify itself, for its basis is too slight; but as a sketch of a portion of the history of the public domain it will have a use." F: L. Paxson

+ Am Hist R 23:221 O '17 500w

+ Lit D 54:1423 My 12 '17 700w

Pittsburgh 22:525 Je '17 40w

"An important contribution to American biography, and a highly readable book as well. . . . Not the least interesting part of this readable volume is that relating to the services of Mr Grow as speaker in Congress during the troublous days of the Civil war."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 My 21 '17 400w

DUFF, JAMES DUFF, ed. Russian realities and problems. *$1.50 (3c) Putnam 914.7 (Eng ed 17-13746)

"This very able and illuminating little book contains six lectures delivered at the last Cambridge summer meeting by Paul Milyoukov, New Russia's foreign minister; Peter Struve, the economist; Roman Dmowski, the Polish leader; Lappo-Danilevsky, the historian; and Dr Harold Williams, the Daily Chronicle's correspondent, whose knowledge of Russian languages and manners is unsurpassed by any native. . . . Mr Struve's parallel between Russia and America as two vast and but partly developed countries in the colonial stage is extremely suggestive."—Spec

"We have never read anything half so good, on 'The nationalities of Russia,' as Dr Williams's clear and impartial statement of a stupendous problem, of which the Finnish and Polish questions are but fragments. . . . Every one who wants to understand Russia should make a point of reading this remarkable book."

+ Spec 118:493 Ap 28 '17 320w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p171 Ap 12 '17 1000w

DUFFERIN AND AVA, HARIOT GEORGINA (HAMILTON) HAMILTON-TEMPLE-BLACKWOOD, dowager marchioness of. My Russian and Turkish journals. il *$3.75 Scribner (*10s 6d Murray, London) 17-2676

"The author's letters to her mother, written in the years 1879-84, are the material of which this book is composed. The late Lord Duf-

DUFFERIN AND AVA, H. G.—Continued
ferin during the period in question was at first ambassador to Russia, and later at Constantinople; but the letters relate only to the social life in the embassies and to the writer's personal experiences in the countries visited. Germany was one of these; and accounts are given of visits to the Emperor William I and the late Prince Bismarck. Lord and Lady Dufferin were in Petrograd at the time of the assassination of the Emperor Alexander II, whose funeral obsequies are described.—Ath

"Lady Dufferin would feel either amused or horrified to think that these journals were to be submitted to critical review; or that they were to be estimated for anything other than what they really are: a casual record of the trivial commonplaces of an ambassador's household. . . . We are quite disposed to take this book in the spirit in which it is offered, as a somewhat unusual memento for a war subscription." C. E. Fryer

Am Hist R 22:901 J1 '17 330w

"The letters are quite pleasant reading, and many celebrities figure in the volume; among them, Sir Richard Francis (then Mr) Burton, George Augustus Sala, Sir Archibald Allison, Baker Pasha, and Madame Schlemann, wife of the archaeologist and explorer."

+ Ath p49 Ja '17 220w

"The portions of the journals visualizing Turkish life give a succession of pictures seldom presented; visits to various harems, Turkish dinner parties, weddings, etc., which few foreigners see." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 9 '17 800w

"Pleasant accounts of personal experiences and social life."

+ Cleveland p116 S '17 40w

"It is difficult to convey an adequate idea of the delicately archaic flavor of these letters from a period presenting such a sharp contrast to the present one in Russia and Turkey. Their chief interest, however, is in the brightly reflected personality of a gracious lady."

+ N Y Times 22:378 O 7 '17 570w

"Particularly valuable for its detailed but interesting information concerning the customs and ceremonies of 'high life' in these countries."

+ Pittsburgh 22:670 O '17 30w

Pratt p46 O '17 20w

+ Spec 118:241 F 24 '17 130w

"Lady Dufferin has deliberately confined herself to the externals of ambassadorial life."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p570 N 30 '16 1600w

"Her journals, though entirely without intellectual distinction, are filled with agreeable gossip, and portraits of world-figures; her detailed account of dining with Bismarck is well worth reading." W. L. Phelps

+ Yale R n s 7:187 O '17 120w

DUGARD, HENRY. Battle of Verdun; tr. by F. Appleby Holt. il *$1.50 (3c) Dodd 940.91 (Eng ed 17-8208)

The time covered in this account of the battle of Verdun is from February 21 to May 7. As an introduction to the battle proper there are two brief chapters on Verdun and its past and Verdun during the war. These are followed by The Crown prince's battle; The choice of ground; The battlefield; The French positions; The assaulting army; Before the battle; The first shock; etc. The closing chapter, The German attitude, gives a poll of the German press. There is a folding map as frontispiece.

A L A Bkl 14:53 N '17

"A complete and on the whole dispassionate history of the battle."

+ Cleveland p86 J1 '17 40w

+ N Y Times 22:323 S 2 '17 140w

Pittsburgh 22:681 O '17 10w

St Louis 15:314 S '17 10w

+ Spec 118:105 Ja 27 '17 50w

DUNBAR, CHARLES FRANKLIN. Theory and history of banking *$1.50 (2c) Putnam 332 17-31428

A third edition, revised and enlarged by Oliver M. W. Sprague. It contains three new chapters, those on Foreign exchange, Central banks and The Federal reserve banking system. Two chapters of the former edition have been dropped, the one on Combined reserves and that on the Bank of Amsterdam. The chapter on Daily redemption has been merged with the chapter on Bank-notes. The writer states that emphasis on the interdependence of all the banks of a country in the regular conduct of business of banking is the most fundamental difference between this and the earlier editions.

DUNCAN, FRANCES (MRS JOHN LEROY MANNING). Joyous art of gardening. il *$1.75 (3½c) Scribner 716 17-12144

"This little book is designed to serve as first aid to the beginning gardener. It is arranged to be of use especially to the owner of the small place who plans and makes his own garden, and whose means and time are not unlimited. . . . Therefore, only those plants which are surest to grow are properly within the compass of this book." (Preface) Parts of the book are reprinted from the Century Magazine, Ladies' Home Journal, Country Life in America, and other periodicals. Among the chapters are: In praise of gardening; Suburban gardening; Fitting the garden to the house; The garden in town; The back-yard fence; The use and abuse of the pergola; Why gardens go wrong; The old-fashioned garden. The author is a member of the council of the Woman's national farm and garden association.

"It will be particularly useful to the owner of a small place whose means and time are not unlimited."

+ Agricultural Digest 2:505 Je '17 200w

"Besides good advice on operation and cultivation, it gives information on pergolas, lattices, and trellises, cold frames, hotbeds and garden seats and their arrangement."

+ A L A Bkl 14:48 N '17

"Clear and reliable working directions for the beginning amateur whose ground, means, and time are alike limited."

+ Cleveland p113 S '17 50w

+ Dial 63:68 J1 19 '17 300w

"The feature of the book is its treatment of details often overlooked or mistreated, and its emphasis on the unpretentious, restful qualities that lie within the compass of any plot, be it small or large."

+ Ind 90:554 Je 23 '17 130w

"Frankly a handbook. . . . It is practical, it does not presuppose a great amount of knowledge on the part of the gardener; it assumes only the love of plants and the desire for them. It is detailed; it gives actual concrete directions, outlines a garden calendar, takes up the fine points of many a specific inquiry. It is admirably inclusive. . . . It is a most excellent book."

+ N Y Times 22:187 My 13 '17 350w

Pratt p29 O '17 10w

"It has a literary quality that puts it rather outside the class of ordinary gardening manuals or handbooks. Miss Duncan has adopted a certain informality of treatment that makes her book doubly interesting to the amateur for whom it was written."

+ R of Rs 55:864 Je '17 130w

St Louis 15:176 Je '17

"A book of first-aid to the amateur. . . . While it is but one of many such volumes it is sure to be one of the most popular."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Je 3 '17 250w

DUNCAN-JONES, ARTHUR STUART. Ordered liberty; or, An Englishman's belief in his church. *$1.25 (4c) Longmans 283 A17-1509

Based upon the Hulsean lectures delivered before the University of Cambridge, 1916-1917. It is a forward looking justification of the church and Christianity in which the writer reviews the true character of the Anglican communion. He considers the question under various aspects: as sharing in the Divine foundation and continuous life of the people of God; as part of that great priesthood of humanity which is the Catholic church; as emerging from the Roman government of western Christendom and making a bold national experiment in the way of religion; as adhering to its ideals of faith; and as developing, in the face of difficulties, out of the origins of the past, a permanent stronghold of truth and righteousness for the union and triumph of the people of God. A very modern note is struck in the author's linking socialism in its broadly spiritual aspect with Christianity as the two great "driving powers which can turn the ideal for which the world longs into faith."

"A timely little book. It is interesting, clear and thoughtful. The temperate tone and the evident desire to understand differences and contribute a constructive program give it a message that many will read with profit."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 S 16 '17 550w

DUNHAM, MELBOURNE KEITH. Automobile welding with the oxy-acetylene flame. il $1 (3c) Henley 682 16-22111

"A practical treatise, covering the repairing of automobiles by welding, with a non-technical explanation of the principles to be guided by in the successful welding of the various metals." (Title-page) The preface says further. "The workman who can successfully weld all automobile parts is capable of welding anything, since in the construction of the automobile practically every commercial metal is used. The principles of automobile welding are applicable to all kinds of welding." Contents: Apparatus knowledge; Shop equipment and initial procedure; Cast iron; Aluminum; Steel; Malleable iron, copper, brass, bronze; Carbon burning and other uses of oxygen and acetylene; How to figure cost of welding.

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p11 Jl '17 50w

"Practical, simply written work, of wider application than to automobile welding."

+ Pittsburgh 22:321 Ap '17 30w

DUNN, BYRON ARCHIBALD. Boy scouts of the Shenandoah. (Young Virginians ser.) il *$1.10 McClurg 16-20109

"The Boy scouts of the Shenandoah' is the first of a new series of Civil war stories for boys. . . . The volume follows the adventures of Robert Hunter, who represents the Virginian aristocracy and Jim Kidder, a young mountaineer. The two boys are independent scouts with the Union army, and their adventures are many and thrilling."—Springf'd Republican

"This is the type of book that contains much information, and evidently the author's desire has been to verify his historical statements, for there are many foot-notes throughout the book."

+ Lit D 53:1561 D 9 '16 110w

R of Rs 55:108 Ja '17 20w

Springf'd Republican p15 F 11 '17 80w

DUNN, WALDO HILARY. English biography. (Channels of English literature) *$1.50 Dutton 920 17-4579

"Prof. Dunn considers his subject both chronologically and analytically. His conclusion regarding 'true biography' is that its aims include a record of facts combined with some portrayal of character. Biography, he says, may be said to develop in proportion to the degree of accuracy attained in the presentation of mere facts; the measure of its detachment from panegyric, or other didactic intention, and the extent to which it recognizes truth of character portrayal as its first duty." . . . Prof. Dunn wisely takes a broad view of his subject matter, even if he is somewhat rigid in his definitions. He notes that the diaries of Pepys and Evelyn must be reckoned as biographical, as, of course, must the journals of Wesley, Fox and Scott. Fiction's debt to biography is considered."—Springf'd Republican

+ A L A Bkl 13:399 Je '17

"In general, Professor Dunn's survey of the entire course of English biography is thorough and unprejudiced." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 24 '17 630w

"The treatment is not only historical, but includes some valuable definitions of the function and place of biography in letters, and its relation to other subjects, notably fiction, and also some excellent critical material on specific biographies. The unattractive make-up and fine print of the book will affect its popularity."

+ Cleveland p104 S '17 100w

"It does for English biography what another pioneer work of a few years ago did for autobiography; we mean Mrs Burr's treatise on that theme. . . . In its appended matter and its index the book maintains the scholarly system with which it begins. It is a useful manual."

+ Dial 62:532 Je 14 '17 200w

"It is no mere chronicle of names, but rather a thoughtful and interesting analysis of the true function of biography as a literary art. . . . It is a book which has much matter for reflection both for the critic and for the composer of biography, fiction, and history."

+ Nation 104:354 My 3 '17 100w

"Professor Dunn is to be congratulated for his able work, done with no previously written volumes to serve as standards. Indeed, with his skillful scholarship, interesting writing, and careful organization of his material, he may well be said to have established such a standard. 'English biography' stands the test of comparison with the best scholarly work yet done by American or foreign writers."

+ N Y Times 22:191 My 13 '17 550w

"Prof. Dunn's book affords proof of the richness and large extent of English biographical works, and should encourage the public to enlarge its reading in an entertaining and highly profitable department of letters."

Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 1 '17 780w

DUNSANY, EDWARD JOHN MORETON DRAX PLUNKETT, 18th baron. Plays of gods and men. *$1.50 Luce, J: W. 822 17-13749

Four of Lord Dunsany's plays are included in this volume: The tents of the Arabs; The laughter of the gods; The queen's enemies; and A night at an inn. The first of these, Edward Bierstadt in his recent study of Lord Dunsany says, is the only one of his plays that contains anything nearly approaching a love story. It appeared in the Smart Set for March, 1915 and was produced at the Arts and crafts theater in Detroit in 1916. "A night at an inn" was published by The Sun-Wise Turn, inc., in 1916 and has been played, as has "The queen's enemies," by the Neighborhood Players of New York city.

+ A L A Bkl 14:49 N '17

"A night at an inn' is the only one that does not seem too poetical to be in prose. The ideality which is the basis demands, at least in part, a metrical form for the others. Prose belongs to realism."

+ Ath p412 Ag '17 250w

"A night at an inn' is the climax of terror in the collection, but for sheer beauty there is none of these plays to compare with the poetic charm of 'The tents of the Arabs,' which is one of the most beautiful things which Lord Dunsany has ever written." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 18 '17 1250w

"Reading these plays, one marvels at the simplicity of their action and wonders if Lord Dunsany will be able much longer to follow the vein that has proved so golden, with results so large and, it may be said, so monotonous."

+ N Y Times 22:286 Ag 5 '17 160w

"The laughter of the gods' is written with the delicate satire characteristic of the author, and the subtle horror in 'A night at an inn'

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

DUNSANY, E. J. M. D. P., 18th baron—Cont. will, we think, make it difficult for the reader to put it aside until the last word has been read."

+ Spec 119:222 S 1 '17 80w

"We do not know that 'A night at an inn' has ever been acted in England, and we hardly like to say that we wish it could be, because to see it would inevitably mean a sleepless night to follow. Nothing since 'The ghost stories of an antiquary' has frightened us quite so uncannily. 'The queen's enemies' is not among his best plays. The scene might be effective on the stage; in the book all seems too carefully arranged."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p343 J1 19 '17 1450w

DU PLESSIS, JOHANNES. Thrice through the Dark continent. Il *$4.50 (3c) Longmans 916 17-27663

The author is a professor in the theological seminary of the Dutch Reformed church in Stellenbosch, South Africa. This "record of journeyings across Africa during the years 1913-1916" is largely an account of his travels between mission stations and of the work among the natives carried on by the various societies and institutions. Two journeys across Central Africa form the basis of the narrative. Among the chapters are: Kumasi and its heroes; Along the Gold coast; Ten days in South Kamerun; Travels in the two Nigerias; In the French sphere of influence; From the Shari to the Ubangi; In north Congoland; The Nile and its reservoirs; Through British East Africa; To the Mountains of the Moon. The book is fully illustrated and there is a folding map.

"The author says little of politics or the war, but describes the country and the natives in a fresh and interesting way."

+ Spec 119:529 N 10 '17 200w

"He has, indeed, gathered into one volume a mass of information about very many missions which cannot be got elsewhere. He may be credited with a fair degree of impartiality, quite as much as any man of strong theological convictions can be expected to exercise. . . . For the rest, he presents many details of African travel in wild regions which, if the type is not novel, are always full of variety and incident. In spite of a stilted pomposity of style which he is never able to abandon, Mr du Plessis reveals himself most engagingly in his pages as a 'voortrekker' of the real old sturdy Dutch stock."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p419 S 20 '17 1590w

DURAND, WILLIAM FREDERICK. Practical marine engineering for marine engineers and students; with aids for applicants for marine engineers' licenses; 4th ed., rev. and enl., by C. W. Dyson. Il $6 Van Nostrand; for sale by Marine engineering, 461 8th av., N.Y. 621.12

"The first edition of this book was written by Prof. W. F. Durand. . . . A second and then a third part were subsequently added. In the present edition Captain Dyson has combined the three independent parts into a consecutive whole, besides adding new material. The book is devoted mostly to marine engines and their many auxiliaries for driving ships and making them habitable. There are also chapters on engineering materials, fuels and computations for engineers."—Engin News-Rec

+ Engin News-Rec 78:153 Ap 19 '17 90w
N Y Br Lib News 4:106 J1 '17

+ Pittsburgh 22:450 My '17 40w (Reprinted from International Marine Engineering p190 Ap '17)

"Excellent book for the engineer or novice who may be preparing for examination for a marine engineer's license. The treatment is as plain and non-mathematical as possible. The greatly increased interest in marine engineering renders this new edition of the best American practical book on the subject particularly timely."

+ Quar List New Tech Bks Ja '18 70w

DURANT, WILLIAM JAMES. Philosophy and the social problem. *$1.50 (2½c) Macmillan 301 17-24304

The author is an instructor in philosophy connected with Columbia university. "The purpose of this essay is to show: first, that the social problem has been the basic concern of many of the greater philosophers; second, that an approach to the social problem through philosophy is the first condition of even a moderately successful treatment of this problem; and third, that an approach to philosophy through the social problem is indispensable to the revitalization of philosophy. By 'philosophy' we shall understand a study of experience as a whole, or of a portion of experience in relation to the whole. By the 'social problem' we shall understand, simply and very broadly, the problem of reducing human misery by modifying social institutions." (Intro.) In Part 1, "Historical approach," Mr Durant considers Socrates, Plato, Bacon, Spinoza and Nietzsche in order to see what there is in their views on the social problem "that can help us to understand our own situation today." Part 2 is entitled "Suggestions," but the author states that he is "proposing no solutions."

Reviewed by C. E. Ayres

Am J Soc 23:544 Ja '18 470w

A L A Bkl 14:112 Ja '18

"Accurate, concise and very disappointing book. The author writes with a crisp, effective style; he seems to possess a gift for summary. . . . In this somewhat futile Socratic discussion the pro too accurately balance the cons; there is little left to go on with." Archibald Henderson

+ Bookm 46:277 N '17 230w

"The author says things that need repeating, and he says them eloquently and earnestly. . . . I fear, however, that his plan of campaign, if followed, would only get philosophy the reputation of being a gadding busy-body, meddling in everybody's business, having none of her own." M. C. Otto

+ Dial 63:419 N 8 '17 1800w

"Dr Durant has an earnestness of manner, a flowing vigor of expression and a skill in summary which makes his book readable even for the man who has never turned his attention to problems of philosophy."

+ Ind 22:262 N 3 '17 100w

"Dr Will Durant, though an instructor in philosophy, holds philosophy in very low esteem indeed—this being, in fact, one of the amusing phenomena that have sprung from the Deweyesque brand of pragmatism."

— Nation 105:490 N 1 '17 500w

"Part I of Dr Durant's volume is so well done that there cannot be but regret for its brevity. For a little space he has shown these masterly thinkers as kin to us, and, had he pursued this part of the work farther, he would have given us a most significant volume."

+ N Y Call p11 N 11 '17 450w

"The chief value of the book lies in its call to rescue philosophy from the calm death of social ineffectiveness. It is to be feared, however, that in order to make out his case, Mr Durant has in some instances made his philosophers a bit too modern. It is rather a strained interpretation, for example, to read into the Socratic 'virtue of wisdom' an endorsement of psychoanalysis." H. Neumann

+ — Survey 39:445 Ja 19 '18 300w

DURELL, A. J. V. Principles and practice of the system of control over parliamentary grants. *21s John Hogg, London 351.72

"This work, by the chief paymaster at the War office, with a foreword by Sir Charles Harris, assistant financial secretary, War office, deals authoritatively with the important subject of the control of public expenditure.

The main divisions of the book are concerned with the House of commons, the parliamentary standing committees, the comptroller and auditor-general, the treasury, and the accounting department. . . . There are copious references throughout the book to parliamentary papers containing reports of the public accounts committee and estimates committee, and to authorities dealing with public finance and kindred matters."—Ath

"The author has presented the facts in such a manner that the volume is likely to become a standard work of reference upon the expenditure of public money."

+ Ath p464 S '17 120w

"The book opens with its only weak section—a sketch of the constitutional aspect of the financial system, derived from secondary authorities that are somewhat out of date. When Colonel Durell turns to review the present financial system he is clearly in his own element. With the detailed analysis in the last two chapters of the control exercised by the treasury and the function of the accounting department, nothing comparable has yet appeared publicly in print."

+ — Sat R 124:209 S 15 '17 1500w

"Colonel Durell sets out in detail the steps taken during the nineteenth century to secure effective machinery for parliamentary control."

* + Spec 119:219 S 1 '17 930w

DURET, THEODORE. Whistler. il *$3.75 Lippincott 17-12506

"Theodore Duret's book on Whistler, which appeared a number of years ago in the original French edition, has been translated by Frank Rutter, and makes a welcome addition to the mass of literature that has been forming for the last thirty years about the salient figure of the American master. Duret knew Whistler well, and adds to his natural carefulness in statement the lively note of personal adventure. . . . Duret brought to his task, however, more than the mere data of a conscientious reporter or the pleasant gossip of an acquaintance; he is initiated in the craftsmanship of which he writes, and is an appreciative critic of the painter's achievement."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 13:436 J1 '17

"The great merit of this biographical study is its terse and orderly presentation of the essentials and the omission of all those superfluities which so often obscure the really important features of a biography. . . . The translation is accompanied by [32] capital reproductions of many of Whistler's most important works."

+ Int Studio 61:99 Ap '17 150w

+ N Y Times 22:95 Mr 18 '17 230w

"Naturally M. Duret writes somewhat in the vein of a second at a duel. Whistler's career was so much a progress of deliberate pugnacity that any record of it is inevitably one of blows, given and courted. As these encounters so often centred upon the artist's work there is a certain piquancy in the opportunity of refreshing our individual judgments upon this, furnished by the many and wholly admirable reproductions with which the volume is illustrated."

+ Pittsburgh 22:366 My '17 170w (Reprinted from English Review '17)

+ Pittsburgh 22:512 Je '17 50w

"M. Duret, who was a lifelong friend, steers a mid-course between those who, like Mr Menpes, record with gusto every incident of mud-slinging and vanity, and the large and detailed volumes of Mr Pennell, in which everything is recorded and the hero can do no wrong."

Spec 118:391 Mr 31 '17 400w

"As a sketch of Whistler's chequered history, with its struggles, attacks, financial hardships, and final success, this book is fairly adequate, and certainly makes interesting reading. . . . But those who wish to follow and understand Whistler's technique in painting and etching, and to realize the amount of hard honest labour that underlay those performances of his that seem so slight and easy, will do well, when they read M. Duret, to turn back to the more precise volume of Mr and Mrs Pennell."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p77 F 15 '17 700w

DURHAM, HARRY WILLIAM. Saws: their care and treatment. il *$2.50 (4c) Van Nostrand 621.93 A17-1554

The object of this work is "to provide a reliable book of reference for those who are learning the art of saw fitting, or who may be interested in the proper methods of sharpening and keeping saws in order." (Preface) The author states that he has found no modern work in English treating of the subject with the exception of certain trade publications. He has attempted to select the best methods from among the many he has observed in practice, but has been careful not to lay down hard and fast rules. Among the topics covered are: Particulars of reciprocating saws; Particulars of circular saws; Sharpening saws by hand filing; Saw-sharpening machines; Setting the teeth of saws; The saw-sharpening room.

DWIGHT, HARRY GRISWOLD. Persian miniatures. il *$3 (3c) Doubleday 915.5 17-26877

A travel book by the author of "Stamboul nights" which touches lightly and whimsically the things of Persia that draw the traveler thither—its cities, its structures, its scenery, its peoples and its indefinable oriental magic. "About rug books" is an interesting and encouraging chapter for those who think despairingly that the Persian rug is passing. The writer believes that there is no more danger of the Persian rug becoming a thing of the past than the oil painting. He says that under mud roofs, not available for the department store buyer, there are being woven carpets quite as good as came from the looms of Abbas the Great. "Social life in Hamadan, descriptions of home apparatus, humorous appreciation of personality, of every kindred, every tribe, sly Pepys-like analysis of high local and imported dignitaries, merry, human, homey stories of everyday life of foreigners in Persia, incidents of adventure and misadventure, make up most of this volume." (Boston Transcript)

+ A L A Bkl 14:91 D '17

"An amazingly modern book of travel. No roses and nightingales, no bulbuls nor tropical scents and sounds, no humbug of any kind does Mr Dwight deceive us with in his descriptions of Iran. He does impart the beauty of the treeless land, he does make real and recognizable even for an unimaginative reader, the joy to be found in strange appearances of life, and in the different and admirable in architecture. The quality of the book cries in the market place to be imparted, to be shared, to be read aloud with a mutual enjoyer, even its last learned chapter on Avicenna." M. C. S.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '17 720w

"The present volume has all the atmosphere of charm and oriental coloring that its title would lead one to expect. The intimate description of the author's sojourn in a Persian town will go far toward making us familiar with an ancient and engaging people."

+ Lit D 55:41 D 8 '17 130w

"It would be a grave belittling, however, of a book that has in it much of valuable information, the fruit of careful research, to emphasize only its charm of style and its vividness of description. . . . The author is blest with the ability to offer a great deal of information, nay more, to correct mistakes in less well-informed writings, without a trace of pedantry."

+ N Y Times 23:20 Ja 20 '18 850w

"Mr Dwight brings to his new work the ability to be graphic, whimsical, and always readable."

+ Outlook 117:519 N 28 '17 40w

DYER, WALTER ALDEN. Creators of decorative styles. il *$3 (8½c) Doubleday 749 17-28460

A survey of the decorative periods in England from 1600 to 1800. It is the plan of the writer to consider the lives and personalities of the leaders of artistic thought in England, tracing, at the same time, the contemporary development of styles in the cognate arts. These leaders are: Inigo Jones; Daniel Marot; Sir Christopher Wren; Grinling Gibbons; Jean Tijou; Thomas Chippendale; Sir William Chambers; Robert Adam; Josiah Wedgwood; George Hepplewhite; and Thomas Sheraton. Illustrations reproduce many original pieces of furniture to be found in the Metropolitan museum of art.

"The trouble with the book before us, so far as trouble exists, is that Mr Dyer has not succeeded altogether in a vital synthesis of his critical and biographical material. It is only fair to say that the data available on the personal side seems prevalently very scant. Especially worth while are the chapters on Tijou, the little-known French master of iron-work, a domesticated English worker, and Wedgwood, the famed creator of designs in pottery." R; Burton
+ — Bookm 49:479 D '17 320w

"Mr Dyer, who has of late made a specialty of writing upon this attractive subject and who has undoubtedly done much in the formation of a revived taste for the beautiful has produced here a work of superior excellence. A large number of well executed illustrations adds to the value of the work."
+ Boston Transcript p9 N 21 '17 500w

"A thorough knowledge of just such facts as this book presents will go a long way towards giving to your house that 'indefinable air' of charm and culture and a still more desirable quality—restfulness." Ruth Stanley-Brown
+ Pub W 92:1389 O 20 '17 330w

DYER, WALTER ALDEN. Five Babbitts at Bonnyacres. il *$1.30 (2c) Holt 17-25085

A very up-to-date country-life story in which Farmers' bulletins play an important part. It is written for young folks, but older people who are interested in farming and in rural problems will also enjoy it. The Babbitts are a city family who go back-to-the-land. The story carries them thru two years of their experiment on a Massachusetts farm, and leaves them satisfied and happy, and well started on the road to success. There are four Babbitts to begin with; the fifth member, who is added to the family later, is a young boy who comes to them as a state ward. His development under a more fortunate environment than he has before known is an interesting study.

"The Babbitts never accomplish super-human deeds on the soil; their crops are not abnormal. The story goes through two seasons, and there is a steady increase in results, due to the pluck and splendid spirit of the family."
+ Lit D 55:54 D 8 '17 160w

"Mr Dyer evidently means his story to be a practical handbook of how such a farm should be treated in order to make it a moderately paying investment. . . . The fictional interest with which he has invested it by means of the Babbitt family makes it an entertaining yarn, for Mr Dyer writes always with charm and humor and sanity."
+ N Y Times 22:401 O 14 '17 250w

DYSON, G. Grenade fighting. il *50c Doran 355 17-29564

A small manual on the training and tactics of grenadiers. The author is late brigade grenadier officer of the British expeditionary force. Part 1 of the book gives Preliminary notes; Part 2, Notes on training and organization. There are seven diagrams by way of illustration.

E

EARLE, RALPH. Life at the U.S. naval academy; the making of the American naval officer. il *$2 (4c) Putnam 355.07 17-10208

The purpose of this book is "to explain the methods adopted at the United States naval academy at Annapolis, Maryland, to give the midshipmen of our navy a thorough theoretical and practical grounding in the knowledge of the many subjects that the naval profession demands." (Preface) Contents: Historical sketch; The candidate; The new midshipman; Organization; Academic work; Examinations; Practical instruction and drills; Religion, discipline, morale; Physical training and medical care; Athletics; Recreation; The practice cruises; The postgraduate; Grounds and buildings; The ensign. Courses of study, etc. are outlined in appendices. The author is head of the Department of ordnance and gunnery in the Naval academy, and the book has an introduction by Franklin D. Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy.

+ A L A Bkl 13:375 Je '17

"An interesting, graphic, and well-illustrated account."

+ Ath p464 S '17 100w

"Clear and accurate, but not calculated to arouse in boys an enthusiasm for this arm of the service."

+ — Cleveland p102 S '17 30w

"The parent or guardian will be particularly impressed by Chapter 8, Religion—discipline—morals."

+ Nation 105:294 S 13 '17 950w

+ New Repub 10:385 Ap 23 '17 150w

"The prospective candidate for admission to the academy will find the volume of especial value."

+ R of Rs 55:668 Je '17 100w

St Louis 15:139 My '17

"The book describes the midshipman's training in all its aspects and its value is heightened by appendices of special value to the prospective candidate for admission and an ample index."

+ Spring'fd Republican p6 Je 13 '17 300w

"Particularly attractive are the author's descriptions of the athletic life and recreations of the midshipmen, their games and sporting contests with other bodies. Another chapter which will be widely appreciated is that in which an outline is given of the midshipmen's activities during the practice cruises which the upper classmen in the academy make annually."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p377 Ag 9 '17 500w

EASSIE, R. M. Odes to trifles, and other rhymes. *$1.25 Lane $11.08 17-30067

A member of the Canadian expeditionary force makes some humorous observations among the grim happenings of war. He immortalizes the ration biscuit, satirizes the kultur that could so evilly betray its birthright by the "lachrymatory shell" and eulogizes a pulv of sheets but briefly enjoyed on short leave. There are nursery rhymes which parody Mother Goose and there are limericks. The book should not fail to be found in the camp libraries.

"Let me say at once that these 'Odes to trifles,' are the very finest things of the sort this war has produced. This Mr Eassie of the Canadian expeditionary force is a humorist of the highest order, is an absolute artist in touching upon the inconsequential of a grim and agonizing piece of business—war." W. S. R.
+ Boston Transcript p9 D 5 '17 280w

+ R of Rs 57:105 Ja '18 30w

"Every stanza gets well home, written with a refreshing air of conviction and a real wit which scintillates the more sharply because not a word of it could be spared."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p371 Ag 2 '17 150w

EAST, ANNA MERRITT. Kitchenette cookery. il *$1 (7c) Little 641.5 17-14966

Cooking in small quarters is the subject of this book. The first chapter considers the utilization of space and the planning of work in a small kitchen. Other problems of apartment house living—getting meals in a limited time, etc., are given attention. Recipes accompany many of the chapters. Contents: Fitting shelves to space and service; The pots, pans, and containers; The first bill of groceries; Counting costs; Breakfast on a time limit; Lunches at home and by box; Dinners for self and friends; High-pressure dinners; Experiments tried on friends; A bite to eat at bedtime; Half-a-can recipes.

+ A L A Bkl 13:432 Ji '17
Cleveland p111 S '17 60w
Nation 105:347 S 27 '17 40w
Pratt p25 O '17 10w

"Business women who are loth to give up the privileges of housekeeping will find much helpful planning in this intensive study."

+ R of Rs 56:554 N '17 40w

"The volume is made the more fascinating by its attractive pictures of the two-room and kitchenette apartment, whose story it is telling."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 14 '17 160w

EASTMAN, MAX. Journalism versus art. il *$1 Knopf 814 17-26314

"Four provocative essays republished from the Masses, Vanity Fair, the New Republic and the North American Review, respectively. The initial essay 'Magazine art' 'reflects the feeling and in some places even the thought and language of the artists of the Masses in criticizing the art of the popular commercial magazine.' Speaking thus for his associates Mr Eastman finds that the monotony of magazine illustration, and its subjection to the ideals of the business office combine to keep this work out of the realm of true art."—Cleveland

+ A L A Bkl 13:341 My '17
Cleveland p34 Mr '17 220w

"Mr Eastman, as an editor, would never think of giving the public what it wants, and he sets himself here to show how journalism, which is only a very democratic and shaggy kind of literature, is corrupting our taste in letters and art."
Dial 62:108 F 8 '17 450w

"The papers on magazine writing and lazy verse are but witty remark and schoolboyish platitude and superstition. The others, on magazine art and English spelling, over-expressive of radical opinion, under-expressive of what those opinions clearly mean and marred by a quite shameless preciosity of style and half-way philosophizing, are still healthily stimulating."

+ Ind 90:87 Ap 7 '17 50w

"The only thing wrong with this new book by the editor of the Masses is the title. Magazine writing and illustrating is not popularly called journalism, and that is what a great part of the book is about. . . . And, by the way, the book is liberally illustrated with some real pictures, most of them from the Masses." C. M. W.

+ N Y Call p14 F 4 '17 700w

Pittsburgh 22:193 Mr '17

+ Pratt p6 O '17 30w

"In his new book Mr Eastman plays the rôles of radical and conservative, or, as he calls them, 'red' and 'white,' with equal facility. The fact that he uses radical language to enforce conservative truths need not concern us overmuch, for every writer must be allowed some consideration for his normal or abnormal 'squin't' at life. At all events, Mr Eastman is conservative in most of the theories he advances, or restates in this book."

Springf'd Republican p6 F 6 '17 750w

EASTMAN, REBECCA LANE (HOOPER) (MRS WILLIAM FRANKLIN EASTMAN). Big little person. il *$1.40 (1½c) Harper 17-24397

Arathea Manning, beautiful but deaf, once rich but when the story opens comparatively poor, is a little woman with a big heart and an undaunted spirit, who lives with her mother in the artists' colony, just off Third avenue, New York. There is a mystery about Marlon Beemis, the friend who saves Arathea's life on Fifth avenue, and who has plenty of money, but refuses to tell what her occupation is. Two mysterious men also figure in the story; the "Kantwearout man," who writes newspaper advertisements for a living and letters to Arathea, whom he refuses to meet, for the joy of it; and Gerald Staples, "a dynamo for energy," with "extraordinary eyes" of a "warm brown," and hair that "looked as if splendid clean winds had always been blowing through it." Staples is an inventor who cares nothing for money and does not know who his parents were. He loves Arathea, and so does Arthur Endicott, whose parents have "brought him up in the smartest society and given him more money than is good for anybody." The story solves all the mysteries and leaves everybody happy in the end.

"Fanciful, idealistic fairy-tale sort of a story with a very charming girl as heroine."

+ A L A Bkl 14:95 D '17

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Bookm 46:340 N '17 40w

"The author has a sprightly manner of writing which carries us through many situations which told less attractively would immediately proclaim their unreality."

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 22 '17 300w

"She is a brave and sweet-tempered heroine, while nearly all the other characters in the book are pleasant people, though, like the plot, they belong to fairy tales rather than to real life."

+ N Y Times 22:388 O 7 '17 230w

"The sentiment, if of a stereotyped order, is always appealing and is employed with restraint and in good taste."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 D 9 '17 210w

EATON, WALTER PRICHARD. Green trails and upland pastures. il *$1.60 (2c) Doubleday 917.4 17-29641

"To my mother whose hand first led me out among the flowers and whose plea was the first I heard in defense of the wild folk of the woods." This is the dedication of a book that in turn leads the reader out among the flowers and into the haunts of wilderness inhabitants. Sympathy with nature's every mood and the language to reproduce it delicately or grandly but always atmospherically—this is the secret of the alluring quality of the book. The illustrations are noteworthy, particularly those that catch and hold the spirit of King Frost.

+ A L A Bkl 14:120 Ja '18

"For those who love hills and fields and wood paths and all the delights of nature's green trails, the book is a treasury of exquisite landscapes painted with words in place of the brush." A. M. Chase

+ Bookm 46:336 N '17 350w

"A nature-lover's record of 'Glacier park wild flowers,' 'Neighbors of the winter night,' 'Trees,' 'Bridges,' 'Old boats,' etc., described in a way to make one see a series of pictures rather than share the author's moods."

+ Cleveland p133 D '17 60w

"Walter Pritchard Eaton has written of the world out of doors with all the pictorial charm of a Thoreau."

+ R of Rs 57:217 F '18 160w

"The sympathetic tone of the book is well maintained in the colored illustrations of Walter King Stone."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 N 8 '17 530w

EBENTHAL, HILDEGARDE. Tragedy of a throne. il *$3.50 (4c) Funk 17-24316

The author states in her foreword that she had written this life of Ludwig II of Bavaria "largely with the help of letters and manuscripts the authenticity of which is indisputable," but she gives no list of authorities used, and there are no references in foot-notes. She tells us that "Ludwig's association with Wagner will be related in these pages in its true light for perhaps the first time, as will many other episodes"; also that had Ludwig been allowed to do what he wished, "it is more than probable that Europe would have been spared the colossal disasters due to the ambition of that Prussia which he hated throughout his life, and whose victim he became." There are photogravure portraits of Ludwig II, Richard Wagner, Empress Elizabeth of Austria and Prince Luitpold, regent of Bavaria.

EBENTHAL, HILDEGARDE—Continued

"The writer, who appears to be well conversant with the enigmatical reign of Ludwig II of Bavaria, is evidently a person of strong prejudices, one of which is directed against Wagner, and another favorably toward the King. . . . That he was more unfortunate than blameworthy she makes quite apparent. . . . But we do strongly suspect her judgment of Wagner. Her invective is too vehement to be quite impartial. He is pictured as a demon of almost unbelievable evil. . . . Her book is written somewhat too sensationally for serious history. The result of her research and her speculations is interesting." R. M.

— + Boston Transcript p6 J1 25 '17 980w

"Supreme value to the student of history. If the details revealed in this book be true, which it seems highly probable that they are, we are furnished with another proof of the thoroughness and the all-embracing character of the Prussian plans for world-dominion and of the menace that they held toward all forms of democracy, for that Ludwig, unbalanced and autocratic as all his tendencies were, represented the real feeling of his countrymen better than did the alien group that brought about his ruin seems fairly certain."

+ Lit D 55:36 S 29 '17 490w

ECKLES, CLARENCE HENRY, and WARREN, GEORGE FREDERICK. Dairy farming. (Farm ser.) il *$1.10 Macmillan 637 16-25251

This book discusses breeds of cattle, their selection, management, feeding and ailments; the dairy barn; milk and its products; systems of farming on dairy farms; methods of renting; cost of production; methods of marketing; etc. Mr Eckles is professor of dairy husbandry in the University of Missouri, and Mr Warren, professor of farm management in the New York State college of agriculture, Cornell university.

"Good general, popular treatment from the economic point of view, and the only work to cover this particular field."

+ A L A Bkl 13:381 Je '17

"The modern farmer will find much that will interest him in this book, particularly in view of the changing conditions in our country at the present time. It is, however, chiefly as an aid to the teacher that this book is to be strongly recommended."

+ Nature 99:383 J1 12 '17 270w

"A good text for high schools, written by authorities."

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:154 My '17 9w

EDDY, SHERWOOD. With our soldiers in France. il *$1 Assn. press 940.91 17-26978

"This volume is the first book by an American dealing with the American army on the other side. Sherwood Eddy, its author, has just returned from France, where he made a survey of the battle front and ate, slept, worked, played, and marched with General Pershing's troops in camp, on the road, and in the trenches. And he has written this work, fresh from his actual observations, to set before American readers the plain facts about what the conditions and surroundings of our army in France are and will be, what are the physical and moral dangers our men will have to face, and what is being done and planned to help them pass through the dangers, trials, and strains of the conflict with credit to themselves and to their country. Mr Eddy is connected in an important position with the field work of the Young men's Christian association and before the war had made an extended tour for work among students in the Balkans, Russia, Turkey, and Germany."—N Y Times

"'With our soldiers in France' preaches a manly religion."

+ Ind 93:72 Ja 12 '18 230w

"Mr Eddy's book is deeply interesting, for it bears the glowing touch of the actual and its message comes straight from trench and camp to home. It ought to have telling effect in bettering American support of the Young men's Christian association."

+ N Y Times 22:541 D 9 '17 580w

"This is the best kind of book to give to the man who will soon be fighting. It will show him what he ought to avoid and it will offer him a welcome at the sign of the red triangle."

Frank Fitt

+ Pub W 93:222 Ja 19 '18 330w

EDER, MONTAGUE DAVID. War-shock; the psycho-neuroses in war psychology and treatment. *$1.75 Blakiston 615.3 (Eng ed SG17-242)

"Dr Eder has earned for himself the right to speak with authority in connection with war shock. For some time he was an officer in the Royal army medical corps, and was medical officer in charge of the psycho-neurological department at Malta. The material for this book is the first 100 consecutive cases of psycho-neurosis encountered."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Ath p306 Je '17 120w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p239 My 17 '17 170w

EDITH Cavell nurse from Massachusetts. il 60c (5c) Butterfield 940.91 17-14687

As a result of a memorial meeting held in Boston, December 11, 1915, a fund was raised for the purpose of sending an "Edith Cavell nurse from Massachusetts" to serve with the British expeditionary force in France. The nurse sent, Miss Alice L. F. Fitzgerald, gives an account of her first year of service in the form of extracts from diary and letters. The remainder of the little book, about one half, is given up to an account of the imprisonment, trial, and death of Miss Cavell.

"Will interest most readers, we fancy, less for Miss Fitzgerald's record, interesting as it is, than for the vivid account of the imprisonment and the events following the imprisonment of Miss Cavell. There is a crisp brevity in this relation which reflects the ominous rapidity with which things moved from the moment when the English nurse was put to trial."

+ Nation 105:610 N 29 '17 270w

Pittsburgh 22:681 O '17 30w

Pratt p40 O '17 30w

R of Rs 55:669 Je '17 70w

St Louis 15:314 S '17 10w

EDWARDS, GEORGE WHARTON. Vanished halls and cathedrals of France. il *$6 (8c) Penn 914.4 17-30884

"This American artist and tourist long familiar with the ravaged regions of northern France . . . describes and pictures the now vanished glories of Reims, Noyon, Arras, Léon, Verdun, St Quentin, and many other towns and villages of which we have been hearing so much, and in so tragic a way, of late. The great tower of Senlis, old St Pierre of Noyon, Gerbeville's historic hall, and the keep of Coucy-le-Château are among the vanished splendors that live again under Mr Edwards's pen and pencil. The volume is printed on specially made paper and richly bound."—Lit D

Boston Transcript p8 D 3 '17 630w

+ Lit D 55:41 D 8 '17 120w

+ Nation 105:612 N 29 '17 60w

"This is a gift book to bring delight to the eyes—and an ache to the heart."

+ N Y Times 23:2 Ja 6 '18 350w

"We may well be thankful that an artist of Mr Edwards's skill has preserved in this book the memories of happier days. Both for pictures and text the volume will prove a most welcome holiday gift to any lover of France."

+ Outlook 117:520 N 28 '17 100w

+ R of Rs 57:219 F '18 70w

EELHOUD, GEORGES. New Carthage (La nouvelle Carthage). *$1.50 (1½c) Duffield 17-17971

The "New Carthage" is Antwerp; Georges Eekhoud is a Flemish novelist, and this novel of his has been crowned by the Belgian Academy. The translation from the French is by Lloyd R. Morris, who also writes an introduction dealing with Eekhoud and his writings, and who says of him: "Like that other great Belgian artist, Constantin Meunier, he celebrates the modern beauty of labor and of the crowd." "The novel is essentially a record of the life of the whole city. Its protagonist is Antwerp itself, or, more definitely, the proletariat of Antwerp as its life is experienced by Laurent Paridael. The novel is largely autobiographical; Laurent, like Eekhoud himself, is left an orphan at the age of eleven and committed to the care of a wealthy uncle, who, like Eekhoud's uncle, is a manufacturer of candles." (Intro.) "Here in this factory, Laurent saw the ugly side of 'that prosperous industrialism' of which his exquisite cousin Gina both knew and embodied only 'the radiant and brilliant aspect.' It was what he saw in this factory that placed Laurent forever on the side of the laborer. . . . This sympathy with the proletariat and his passion for his cousin Gina were the two determining yet to a great extent contradictory factors in his career, uniting absolutely only at the very last, when they joined to bring about the vengeance and the tragedy with which the book ends." (N Y Times)

"Despite its formlessness and exaggeration it is largely redeemed by its tropically splendid word-pictures and its expression of the social philosophy of a section of the working class which before Eekhoud had been without a spokesman."

+ — Cleveland p132 D '17 90w

"He has a great theme, and he knows his city through all its turbulent layers. But he does not fuse the life really into artistic form. One thinks of 'Germinal,' and one misses the power and deep reference and social orientation of Zola. One thinks of 'Pillars of society' and one misses the cold, cutting subtlety of Ibsen in his exposure of that greed of the capitalist which sweeps away all human consideration. And one thinks of 'Pelle' and misses the palpitating mass-life with its hunger, and its pathetic struggle against its masters and the elements." Randolph Bourne

+ — Dial 63:343 O 11 '17 700w

"The personal side of the story is told with a robust emotionalism that staid persons will find a bit intense and overpowering."

+ — Ind 93:128 Ja 19 '18 280w

"If the civilization it depicts was as represented, it is a blessing that it has ceased. Perhaps out of the holocaust of war will come a decenter existence. Nevertheless, we must wonder at the smug Anglo-Saxon prudishness of the translator, who has deleted certain passages because of their frankness. Perhaps the book as a whole should have been deleted." Clement Wood

+ — N Y Call p15 D 29 '17 400w

"In this very capable translation we are given a novel of exceptional interest, the work of the man who stands at the very head and front of Belgian novelists. . . . There is a certain robust quality, a certain careless and splendid prodigality, about this novel which reminds one just a little of Dickens and of the authors of that Elizabethan age of which M. Eekhoud has made an especial study. . . . It is not, on the whole, a flattering picture which the author has drawn of his native city. Yet beneath all this turbulent life, beneath all the rioting and scheming and money-grabbing and ruthlessness and sensuality, one sees here and there something finer, something akin to the heroism and the loyalty we have learned to associate with the name of Belgium."

+ N Y Times 22:285 Ag 5 '17 1550w

EELLS, ELSIE SPICER (MRS B. G. EELLS). Fairy tales from Brazil. il *$1.25 (6c) Dodd 17-25392

A publishers' note says, "As wife of the superintendent of schools in Bahia, the author made a collection of Brazilian folk-lore tales as told by the children themselves during the story-hour at her boarding-school, and by the servants of her household. Many of these stories originated with the Indians of Brazil. A few are the Brazilian versions of stories from the Portuguese. Many others are African in descent and are much after the style of Uncle Remus." The titles—How night came; How the rabbit lost his tail; How the tiger got his stripes; Why the lamb is meek, etc.—show that we have here a familiar type of folk tale, but the point to the story in most cases is new and fresh. Some of them have appeared in Little Folks, Kindergarten-Primary Magazine and other papers, and they are well adapted to story telling purposes.

+ A L A Bkl 14:172 F '18

EGERTON, HUGH EDWARD. British foreign policy in Europe to the end of the 19th century; a rough outline. *$2 Macmillan 327.4 17-30066

"The object of the book is to show the motives and purposes which have guided British foreign policy and to do so as nearly as possible in the words of the men who have had most influence in shaping the policy. It contains therefore numerous extracts, especially from the speeches and letters of statesmen and diplomats in which they have urged or defended their ideas. . . . It is a chronological index to the sources where will be found the best and most authoritative statements of intention and motive made by the men who determined events in this field. . . . In the second place the object of the book is frankly a defense of British foreign policy. Professor Egerton is marshalling the evidence which shows 'that the policy of the country on the whole has been singularly honest and straightforward.'"—Am Hist R

+ Am Hist R 23:429 Ja '18 580w

"There are indications of haste in the compilation of the work, and the reader may sometimes desiderate a clearer discussion of the principles and issues at stake; but the book is useful for the proper understanding of the historical problem now in process of solution."

+ — Ath p520 O '17 140w

"The author has produced a readable, interesting, and useful work, but it is not likely to add to his fame as a historian. The book is to a large extent a compilation and gives evidence of somewhat hurried preparation, as is true of so many of the 'timely' books that have been published since 1914."

+ — Dial 64:71 Ja 17 '18 600w

"The method which he has adopted has gone far to spoil the interest in his story. He splits up his subject into sections, and constantly harks back chronologically."

+ — Spec 119:270 S 15 '17 550w

"Mr Egerton's sketch of British policy derives a special value from his plan of using, as far as possible, the 'ipsissima verba' of statesmen, which gives it an authority it might otherwise seem to lack. The system of extensive quotation has its inevitable drawbacks; there are times when we feel that the uninstructed reader will not see the wood for the trees; and our general impression is that it will be found most useful and instructive by those who already have a fair knowledge of the outlines of European history. It fulfils its purpose, however, excellently well; its tone is impartial, moderate, and wise, and in our opinion it deserves a very wide public."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p483 O 11 '17 1700w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

ELBIQUET, pseud. Supplementary magic. il
*$1.25 Dutton 133

"A handbook intended to follow the author's 'Textbook of magic,' and postulating a familiarity with the rudiments of the art as explained in the earlier book. The 'true secrets' comprise five principal devices: Repetition, inspection, explanation, intentional errors and abstraction of the attention. . . . The early pages are devoted to an explanation of the science of conjuring, and there follows a presentation of new or improved methods of performing sleights. Part 3 is an entertaining discussion of Indian conjuring with a short study of the native conjurer's methods and a selection from his favorite tricks. 'A few tricks for all occasions' are explained at the end. The book is amply illustrated."—Springf'd Republican

"Well written and fully illustrated. The most interesting chapters are devoted to the Indian conjurer."

+ Spec 118:341 Mr 17 '17 120w
Springf'd Republican p19 My 27 '17 170w

ELLIOT, HUGH SAMUEL ROGER. Herbert Spencer. il $2 (3c) Ilolt (Eng ed 17-26315)

This volume in the Makers of the nineteenth century series is a biography of Spencer and a critique of his philosophy. "Whatever may be thought to-day of the value of Spencer's writings, no one who wishes to understand the thought of the nineteenth century can neglect him," says the general editor. The author treats his subject in the following chapters: Life; Character; Philosophy; Introduction to Spencer's social writings; General summary of "The principles of sociology"; General summary of "The principles of ethics"; Metaphysics and religion; Evolution; Biology; Psychology; Education; Conclusion.

"A sympathetic introduction, with indication of the main positions in the system, and with a plot of the traps that guard those positions, is the most serviceable addition that could be made to Spencerian literature. Mr Elliot has admirably satisfied these requirements." A. W. Small

+ Am Hist R 23:157 O '17 1150w
+ A L A Bkl 13:352 My '17
Ath p203 Ap '17 90w

"To obtain a clear idea of the Spencerian philosophy is not difficult for the reader who follows its course in the series of epitomes given by Mr Elliot. He has prepared a notable contribution to the history of English philosophy." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 10 '17 1350w
+ Cleveland p83 Je '17 40w

"Mr Hugh Elliot has produced a notable work, notable as a biography, notable in its current appeal, notable in the perspective it establishes for viewing a remarkable intellectual career." Joseph Jastrow

* + Dial 63:146 Ag 30 '17 2050w

"There is included a helpful bibliography, a chronological table and an index. The frontispiece is from the Burgess portrait."

Ind 91:32 Jl 7 '17 200w
Lit D 54:1076 Ap 11 '17 350w

"The chapters on Spencer's philosophy and works are as distinctly mediocre as the earlier chapters are extraordinary. The last mentioned are fit to rank high among the best efforts at the portrayal of personality, while the former are no more than a faithful résumé disfigured by incompetent and futile criticism."

+ Nation 104:578 My 10 '17 1200w

"A vigorous and disarming account of Herbert Spencer's contributions to modern intellectual development."

+ Nature 99:163 Ap 26 '17 320w

"It is in the perspective of the nineteenth century that Mr Elliot has endeavored to set him. . . . But he has not mastered the task that a book of this kind must attempt. All that he has to say of Spencer's life and character he says with admirable vigor. . . . It has, indeed, every claim to be considered the best account of its kind as yet in existence. But when Mr Elliott leaves the narrative and comes to a critical statement of doctrine, the volume is of a different calibre. . . . His epitome of Spencer's teaching is not full enough to be useful and too full to be brief. His criticisms rarely go to the root of the matter he discusses. . . . One has the conviction that Mr Elliott grew tired of his subject in the second half of his book and simply wrote to finish a work to which he was pledged. . . . And I should guess that when Mr Elliott drew up his bibliography he just cast a glance at his shelves and wrote down the titles that he saw there." H. J. L.

* — + New Repub 11:224 Je 23 '17 1600w

"Mr Elliot prefaces his examination of the details of Spencer's scientific and sociological work with a brief and interesting study of the English thinker's life and character. . . . His book is thoroughly interesting as well as valuable, a study of importance from beginning to end."

+ N Y Times 22:119 Ap 1 '17 1100w
Pratt p48 O '17 20w
R of Rs 55:667 Je '17 130w

"The volume is a welcome and worthy addition to the extremely useful series 'Makers of the nineteenth century,' which is being published under the general editorship of Mr Basil Williams. Our readers will remember the earlier volumes: Sir E. Cook's 'Delane' and Lord Charnwood's 'Abraham Lincoln.'"

+ Spec 118:341 Je 2 '17 1600w

"This account of Spencer's life and writings, while sound in judgment, is a vivid, unhackneyed study, so lucid and genially readable, that even the person who knows little about Spencer and cares less about his philosophy will find himself interested in both Spencer's life and thought."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Mr 11 '17 1350w

"What Mr Elliot admires, and with justice—what his valuable study impressively reveals—is the heroic element in this independent lonely thinker, his steadfast adherence to the search of truth, his courage and faith, his love of liberty, his emancipation from all forms of authority."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p109 Mr 8 '17 1450w

ELLIOTT, CHARLES BURKE. Philippines: with prefatory note by Elhu Root. 2y il *$9 Bobbs 991.4
v 1 17-25734
v 2 17-23950

"The author of these two stout volumes . . . was well fitted for his task. From a seat upon the Supreme bench of Minnesota he was transferred to that of the Philippines. Later he became a member of the governing body of the archipelago, the Philippine commission, and still later was secretary of commerce and police in the government of the islands. . . . The two volumes discuss the two important phases of Philippine history. The first brings this history down through the military régime, and includes the record of the operations of the American fleet under Dewey and the capture of the archipelago and the occupation of the city of Manila by the American forces. The second volume takes up the narrative at the close of the military régime and continues to the end of the commission government."—Boston Transcript

Reviewed by C. H. Cunningham

+ — Am Pol Sci R 12:129 F '18 1650w

"Judge Elliott attempts no fine writing, he draws no thrilling picture of that early morning battle in Manila bay. Plain, unadorned facts are recorded, without ornamentation, or attempt at picture writing. He has drawn the material for his narrative, quite evidently, from official records and not from the popular accounts of the battle published in the newspapers of the day." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 21 '17 1100w

"The extent of the field covered in these two volumes is remarkable. The author's statements of fact and estimates of character are measured and definite. Dr Elliott is fair to all parties. It is well that this definitive history has become available at the time when it may exercise a real influence upon the shaping of policy."

+ No Am 206:954 D '17 950w

"Judge Elliott's work is a permanent contribution to the history of the United States."

+ R of Rs 56:637 D '17 750w

ELLIOTT, F. HAWS. Trench fighting. il *$1.50 (7c) Houghton 355 17-31265

The author, a captain of the British expeditionary force, covers his subject in the following chapters: History and preliminary entrenching; Styles of trenches and strong posts; Wire entanglements and obstructions; Organization of trench system for defence; Attack in trench warfare; Trench raids; Poison gas and liquid fire; Trench routine; standing orders for the trenches; Trench hygiene; Billeting and training of troops in rear of line; Syllabus of training; Morale. The diagrams are grouped at the end, and an appendix gives a list of officers' equipment advised for France.

+ R of Rs 57:102 Ja '18 50w

ELLIOTT, FRANCIS PERRY. Lend me your name! il *$1.25 (3½c) Reilly & B. 17-16728

"The hero is a young Englishman of title temporarily resident in New York. He is bored with his position and his manner of living; moreover, he harbors a wholesome fear of his strong-minded wife, who holds a tight rein over him however far he wanders from her. During an unsought visit to his bedroom by a famous burglar, the Englishman suggests a change of positions with the yeggman." (Springf'd Republican) The rest of the book deals with the various amusing complications consequent upon the change.

"If one is willing to abandon consideration of probability and improbability much enjoyment may be found in following these adventures of a noble gentleman in the guise of a burglar. . . . The author has a knack of characterization and a very pleasant feeling for summer romance in the open."

+ Dial 63:74 JI 19 '17 100w

"An amusing, if not exactly probable, little farce."

+ N Y Times 22:258 JI 8 '17 280w

"All the characters, the situation, and its path of development are decidedly 'stagey'."

The burglar is slangy and unconsciously humorous, the girl delightful, and the Englishman, while molded according to the stage type Britisher, is naive and likable."

+ — Springf'd Republican p15 S 2 '17 280w

ELLIOTT, LILIAN ELWYN. Brazil today and tomorrow. il *$2.25 (2½c) Macmillan 918.1 17-10576

The author is literary editor of the Pan-American Magazine. This book, she says, "is the fruit of seven years' travel in and study of Latin America, and two years' special work on and in Brazil, where seventeen out of the twenty states were visited." A survey of the history of Brazil is followed by a chapter of immense interest to the United States on Colonization in Brazil, dealing with the systematic method of inducing and regulating immigration and with the mixture of races. Other chapters take up Social conditions, Transportation, Industries, Currency, The world's horticultural and medicinal debt to Brazil, Brazil's exterior commerce. There are a number of illustrations, several maps, a glossary of Brazilian terms and an index.

"Not a travel book, but one which will interest men about to establish or promote business in South America."

+ A L A Bkl 13:397 Je '17

"As a general account of the country—its geography, its history, its people, its industries, its commerce—it has much to commend it, but it very plainly has the common fault of over praise. The book is written to please." G. B. Roorbach

+ — Ann Am Acad 73:233 S '17 100w

Reviewed by T. Walsh

+ Bookm 45:319 My '17 250w

"Its arrangement of material is admirable and a great deal of patient study and research is evident in its pages. There is also an ample consideration of the arts and letters of Brazil that will satisfy the student of these particulars." T. Walsh

+ Bookm 46:607 Ja '18 130w

Boston Transcript p6 My 12 '17 650w

"The book is remarkable for its fairness and kindly tone."

+ Cath World 105:824 S '17 200w

"The author's analysis of the results of colonization is particularly illuminating in view of the present crisis in the provinces of the south, where Teutonic influences predominate."

+ Dial 63:278 S 27 '17 350w

"The Brazilian point of view is given by much reference to native papers. Maps and excellent illustrations complete a valuable book."

+ Ind 92:261 N 3 '17 70w

"Miss Elliott has a notable faculty for presenting closely condensed material in modest space and at the same time making it interesting. . . . Miss Elliott's book will increase the growing interest in South America. It is copiously illustrated from photographs."

+ N Y Times 22:101 Mr 25 '17 700w

+ Outlook 116:161 My 23 '17 120w

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Je 1 '17 330w

+ Wls Lib Bul 13:184 Je '17 70w

ELLIS, HAVELOCK. Essays in war-time. *$1.50 (2½c) Houghton 575

(Eng ed 17-13565)

Mr Ellis calls these essays "further studies in the task of social hygiene." Many of the subjects treated are those on which he has already written much and with which his name is chiefly associated, among them, War and eugenics; War and the birth-rate; Feminism and masculinism; The mental differences of men and women; The conquest of venereal disease; Eugenics and genius; Marriage and divorce; The meaning of the birth-rate; Civilization and the birth-rate. In many but not all of these, the question of the effects of the war enters into the discussion.

"Readers not familiar with Havelock Ellis' writings, especially his 'Task of social hygiene,' will find this a stimulating, although a somewhat choppy volume. To others the book will neither add to nor detract from Mr Ellis' reputation as a keen and constructive critic of modern social problems. . . . The essay on Birth control is eminently sane and well considered, and is, together with the proposal for the nationalization of medical service, the real contribution of the book." A. B. Wolfe

+ Am Econ R 7:426 Je '17 130w

A L A Bkl 13:433 JI '17

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 45:183 Ap '17 360w

"The sheaf of essays is bound by a continuity of interest and a consistency of point of view which may be described as a scientific radicalism, challenging the established beliefs when these rest upon tradition rather than upon cogent argument and experience."

+ Dial 62:191 Mr 8 '17 230w

"The immediate urgency, as well as the profound intrinsic importance of the subjects of these 'Essays' should ensure them attention and discussion; and the writing is delightful in its subtlety and distinction, its wealth of suggestion and implication, and deep quiet humour. The three concluding articles on Birth-control and the close-packed little essay on 'Marriage and divorce' are particularly fine, in their characteristically unfinching and beautiful treatment of sexual subjects. . . . The essays dealing with the war, though admirable in tone, are less clear and sure in touch than the rest." F. W. S. Browne

+ Int J Ethics 27:406 Ap '17 200w

+ N Y Call p14 Mr 18 '17 300w

N Y Times 22:46 F 11 '17 700w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

ELLIS, HAVELOCK—Continued

"German theories that war is a 'biological necessity' have been demolished before now and what Mr Ellis has to say on this subject is neither original nor fresh. It has, however, the much greater merit of being sound and may be read with profit in this country. . . . On various questions of eugenics and sexual morality Mr Ellis has much to say. . . . While his views are often debatable, his purpose is ethical and not unduly individualistic."

+ Springfd Republican p6 F 9 '17 600w

Reviewed by Bruno Lasker

+ Survey 38:288 Je 30 '17 850w

"'War and the birth-rate' is a disappointing study. . . . The essay throws no clear light upon the momentous question of fact. . . . In the essays on 'Civilisation,' 'The birth-rate' and 'Birth control,' Mr Havelock Ellis expounds his militant Malthusianism. We will only say of them that they dwell too much on a few aspects of a many-sided subject."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p578 D 7 '16 850w

ELLIS, OLIN O., and GAREY, ENOCH BARTON. Plattsburg manual. il *$2 Century 355 17-10212

A work designed as a handbook for federal training camps. The authors are two officers in the United States army who acted as instructors in the Plattsburg training camp in 1916. Contents: General advice; Physical exercise; School of the soldier; School of the squad; School of the company; Fire superiority; The service of security; Attack and defense; General principles of target practice; Practice march or "hike"; Officers' reserve corps. In addition there is a supplement with six chapters for "advance work." The book is fully illustrated and is indexed.

"Simple directions, well illustrated."

+ A L A Bkl 13:375 Je '17

"For officers and men, and for all citizens who would see just what learning to be a soldier means."

Ind 90:127 Ap 14 '17 20w

"Preparatory manuals are more or less alike, in this if in no other respect, that they all have as their aim one and the same result. The road to this result is shortened by the employment in this book of illustrations showing not only the right, but also the wrong, way of doing certain things. Many of the diagrams, too, will prove helpful, and the text is clear, direct, and simple."

+ Nation 104:636 My 24 '17 300w

+ N Y Br Lib News 4:67 My '17 110w

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p14 Ap '17 160w

+ N Y Times 22:130 Ap 8 '17 190w

Pittsburgh 22:276 Ap '17

"One of the most timely publications of the spring. . . . It is the most elementary and at the same time the most readable guide thru the intricate earlier stages of soldiering that we have seen. The 155 illustrations, mostly from photographs, are an important feature." R. L.

+ Pub W 91:1326 Ap 21 '17 150w

St Louis 15:189 Je '17 20w

"The work was written primarily as a textbook for army training camps, but its usefulness has increased manifold since it was written."

+ Springfd Republican p6 O 16 '17 180w

ELLS, JOSEPH WILTON. Water purification. il *$5 McGraw 628.1 17-13569

"The book begins very logically with water in its relation to public health and comfort. Next, the various means of purification are discussed, and progress in filter construction—particularly, rapid sand filters—is described. The methods of storing and applying chemicals are treated, and there is a chapter on power-plant and miscellaneous equipment. The work also contains chapters relating to the cost of construction and operation of rapid sand filters, etc. . . . In the appendix are twelve tables useful to operators of water-purification plants. . . . A large part of the work is the result of the author's own experience. The remainder consists of quotations from published articles, for which there are references, mostly American, at the end of each chapter. Much of the material is new, and the illustrations are modern. . . . The use of the book would be greatly facilitated if the index were amplified." —Engin News-Rec

"The author's twenty-five years' experience, beginning in the laboratory of the Massachusetts State board of health and extending through many years at the Louisville and Cincinnati water-works and elsewhere, has qualified him for his well-performed task of writing a treatise on water purification. . . . As a whole, the book impresses one with sincerity of purpose and reliability of data. It will be of invaluable assistance to the designer and operator of water-purification plants."

+ Engin News-Rec 79:129 Jl 19 '17 500w

"The arrangement of the descriptive matter in logical order, so that a clear idea may be had of each process as a whole as well as in its details, has been carried out very successfully, and the descriptions are full and clear without being profuse."

+ Municipal Journal 42:805 Je 14 '17 380w

"The reading references at the chapter endings are especially noteworthy."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p8 Jl '17 60w

ELLWOOD, CHARLES ABRAM. Introduction to social psychology. *$2 (2c) Appleton 301 17-11579

Society is defined by Professor Ellwood as "that form of collective life which is carried on by means of mental interaction." It follows from this definition that the psychological element is fundamental in any study of social life. It is from this point of view that he approaches his subject in this book. Contents: Social psychology, its relations and methods; Organic evolution and social evolution; Human nature and human society; The nature of social unity [two chapters]; The nature of social continuity; Social change under normal conditions; Social change under abnormal conditions; Instinct and intelligence in the social life; Imitation and suggestion in the social life; Sympathy and consciousness of kind in the social life; Social order; Social progress; The nature of society.

"There is a catholicity about the author's thinking that will be a wholesome corrective for one-sidedness in teacher or students; there is not only a willingness to see strength as well as weakness in divergent opinions but also a desire to gain the strength of each in some inclusive conception. The real limitation of the book for teaching purposes is its abstractness." W. H. Black

+ Am Econ R 7:839 D '17 400w

"These chapters [chapters 4-5] are easily the best part of the volume and furnish an excellent presentation of social psychology proper. The third division, the remaining chapters, seem more like appendixes explaining and amplifying certain topics of the volume, but in themselves they form no unity and do not carry forward to a conclusion the main argument of the work." J. Q. Dealey

+ Am J Soc 23:255 S '17 150w

A L A Bkl 11.5 O '17

"In a study of the forces which unite society, Professor Ellwood has not overlooked consciousness of kind, or imitation, or sympathy, or any of the factors which have been put forward by certain writers as alone able to account for the cohesion of social groups. In his system he has made a niche into which each one of these forces finds its place. It is this broad-minded treatment of the subject which makes this volume so well fitted for the needs of the student in the social sciences who wishes a broad outlook upon this field." W. B. Bailey

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:750 N '17 250w

"Throughout the author sanely holds that the intellect is the supreme instrument of adaptation in the social life; and as instruments the intellect and its ideas are the means by which social progress can be rationally planned." Archibald Henderson

+ Bookm 46:276 N '17 250w

"Thoroughly adequate when judged by classroom standards, the volume can hardly be said to be notable. Yet it is generally unfair to criticize textbooks by the standards of notable contributions."

+ Dial 63:167 Ag 30 '17 250w

"A simplification of Professor Ellwood's 'Sociology in its psychological aspects.'"

Ind 91:108 J1 21 '17 60w

"We can recall no other contemporary sociological work of the psychological order which makes a saner and clearer presentation of its case. The criticism here to be passed does not concern form or detail: it has to do with the general matter of leaning so heavily upon psychology. . . . The pretensions of psychology, as here set forth or implied, make one think of the historian who claimed for history everything man had ever done on earth—astronomy, bacteriology, and all the rest."

* + — Nation 106:68 Ja '17 '18 1200w

"A competent and scientific, but rather dull book."

+ — New Repub 13:sup20 N 17 '17 140w

"It is written in a sedate, leisurely style, and luckily the author has not succumbed to the manner that has invaded even psychology of playing for the snappy phrase, the thrill of paradox." F. M.

+ N Y Call p15 N 11 '17 280w

R of Rs 56:440 O '17 100w

St Louis 15:320 S '17 10w

"The book will repay careful reading. It is exact and careful of statement, and is in all ways a suggestive and constructive study of social psychology."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 My 31 '17 320w

"Professor Ellwood's book, however, will remain rather for the special student of psychology and sociology than for the general reader." M. M. Davis, Jr.

+ — Survey 39:272 D 1 '17 400w

ELMER, MANUEL CONRAD. Technique of social surveys. *$1 World co., Lawrence, Kan. 309.1 17-18991

"This book devotes itself to two main questions: the kind of facts to be gathered in social surveys and the use to be made of them, the greater and more valuable part of the publication being devoted to the former. This includes discussions and questionnaires relating to a rather wide range of topics having to do with social welfare, the more important among them being population and vital statistics, educational agencies, recreation and amusement, industry and labor conditions, disease and health measures, housing, public utilities, transportation and storage, distribution of wealth, political organization, taxes, charities, courts, child-care, defectives, juvenile and adult crime, and religious activities."—Survey

"The author has made his book thoroughly practical and it will be of distinct usefulness to those for whom it was written."

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:792 N '17 90w

"While the book has the weakness of many others on the same subject, namely, its dwelling too briefly upon the purpose in and reasons for collecting the mass of facts called for, and of instructing too little in the interpretation and methods of using the facts, it nevertheless has suggestions for the surveyor and will be of use to individuals, clubs and other groups of citizens who wish, perhaps, not so much to make a survey as to become intelligent upon social conditions in their own community." S. M. Harrison

+ — Survey 39:271 D 1 '17 320w

ELY, RICHARD THEODORE, and others. Foundations of national prosperity. *$2 Macmillan 338 17-30136

Four college professors, three of political economy, and one of geology, have collaborated in this work whose sub-title is "studies in the conservation of permanent national resources." Part 1, by Professor Ely, deals with the more general aspects of the subject, bringing it particularly into relation to economic theory, and terminating with a consideration of conservation policies. In part 2 Prof. Ralph H. Hess discusses the relation of conservation to economic evolution and shows that each stage in economic evolution must have its own conservation policies. Part 3, by Prof. Charles K. Leith, deals with minerals which present peculiar problems in conservation. Part 4, contributed by Prof. Thomas Nixon Carver, deals with the human resources, for which natural resources exist.

"In part 4, Professor Carver approaches the subject from several new and unexpected angles."

+ R of Rs 57:220 F '18 170w

"Prof. Carver has produced a clean and vigorous chapter, as has Prof. Leith. Their hard facts are balanced by the progressive theorizing of Prof. Ely and Prof. Hess. One cannot but feel that it would be more valuable as a treatise had its scope been confined to conservation in the directly material sense in which we use the term when we speak of conservation of natural resources."

+ — Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 28 '18 530w

ELY, RICHARD THEODORE, and others. Outlines of economics. 3d rev ed *$2.10 Macmillan 330 16-19484

"The third edition of Professor Ely's much used text is now available. The past eight years have been fruitful of changes in economic thought and in economic activity. It was to take account of these that the present revision was undertaken. This has involved the rewriting of many parts of the work. The discussion of underlying principles has been expanded; two chapters—on Business organization and on Economic activities of municipalities—have been omitted as such; one on Labor legislation has been added, and the sequence of others has been altered. All of these changes make for greater unity of treatment in a work that already showed distinctively serviceable qualities."—Ann Am Acad

"The meager index of the second edition is very much enlarged and correspondingly more helpful. The 'references' appended to chapters have been revised and account taken of recent literature. But the lists of questions are often unchanged or are shortened. . . . Final conclusions from reviewing this book are that the text while maintaining its identity has yet grown not in size only but in character and maturity; that it has been successful in including a vast amount of new material, in taking account of recent developments, and in thoroughly revising all sections. If not up to date today, it is as near being so as we can expect in these days of rapid development. Criticisms are due to the inclusion of controversial matter; to the attempt to be all inclusive; to a strain of revolutionary philosophy; and to the fact that the text is written from the standpoint of the subject and of scholarship rather than with an eye single to the student and the class-room." C: E. Persons

* + Am Econ R 7:98 Mr '17 2050w

+ A L A Bkl 13:273 Mr '17

+ Ann Am Acad 70:326 Mr '17 90w

+ Nation 104:556 My 3 '17 270w

"It differs from the older editions in that its scope is much wider, and it includes, in addition to the theoretical considerations, a great deal of what goes under the name of applied economics. In this it resembles Professor Taussig's work on the same subject published a few years ago. Both books mark the departure from the old college textbooks in economics, which dealt exclusively with theoretical considerations of the problems of production, distribution and exchange. . . . The volume is well arranged for teaching purposes." A. L. Trachtenberg

+ N Y Call p14 Mr 4 '17 600w

ELY, RICHARD THEODORE, and others—Cont.

"It is a sign of the times when such a standard and authoritative book as this requires such revision for its third edition that it was not possible to use the old type."

+ N Y Times 21:488 N 12 '16 130w

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 7 '17 160w

EMBURY, AYMAR. Livable house—its plan and design il *$2.50 Moffat 728.6 17-14400

"The book contains 100 photographs of different types of houses, together with many detail drawings of interior plans of the same, which demonstrate, as they are intended to do, that a high standard of architectural merit is possible in a small house when good taste and good judgment prevail."—Springf'd Republican

"An interesting and suggestive 'first book.'"

+ Cleveland p97 Jl '17 50w

"The book is both attractive and suggestive."

+ Outlook 116:412 Jl 11 '17 80w

"Since the cost of building material and labor have advanced by leaps during the past year and a half, Mr Embury's statements of cost prices require revision."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 My 27 '17 350w

EMERSON, EDWARD WALDO. Henry Thoreau as remembered by a young friend. il *$1.25 (6½c) Houghton 17-19701

The author is a son of Ralph Waldo Emerson. Thoreau had the run of the Emerson house, and was to the children "the best kind of an older brother." Twenty-seven years ago, Dr Emerson tells us, he was moved to write a lecture on Thoreau, because of "the want of knowledge and understanding, not only of his character, but of the events of his life," and of "the false impressions given by accredited writers who really knew him hardly at all." Lowell's essay on Thoreau is mentioned as "having unhappily prejudiced many persons." This book is the outgrowth of that early lecture, and is based, not only on Dr Emerson's own youthful recollections, but on the recollections of the Concord people whom he, as a physician, has had the opportunity to know.

A L A BkI 14:57 N '17

"Of Thoreau's experience as a teacher, of his work in the pencil-making industry founded by his father, of his life in Concord and acquaintance with its people of greater and less celebrity and of no celebrity at all, we learn much in Dr Emerson's few and unpretentious pages. . . . They solve many puzzles about his life, his doings and his character." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 1 '17 1350w

"These illuminating glimpses of a strongly marked and splendidly independent but too often misunderstood personality are a welcome addition to the rather meagre literary product called forth by the Thoreau centennial. In this little book Thoreau the idealist stands justified for his refusal to devote the best years of his life to pencil-making and money-getting."

+ Dial 63:101 O 25 '17 200w

"In these few pages we see the author of 'Walden' at his best and, we feel convinced, as he really was."

+ Ind 91:476 S 22 '17 100w

"It is a long way from the stoical Thoreau of Emerson's 'Menoir' to the 'simple, gentle, friendly, and amusing' Thoreau of his son's 'Henry Thoreau as remembered by a young friend.' . . . If the point of view is slightly distorted, at least there is compensation in the really winning personality that rises into life as we read these pages."

+ Nation 105:205 Ag 23 '17 300w

"A rather muddled sketch of Thoreau's life, with a wealth of significant incidents that throw a more human halo about that rich personality." Max Lustig

+ N Y Call p14 Ag 26 '17 320w

+ Outlook 116:626 Ag 22 '17 80w

"Dr Emerson succeeds in demolishing common misconceptions of Thoreau as an idler, misanthropist, and rather inconsistent fanatic

. . . and demonstrates that he deserved the pretty general love and respect of the Old Concord with which this little book credits him."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 16 '17 430w

EMERTON, EPHRAIM. Beginnings of modern Europe (1250-1450). maps $1.80 (1c) Ginn 940.4 17-25735

The period which is the subject of study in this volume is the transition period between the time when Europe was committed to feudalism and the Roman church, and that of the modern Europe of independent national states and religious toleration. The thread of the narrative aims to be the working out, consciously in literature and unconsciously thru social and political conflict, of the idea that individuals or bodies of men voluntarily united in a common interest might, if they pleased, speak and act for themselves. Slight emphasis is put upon theological aspects, political, social and intellectual movements being the main consideration. Contents: The principle of the modern state; The new empire; The new papacy; The rise of a middle class; The Italian republics to 1300; The Hundred years' war; The age of the councils; The age of the despots in Italy; The renaissance in Italy; The northern renaissance.

Boston Transcript p8 N 21 '17 210w

"Nothing but praise can be said of this most admirable treatment of European history. Professor Emerton avoids the bizarre which is so tempting to some of the popular writers on medieval history and institutions, and he will be found a safe and sound guide thru a fascinating field."

+ Educ R 54:529 D '17 70w

"If one is looking for a masterly treatment of the transition from mediæval to modern times, such will be found in this book. His method involves a certain amount of repetition, which, by the way, is beneficial rather than detrimental in this case by showing the close interrelation of the historical movements considered. The book contains a number of valuable colored maps."

+ School R 26:69 Ja '18 380w

EMPEY, ARTHUR GUY. "Over the top." il *$1.50 (2c) Putnam 940.91 17-15575

An account of trench warfare "somewhere in France" by an American who served for a year and a half in the British army as bomber, machine gunner, etc., until he fell wounded and after four months in the American women's war hospital in England, was discharged as physically unfit for further war service. Empey says: "I have tried to tell my experiences in the language of Tommy sitting on the fire step of a front-line trench on the Western Front—just as he would tell his mate next him what was happening at a different part of the line." "Tommy's dictionary of the trenches" (unofficial) fills the last thirty-five pages.

+ A L A BkI 14:19 O '17

"Through it all there breathes the spirit of buoyancy and optimism that is characteristically American. It is all an unconscious piece of quite wonderful writing."

+ Cath World 106:258 N '17 330w

+ Cleveland p101 S '17 70w

"For once the publisher's urgent description does not exaggerate; for in this unpretentious volume is caught at last the soul of Tommy Atkins."

+ Dial 63:114 Ag 16 '17 480w

"One of the very best soldier books of the war."

+ Ind 91:184 Ag 4 '17 400w

+ Lit D 55:41 D 8 '17 190w

"There have been several such books, but this is different from them all and one feels that for the average fighting man, it is truer than the others. . . . In no other book that has come from the front has there been so much of soldier humor. . . . Prospective soldiers can learn here pretty nearly just what is awaiting them, in both incident and sensation."

+ N Y Times 22:239 Je 24 '17 1000w

"Many of our readers must have heard Captain Empey tell his war experiences from the platform. He writes exactly as he talks—clearly, incisively, in the language of the trenches."

+ Outlook 116:489 J1 25 '17 150w

Pittsburgh 22:681 O '17 10w

Pratt p39 O '17 10w

"Few personal records of service have been so much genuine pleasure as this one—whether for the overflowing cheeriness and the simple intimacy and the keen humour of its style, or for the real feeling which beats all through it."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p639 D 20
'17 270w

EMPIRE and the future. *75c Macmillan 325.3
17-15171

"A slim volume containing a series of lectures delivered in the University of London, King's college. Mr Steel-Maitland contributes an introduction. Dr M. E. Sadler deals with 'The universities and the war.' Sir Charles Lucas treats of 'Empire and democracy.' The Master of Balliol discourses on 'The people and the duties of empire.' 'Imperial administration' is in the capable hands of Dr H. A. L. Fisher. Mr Philip Kerr is on his own ground, dealing with 'Commonwealth and empire.' The volume is fittingly closed by Mr G. R. Parkin's address on 'The duty of the empire to the world.'—Ath

"There is no single work we would more strongly recommend to those interested in the future of the British commonwealth than this little volume. Indeed, we regard it as an excellent introduction to the study of the problems of imperial reconstruction. It contains no cut-and-dried schemes; its value lies rather in providing a background for schemes of reconstruction."

+ Ath p88 F '17 700w

N Y Br Lib News 4:39 Mr '17

St Louis 15:314 S '17 10w

"From one important standpoint it is a book to be welcomed: it comes from men who are profoundly in earnest, and who wish to grow into the needs of a most difficult new time. Their desire is to educate themselves, as well as to help those who know less than they do. On the other hand, they do not yet know how to coax great subjects through the prejudices of uneducated middle-age. . . . It is a book for political clubs and for university students. The subjects chosen are too widespread to be generally useful at the present moment."

+ Sat R 122:509 N 25 '16 1350w

Reviewed by the Earl of Cromer

+ Spec 117:656 N 25 '16 1600w

"These lectures are anything but academic. Throughout they are the live words of men who speak of great things to listeners as keenly interested as themselves."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p543 N 16
'16 1000w

EMPTY house. il *$1.40 (2½c) Macmillan
17-17515

"The theme of this novel is the need of sex-fulfilment for the American wife, through motherhood. The wife in evidence, who is her own witness and judge, has grown up, under the example of her own mother's fate, in the fear of maternity. She dreads marriage for what it threatens, and will not marry until it is understood that she is to have no children. Between herself and her young husband exists a possible basis of friendship as well as that passionate relation which is to go through the inevitable phases. 'The need of a world of men' asserts itself for the husband; the wife is left to her own resources, her clothes, her bridge, her idle-restless occupations of the servanted and childless city-woman. Her husband remains her preoccupation, while his work more and more absorbs him. In her will to possess him, she begins to prey upon him; in the end, by her exactions and by her secret and disastrous interference with his career, she brings about his ruin and his death. And it is all traceable to that 'over-sexed' condition of the American woman which, according to the German scientist of the story, condemns her, in default of motherhood, to destroy her mate."—Nation

"These people have the breath of life in them, are real as the action is real, however slightly both may be outlined." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:96 S '17 540w

"With her abstract theories of married life the writer of 'The empty house' gives us all food for discussion. But like many novels with a purpose it is totally one-sided. . . . Were we to surmise concerning the writer of this novel we might say that she is herself unmarried. The days of her childhood are described convincingly, but the post-matrimonial discussions lack conviction and sincerity." D. F. G.

— + Boston Transcript p6 Ag 1 '17 490w

"It is a vivacious story with an air of determination to speak out and tell the truth. What it tells is interesting. But after all it does not tell very much. The manner is sometimes irritating, if the reader is over-sensitive to literary manner. In trying to sound human and natural the author makes an unnecessary sacrifice of sentence-construction." J: Macy

+ Dial 62:113 Ag 16 '17 120w

"A special plea, if you like, but vigorously embodied in a tale well told."

+ Nation 105:247 S 6 '17 310w

"We are almost tempted to say that it is many years since we have read anything so trivial published by a reputable house. . . . The style is scrappy and lacking entirely in any literary qualities." M. G. S.

— N Y Call p14 S 2 '17 250w

"Notwithstanding the irritating style and the wearying repetitions, the author contrives to put a good deal of emotional suspense and some dramatic situations into the story. But it really wasn't necessary, for the convincingness of the tale, to make the teller of it seem quite such an uncurbed fool."

— N Y Times 22:265 J1 15 '17 730w

"An incisive yet moving study of feminine tendencies—some limited and morbid, others general and human. There is bitterness in the exposition of one type of American women, described by a foreign scientific observer."

Outlook 116:556 Ag 8 '17 70w

ENDELL, FRITZ AUGUST GOTTFRIED. Old tavern signs; an excursion in the history of hospitality. il *$5 Houghton 394 16-24700

"Mr Endell confesses in his 'Old tavern signs' that his love of the subject is his only apology for his bold undertaking of writing about it. First it was the fligree quality and the beauty of the delicate tracery of the wrought-iron signs in the picturesque villages of southern Germany that attracted his attention; then their deep, symbolic significance exerted its influence more and more over his mind, and tempted him at last to follow their history back until he could discover its multifarious relations to the thought and feeling of earlier generations. . . . Poetical and political signs are treated at length, and the English sign and its peculiarities are fully described. Not the least interesting part of the book are the pictures, some of them copies of old prints. The author has added a bibliography and index to make his work complete."—Boston Transcript

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 27 '16 700w

"A notable book of a rather unusual kind, . . . which the author himself lavishly illustrated with drawings of much quaintness and charm. . . . The edition is limited to 550 copies."

+ Dial 61:544 D 14 '16 130w

"If it were not for the date in the imprint and a few scattered allusions, one would almost swear that this book had been composed in the eighteenth century. It seems to be pervaded by the kindly, unworldly sentiment of the vanished Germany of little states, such as Thackeray hardly caricatured in Pumpernickel, and Stevenson made the scene of Prince Otto's adventures. Over all is the atmosphere one feels in the illustrations to Hans Andersen. Nowhere is the modern, scientific spirit."

ENDELL, F. A. G.—Continued

+ Nation 104:372 Mr 29 '17 550w

N Y Br Lib News 4:15 Ja '17

"A book at once erudite and whimsical, entertaining in its style and illuminating in its account of the social life of former times."

+ Pittsburgh 22:131 F '17 30w

ERASMUS, DESIDERIUS. Complaint of peace. *50c (2½c) Open ct. 172.4 17-14169

"This translation of the 'Querela pacis' of Erasmus is reprinted from a rare old English version. It is probably the 1802 reprint of the translation made by T. Paynell but published anonymously." (Publishers' preface) Erasmus, even in the sixteenth century, pictures Peace as seeking a refuge in vain with the common people, with kings, with scholars and with the religious. He dwells upon the incompatibility of war with Christianity, and argues that "there is scarcely any peace so unjust, but it is preferable, upon the whole, to the justest war," but states that he is to be understood as speaking of the unjustifiable wars that Christians wage with Christians, and not of the purely defensive wars necessary to repel the violence of invaders.

"The essay is noteworthy as an appealing presentation of the arguments for peace."

+ Ath p589 N '17 200w

"Every argument that has been advanced by the lovers of peace against militarism and its attendant horrors is cogently stated in this quaint document."

+ R of Rs 56:331 S '17 100w

"This translation is welcome for other things than its abstract wisdom. It is welcome for its gentle irony and for the modulated richness of the English. The book would be admirable for reading in the schools."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 6 '17 1100w

"What Erasmus has to say is still not only readable, but worth reading. War is the most disastrous of human crimes and follies, and anything that helps us to understand that is good and useful. Provided that we also understand—what Erasmus only shows for one moment a glimpse of understanding—that it may be the most urgent of human duties."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p448 S 20 '17 1550w

ERICHSEN, ERICH. Forced to fight; the tale of a Schleswig Dane. *$1.25 (3c) McBride 940.91 (Eng ed 17-15580)

The author tells this story as it was told him by a young soldier returned from the war. "He told me," says the author, "sometimes calmly and sometimes with excitement, about all those experiences that had whitened his hair and worn out his body, and made him an old man, though he had not yet completed his twenty-seventh year. I am telling his story as he told it to me. The words are mine but all that gives life to them, the moods and thoughts, the hopes and sufferings, the abasement of the soul and the horror of the mind—all these are his." It is the terrible story of one who endured all of the horrors of war without any of the sustenance of a conviction of right. After the invasion of Belgium, in which he took part, the narrator was transferred to East Prussia, a region similarly devastated. The book is translated from the Danish by Ingeborg Lund.

+ A L A Bkl 14:19 O '17

Pratt p40 O '17 10w

ERVINE, ST JOHN GREER. Changing winds. *$1.60 (1c) Macmillan 17-9813

The mettle of the young men who are giving their lives in this war and the irremediable loss suffered by any nation that goes to war are brought home by this novel. It is the story of four boys, friends from school days. It is a story filled with the joy and eagerness and tragic seriousness of youth, with its big ambitions and easy achievements and its plans for the reformation of the world. War does not enter into these plans. The war is something that happens; but it cuts across every other claim and takes the four, one after the other. The war is a calamity that breaks suddenly, but the Irish revolution which also enters into the story, gives warnings of its approach. There is hardly a phase of the complicated Irish problem that is not touched on in the course of the novel. Henry Quinn, one of the four, is Irish and it is to him that events are most closely related, but the most vital personality in the group is Gilbert Farlow, killed in Gallipoli. The book is dedicated to the memory of Rupert Brooke.

"One of the women and the sex interest she arouses will be disappointed of by some readers, though few such would read the book."

A L A Bkl 13:449 Jl '17

"The character-drawing throughout is of a high standard, but the chief interest of the book lies in the discussions between the quartet of young men, which range over nearly all the questions of the day. . . . the position of labour, the war, Irish affairs, including the rebellion, etc. . . . The book will appeal mostly to the unsophisticated."

+ Ath p253 My '17 210w

"A story of uncommon range and power."

H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:411 Je '17 670w

"Despite Mr Ervine's chaotic methods, despite his annoying habit of playing havoc with the passing of time, despite his rapid shifting backward and forward through the years and his consequent chronological disorder, despite the wordiness and trivial episodes in a story that for its full effect should be brisk and compact, he has written in 'Changing winds' a novel that demands attention and that is certain to arouse discussion. We do not regret its length and we do not hasten towards its end. . . . Anyone who has read 'Mr Britling sees it through' will be eager for another view of the English attitude as reflected in Mr Ervine's agile mind." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 11 '17 1400w

"A monument of industry rather than talent. . . . 'Changing winds' suggests the book of a writer who has attempted to immerse himself in his subject, but has not absorbed its implications. It is the work of a man who does not quite feel the life he portrays."

Dial 62:143 My 17 '17 150w

+ Ind 91:183 Ag 4 '17 200w

"An interpretation full of insight, and rich in human sympathy."

+ Nation 104:601 My 17 '17 570w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 105:600 N 29 '17 130w

"So far, then, as Mr Ervine has allowed his discipleship to H. G. Wells to lead him into discussing universal military service, factory organization, machine industry, etc., he has been badly bamboozled. You have to be a Meredith or at any rate a Wells to overflow into these creative fictional discussions, and where Mr Ervine has attempted this he is tin painted to look like steel. . . . The utilization of contemporary personages and contemporary events gives 'Changing winds' an excitement that has a sort of suggestion of genius. There are certain tricks about the book, however, that impair this impression. . . . Though not written in the first person, 'Changing winds' is hot from first-hand experience, an empiric version of reality." F. H.

+ New Repub 10:326 Ap 14 '17 2100w

"Mr Ervine's new book is by all odds the biggest piece of work he has done."

+ N Y Times 22:113 Ap 1 '17 550w

"The author has one pervading purpose, namely, to make his readers see Ireland and Irishmen as they are. . . . The picture of the recent Irish revolution included in the story is admirably done, and is both touching and dramatic."

+ Outlook 115:710 Ap 18 '17 140w

"The title was taken from the sonnet, 'The dead,' by Rupert Brooke, to whom the author has dedicated the story." M. A. S.

St Louis 15:184 Je '17 20w

"'Changing winds' may perhaps be not unfairly described as a set of variations on the theme of Mr St John Ervine's book, 'Sir Edward Carson and the Ulster movement,' in which there was very little about Sir Edward Carson but a great deal about Ulstermen, young and old. . . . The pictures of life in London are enlivened by some caustic portraits, under thin disguises, of well-known figures in the world of letters."

+ Spec 118:567 My 19 '17 530w

"The most interesting modern Irish novel that we can remember. . . . The Londoner and the Dubliner, particularly the former, will have no difficulty in recognizing numerous real people in the thinnest disguises, many of them hit off with amusing malice. . . . The book is all youth and enthusiasm, and it is written by a man who obviously loves Ireland and loves England too. That is what makes it so good a presentation of the issue between the two countries."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p187 Ap 19 '17 600w

ESENWEIN, JOSEPH BERG. Writing for the magazines. *$1.50 Home correspondence school 808 16-26010

"The Writer's library already contains books on short story writing, photo play writing, writing for vaudeville, verse writing and play writing. Its manifest object is the compiling of a series of helpful and practical textbooks which shall answer the numerous questions which writers want to ask and which no one has time to answer for them. Four things Mr Esenwein considers essential to success in writing—having something to say, knowing how different editors wish it said, knowing how to shape material and knowing the markets."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 13:161 Ja '17

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 28 '17 200w

"How to do it' books are always slightly amusing, but in 'Writing for the magazines' J. B. Esenwein gives intelligent practical advice as to what the editor wants."

+ Ind 90:517 Je 16 '17 30w

+ Lit D 54:569 Mr 3 '17 50w

Pittsburgh 22:56 Ja '17

ESENWEIN, JOSEPH BERG, and STOCKARD, MARIETTA. Children's stories, and how to tell them. (Writer's library) *$1.50 (24c) Home correspondence school 372.6 18-781

Professor Esenwein is head of the literary faculty of the Home correspondence school, Springfield, Mass., and Miss Stockard is connected with the Wilson normal school, Washington, D.C. The authors attempt to give "a clear statement of the various methods used successfully by story-tellers," and, from these methods, to deduce certain simple foundation-principles "so as to help the student of the art to understand the material he has to work with, the forms in which it may be cast, various successful methods of presentation, the limitations of his hearers, and the ends he is justified in seeking to gain." (Foreword) All this is covered in the eleven chapters of part 1, each chapter being followed by "Suggestions for study and discussion." Part 2 consists of "Fifty stories to tell to children." These include among others animal, Bible, patriot, Thanksgiving, Christmas, and hero stories. Part 3 gives eight suggestive "Reading and reference lists," such as "Source-books for the story-teller," "Books on literary study and its value," etc. A list of publishers' addresses is given.

"Now, the important and joyous thing about this excellent new book is that it indicates a reiterated faith on the part of the authors and publishers that story telling is an important factor in life."

+ Ind 92:444 D 1 '17 30w

St Louis 15:422 D '17 30w

ESSEN, LÉON VAN DER. Invasion and the war in Belgium; with a sketch of the diplomatic negotiations preceding the conflict. il *15s T. Fisher Unwin, London 940.91

(Eng ed 17-17104)

"Our aim," writes Professor van der Essen, 'has been to give for the first time a connected account and a complete survey of all the events of the German invasion and of the war in Belgium from the attack on Liège till after the battle of the Yser. . . . We have always referred to our sources to enable the reader to control our evidence.' . . . The account of the military operations is drawn chiefly from three sources—the official report of the Belgian general staff; a compilation by a Belgian officer entitled 'Les pages de gloire de l'armée Belge'; and reprinted articles from the newspaper Le XXme. Siècle." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) The author was professor of history at the University of Louvain.

"The fullest and best account of the invasion of Belgium that we have yet seen. . . . This book shows in detail what the Belgians did. . . . The author gives a clear and dispassionate account of the siege and fall of Antwerp."

+ Spec 118:675 Je 16 '17 270w

"The translation falls below the ordinary standard of translations from the French. It is about upon a level with them; but that level is not high. . . . We must confess to some disappointment with the critical methods of the author. We cannot always share his confidence in his authorities. . . . Professor van der Essen is also very loose in his reckoning of casualties. . . . From a military point of view, therefore, we cannot regard this book as of any great value; and yet we welcome it and commend it heartily to the English reader."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p242 My 24 '17 1200w

EVANS, CARADOC. My people. 4th ed *$1.35 Duffield (Eng ed 16-20112)

"Mr Caradoc Evans's tales have a comparatively novel setting as an addition to their many purely literary merits. . . . The peasants of West Wales are the characters and the neighborhood centring around Capel Sion the scene of all these stories. . . . Many of the tales in this volume are sketches, perhaps, rather than stories, but they are every one of them interesting. The quaint dialect is fascinating, the whole point of view of these people redolent of the soil of which they are practically a part." (N Y Times) The first English edition appeared in 1915.

N Y Br Lib News 5:74 My '17

"This is not in any way what can be called a pleasant book. It is realism, grim and stark. Realism of that type one usually associates with Russian fiction. . . . Yet because he is a genuine and not a pseudo realist, every here and there appears some individual through whose character there runs a thread of pure gold. . . . The tales are not without touches of comedy."

+ N Y Times 22:222 Je 10 '17 620w

Pittsburgh 21:483 N '16

EVERSLEY, GEORGE JOHN SHAW-LE-FEVRE, 1st baron. Turkish empire: its growth and decay. il *$3 (2c) Dodd 949.6 (Eng ed 17-29198)

"In the course of his long life Lord Eversley has witnessed the greater part of the events which have resulted in the expulsion of the Turks. So far back as in 1855 and 1857, he spent some time at Constantinople, and travelled in Bulgaria and Greece, and later, in 1890 and 1895, he revisited these countries and was able to compare their condition with what he recollected from his former visits. In a single volume, in a compact and popular form, he has given not a complete history of the Turkish empire, but a description of the processes by which it was aggregated, under the first ten great sultans, and has since been in great part dismembered under their twenty-six degenerate successors.

EVERSLEY, G: J: S., 1st baron—Continued

In the latter part of his volume, Lord Eversley has drawn from his own experience, and puts on record his conversations with Lord Stratford de Redcliffe and the Ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid." (Publishers' note) The book is divided into two parts: The growth of empire, and The decay of empire. There are three maps.

"Lord Eversley knows Turkey well, and is therefore able to write informatively upon the causes which led to the rise of that once great and flourishing nation, and to its subsequent decline and dismemberment. This is a book which should be widely read, especially at the present period."

+ Ath p530 O '17 90w

"This very readable and interesting book was written to meet the need of a clear-cut historical interpretation of the forces of disintegration in Turkey. Intentionally of secular rather than academic appeal, it is not the result of independent research, but is based mainly on the great work of von Hammer, the German historian, although many other authorities have been drawn upon for new historical evidence."

+ N Y Times 22:576 D 23 '17 550w

"Lord Eversley's intention to be fair is evident on every page; but, knowing nothing personally of the Asiatic side of Turkey, he has given too much faith to English writers with a grudge against it, who in their turn have given too much faith to eastern Christian writers of a bygone age. Lord Eversley is fairer in his judgment of the Turks, it may be said at once, than any other British author of his standpoint."

+ — Sat R 124:309 O 20 '17 1100w

+ Spec 119:716 D 15 '17 1100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p167 S 27 '17 70w

"The Turk has been a failure, and Lord Eversley's book enables the reader to review with comparative brevity the career of this idle apprentice among the nations. It is interesting and useful to have the main points of Ottoman history with some garnishment of picturesque or arresting detail set forth so handily as in the present volume, but the reader could wish that more attention had been given to the spelling of names and the identification of persons; nor should the capture of Athens and the subsequent strangling of Franco degli Acclajuli, the last reigning Duke of Athens and Lord of Thebes, be represented as the destruction of the last spark of Greek independence."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p471 O 4 '17 1900w

EWERS, HANNS HEINZ. Edgar Allan Poe; tr. by Adèle Lewisohn. *60c (7c) Huebsch

17-2710

This essay on Poe is translated from the German. Its author was born in Düsseldorf in 1871 and he has, the translator tells us, lived in almost all the countries of the world. He spent some time in India, finding himself deeply in sympathy with its mysticism. The translator says, "At a time when Poe was comparatively little understood Ewers was his most sympathetic German interpreter. He is able to mirror the soul of Poe because they are intellectual kinsmen."

Reviewed by H: B. Fuller

Dial 62:433 My 17 '17 1200w

"The swift, delicate, precise sentences give no sense of translation. . . . Ewers's enthusiastic study, rather his pean in praise of Poe, is a distinct contribution to our growing critical literature on the poet."

+ Ind 89:115 Ja 15 '17 100w

— Nation 101:110 Ap 5 '17 220w

St Louis 15:119 Ap '17

"Only a German could allow a criticism of Poe to degenerate into a vitriolic attack upon everything English. This is just what happened to Hanns Heinz Ewers's essay on Poe."

— Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 5 '17 400w

F

FABRE, JEAN HENRI CASIMIR. Insect adventures; selections from Alexander Teixeira de Mattos' translation of Fabre's "Souvenirs entomologiques," retold for young people by Louise Seymour Hasbrouck. il *$2 (3c) Dodd 595.7 17-31000

Fabre was a French school-teacher of whom an English critic said: "He is the wisest man, and the best read in the book of nature, of whom the centuries have left us any record." Chapter seventeen of the volume gives an interesting sketch of his early years and incidentally shows what problems the French pedagogue had to meet back in the last century. The book makes a big appeal to the young imagination in such expressions as the caddis-worm "pirates," the "insect submarines," and the "spider's telegraph wires." His life stories of familiar insects will prove fascinating because he touches into life the human quality; because instead of ripping up an animal and turning it into an object of horror and pity in the dissecting room he studies it alive "under the blue sky to the song of the cicadas."

"After reading what he has to say about the mysteries of the spider, we feel as we did after reading Maeterlinck's incomparable 'Life of the bee.' His books should be received with the appreciation they deserve. They are written by a great lover of nature who happened to be a great scientist as well."

+ Lit D 55:51 D 8 '17 140w

"Will give young people a new interest in the natural life around them."

+ N Y Times 22:571 D 23 '17 50w

"The great virtue of Fabre as an author for children is that he teaches the habit of patient and precise observation. There should, then, be a welcome for 'Insect adventures.'"

+ Springf'd Republican p15 D 1 '17 80w

FABRE, JEAN HENRI CASIMIR. Life of the grasshopper; tr. by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. *$1.50 (1½c) Dodd 595.7 17-9824

The translator says, "I have ventured in the present volume to gather together, under the somewhat loose and inaccurate title of 'The life of the grasshopper,' the essays scattered over the 'Souvenirs entomologiques' that treat of grasshoppers, crickets, locusts and such insects as the cicada, or cigale, the mantis and the cuckoo-spit, or, to adopt the author's happier and more euphonious term, the foamy cicadella. They exhaust the number of the orthopterous and homopterous insects discussed by Henri Fabre." Some of the chapters have appeared in a translation by Bernard Miall, published with the title "Social life in the insect world."

+ A L A Bkl 13:336 My '17

+ Dial 62:214 S 13 '17 290w

"This volume attests his delicacy of observation, his humor of description, his unequalled and astonishing patience."

+ Lit D 55:40 Ja 12 '18 90w

"It goes without saying that we have here, once more, all the sincerity, sagacity, keen sight and insight, and the ripe 'human' flavor that have already made a half-dozen volumes of Fabre popular in translation."

+ Nation 105:155 Ag 9 '17 100w

"In this book, as always, Fabre's interest centers in instinct; but here as elsewhere, in spite of the accumulation of accurately determined data, he makes no contribution to the solution of the problem of the essential nature of instinct. One loves Fabre for his inveterate aversion to the intricate panoply of modern scientific research, but one sees him as the last of his race." E. S. S.

+ New Repub 12:165 S 8 '17 950w

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 27 '17 220w

FABRE, JEAN HENRI CASIMIR. Story-book of science. il *$2 (2c) Century 504 17-25300

This volume, translated from the nineteenth French edition by Florence Constable Bicknell, is one of a series of elementary science works written by the eminent French naturalist in the belief that the truths of nature could be made more interesting than fiction to young people. The translator says, "The identity of the 'Uncle Paul,' who . . . plays the story-teller's part, is not hard to guess; and the young people who gather about him to listen to his true stories . . . are, without doubt, the author's own children, in whose companionship he delighted and whose education he conducted with wise solicitude." The stories are not limited to the insect life which engrossed so much of the author's attention. The wonders of the rocks, the planets, the flowers and fruits and of the sea are disclosed to the children's eager minds.

"Delightful for reading aloud as they will interest grown folk as well as some of the older boys and girls."

+ A L A Bkl 14:100 D '17

Reviewed by J: Walcott

+ Bookm 46:497 D '17 110w

"The author's wide grasp of scientific facts has been no barrier in making a book for young readers that endows these facts with the witchery of fairy lore."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 10 '17 30w

"It should prove an invaluable book for growing children; a book of reference in answering intelligently numerous and constant queries of childhood."

+ Lit D 56:39 Ja 26 '18 190w

"Curiosity and the love of story are here blended in just proportions. Miss Bicknell has furnished a competent English translation and the Century company has done its share by publishing it on good paper in admirably clear type."

+ New Repub 13:104 N 24 '17 170w

"We owe a debt of thanks to translator and publisher who have put into our hands in English words Fabre's stories of sciences for children. For to his well-known charm of style and his knowledge, Fabre adds an understanding of the child's mind." Maud Thompson

+ N Y Call p15 N 11 '17 550w

FABRE D'OLIVET, ANTOINE, tr. Golden verses of Pythagoras; done into English by Nayán Louise Redfield. il *$3 (3½c) Putnam 182 17-9234

Fabre d'Olivet, an eighteenth century philosopher, translated the "Golden verses of Pythagoras" into French, with "a discourse upon the essence and form of poetry among the principal peoples of the earth" as a preface. He also wrote a more extended "Examination of the golden verses," which was first published in 1813. For the present volume Miss Redfield has translated both these discourses, and she presents also, in addition to the Greek and French versions, an English translation of the "Golden verses."

"In the 'Golden verses of Pythagoras' Fabre d'Olivet illustrates at the same time a philosophical insight which amounts to genius, and a self-centred frenzy of purpose which touches genius on the one hand and insanity on the other. The general effect of self-hypnosis is furthered by a fluency and warmth of style in the original which Miss Redfield admirably succeeds in retaining in her translation." R. W.

Boston Transcript p9 Mr 31 '17 450w

"Fabre d'Olivet died in 1825. At no time have orthodox scholars taken him and his attempts to recover what is called the ancient wisdom seriously. His theories, however, have been popularized by M. Édouard Schurer in his cinematic survey of religions, 'Les grands initiés,' and have had considerable success."

Dial 62:406 My 3 '17 340w

+ Lit D 55:38 N 3 '17 300w

— Nation 104:765 Je 23 '17 600w

N Y Br Lib News 4:78 My '17

"The translator has preserved a capable, selective vision and sympathetic understanding of the high content and beauty of the Pythagorean teachings."

+ N Y Times 22:323 S 2 '17 450w

+ — Springf'd Republican p17 O 28 '17 350w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p570 N 22 '17 70w

FAIRBANKS, DOUGLAS. Laugh and live. il *$1 (3c) Britton pub. 174 17-13235

These nineteen essays in the vein of Pollyanna are by a popular star of the "movies," who chats cheerfully on such topics as: Building up a personality; Cleanliness of body and mind; Physical and mental preparedness, etc.

+ Lit D 55:33 S 1 '17 50w

"Mr Fairbanks talks his honest heart out in this book. He takes you into his confidence, talks to you as man to man, quite like Billy Sunday chatting with God. . . . Success is his god, a sleek, smiling fetish. He voices and radiates the desire of America. . . . His is the quintessential creed of a society that perhaps nothing short of war and calamity can galvanize into a realization of the swollen hollowness of its egotism."

— New Repub 12:113 Ag 25 '17 650w

"As for success, he sums it up: 'We find that a sound body, a good mind, an honest purpose, and a lack of fear are the essential elements of success.' That is a large order, certainly! But just as certainly it is sane and wholesome. That is where the merit of Mr Fairbanks's book lies for his readers; he puts a tremendous amount of breeziness into excellent platitudes."

+ N Y Times 22:382 O 7 '17 700w

FAIRCHILD, HENRY PRATT. Outline of applied sociology. *$1.75 (2c) Macmillan 302 17-50

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"The larger contribution of Professor Fairchild's book to the textbook literature of sociology is in its clear presentation of the relationships between wages, working conditions, efficiency, housing, and the more specific aspects of the problem of living standards and social welfare. No other general textbook goes so fully into these matters, and yet they are not here discussed from a merely descriptive or analytical standpoint. Conclusions and implications are most carefully drawn from the data presented." L. L. Bernard

+ Am Econ R 7:601 S '17 460w

"As to weaknesses, the reviewer finds only those which naturally might be expected to follow from the tremendous size of the task which the author has undertaken. It is a contribution to a comprehensive consideration of social life and progress on the part of the person who is beginning a scientific study of society." E. S. Bogardus

+ Am J Soc 23:269 S '17 500w

"A fresh and independent treatment, developed in a scholarly yet popular way, and suggestive to students in connection with other books on the subject, though the theoretical background, to some critics, seems quite inadequate."

+ — A L A Bkl 13:288 Ap '17

"The esthetic life is scantily treated. To the intellectual life are allotted barely two pages on education, while science, the most powerful intellectual force, is entirely ignored. Religion, by which the author seems to mean Christianity, is treated from the conventional, up-to-date Christian point of view. Much emphasis [is put] upon the abnormal and pathological aspects of social life. The principal defect of this book is that it utterly ignores biology and psychology." Maurice Parmelee

+ Ann Am Acad 72:243 Jl '17 400w

+ Ind 91:137 Jl 28 '17 70w

"An excellent text for the college classroom. The student will find in it unevasive information or controverted questions, and a common-sense guidance at every turn. It is a book, nevertheless, that will make intellectual trouble.

FAIRCHILD, HENRY PRATT—Continued

Every teacher that uses it will ask, and in his own way will answer, the question, whether the subject-matter here presented is in any, proper sense sociology, either pure or applied."

+ — Nation 105:272 S 6 '17 620w

"The style is simple, clear, and thoroughly readable."

+ N Y Times 22:58 F 18 '17 250w

"His treatment of specific topics may be regarded as more summary than that of other writers in this field, but there is a compensating advantage in the emphasis placed upon the analysis and classification of social facts, each in its relation to a comprehensive whole."

+ — R of Rs 55:443 Ap '17 160w

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Mr 16 '17 320w

"In ignoring the separate treatment of cross sections of human experience and action, and in compassing the sphere of man's whole human environment, this text-book is distinctive. The book is noteworthy for its inclusion and very direct dealing with so many pressing phases of present social development. Its references and supplementary readings, together with a good index, add to its value." Graham Taylor

+ Survey 38:573 S 29 '17 310w

FALES, JANE. Dressmaking: a manual for schools and colleges. il *$1.50 Scribner 646 17-1600

"Part 1 presents the development of costume from the standpoint of history and design. Part 2 considers the materials which are used in dressmaking, and discusses the economic value of various fibers and fabrics. Part 3 treats design and technique in pattern-making and dressmaking."—School R

+ A L A Bkl 13:336 My '17 (Reprinted from Open Shelf, Cleveland)

"Contains more material on costume and on textile manufacture than Baldt's 'Clothing for women,' and less instruction on the more elementary details of garment construction. Both books have much material on pattern drafting and the use of commercial paper patterns. An unusually complete bibliography and index add to the usefulness of the book."

+ Cleveland p11 Mr '17 70w

"Will be valuable to home dressmakers as well as to class students."

+ Ind 91:267 Ag 18 '17 60w

+ Pittsburgh 22:666 O '17 10w
Pratt p25 O '17 20w

"The author is director of the department of textiles and clothing in Teachers college, Columbia university."

+ St Louis 15:113 Ap '17 16w

+ School Arts Magazine 16:356 Ap '17 100w

"The text is a distinct acquisition to the literature of home economics."

+ School R 25:302 Ap '17 50w

FALL, DELOS. Science for beginners. (New-world science ser.) il $1.20 (1c) World bk. co. 502

A first book in general science intended for intermediate schools and junior high schools. It is based on the principle that, to gain the best results, the pupil must collect his own material and learn to draw his own conclusions. "The teacher is asked to keep in mind that the chief purpose of this book is not to give the pupils a large amount of information, but rather to introduce them to a method through the use of which they will acquire the habit of gaining information for themselves." (Preface) The first chapter discusses Science and the scientific method; the second, What the young scientist must learn to do. These are followed by chapters on: Matter and its forms; Some properties of matter; Changes in matter; Oxygen; the active element; Hydrogen and its compounds; A study of water, etc. The author, now professor of chemistry in Albion college, was formerly state superintendent of public instruction in Michigan.

"The first half of this volume treats of elementary chemistry; the latter part of elementary physics. There is a smattering of biological material treated from the standpoint of chemistry. Chapter nineteen, on 'The potato,' is the only one with a title suggestive of living things. The book has many good features. It attempts drill in the scientific method of thinking, and some of the exercises are in problem form, though most of them are demonstrations of facts stated in the text and afford little opportunity for reflective thinking. The book impresses one as an attempt on the part of an enthusiastic chemist to pre-empt some time in the first year science for his favorite subject."

+ — School R 26:67 Ja '18 350w

FALL of the Romanoffs. il *$5 Dutton 947 (Eng ed 18-540)

"This new volume, by the anonymous author of the remarkably opportune 'Russian court memoirs, 1914-16,' published last March on the morrow of the revolution, purports to show how the ex-Empress and Rasputin between them were responsible for the downfall of the autocracy." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "Believing that the weakness of the Czar and the evil influence of the Czarina made the downfall of the royal family inevitable, the writer still holds that a greater effort should have been made to avoid actual abdication, and that even if the Romanoffs themselves were banished a reformed monarchy would be the proper and wise form of government for Russia. . . . The writer deplores the fall of Milukoff and laments the rise of the Social Democrats with Kerensky—although expressing admiration of that leader himself." (N Y Times)

"Written frankly from the monarchist's point of view, the book offers none the less most interesting information, and no little food for thought. The book devotes a good deal of space to the recital of superstitions, and it is impossible to avoid suspicion that the anonymous author is markedly prejudiced. No one could call the volume authoritative. But it is exceedingly interesting from beginning to end."

+ — N Y Times 23:2 Ja 6 '18 1300w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p557 N 15 '17 130w

FALLON, JOHN TIERNAN, ed. How to make concrete garden furniture and accessories. il *$1.50 (3c) McBride 693 17-17213

The preface traces the history of concrete as a building material, showing that its use dates from early antiquity. The seven chapters of the book are devoted to: The selection and testing of material; How to proportion and mix the materials; Making forms and placing the concrete; How to make garden walks, steps and other simple utilities; How to make sundials, benches and swimming pools; Bird baths, lanterns, pottery and water gardens; Making concrete garden frames and garden rollers. There are nineteen half-tone plates and numerous illustrations in the text.

"Deals in general with more elaborate construction than most other books on the subject."

+ Pittsburgh 22:755 N '17 40w

FALLS, DE WITT CLINTON. Army and navy information. il *$1 Dutton 355 17-29353

The author, an officer of the New York national guard, has brought together information relating to the uniforms, organization, arms and equipment of the warring powers. The book is illustrated with six colored plates and thirty line cuts by the author.

+ A L A Bkl 14:112 Ja '18

"This timely and useful little reference book is something no one can afford to do without today."

+ Cath World 106:555 Ja '18 40w

"As a handy reference, this book will be found serviceable to civilians as well as soldiers, and all those who write about the war."

+ Ind 92:343 N 17 '17 50w

+ Quar List New Tech Bks Ja '18 30w

+ R of Rs 56:550 N '17 60w

FANNING, CLARA ELIZABETH, comp. Selected articles on capital punishment. (Debaters' handbook ser.) 3d and rev ed *$1.25 (1c) Wilson, H. W. 016.343 17-12266

This is the third edition of a debaters' handbook published first in 1909. The second edition was issued in 1913. The explanatory note says, "The third edition varies from the second in two parts. The bibliography has had references inserted in all its divisions to bring it up to date. New pages have been added at the end of the book with selected articles grouped as general, affirmative and negative. Since the arguments have undergone no material change in three years, the chief service of this section is in making accessible several magazine articles and pamphlets not found in the average library."

A L A Bkl 13:457 J1 '17

+ R of Rs 56:109 J1 '17 180w

+ Survey 38:361 J1 21 '17 50w

FARIS, JOHN THOMSON. Old roads out of Philadelphia. il *$4 Lippincott 917.48 17-28890

"It would be hard to find anywhere in America roads richer in historical interest than those that lead out from Philadelphia, and John T. Faris in his book has told the story of them well. He takes his readers along the King's highway to Wilmington, over the Baltimore turnpike, the Gulph road, the turnpikes to Westchester and Lancaster, the old Germantown road, the road to Bethlehem, the Ridge road to Perkiomen, the old York road, and that to Bristol and Trenton. On each one he tells about the famous historical events that happened along its way, the important men and women who have traversed it, points out the features of local interest both now and during former times, and mentions its beauties of landscape." (N Y Times) "A photographer went with him on many of his journeys of exploration, providing the illustrations, one hundred and seventeen in number, which accompany the text." (Lit D)

"So far as relates to the eleven roads and their surroundings, Mr Faris has done his work well. The writer of this review has lived in part of this territory since his boyhood and can testify to the substantial accuracy and, in general, the judiciousness of the selection of material for his descriptions." I. Sharpless

+ Am Hist R 23:439 Ja '18 430w

A L A Bkl 14:91 D '17

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 7 '17 350w

"With much curious lore has the subject been enriched, showing diligence, and no little original research in the treatment."

+ Dial 63:528 N 22 '17 160w

"The book will add immensely to the pleasure and interest of Philadelphians who motor and walk in the neighborhood of their city, and it will have its appeal also for lovers of the historical and the picturesque everywhere."

+ Lit D 55:41 D 8 '17 160w

+ N Y Times 22:482 N 18 '17 200w

+ Outlook 117:576 D 5 '17 40w

Pittsburgh 22:824 D '17 30w

"A good companion volume to Mr Lippincott's book [Early Philadelphia]."

+ R of Rs 57:103 Ja '18 90w

"There are many pleasant discoveries for the traveler along these roads out of Philadelphia with Mr Faris as guide."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 O 7 '17 700w

FARMER, FRANK MALCOLM. Electrical measurements in practice. il *$4 McGraw 537.7 17-17201

"The author is the head of one of the best-known commercial testing staffs in the country, and throughout the book the topics are presented from the practical standpoint of the tester. Descriptions of instruments and methods of employment alternate." (Engin News-Rec) "The book is divided into sixteen chapters dealing with the following subjects: Introductory, galvanometers, continuous emf. measurements, continuous-current measurements, alternating emf. measurements, alternating-current measurements, resistance reactance and impedance measurements, power measurements, energy measurements, maximum-demand instruments, inductance, measurements, capacitance measurements, frequency and slip measurements, wave-form determinations, magnetic measurements, curve-drawing instruments." (Elec World) The book has 230 illustrations and diagrams.

"Mr Farmer's descriptions are concise and clear, but he does not compare the several methods of making any one of the numerous electrical measurements as fully as might be desired. The book will, however, be useful to anyone who has electrical testing to do, in furnishing him with several practical plans for making any desired measurement."

+ Electric Railway Journal 50:44 J1 7 '17 140w

"This is an excellent and timely text and reference book on electrical measurements from the industrial viewpoint. There are various excellent treatises available on the principles and physical relations of electrical measurements, but there are very few which deal with electrical measurements as they have to be made in electrical engineering laboratories for the purposes of the industry. . . . The treatment is clear, thorough, practical and up to date. The chapter on maximum demand instruments is particularly timely."

+ Elec World 70:312 Ag 18 '17 140w

"The particular audience addressed by Mr Farmer is of course largely composed of electrical engineers. But his book is of considerable use in the libraries of a larger group of engineers, particularly those dealing with hydroelectric work, because ultimately the performance of their generating and transmission installations have to be tested by well-tried instruments and practices of the electrical test laboratory, more or less modified to suit field conditions. . . . The sections on power and energy measurements and on maximum-demand and curve-drawing instruments are of conspicuous merit."

+ Engin News-Rec 79:128 J1 19 '17 130w

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p7 J1 '17 60w

Pittsburgh 22:658 O '17

Pratt p22 O '17 40w

FARNOL, JEFFERY. Definite object; a romance of New York. il *$1.50 (1½c) Little 17-15972

Geoffrey Ravenslee was suffering from the boredom of too much money. Life offered him a variety of diversions but no definite object. A young amateur burglar, attempting to break into his house, brings the needed change. Geoffrey decides that instead of turning young Spike over to the authorities, he will accompany him to his home in lower New York and see something of life from another angle. He finds all that he has been looking for,—adventure, of course, and with it romance; for Spike, the would-be burglar, proves to be the adored younger brother of a very lovely sister.

A L A Bkl 14:26 O '17

+ Ath p527 O '17 130w

"Nothing could be more unreal in the midst of realities than Mr Farnol's latest novel. Although its scene is New York, although its characters are New Yorkers, although its time is the present, its atmosphere is the atmosphere of 'The broad highway,' 'The amateur gentleman' and 'Beltane the smith,' . . .

It need not, however, be imagined for an instant that 'The definite object' is any the less diverting because we cannot believe a word of it. . . . But readers will not be disappointed, for they will find in it a romantic world of the same element and variety that have made the appealing charm of all his other novels." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 9 '17 1250w

"Some of the character drawing—the pompous butler Brimberly, the loquacious Old 'Un, and the shrewish Mrs Ann Angelina Trapes—is as good as Dickens at his best."

+ Cath World 105:837 S '17 160w

FARNOL, JEFFERY—Continued

Ind 91:35 J1 7 '17 40w

"Mr Farnol, his publishers inform us, knew the New York slum life at first hand, during the time of his obscure activities as a scene-painter, ere fame found him. One may say enough of this book, perhaps, in saying that it shows the sort of fidelity to detail and falsity of color and perspective which are still to be found upon the flies and backdrops of melodrama."

— Nation 105:15 J1 5 '17 330w

"The book is romance, not realism, and very delightful and entertaining romance, too, with plenty of incident, any amount of ardent love-making, more than one hairbreadth escape, and several fist fights of the most energetic, not to say violent character."

+ N Y Times 22:213 Je 3 '17 750w

"Mr Farnol's knowledge of New York slang is astonishingly accurate and up to date. Frankly, his characters would be more agreeable if they were not so voluble—one cannot see the story for the words. But Mr Farnol has a large following of readers, and they will find fun and action in this romance, despite this criticism."

Outlook 116:198 My 30 '17 60w

Sat R 124:373 N 10 '17 400w

Springf'd Republican p13 Je 17 '17 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p430 S 6 '17 400w

FARRAR, GILBERT POWDERLY. Typography of advertisements that pay. il *$2.25 Appleton 659 17-18351

This book "discusses type and combinations of type, blank spaces in which cuts and text appear as islands or peninsulas, the various kinds of effective illustrations, serious and comic, and it reproduces dozens of more or less effective examples, . . . distributed according to a general classification as the Forceful educational, the Passive educational, the Hand-lettered, the Poster, the Character and the Comic, the Small space, the Mail order and the Department store."—Boston Transcript

"Takes up the mechanical side of advertising and goes into more detail than Sherbow's 'Making type work' in that it discusses the picture and engraving side, hand lettering and borders. Has many more examples than Sherbow."

+ A L A Bkl 14:45 N '17

"Mr Farrar's book is admirably adapted to classroom work because of its good arrangement, well-chosen illustrations, and its simple manner of presenting technical material. A peculiar virtue of the book is that the type faces are placed in close relationship to the advertisements that employ them. An excellent chapter is that entitled Putting the advertisement together. The chapter on Making the message quick and sure is a most excellent treatment of the employment of types for the essential purpose of making clear what you have to say." J. W. Percy

+ Ann Am Acad 71:295 N '17 250w

"Full of excellent suggestions, wise advice, and practical help."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag S '17 250w

Cleveland p112 S '17 10w

"There are few firms that could not improve their advertising—and their sales—by observing some of the principles of lettering and type set forth in this useful book."

+ Ind 91:441 S 15 '17 120w

"This useful volume supplies a very definite need among advertising men and printers."

+ St Louis 15:366 O '17 30w

FARRER, JAMES ANSON. Monarchy in politics. *$3 (3c) Dodd 942.07 (Eng ed 18-388)

"An impartial inquiry into the actual practical working of constitutional monarchy in England during the reigns of George III, George IV, William IV, and Queen Victoria, as illustrated by the evidence of the letters, memoirs, diaries, and speeches of contemporary statesmen, and especially of the letters of those sovereigns themselves to their ministers, or others, in respect of the chief foreign and domestic problems of their reigns. The writer's endeavour has been to glean from as wide a field as possible of the best contemporary sources the chief evidence that bears on the position of the crown in our system of government." (Publishers' note) A three-page bibliography of the chief works consulted is included in the front of the volume, following the table of contents.

+ A L A Bkl 14:113 Ja '18

+ Ath p671 D '17 360w

"Mr Farrer has demonstrated to foreign students of British government a fact which they are too prone to disregard, namely, that while the legal powers of the monarch may have dwindled down to almost nothing, the personal influence of a strong-willed sovereign may still prove to be a factor of great consequence. No student of modern European history or of English government can afford to overlook this volume."

+ Nation 106:93 Ja 24 '18 800w

"There are one or two inaccuracies of names and dates; but we can recommend the book to serious readers, who wish to examine historically the exercise of kingly power by the house of Hanover. The part of Mr Farrer's book to which most readers will turn with greatest attention is his account of the intervention in politics of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert."

+ Sat R 124:483 D 15 '17 1550w

"Mr Farrer has chosen the method of telling an almost consecutive story out of the letters and memoirs of the chief actors, and done it with no little skill, for his book contains a quantity of information which, though not new, was well worth bringing together, while it is at the same time quite entertaining."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p548 N 15 '17 850w

FARRÈRE, CLAUDE, pseud. (CHARLES BAR-GONE). Man who killed; tr. by Magdalen C. Schuyler. *$1.50 Brentano's 17-29736

"Pera, where the Orient apes European streets and shops and manners, . . . and across the Golden Horn, Stamboul, its minarets and domes rising like white bubbles over the grass-grown Turkish cemeteries. In this curious setting is enacted the little drama, whose principal characters are a French military attaché, an English 'Director of the Ottoman debt,' his wife, his Scotch mistress, and a secretary of the Russian embassy. . . . M. Farrère has written his narrative as though it were a group of notes from the journal of the attaché, the chief protagonist. . . . His journal presents both his fascinating personal adventure and his reaction to the apparently placid and actually fermenting life about him."—N Y Times

"M. Farrère has what so many of our contemporary writers lack—intellectual sophistication and good taste. Dramatic reserve, intelligent characterization, and an exotic background, painted with beauty and understanding, make a strange tale plausible and worth the reading."

+ Dial 63:597 D 6 '17 150w

"The impressiveness of the story is created not so much by the plausibility of the situation as by a style which even translation does not destroy. The title alone seems unfortunate, for it might be the caption for any cheap thriller, but the novel is the work of a clever technician and a well-informed teller of tales."

+ N Y Times 22:452 N 4 '17 350w

FAULKNER, HAROLD UNDERWOOD. Chartism and the churches; a study in democracy. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) pa *$1.25 Longmans 16-25225

This work "is a study of the attitude of the churches to Chartism, and of the attitude of the Chartists toward the churches, particularly toward the Established Church of England.

which in the early days of the Chartist movement was, as a national institution intended primarily for the service of the people, at its lowest ebb. . . . Mr Faulkner's book is a venture into a field that hitherto had been quite unexplored either by English or American writers."—Ind

"The work reveals most extensive use of the voluminous literature of the subject, is interesting and free from bias. The indexing is inadequate. The chief defect of this study is in its failure to make connection with anti-ecclesiastic and anti-clerical influences which in the period preceding Chartism had come to be widespread through Owenism." H. E. Mills

+ Am Econ R 7:607 S '17 250w

"A book of which the full value is not stated when it has been said that it is an excellent, almost indispensable companion volume to those of Messrs Rosenblatt and Slosson. It is a distinct contribution also to the history of the Established church, the Roman Catholic church, and the Nonconformist or free churches of England and Scotland in the first ten or fifteen years of Queen Victoria's reign. It deals with an aspect of organized Christianity in Great Britain which has been generally ignored by church historians, and scarcely mentioned by the general historians of the nineteenth century." E: Porritt

+ Am Hist R 22:651 Ap '17 250w

"There can be no complete understanding of the unbroken success of the trade union movement, the cooperative movement, and the friendly societies movement in England, or even a full realization of the causes which have combined to give England the most politically independent and the best politically educated working-class of any country in the world, without some knowledge of the Chartist movement, of the type of men who were its leaders, and of the influences—political, social and industrial—that were bred of the long working-class agitation of the middle years of the nineteenth century." E: Porritt

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:340 My '17 650w

"A book that is more than a contribution to political history. It is a book that has its value and its obvious lesson for organized Christianity in the United States and Canada as well as in England." E: Porritt

+ Ind 89:232 F 5 '17 120w

J Pol Econ 25:635 Je '17 190w

"Gives a lively picture of the give-and-take of the free-thinking Chartists and the ultra-conservative middle-class churchmen. How the 'Christian socialists'—Frederick Denison Maurice, Charles Kingsley, Archdeacon Hare, Thomas Hughes and their associates—put a sort of bridge over the chasm; by encouraging popular education and practical philanthropy is interestingly told."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Jl 18 '17 220w

"It may confidently be asserted that no serious student of the social and economic history of Great Britain during the nineteenth century can afford to miss any one of these three books [on Chartism]." I. C. Hannah

+ Survey 38:288 Je 30 '17 200w

FAULKNER, HERBERT WALDRON. Mysteries of the flowers. il *$2 (4½c) Stokes 581 17-12041

In simple, untechnical language the author explains blossom structure, using the wild flowers of the eastern United States as his examples. The adaptation of structure to cross fertilization by means of insects is his central theme. There are chapters on: Pistillate flowers and staminate flowers; Perfect flowers; Floral mechanisms; Orchids; The wind and the flowers; Self-fertilised flowers; Effort and accomplishment; Seed sowing. The illustrations are from drawings and paintings by the author. A number of them are in color.

+ A L A Bkl 14:10 O '17

"His study is, however, deeper than merely botanical and presents the flowers as being living, breathing personalities, striving as do human beings to attain what is to each the ultimate of life. Through his sympathetic study and rare insight, we also see their 'intimate daily life.'" F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 19 '17 600w

+ Ind 90:381 My 26 '17 130w

"It is the intimate relation between author and subject that attracts the reader in this vivified botany, which is as good for the lay reader as for the student and interesting to both."

+ Lit D 56:42 Ja 12 '18 150w

"The 'study' is made so attractive, and the book is so thoroughly readable, that both children and grown folk will delight in the pages that have in them so much, not only of botanical lore, but of the actual vitality of the plants' being."

+ N Y Times 22:191 My 13 '17 80w

+ R of Rs 55:664 Je '17 90w

FAXON, FREDERICK WINTHROP, ed. Annual magazine subject-index, 1916; including as pt. 2, The dramatic index, 1916. *$8.50 Boston bk. 050

"This, the tenth volume of the Magazine subject-index, follows the same plan as the previous annuals, and furnishes a subject-index to the less common American and English periodicals." (Preface) New periodicals added are: American-Irish Historical Society Journal; International Review of Missions; Trail and Timberline, and Biblical Review. The magazine index constitutes part 1 of the volume. Part 2 contains the Dramatic index for 1916, to which is added an appendix giving a list of Dramatic books and plays (in English) published during 1916.

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA. Library of Christian cooperation. 6v *$5; ea *$1 Missionary education movement 206 17-10987

The reports of the third quadrennial meeting of the Federal council of the churches of Christ in America, held in St Louis in December, 1916, are presented in these six volumes. Volume 1, The churches of Christ in council, prepared by Charles S. Macfarland, general secretary, is a general report, giving the official record of the proceedings of the Council. Volumes 2 and 3, prepared by Mr Macfarland and Sidney L. Gulick are devoted to The church and international relations, presenting the report of the Commission on peace and arbitration. The activities of the Commission on peace and arbitration, the independent peace activities of the constituent bodies and other religious groups, and the activities of the Church peace union and other cooperating bodies are covered, and volume 3 closes with discussions of The duty of national and of world conditions. The subject of international problems is continued in volume 4, with the report of the Commission on relations with Japan. Volume 5 is devoted to Christian cooperation and world redemption and consists of the reports of several special committees. Volume 6, prepared by Henry H. Meyer, deals with Cooperation in Christian education.

"As a record of proceedings the volumes are cumbered with much matter which is of little interest to the ordinary reader, or even to the student of social and ecclesiastical movements. Volume 5 carries the largest measure of value to the ordinary Christian worker and the church." A. W. Anthony

+ Am J Theol 21:623 O '17 500w

A L A Bkl 13:423 Jl '17

"Any comparison of the relative importance of the books would be unfair, for each has its own remarkable value. As unique and significant as any is the report on Christian education. The set makes a permanent contribution to the history of American Christianity."

+ Bib World 50:125 Ag '17 200w

"The fourth volume [on Japan] is a very able and frank discussion of a delicate question."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 3 '17 330w

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA—Continued

"The second, third and fourth volumes contain a splendid summary of the peculiar problems facing the American church because of the war in Europe, and are a thrilling call to the proclamation of the gospel of peace."

+ Ind 91:513 S 29 '17 240w

FENOLLOSA, ERNEST FRANCISCO, and POUND, EZRA LOOMIS. Noh; or, Accomplishment; a study of the classical stage of Japan. *$2.75 Knopf 895

This volume includes translations of fifteen examples of the "Noh" or classical drama of Japan, which arose in the fifteenth century of our era, came near to perishing at the revolution of 1368, and is now "the pride and pleasure of the cultivated element of Japan." "In a prefatory note the English author states that the 'vision and the plan' are the late Ernest Fenollosa's, that in the prose portion of the book he (Mr Ezra Pound) has 'had but the part of literary executor,' and that in the plays his work has been 'that of translator who has found all the heavy work done for him, and who has had but the pleasure of arranging beauty into the words.'" (Ath) Mr Fenollosa, who served as Imperial commissioner of arts in Japan and was in close touch with Mr Umewaka Minoru, the official hereditary master of Noh ceremonies in the Shogun's household, contributes a concise essay on the origins and development of the Noh drama. "In the appendices and elsewhere are numerous details concerning the care and selection of costumes, the masks used, and the like; and at the end of the book is an attempt to record some of the music of one of the plays." (Ath)

Ath p100 F '17 250w

"Mr Pound, in his notes and comments, writes with his usual unceremonious directness.

And as the volume is made by the Clarks, of Edinburgh, a 'serious' house, one notes, with gratification, an almost complete suppression of Mr Pound's tendency toward typographical wilfulnesses and eccentricities." H: B. Fuller

Dial 63:209 S 13 '17 900w

N Y Br Lib News 4:135 S '17 50w

"When we have read 'Noh; or, Accomplishment,' our first feeling is that of gratitude to Ernest Fenollosa and Ezra Pound for bringing this remote but serious and beautiful art so close to us. On Fenollosa's part it meant the devoted labor of more than twenty years. Ezra Pound has given a shorter term of labor, but he is one with Fenollosa in his loyalty to the spirit of 'Noh.'

+ N Y Times 22:576 D 23 '17 850w

Pittsburgh 22:747 N '17 100w

"A curious thing about the plays is their diction. We know not if it be because Mr Pound is steeped in the works of Maeterlinck, the school of Synge, and the poetry of Mr Yeats, but certain it is that in phraseology and dialogue they continually remind one of these authors. . . . We in the West are not in a position, with the data available, to arrive at a full appreciation of 'Noh.' . . . But we may gain some perception at least of the delicacy, the lofty idealism, and the noble hopefulness which are among the essential qualities of an art that, in Fenollosa's words, 'has been a purification of the Japanese soul for 400 years.'"

* Sat R 123:527 Je 9 '17 1350w

"Mr Pound describes the Japanese classical drama as in form approaching most nearly to the Greek plays. But it is, we think, a very slight resemblance, and certainly in spirit and expression it is peculiarly individual. There is about it a simplicity such as is to be found in a Hans Andersen fairy-tale, a wealth of imagery reminding us of the Celtic drama, and again a dignity of imagination which is like nothing so much as some of the work of the Hebrew poets. . . . Mr Pound's translation is admirable in most respects, but we wish that he did not show a tendency to be influenced by the vocabulary of the Celtic drama."

+ — Spec 118:543 My 12 '17 750w

"The uninitiated foreigner is enabled by Mr Pound's mastery of beautiful diction to appreciate the alternately wistful and proud appeal of these ghostly masterpieces. . . . Two points of cardinal interest are emphasized and driven home by this vivacious rendering of archaic compositions—their intense humanity and their indifference to realism."

* + The Times [London] Lit Sup p41 Ja 25 '17 1550w

FERBER, EDNA. Fanny herself. il *$1.40 (1½c) Stokes 17-25431

Fanny Brandeis, like Miss Ferber's Emma McChesney, was a successful business woman. Her mother, Molly Brandeis, who, after her husband's death, ran Brandeis' Bazaar in the little middle western town of Winnebago, was also a good business woman, but she died of pneumonia, brought on by overwork, when Fanny was twenty-four. Then Fanny, swayed by "a bitter sorrow, and ambition, and resentment" made up her mind to crush out sympathy and unselfishness and the artistic impulse in herself, and to mold herself into "a hard, keen-eyed resolute woman, whose good-head was to be success, and to whom success would mean money and position." She went to work in the Haynes-Cooper mail order house, where she made good, and in a few years was earning her $10,000. Then she had to choose between a still greater business success with Michael Fenger, former manager of the Haynes-Cooper concern, and a chance to develop her talent as a cartoonist and to marry Clarence Heyl, who had loved her for years, and who did not see the real values of life in terms of cash. Other characters are Father Fitzpatrick, the Catholic priest in Winnebago; Ella Monahan, buyer for the glove department of Haynes-Cooper; and Fanny's brother, Theodore, the young violinist, to secure whose musical education Mrs Brandeis and her daughter had made such sacrifices. Emma McChesney also plays a very slight part in the story.

+ A L A Bkl 14:95 D '17

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Bookm 46:341 N '17 70w

"An element in the story which we are seldom allowed to forget is the racial one. With all the recent emphasis upon the Jew in literature, it is hard to call to mind a story which so fully developed those distinctly higher attributes of the Jew. . . . Fanny Brandeis becomes, as we read the story, something more than an individual character. She becomes typical of that slaying of the ideal for the material which is going on day after day in thousands of Fanny Brandeis' all over the United States." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 17 '17 1000w

Cleveland p128 N '17 50w

"The most serious, extended and dignified of Miss Ferber's books. Its first half, in particular, is quite the best work that the creator of Emma McChesney has done."

+ Dial 63:463 N 8 '17 260w

Nation 105:431 O 18 '17 400w

"It is Molly Brandeis who, with the little town of Winnebago, Wis., makes this story of 'Fanny herself' worth while."

+ — N Y Times 22:330 O 7 '17 800w

"A notable advance in the author's previous fiction work."

+ Outlook 117:386 N 7 '17 70w

"Yet there were here and there discerning readers who failed to find in them [the Emma McChesney stories] a fulfillment of the promise offered in 'Dawn O'Hara.' For this reason there should be much rejoicing over Miss Ferber's new volume and second novel. And the fact that she has produced her effects out of practically the same well-worn, almost shabby stage properties of her earlier stories, is perhaps the most conclusive evidence that she has this time arisen from mere talent to something containing a lurking spark of what, for lack of a better word one may call genius." F: T. Cooper

+ Pub W 93:208 Ja 19 '18 360w

"Fanny's mother is a striking creation, and her personality goes a long way toward lifting the story above the commonplace."

+ — Springf'd Republican p17 N 4 '17 450w

FERGUSON, JOHN DE LANCEY. American literature in Spain. (Columbia univ. studies in English and comparative literature) *$1.50 (2c) Columbia univ. press 810 17-263

"Systematic study of the European reputations of American authors is a thing of recent date," says the author. His purpose in this book is to make such a study with respect to Spain. The chief source of knowledge of American literature in Spain, he finds, has been France. There have been a few exceptions in which communication between the literatures of the two countries has been direct, notable among them the case of Irving, whose relations with Spain were personal. Another way of entry has been thru Spanish America. Chapters of the book are devoted to Washington Irving, James Fenimore Cooper, Edgar Allan Poe, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Prescott, Emerson, Whitman. The bibliography is pronounced by the author the most important part of the work.

+ Cath World 105:107 Ap '17 350w

"Regarding his work as a dissertation for the doctorate, one is disposed to be severe upon this contribution to scholarship; it deals chiefly with the exuberant and bombastic opinions of men whose words are without value; it is devoid of philosophical conclusions; further, we do not recall reading a dissertation whose body was so compactly made up of quotation."

— Nation 104:552 My 3 '17 400w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 18 '17 450w

FERNALD, ROBERT HEYWOOD, and ORROK, GEORGE ALEXANDER. Engineering of power plants. il *$4 McGraw 621 16-24435

"To the worthy treatises on power-plant engineering of Gebhardt, Hutton, Hubbard and others, these eminent authors have added an equally worthy volume. The new book is of great interest to industrial-plant owners and engineers, as the treatment is both by description and discussion and introduces specific data at every turn. All kinds of power are touched on, though steam and internal-combustion plants are naturally given the most space." (Engin News-Rec) Of the two authors, the first is professor of dynamical engineering in the University of Pennsylvania, the second is a consulting engineer in New York city.

"Useful in connection with Gebhardt (4th ed. Booklist 10:80 O '13) but will not replace that standard work."

+ A L A Bkl 13:204 F '17

+ Engin News-Rec 78:363 My 17 '17 70w

"Is a happy medium of practice and theory that has been greatly lacking in books of this nature. . . . Does not cover details of design or operation of the different parts of power plant equipment. . . but considers the power plant as a whole from the standpoint of economical power production."

+ Pittsburgh 22:451 My '17 50w (Reprinted from National Engineer p149 Ap '17)

FERNAU, HERMANN. Coming democracy. *$2 (2c) Dutton 940.91 17-24321

Herr Fernau, a German democrat and pacifist and author of "Because I am a German," published the original German version of his present book in Berne, Switzerland, under the title "Durch! . . . zur demokratie," before the Russian revolution and the entry of the United States into the war. "The whole of this new book is devoted to the thesis that war now, as always, springs from a false and perverted form of internal government—a form of government to which he gives the name of a 'dynasty'; the form under which the whole welfare of the people is subordinated to a small ruling caste or family; external war has always been and will always remain the chief weapon by which the dynasty maintains authority over its own people, and the only means by which it can be overthrown is defeat in war." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) Herr Fernau preaches "Germany for the Germans," and hopes for a defeat of the German arms as the best way of realizing this. "For what would happen if we Germans emerged victorious from this war? Our victory would only mean a strengthening of the dynastic principle of arbitrary power all along the line. Those of us who bewail the political backwardness of our Fatherland must realize that a 'German' victory would prolong this backward condition for centuries. And not only Germany but the whole of Europe would have to suffer the consequences."

A L A Bkl 14:123 Ja '18

"He writes rather in anger than in sorrow; and, since he is a German, he would be more conciliating and convincing if he were less vehement and intemperate in his language."

— + Ath p517 O '17 250w

Reviewed by C. H. P. Thurston
Bookm 46:286 N '17 30w

"The author clearly shows what indeed only a native German could show, the very strong differences and opposition between the German people and their rulers."

+ Cath World 106:389 D '17 400w

"He sincerely believes, in common with many Americans, that wars will cease with the disappearance of dynasties. If his book will enforce this illusion, its present value is questionable." V. T. Thayer

— Dial 63:515 N 22 '17 1050w

+ Ind 91:512 S 29 '17 130w

"There is little that is new, in these bitter and even cynical pages, for the reader who has kept moderately well abreast of the anti-German literature of the war. Moreover, destructive criticism, especially when forged in great heat, may easily go too far. Indeed, a reading of the book suggests the extremely useful service that would be rendered if some one who knows Germany and its people as well as Mr Fernau does would point out just what the Germans could do, under their existing constitution, to bring about the régime of popular government which President Wilson, for example, believes to be a prerequisite to peace."

— + Nation 105:516 N 8 '17 330w

"Herr Fernau has given us a most remarkable work, a most powerful and convincing analysis of past German history." J. W.

+ N Y Call p14 S 23 '17 700w

"The coming democracy" is an astounding book, so unexpected is it to find such clear, keen insight into German conditions, such fearless presentation of facts, such merciless, sardonic, biting humor in statements coming from a German source."

+ N Y Times 22:336 O 14 '17 1050w

+ R of Rs 56:550 N '17 90w

"For the most part, Fernau's logic is inexorable, but here and there he is guilty of a curious fallacy, as when, for instance, he holds dynasties exclusively responsible for the horrors of war, and also declares that the ideal of fighting for a fatherland perished with the Greeks."

+ — Sat R 124:229 S 22 '17 1050w

"Hermann Fernau is a true patriot, a passionate lover of the German people and of the old German fatherland. . . . A considerable part of his book is given up to showing, as only a German brought up under the system can appreciate and show, how a small ambitious group of men may, by means of it, control absolutely the souls, minds, and bodies of a great nation. His analysis of the German constitution should be studied by those who still believe that the German people have any active share in the government of their country."

+ Spec 119:217 S 1 '17 1850w

"The book is one of the most important contributions to the literature of the war. The subject and matter, is, indeed, not new, but it is put in a new light. . . . The translation is excellent."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p398 Ag 23 '17 2050w

FERRI, ENRICO. Criminal sociology. (Modern-criminal science ser.) *$5 Little 364 17-13931

This book by "the first of living criminal sociologists," is divided into four parts: Data of criminal anthropology; Data of criminal statistics; Positive theory of penal responsibility; Practical reforms. "Signor Ferri, who belongs to the so-called positive school of criminology, is a scientific socialist; moreover, he utterly demolishes the orthodox theory of freedom of the will. He regards all crime as a social disease which must be treated as every other disease is treated; clinically. Mild forms need only a change of diet or environment with very little if any medicine of the law; the contagious cases must be isolated as we isolate smallpox and diphtheria until there is a perfect cure or until it is proved that there is no cure possible. He recognizes that many criminals are insane, hopelessly insane. His own belief is that the penalty of death is advisable in the instances where an insane criminal is dangerous to society; but that is immaterial. Protection of the community in which criminals are found is the one vital thing." (Boston Transcript) The book, first published in Italian in 1880, is translated by Joseph I. Kelly and John Lisle; edited by William W. Smithers; and has introductions by Charles A. Ellwood and Quincy A. Myers.

"An important book for college and special reference libraries."

+ A L A Bkl 14:75 D '17

"This volume gives one of the best pictures of the changes through which criminal sociology has passed in the last half century." W: B. Bailey
+ — Am Pol Sci R 11:772 N '17 240w

"No one today can make a pretense of familiarity with the modern sciences of criminology who has not read this work. If criticisms are to be made of the Italian school, they should be made on the basis of the ideas here set forth. The American institute has rendered a great service to English civilization by the translation of this book." J. P. Lichtenberger
+ Ann Am Acad 74:303 N '17 380w

"It may be that the author of this volume is (as certainly he makes it abundantly evident that he thinks he is) the greatest living authority on criminology, but he is so ram-bunctiously controversial that he overloads his treatise with a vast mass of perfectly unnecessary arguments directed against every person who has ever dared to enter this great field. . . . It is much to be desired that a greatly shortened summary of Signor Ferri's constructive philosophy of crime might be extricated from his bulky volume, eliminating entirely the controversial portions and leaving only the pure gold of his admirable doctrine, based on his actual observations." N. H. D.
+ — Boston Transcript p6 Ag 8 '17 1150w

"Enrico Ferri, is a positivist of the Italian school, who holds that crime is a biologic and social abnormality, produced in part at least by extra-social forces. . . . His hatred of religion breathes on every page. . . . We regret very much that the American institute cannot find American scholars to write on these topics objectively, instead of translating works nearly forty years old of anti-Christian blgots."

— Cath World 105:548 Jl '17 300w

"This book still remains the most distinguished general contribution to the subject of criminology, though much of its data and some of its conclusions are now out of date." L. L. Bernard

+ Dial 63:338 O 11 '17 1000w

+ Lit D 55:45 O 13 '17 500w

R of Rs 56:44 O '17 70w

"One of the most valuable volumes in a useful series. Ferri's classification of criminals appears to us now somewhat overlapping and difficult to establish in given cases by practicable tests." K. H. Claghorn

+ — Survey 39:47 O 13 '17 350w

FETTER, FRANK ALBERT. Economics. 2v v 2 *$1.75 Century 330

v 2 Modern economic problems.

"A year ago there appeared a book by Professor Fetter dealing with the broader economic principles of value and distribution. This is now followed by a volume entirely devoted to the treatment of practical problems which furnish concrete illustrations and applications of the principles developed in the earlier volume. These are grouped under the following heads: Resources and economic organization; Money and prices; Banking and insurance; Tariff and taxation; Problems of the wage system, and Problems of industrial organization. The two books are intended to cover a complete course in economics, but they are so arranged that they may be used separately."—R of Rs

"The sentiment of the book is thoroughly modern and progressive, but the policies advocated are based upon scientific principles throughout rather than upon the popular reform policies of the hour. The wisdom of confining references to other works, and bibliographical material in general, to a separate manual, may be questioned. Many readers of the text will, presumably, never see the 'Manual' but still will need guidance to further study of those problems in which they are particularly interested." W. I. K.

+ Ann Am Acad 71:234 My '17 230w

"The reviewer knows of no other economic text book where the application of principles to practical problems is more successfully made. The result is that much merely confusing descriptive material is eliminated, and what remains is solid and stimulating. From this point of view, the book will probably make a strong appeal to the teacher, to the student and to the general reader." E. E. Agger

+ Educ R 54:90 Je '17 780w

"This work is, in a sense, a sequel to a book published by the same author a year ago. . . . It will repay careful study because it dispels a number of popular fallacies and because, as has been said, it offers an excellent introduction to the more modern method of dealing with economic phenomena."

+ Ind 89:507 Mr 19 '17 180w

"Professor Fetter's discussion is clear and well-informed, and his conclusions are temperate and suggestive."

+ Nation 104:557 My 3 '17 100w

R of Rs 55:220 F '17 100w

FICKE, ARTHUR DAVISON. April elegy. *$1.25
Kennerley 811 17-12484

"An April elegy," the poem that fills the first half of this book, is a verse narrative, telling the story of two lovers who fail ever to recapture the passionate beauty of their first meeting. The remainder of the book is taken up with three groups of poems: Seven Japanese paintings; Lyrics; Café sketches. Some of the poems have appeared in the Little Review, Poetry, Century, Midland, and other magazines.

+ A L A Bkl 13:439 Jl '17

"Unlike some of his fellow poets of the new school, however, Mr Ficke has a genuine gift of poetic expression; he has, too, a disciplined metrical skill that shows to advantage in his handling both of the ordered verse forms and of free verse; finally, he always has something to say and says it intelligibly. . . . In all his work it is when Mr Ficke is most purely lyrical that he is most delightful." R. T. T.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Ap 15 '17 1000w

"The poems mingle bald realism and free verse with imaginative and lyric beauty. In intellectual content, they are subtle and at times difficult of interpretation. Mr Ficke is best known from his 'Sonnets of a portrait painter' and as an interpreter of Japanese art."

Cleveland p74 Je '17 80w

"The whole-hearted sentimentalism of 'An April elegy' will certainly recommend it to many, though scarcely to those readers whom Mr Ficke's real powers and previous performance fit him to address." Odell Shepard

+ — Dial 63:341 O 11 '17 350w

"In eight sonnets of his new volume the proud and sombre note of Mr Ficke's 'Sonnets of a portrait-painter' is audible in renewed vigor and beauty. Next in merit to these poems, I should place, I think, 'Seven Japanese paintings.' 'An April elegy' is equally unworthy of its associates and its parentage." O. W. Pirkins

+ — Nation 105:245 S 6 '17 300w
N Y Br Lib News 4:78 My '17 60w

"Full of impassioned beauty, rich restraint, and romantic appeal."

+ N Y Times 22:168 Ap 29 '17 300w
+ R of Rs 56:105 Jl '17 80w

"Verily, this is a book for a diverse public or for a single reader with very catholic taste. Mr Ficke at times reaches the Pyrian heights of the old school, and at times approaches the gutter depths of much of the new."

+ — Springf'd Republican p17 N 4 '17 450w

FIELD, CLIFTON COUTARD. Retail buying. (Harper's retail business ser.) *$1.25 (2½c) Harper 658 17-21788

The author, recently instructor in merchandizing in the University of Wisconsin, has also held positions with Marshall Field & Co., of Chicago, and James McCreery & Co., of New York. His book aims to give "a simple and readable explanation of what is best to-day in buying principles and practice." (Editor's introd.) Contents: The merchant as a buyer; Merchandise; Buying practice; Stock systems.

"A book list of descriptive material issued by manufacturers will be suggestive to librarians who wish to build up a working trade collection."

+ A L A Bkl 14:45 N '17
Cleveland p112 S '17 20w

"Gives many convenient hints as to kinds and qualities of commodities, especially in the clothing trades."

+ Ind 91:441 S 15 '17 60w

"The style is matter of fact, almost laconic. There is an element of stiffness and bluntness in it that appears to arise from lack of practice in writing. The discussion, however, is clear and usually simple. The real contribution in this book is to be found in part 3, entitled 'Buying practice.' It is just here that an undeveloped field was entered." C. S. Duncan

+ — J Pol Econ 25:1053 D '17 1200w
Pittsburgh 22:758 N '17 40w

"Instructive reading for which one connected with retail buying or selling."

+ Quar List New Tech Bks O '17 90w

FIELD, LOUISE MAUNSELL. Little gods laugh. il *$1.40 (2c) Little 17-23975

In this story of New York society Miss Field has given us a picture of the development of a high-minded young woman of good family, who, bred to position and ease, finds herself obliged to make her own way in the world. The refreshing side of the story is in its normality. Nita Wynne, through the interest of friends, uses and develops her natural abilities and though she, of course, loses leisure, she does not in any way lose her proper position. But her experiences do teach her to view life whole rather than from the narrow angle of her girlhood.

"The story is told with dignity and charm."

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 31 '17 150w
Cleveland p128 N '17 70w

"There is some clever characterization, but that is not a sufficient excuse for the addition of one more novel to the already overlong list of American mediocrities."

+ — Dial 63:354 O 11 '17 50w

"It is a real achievement of the author that Nita is never a prig. In her most intolerant moments there is something likeable, and very human, about her. The characters and incidents of the book are interesting and its theme is thoroughly wholesome and sane."

+ N Y Times 22:333 S 9 '17 450w

FIFES and drums; a collection of poems of America at war. (Vigilantes books) *$1 Doran 811.08 17-18155

"The Vigilantes' headquarters are in New York, its members are authors, artists and other professional workers, and its purposes are thus described: 'To arouse the country to a realization of the importance of the problems confronting the American people. To awaken and cultivate in the youth of the country a sense of public service and an intelligent interest in citizenship and national problems. To work vigorously for preparedness, mental, moral, and physical.'" (Boston Transcript) "These poems, written under the immediate stress of great events by the Vigilantes, furnish a striking record of the emotional reactions of the American people during the fortnight preceding and the six weeks following the declaration of war." (Foreword) Some of the contributors are Amelia Josephine Burr, Don Marquis, Clinton Scollard, Wallace Irwin, Edith M. Thomas, George E. Woodberry, Cale Young Rice, Theodosia Garrison, Percy MacKaye and Hermann Hagedorn.

"Their literary excellence is very high. It would be easy to forgive much under the circumstances, but there is nothing to forgive.

To single out a single poem in any collection as superlatively the best is usually futile and an invitation to violent argument, but we have no reluctance to place Miss Garrison's 'April 2nd' at the head." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 27 '17 1000w

"The whole anthology carries a glowing atmosphere of enthusiasm, every page breathing the wide range of high human emotion which is brought into being during the stress of war-time."

+ N Y Times 22:287 Ag 5 '17 260w

Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 26 '17 180w

FIGGIS, JOHN NEVILLE. Some defects in English religion, and other sermons. (Hand-books of Catholic faith and practice) *$1 (3½c) Young ch. 252

The defects in English religion to which the author devotes the first four sermons in this book are Sentimentalism, Legalism, Cowardice, and Complacency. This series of sermons was preached in Grosvenor chapel, Mayfair, in August, 1916. Among the other sermons in the volume is a group on 'The mysteries of love, preached as a Lenten series.

"A master of the philosophic ideas of history, and equally at home with Bernard Shaw or Nietzsche and the significant movements of today in letters, Dr Figgis is a preacher of an unusual sort."

+ Sat R 123:260 Mr 17 '17 370w

FIGGIS, JOHN NEVILLE. Will to freedom; or, The gospel of Nietzsche and the gospel of Christ. *$1.25 Scribner 193 17-15172

"Dr Figgis, who is a member of the Community of the Resurrection, a religious order of the Church of England, was invited to deliver the Gov. Bross lectures at Lake Forest university in Illinois in 1915, and made the German philosopher his subject." (Springf'd Republican) "In the lectures he aims at correcting some prevalent misconceptions as to Nietzsche and his influence in Germany. The six lectures deal in turn with 'Nietzsche the man,' 'The gospel of Nietzsche,' 'Nietzsche and Christianity,' 'Nietzsche's originality,' 'The charm of Nietzsche,' and 'The danger and the significance of Nietzsche.'" In particular Dr Figgis insists that, unlike Stirner, Nietzsche did not teach egotism, but rather a religion of valour involving the sacrifice of immediate desire to an ideal of nobility; egotism being, indeed, in direct opposition to some of Nietzsche's most important principles, such as natural asceticism, the sacrifice of ages in order to speed the superman, the raising of the type of man. But while endeavouring to set before us a reconsideration of much of Nietzsche's position in a more favourable light than the controversialists of recent years generally allow, Dr Figgis protests equally against those who argue that because Nietzsche in his later years held and loudly expressed anti-Russian views therefore modern Germany was not deeply influenced by him." (The Times [London] Lit Sup)

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

FIGGIS, JOHN NEVILLE—Continued

Reviewed by W. C. A. Waller
Am J Theol 22:150 Ja '18 650w
A L A Bkl 14:39 N '17
+ Ath p462 S '17 180w

"There may be, however, some doubt whether many who call themselves Christian would accept Dr Figgis's statement that they 'assert the will to freedom.' That is the weakness of the book; for it is only too easy to make out that anything that is true or good is Christian."

+ — Ath p508 O '17 550w
"For the reader who has not time for the writings of Nietzsche but who would like to know what it is all about, this is the book."

+ Bib World 50:254 O '17 700w
Reviewed by C. H. P. Thurston
+ Bookm 46:290 N '17 30w
+ Cleveland p105 S '17 50w

"The discussion is pitched in a key so much lower than Nietzsche's own writing, and is conducted in such obvious and pedestrian terms that the many quotations blaze across the page with a heat that seems almost to shrivel the unfortunate commentator. What Dr Figgis has done here is to make the common mistake of confusing a diagnosis with an ethics. The common mind seems unable to keep from confounding Nietzsche's analysis of what is with his ideal of what ought to be. . . . The book must be credited, however, with what is perhaps the best short sketch of Nietzsche's life to be found in English." Randolph Bourne

— + Dial 63:389 O 25 '17 1200w

"A book of real weight and of philosophic power."

+ Educ R 54:528 D '17 100w

"The relation of Nietzsche to contemporary thought and particularly to Christianity, as well as to the prevailing ideals in Germany, is well brought out in Dr Figgis' book."

+ Ind 92:109 O 13 '17 380w

"His study of Nietzsche is able, fresh and sympathetic. Perhaps because he is under Nietzsche's charm, he does not quite come to grips with his subject." M. J.

+ — Int J Ethics 28:287 Ja '18 280w

"We can not praise too highly this exposition. It is unbiased, fair, and square. No debatable characterization of the subject lacks chapter and verse from Nietzsche's writings."

+ Lit D 55:39 S 15 '17 430w

"The title gives a sufficient intimation of Dr Figgis' purpose, but one could wish that he had followed this purpose a little more tenaciously. As a matter of fact, the best part of the book is the exposition of Nietzsche's philosophy before the author enters upon his critical comparison."

+ Nation 105:323 S 20 '17 350w

"It would be difficult for any Christian reviewer to excel Dr Figgis in combining just criticism of an iconoclastic atheist with so impartial an appreciation of his merits."

+ Outlook 117:260 O 17 '17 160w

Pittsburgh 22:699 O '17 20w

Pratt p6 O '17

"Dr Figgis's books have an unusual circulation, which they deserve. Christianity has few apologists of equal power, for he is not only learned in divinity, he is also an historian and a philosopher who keeps in touch with the spirit of his time. He knows the latest book of Mr Bernard Shaw as well as of the Modernists. . . . Nietzsche is much more talked about than read, and Dr Figgis does well in adding to his lectures typical specimens of his writings and the views of the best critics on them."

+ Sat R 124:188 S 8 '17 1300w

"The analysis Dr Figgis offers in these lectures is at once the most painstaking and the most convincing we have seen."

+ Spec 119:270 S 15 '17 1450w

"Dr Figgis approaches his subject fairly and judiciously, though hardly with the freedom from preoccupation which is essential to a complete comprehension of Nietzsche. . . . He devotes much space to the progress of Nietzschean ideas in modern Germany."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 26 '17 650w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p383 Ag 9 '17 170w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p388 Ag 16 '17 1450w

FILLEBROWN, CHARLES BOWDOIN. Principles of natural taxation; showing the origin and progress of plans for the payment of all public expenses from economic rent. il $1.50 McClurg 336.2 17-5160

Of part 1 of this book Mr Fillebrown is compiler; of part 2, author. Part 1 is a compilation, the object of which is "to trace the metamorphosis of the land question into the rent question; of the equal right to land into the joint right to the rent of land, etc." The authors represented in this progression are, Adam Smith, John Stuart Mill, Patrick Edward Dove, Edwin Burgess, Sir John Macdonell, Henry George, Rev Edward McGlynn and Thomas G. Shearman. For each of these a biographical sketch with an estimate of the man's importance to the single tax movement is provided. Part 2 has chapters on: A burdenless tax; Land; Taxation and housing, etc. The preface says, "While this volume is a revision and enlargement of 'A single tax handbook for 1913,' which it was thought might reappear at intervals, it is issued with the idea of permanence, as representing the best authorities, early and late, upon the development of the idea."

"The book will prove a very useful single-tax document, and Mr Fillebrown has performed a real service to economists in calling attention to the need for a redistribution of emphasis in discussing certain aspects of the single tax. As is perhaps to be expected, where the material has been gathered from scattered sources, an occasional slip in statement has crept in."

R. M. Haig

+ — Am Econ R 7:804 D '17 350w

+ A L A Bkl 14:41 N '17

Ann Am Acad 73:236 S '17 240w

"For a full exposition of the subject, we have seen few books equal to Mr Fillebrown's latest effort." Alexander MacKendrick

+ Masses 9:32 S '17 1050w

"The second part of Mr Fillebrown's book contains the kind of polemic for the single tax with which readers of his former publications, and of single-tax propaganda generally, are familiar. There is much in it that is plausible, much even that is sound; but there is also a great admixture of shallow assumption as well as an ignoring of vital difficulties."

+ — Nation 104:656 My 31 '17 1000w

N Y Br Lib News 4:58 Ap '17

St Louis 15:189 Je '17 30w

"Particularly interesting chapters are 'The professors and the single tax,' disclosing incidentally how much the professors are like the man in the street in missing the essential point of the doctrine, and 'A catechism of natural taxation,' carefully revised by the best authorities to meet the inquirer's questions with the best possible answers."

+ Springf'd Republican p11 Ja 27 '18 380w

FILSINGER, ERNST B. Exporting to Latin America; with a foreword by Leo S. Rowe. *$3 Appleton 382 16-17440

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"Two qualities in Mr Filsinger's book stand out as noteworthy: it is specific and it is comprehensive. When to this statement I add that it is distinctly a business man's book, written by a business man who still has the student's knack of covering a subject fully and expressing himself clearly, it may easily be understood that this is one of the best publications on Latin America that has been placed on the American market. . . . Among the many writers on Latin American trade Mr Filsinger seems to be almost the discoverer of the effective work being done by the Bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, to which he devotes considerable, but by no means excessive, space. . . . It would certainly pay every prospective exporter to have a copy not in his library but on his desk for constant reference and study." E. E. Pratt

 * + Am Econ R 7:122 Mr '17 1050w

"An especially interesting chapter is that on Export commission houses and agents. . . . Mr Filsinger's outline of the function of the export commission house is followed with the chapter on Traveling salesmen, general and local agents, which is of particular interest to manufacturers desiring to market their product by direct representation overseas. This includes suggestions as to obtaining foreign agents by correspondence. . . . This book is a valuable addition to a quite substantial bibliography developed by the painstaking work of Hough, Aughinbaugh and other students of Latin-American trade problems." R. H. Patchin
 + Ann Am Acad 71:227 My '17 650w

"Of unusual practical value is the appendix. This contains, besides other important information, a detailed description of each of the Latin American countries, including language, newspapers, currency, with American equivalents, weights and measures, postage, location, area, and physical characteristics, population, purchasing power, railways and transportation, resources, industries, mines, principal cities, best methods of canvassing the country and the articles most needed. In another part of the appendix he gives the typical advertising rates in Latin American export journals, the principal directories of the Latin American republics, and the principal banks of the large cities."
 + Natlon 104:369 Mr 29 '17 1350w

"Manufacturers and merchants anxious to discover and improve foreign trade opportunities will find of particular interest the chapters on Latin-American correspondence, Banking documents, Credits, Catalogues and quotations, Parcel post and mail order business, but the subjects covered extend to practically all the questions that business men are compelled to ask in advertising new lines."
 + New Repub 11:167 Je 9 '17 400w

"The work of a man who is president of the Filsinger-Boette shoe company and consul of Costa Rica and Ecuador in St Louis, and who was formerly president and commissioner to Latin-America of the Latin-American foreign trade association. Incidentally Mr Filsinger is the husband of Sara Teasdale, the poet. . . . The book is plainly the most valuable of its kind that has yet been published."
 + Springf'd Republican p6 F 23 '17 200w

FINCK, HENRY THEOPHILUS. Richard Strauss; the man and his works. 1l *$2.50 (3c) Little 17-26876

A carefully prepared life of the first great realist in music who "has done for programme music what Wagner did for the opera." Besides the story of Strauss's life and a number of reliable anecdotes, there is an estimate of his place in the history of music, and a full description, with critical comments, of his more important compositions including all the tone poems and operas which have been launched with so much interest and success. A sympathetic appreciation of "Richard Strauss, seer and idealist" is contributed by Percy Grainger who sees the inborn effortless greatness of a man who is a genius of the purely inspirational order.

"Stimulating to musicians who do understand Strauss; and, for mere bewildered music lovers who do not, it will serve to foster at least an 'intelligent ignorance.'"
 + A L A Bkl 14:83 D '17

"This is a useful survey of the external facts touching the life and musical compositions of Richard Strauss. But it does not, on the whole, suggest that it has been a labor of love. Mr Finck makes it abundantly clear that his reason for writing the book was rather the fact that Strauss is considered one of the greatest, if not the greatest, of living composers than that he himself considers him to be such. And the general tone of Mr Finck's book is blasé, sometimes yawningly so." E. Sapor

 + — Dial 63:584 D 6 '17 1900w

"Not only the biggest but also the most interesting and the most valuable work on this composer yet produced in English. If the book contained only this sort of intensely personal dislike, paraded as an attempt to determine Strauss's place in the history of music, it would be of small worth. But it contains a deal of more profitable matter."
 + — Ind 92:385 N 24 '17 350w
 + Lit D 55:42 D 8 '17 240w

"It is a big book in more senses than one. . . . To be sure, all the thrice-familiar Finckian critical stigmata are present; his Wagner worship and the clamorous praise of Rubinstein, Grieg, Paderewski, Liszt, MacDowell, and Percy Grainger. . . . Mr Finck's musical enthusiasms are always exhilarating, and while his study of Strauss is not as significant as his 'Life of Wagner'—the best biography in English—we must remember the difference in the career of the two men. Wagner's life, like his music, was dramatic. The life thus far of Strauss has been almost commonplace." J. G. Huneker
 + — Nation 105:462 O 25 '17 1550w

"This biography of Strauss the composer has the quality of sprightliness to an exceptional degree—partly, no doubt, because of its subject."
 + R of Rs 56:551 N '17 150w

FINDLATER, MARY, and FINDLATER, JANE HELEN. Seen and heard before and after 1914. *$1.50 Dutton 17-26479

"There are six stories in this book—the stories of Scottish life that the Misses Findlater know so well how to tell—and the coming of the war divides them square in half. This in itself gives the book added value as a picture of the conflict's far reactions. For the war came to the Scotch villages of the Highlands and changed the face of life for the village folk. And the things that were 'seen and heard' after Aug. 1, 1914, were very different from the Highland happenings of the hills and villages in the months before. . . . The first story is of the wandering tinkers of the Highlands, and of the claim of their gypsy life upon all the tinker 'clan.' . . . The second story is a strange bit of Highland pathos. 'When Johnny comes marching home' is a human little tale of a village ne'er-do-well, who lost his chance of manhood, but the second war story is full of whimsical humor and sweetness. Jane Findlater has written all the tales but one—the last, 'Real estate,' longer than most of the others, and rich in human understanding and charm."—N Y Times

+ A L A Bkl 13:449 Jl '17

"The stories are written with the same feeling for words and situations which has previously distinguished the work of these two authors. They show life within a very narrow radius, but the stamp of truth is on all they write." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 2 '17 1250w

+ Dial 62:527 Je 14 '17 150w

+ Ind 91:353 S 1 '17 60w

"Jane Findlater's writing has the charm of an older time. . . . What we really get in 'The little tinker' is more like the scene of a Dutch master, incident and atmosphere and character projected upon a tiny canvas, with sympathy but without sentimentalism. The stories written after the war are less happy."
 + Nation 104:632 My 24 '17 180w

N Y Br Lib News 4:74 My '17 30w

"A lovable, human book."

+ N Y Times 22:186 My 13 '17 300w

+ Spec 118:175 F 10 '17 1600w

"As always with these writers, it is not the story in itself but the shrewd and intuitive handling of its elements which gives marked individuality to the work."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p572 N 30 '16 570w

FIRTH, JOHN BENJAMIN. Highways and byways in Nottinghamshire. (Highways and byways ser.) il *$2 Macmillan 914.2 (Eng ed 17-7460)

"To an excellent series this is a most readable addition. Mr Firth writes well and has accumulated a mass of curious information. The chapters on Nottingham and Newark and the parts they played on opposite sides in the civil war, the account of Southwell and its ancient minster, the elaborate description of the dukeries—Weibeck, Clumber, and Thoresby, all set in the remains of Sherwood Forest—are the chief features. Robin Hood is cautiously handled. Byron in poverty at Southwell and in transient splendour at Newstead is another picturesque figure."—Spec

"Gives fewer descriptions of scenery than other books in this series."

+ A L A Bkl 13:397 Je '17

+ Dial 62:531 Je 14 '17 130w

"The book is crammed with information, yet it is written with an ease and grace that any novelist might envy."

+ Nation 104:373 Mr 29 '17 190w

"The book is profusely and beautifully illustrated, and the large-scale maps will be invaluable to the explorer of the byways of Nottinghamshire."

+ Nature 99:4 Mr 1 '17 300w

"Especially interesting in its relation to several of the best-known families of England."

+ R of Rs 55:556 My '17 40w

"There has scarcely been a better book in the series, and one can often dip into his 'Nottinghamshire' with pleasure and relief. It is a book to enjoy, and the hours given to it will not be wasted. Mr Griggs's illustrations are often delightful too. Some of his drawings of domestic architecture—notably of old houses in the city of Nottingham—are very nearly as good as Prout, and we much like his Southwell minster, west front."

+ Sat R 123:sup10 Mr 31 '17 150w

Spec 118:141 F 3 '17 140w

"For Americans no other town of Nottinghamshire can have so great appeal as Scrooby. For Scrooby was the home of William Brewster, the Pilgrim father, and the little band of Brownists met usually at Brewster's house. . . . Mr Firth's spirited pen traces the features of Nottinghamshire towns, and revives much entertaining local history."

+ Spring'd Republican p15 F 25 '17 1350w

"A book like this brings strongly home to the reader the tides of change which have helped to mould the most placid English landscapes."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p53 F 1 '17 1300w

FISH, ADA Z. American Red cross text-book on home dietetics. il *$1 Blakiston 641.5 17-6350

"The author of 'Home dietetics' has emphasized the means of avoiding illness rather than the ways of catering to it. She has suggested very concisely the important principles involved in the cooking of food, and so far as possible has illustrated these principles by directions for the preparation of common articles of diet."—Survey

A L A Bkl 13:336 My '17

"A unique and valuable feature of the book is the emphasis placed on the importance of hygiene which should be observed in the handling of food to prevent the spread of disease." L. H. G.

+ Survey 38:75 Ap 21 '17 120w

FISHER, BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. Francis Thompson; essays. il $1 (15c) Franklin pub. co., Canton, O. 821 17-17070

A short sketch of the life and an appreciation of the poetry of a rare spirit whose genius is the naere covering the grains of hardship as a pearl was produced for poetry. While after years were kinder to him than the early period of cruel hardship, he was broken in health and died at the age of forty-eight. The late Benjamin Fisher was a sympathetic student of Thompson's poetry and hoped thru his essays to interest many in the clear quality of Thompson's poetical gifts.

"Students of Francis Thompson's poetry will find interest in this attractively bound little book."

+ Dial 63:409 O 25 '17 170w

"Of flowery and figurative language, this tiny book possesses real critical grasp, and has itself real beauties of phrase that make us curious to see that earlier work, 'Life harmonies,' praised of Alice Meynell."

+ Ind 91:514 S 29 '17 50w

FISHER, DOROTHEA FRANCES (CANFIELD) (MRS JOHN REDWOOD FISHER). Understood Betsy. il *$1.30 (3c) Holt 17-23050

"Betsy has been brought up from infancy by her Aunt Frances, a maiden lady past her first youth who has deluged the child with love and anxiety and determination to 'understand' her. And so at the age of nine she has been 'understood' into an anaemic, morbid, neurotic, egotistic condition that saps her rightful enjoyment of childhood and undermines the promise of useful womanhood. . . . A sudden upheaval in Aunt Frances's family makes it necessary for Betsy to be sent along to relatives who live on a farm in Vermont. And there life takes on a very different complexion. Nobody tries to 'understand' her, nobody pays attention to any of the things that caused Aunt Frances to cuddle and care for her as if she were an infant. Instead, they put responsibilities upon her for herself and others, expect her to amuse herself and in general to be an upstanding, self-reliant little girl."—N Y Times

"Published in St Nicholas."

+ A L A Bkl 14:26 O '17

"The one girls' story of the season which seems to have the qualities that make for permanence—Miss Alcott's qualities, say, of warm feeling, golden common sense, and ease and simplicity of style." J. Walcott

+ Bookm 46:199 D '17 120w

"Betsy is the concrete example of so much that Mrs Fisher has written on child training, that we are obliged once again to remark the skill with which a true story teller can reveal her morals while she is telling a thoroughly interesting story." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 12 '17 1250w

"The book is intended primarily for children, but Mrs Fisher with her usual insight has touched upon a modern tendency in education with an irony that will be appreciated by their elders."

+ Dial 63:403 O 25 '17 100w

+ Ind 91:514 S 29 '17 70w

"It is a story for a child—or for the child-lover with many suggestions in child-development and training quite suited to a teacher."

+ Lit D 55:48 D 29 '17 210w

"Dorothy Canfield is always extraordinarily likable, even if she has grown troublingly wistful, and doubtful about cities. . . . Her wistfulness for pioneer conditions saps a necessary confidence in cities in a way her Montessori mother did not. But is it, after all, a book for children? Would it not be, of itself, just a little bit of an Aunt Frances?"

+ New Repub 12:166 S 8 '17 300w

"It has ostensibly been written for children, but we should be sorry for any adult who could not enjoy it. . . . As a gift to a little nine or ten year old girl who reads easily, we cannot recommend anything more charming and worth while than 'Understood Betsy.'" M. G. S.

+ N Y Call p15 S 30 '17 340w

"This story about a little girl will be read with pleasure by people who are small and young, while people who are larger and older also will read it with pleasure combined, if they have humor and sense, with profit. . . . The scene is that section of New England where Mrs Fisher has made her home for a number of years, and the people are the same sturdy Vermonters whom she has put into her short stories about 'Hillsboro people.' She interprets the New England character with truth and verve."

+ N Y Times 22:294 Ag 12 '17 800w

"A charming and entertaining little story."

+ Outlook 117:26 S 5 '17 170w

"As a story pure and simple, it is delightful, a mine of fun, wisdom and common sense."

+ R of Rs 56:557 N '17 150w

"A most delightful narrative. The reader feels an impulsive affection for Aunt Abigail, Uncle Henry and Cousin Ann."

+ Spring'd Republican p17 D 9 '17 230w

FISHER, GEORGE JOHN, and BERRY, ELMER. Physical effects of smoking; preliminary experimental studies. *$1 Assn. press 613 17-12337

Dr Fisher is connected with the International committee of the Y.M.C.A., and Professor Berry is professor of physiology in the International Y. M. C. A. college at Springfield, Mass. Professor Berry states that "the material here brought together represents an effort to secure definite experimental data regarding the effects of smoking," that the work, covering researches conducted 1914-16, has been done as graduation theses under his direction, and that it is presented as "entirely preliminary and tentative." The subjects were "normal, healthy, athletic fellows between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-five." The experimenters returned results remarkable for their uniformity and general consistency, showing that smoking raises the heart rate and blood pressure, that it markedly delays the return of the heart rate to normal after exercise, and that it impairs the neuro-muscular control as indicated by delicate finger exercises and gross muscular coordinations. There is a bibliography of eight pages.

A L A Bkl 13:433 J1 '17

"With rare good judgment the authors refrain from conclusions, and rest their case upon a simple statement of recorded facts, not claiming infallibility but presenting their results so that the reader arrives at his own conclusions. The book is an excellent short story to put into the hands of school teachers and high-school boys." Haven Emerson, M.D.

+ Survey 39:370 D 23 '17 400w

FISHER, MARY. The Treloars. *$1.35 (1c) Crowell 17-13953

"The scene is California. The Treloars, who live in the country near Berkeley, are a family of high cultivation and of warm humanity. The father is a brilliant man who has ceased to be a parson because he can no longer conform to the creed of the church. . . . Hard by lives his friend, who is also a detached philosopher—of another school. Their chief recreation is in controversy. Treloar has three grown children. One of the daughters, Catherine, has brains enough only for the hard and selfish part of the modern feminist practice. Margaret, the other, is a woman of intellect and character. Her brother Dick holds the centre of her stage and responds to her devotion. We meet her at the moment when Dick is about to try his fledgling wings at journalism. In the city he presently meets an enchantress, an actress of none too savoury past. The wrecking of his sister's happiness and a luckless marriage are the result. He is released before the total crippling of his life, and after an illuminating experience [at] the war-front, achieves a real union with the girl he should have married in the first place; to Margaret also the chances of war have brought a fitting mate."—Bookm

"A book of scope and power by a hand fresh at story-making. Readers who like swift action may find the conduct of the narrative too leisurely. By others, the digressions and discussions which fill so many of these pages may be regarded as the cream of the book." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:209 O '17 370w

"What a godsend the war has been to lazy or unimaginative novelists! With it they can cut every Gordian knot."

— Dial 63:463 N 8 '17 140w

"The book's fault is talk, tho much of it is interesting enough and clever. But there is too much of it."

+ Lit D 55:39 O 27 '17 240w

"A book of uncommon flavor: to begin with, its style instead of falling in with modern fashions of briskness or nonchalance, takes its own time and goes its own way, with a faint suggestiveness, perhaps, of George Eliot rather than any later writer. It is the medium of an intelligence both sympathetic and scholarly, interpreting character in the light of present conditions."

+ Nation 105:371 O 4 '17 350w

"The Treloars' belongs to a class of novels written not because the author has a story to tell, but because he has views to ventilate, theories to expound, a fund of information of which to disburden himself. . . . Although well written, showing wide reading, and expressing forcible opinions upon nearly all the subjects now agitating the public mind, 'The Treloars' does not take hold of the reader. The characters seem to have been created to hold long conversations upon every conceivable topic, . . . while certain of the situations are almost amusing in their improbability."

— N Y Times 22:266 J1 15 '17 200w

FISK, EUGENE LYMAN. Alcohol. *$1 Funk 178 17-20843

"A non-scientific discussion for the general reader of the deleterious effect of alcohol. Divided into three parts, it discusses its relation to life insurance, to physiology, and human efficiency. Supplementary notes give views of Great Britain, Russia and France and the attitude of the American medical profession." (A L A Bkl) The contents appeared first in the form of articles in the Atlantic Monthly.

A L A Bkl 14:73 D '17

"Modest and yet most important volume. It would be a good thing for America and the world if his pages could be carried in the knapsack of every soldier, at home and abroad, and studied by every citizen of our country."

+ Lit D 55:46 D 1 '17 280w

"It is too slight, too dogmatic, and too evidently written to maintain a theory."

— Outlook 117:285 O 24 '17 60w

FISKE, MINNIE MADDERN (MRS HARRISON GREY FISKE). Mrs Fiske: her views on actors, acting, and the problems of production; recorded by Alexander Woolcott. 11 *$2 (6c) Century 792 17-29247

Witty, spontaneous, unconventional bits of theatre wisdom dropped over the tea cups by one of the foremost producers, directors and actresses of the present day and recorded out of the long memory of the dramatic critic of the New York Times. The seven chapters set forth Mrs Fiske's theory of the theatre,—a theory which has been evolving thru years of honest, sincere progress towards the goal which the world has seen her brilliantly achieve. Deductions are interpolated with interesting comment on the portrayal of certain of her well known rôles. The book is full of inspiration and food for thought and study for young actors, while for the theatre goer who never misses a Fiske play it will serve as a review of her successes.

"Expensive for its value to the average library."

+ A L A Bkl 14:118 Ja '18

"Mr Woolcott is an adept prompter; he usually sets the scene piquantly; fills the pauses neatly; gives Mrs Fiske her head, as it were, while his memory sits elastic in the saddle; and generally conducts himself as a beaming Eoswell, save for a tendency to the simpering and airy phrases of literary and artistic youth at tea in the college across the Charles. As for Mrs Fiske herself, she courses through the conversations like Delilah in Milton's chorus, 'bedecked, ornate, and gay!'"

+ Boston Transcript p12 O 24 '17 2800w

"No one could doubt the authenticity of these repeated conversations, for they are so consistent with her life and seem so possessed of her personality as to make one see the lift of her head, the whimsical light in her eye, and visualize the touch and gesture of her personality."

FISKE, MINNIE MADDERN—Continued

+ Lit D 55:50 D 1 '17 170w

"Woolcott expresses the hope that some day Mrs Fiske will write her own book. It is here seconded, for it must be admitted that there is a feeling, especially in the opening chapters, that just when the actress is about to say something really vital, the writer interrupts her train of thought." L: Gardy

+ — N Y Call p15 D 29 '17 580w

"The book is full of interesting exposition, nuggets of wisdom, conclusions clearly thought out and forcibly presented. No one who is in the least interested in the theatre can fail to find the book fascinating and stimulating."

+ N Y Times 22:578 D 30 '17 360w

+ R of Rs 57:108 Ja '18 110w

"The public needs not be told that Mrs Fiske is no ordinary theatrical celebrity, and there will be general expectation that a book of her views, if authentically reproduced, will be an individual and entertaining book. It is."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 25 '17 550w

FITCH, GEORGE. Twenty-four; where I took them and what they did to me. ll *$1.25 (5c) Little 17-1930

George Fitch once went to Europe with twenty-four girls, winners in a newspaper circulation contest, in his charge. As he puts it, "Some reporters go to war, some have to jump out of balloons in patent parachutes, and some have to take parties of young and beautiful girls to Europe. It's all in the game." In this book he has given his own humorous version of the expedition.

"Appeared in Ladies' Home Journal."

A L A Bkl 13:315 Ap '17

"As a 'cheer-up' story to amuse girls of sixteen, we recommend the book heartily. For older readers it is a little too thin, and the situation is a bit overworked. . . . The end drags."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 Mr 28 '17 120w

N Y Br Lib News 4:24 F '17

"Very amusing."

+ N Y Times 22:13 Ja 14 '17 300w

"The story emphasizes the loss sustained in the death of the kindly humorist."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 F 25 '17 200w

FITZMAURICE, GEORGE. Five plays. *$1.25 Little 822 (Eng ed 15-5685)

"Five plays' by George Fitzmaurice, the Irish folk-dramatist, carry one into the midst of life in the Irish countryside. They are 'The pie-dish,' the story of an old Irishman who worked twenty years molding a fine pie dish and died cursing God because he wouldn't let him live long enough to finish it; 'The country dressmaker,' 'The magic glasses,' 'The dandy dolls,' and a strong play, 'The moonlighter,' which pictures the peculiar conditions that nurture violence and revolutions in Ireland. The scene is the period of the agrarian revolt. Peter Guerin, the leading character, is a splendid type of an old Fenian." (R of Rs) The book was first published by Maunsel (London and Dublin) in 1914.

A L A Bkl 14:49 N '17

"Mr Fitzmaurice is a connecting link between the earlier and the later writers of the Irish dramatic movement. In his technique, he is a contemporary Irish dramatist; in his simpler point of view and freer imagination, he is a true son of the pioneers. His vivid dialogue and character-drawing surpass most contemporary work. For sheer beauty, either of thought or expression, he does not equal his predecessors. As a realist, he writes in the modern vein; as a fantast, in the spirit of the earlier men. . . . These 'Five plays' justify the hope that, if only the Abbey theatre will cease trying to be a Hibernian branch of Drury Lane, it can still produce real Irish dramatists." Williams Haynes

+ — Dial 63:208 S 13 '17 820w

+ Ind 91:189 Ag 4 '17 50w

N Y Br Lib News 4:86 Je '17

"Fitzmaurice's dialect has a richness of idiom that surpasses the familiar and monotonous Kiltartan, a gusty blowing freshness that is typically Irish, yet unlike that of Synge, or Colum, or the work of any other Irish folk-dramatist."

+ R of Rs 55:662 Je '17 140w

FLANDRAU, GRACE HODGSON. Cousin Julia. *$1.40 (1½c) Appleton 17-22295

This is the story of a family in a middle western town. "Cousin Julia," wife of a successful business man, is a social climber with two beautiful daughters, Virginia and Louise. Virginia, the finer and cleverer of the two, is, though she herself is ignorant of the fact for many years, an adopted daughter. Other characters are Félix de Lorme, a French marquis, who marries Louise, but falls in love with Virginia; Tom Collingsworth, a rich and rather commonplace young business man, who is Virginia's other lover; Frau von Ernst, Virginia's elderly friend; and Bob Tillinghurst, in the United States diplomatic service, and his wife Violet.

+ A L A Bkl 14:95 D '17

"A painstaking care for details of characterization distinguishes 'Cousin Julia.'"

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 21 '17 700w

"Yet the book is more than readable; its charming pictures of the Middle West and its sardonic understanding of the Cinderella background of 'les nouveaux' help to point a shrewd moral."

+ — Dial 63:353 O 11 '17 150w

"Written with sincerity. . . . Interesting, principally because of the well-drawn figure of Julia. The Frenchman, Félix de Lorme, 'an amateur of everything, of letters, of science, of love' is also well done, and so is the small-natured and commonplace Louise. . . . The picture of middle western society is amusingly presented."

+ N Y Times 22:343 S 16 '17 320w

FLEAGLE, FRED K. Social problems in Porto Rico. $1 (3c) Heath 917.29 17-17543

A collection of data on the social problems of Porto Rico which the author brought together in the course of his work in rural sociology in the University of Porto Rico. Contents: Population; The jibaró; Overpopulation; The family; Rural housing conditions; Woman and child labor; Industries; The land problem and unemployment; Poverty; Sicknes and disease; Crime; Intemperance; Juvenile delinquents; Rural schools; The school and the community; Relation of the teacher to the community; Present-day rural school movements; Physical development and longevity.

Ind 92:487 D 8 '17 40w

"This book is a specific and not a general picture, and by no means an attractive one. But it satisfies a thirst for information that has been growing with those who hear constantly of the great poverty in Porto Rico. . . . It may also assist some in a position to do so to set their shoulders to the task of amelioration—a task that needs more American shoulders."

+ Nation 105:430 O 18 '17 1300w

+ R of Rs 57:221 F '18 140w

"'Social problems in Porto Rico' is short and to the point, almost to the extent of being dogmatic. It is well worth reading." S. B. Grubbs

+ Survey 39:202 N 24 '17 400w

FLECKER, JAMES ELROY. Collected poems. ll *$2 Doubleday 821 17-26316

James Elroy Flecker was a young English poet who died in 1915. J. C. Squire, who was with him at Oxford has edited his poems, contributing a biographical introduction to the volume. He had published four books of verse:

"The bridge of fire," 1907; "Forty-two poems," 1911; "The golden journey to Samarkand," 1913; "The old ships," 1915. It is from these volumes that the present collection is reprinted, with twenty new poems added. The poems are arranged in two groups, Juvenilia, and Later poems, and they follow roughly a chronological order.

+ A L A Bkl 13:341 My '17

"It has been the fate, and perhaps the happy fate, of many English poets to die young. . . . Great as was the promise of Middleton and Brooke, it is the death of Flecker that is perhaps our most grievous loss."

+ Ath p527 N '16 1300w

Boston Transcript p7 F 24 '17 300w

"Poems of a young Englishman who died in 1915 at the age of thirty, and who belonged to the so-called Parnassian school—a group of seekers after perfection of form and the objective interpretation of beauty, represented in France by de Heredia and Leconte de Lisle."

+ Cleveland p65 My '17 210w

"His achievement in verse is consistently high, but no single poem stands out as specially memorable." Odell Shepard

+ Dial 63:19 Je 28 '17 180w

"He is almost the only upholder of art for art's sake who can justify his practice to the unbeliever." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 106:90 Ja 24 '18 450w

"His family was Austrian, and perhaps it was because of such affiliation that he was attracted to eastern romance. . . . He did a thing more difficult than the bringing back of an eastern glamour—the glamour is there in 'The ballad of Iskander, and The golden journey to Samarkand'—he brought into contemporary poetry metres that suggest and may actually be derived from oriental verse. . . . Except James Clarence Mangan no other poet has been able to weave English into such exotic patterns." Padraic Colum

* + New Repub 10:sup12 Ap 21 '17 1250w

N Y Br Lib News 4:62 Ap '17

"There are a hundred interesting aspects of the man and his work which space forbids us to attempt. Like Rupert Brooke, he greated to the last."

+ N Y Times 22:77 Mr 4 '17 850w

+ Sat R 122:485 N 18 '16 1400w

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 22 '17 800w

"His achievement is unlikely to occupy the industrious commentator, or to become the esoteric nucleus of a learned society. If it live, it will be because beauty created in words cannot easily die."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p457 S 28 '16 3600w

FLEMING, GUY. Diplomat. *$1.50 Longmans

"A picture of early 19th-century social and political life as seen in the family of a Yorkshire squire rich in sons who follow various careers, and a daughter who becomes a countess. But Guy Fleming, a novelist of considerable gifts, concentrates mainly on the career of the fourth son, which culminates in a long residence in a foreign capital. Upon his journals the story is supposed to be based."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Written in the leisurely Trollope manner."

+ Dial 62:482 My 31 '17 120w

Ind 91:353 S 1 '17 40w

"There are sundry crimes, all vividly depicted, but leaving the reader disposed to wonder why it was worth while to write—and to write so well—a novel containing no character enlisting much sympathy and with but one scene that really touches the heart; a novel which, with all its merits, leaves the reader cold."

+ N Y Times 22:131 Ap 8 '17 250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p626 D 21 '16 70w

"Mr Fleming is so interesting that it is a pity his unweeded rhythmless style should make him so difficult to read."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p5 Ja 4 '17 580w

FLEMING, GUY. Off with the old love; a war story. *$1.50 (2c) Longmans 17-21972

"Though toward the end the scene of the story is shifted to France, to the trenches, and the hospitals, it is at Ravenscroft [in England] that most of the action takes place, and very many of the numerous characters live. . . . The plot is an intricate one, with a lost daughter, a murder, an elopement, and no less than three love stories, not to mention several past romances, to increase its complications."—N Y Times

"There are touches of comedy and two or three amusing characters in the book. . . . while the author's intermittent comments are usually clever, often pungent, sometimes satiric, and always entertaining. The quiet restrained style has a good deal of charm. . . . There is too much of the pleasantness and placidity in the book; at the end, one feels that persons such as the author has drawn, placed in situations such as those in which he has chosen to place them, would have been a good deal less comfortable than his various characters finally were."

+ N Y Times 22:303 Ag 19 '17 580w

"Mr Fleming makes all the people in his new book subject to a great variety of coincidences, and when it is all over one feels that they and their surroundings have been a good deal wrenched to make them fit his little stage. . . . The war does little to influence the course of the plays except that it provides a fanciful background for a series of coincidences and a target at which Mr Fleming aims a number of rather inapposite and bitter sayings."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p316 JI 5 '17 450w

FLETCHER, ALFRED CHARLES BENSON. From job to job around the world. il *$2 (3c) Dodd 910 17-25257

Mr Fletcher, a graduate of the University of California, tells in this book how he started with his fare paid from San Francisco to Honolulu and a five dollar gold piece in his pocket, and worked his way around the world in three years. He visited Hawaii, Japan, Korea, China, the Philippines, Ceylon, India, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, Europe, England, Norway, Spitzbergen, Sweden, and finally crossed the Atlantic to America. Mr Ralph J. Richardson, who was equally short of funds, was the author's traveling companion on part of the trip, and took the photographs from which the book is illustrated. The narrative was originally published in the Wide World Magazine.

"A buoyant, high-spirited account of personal adventure, with graphic pictures of places and people. Illustrated with good photographs."

+ A L A Bkl 14:92 D '17

"A very entertaining story he spins, not only about the world, or such considerable portions as he visited, but also about the calm assurance and readiness of American boys to make themselves at home in strange places and under remarkable conditions." A. M. Chase

+ Bookm 46:334 N '17 90w

"His account of his adventures comes, in vivacity and shrewd observation and humorous description, a close second to Mark Twain's 'Innocents abroad.'" N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 12 '18 520w

"Boysishly light-hearted but rather crude narrative."

+ Cleveland p138 D '17 70w

N Y Evening Post pl O 13 '17 1800w

"Most of the traveling was done third class or steerage, a fact that affords interesting reading because so few American travelers choose to go in this fashion."

+ N Y Times 22:574 D 23 '17 300w

St Louis 15:430 D '17 10w

FLETCHER, CHARLES BRUNSDON. New Pacific; British policy and German aims; with a preface by Viscount Bryce, and a foreword by the Right Hon. W. M. Hughes. *$3 Macmillan 325.3

"The new Pacific" is an Australian's review of British and German dealings in the Pacific ocean, a lucid exposure of German methods and German designs, a statement of Pacific problems present and future, and an account of some representative Britons who have shaped history in those southern seas. The author, Mr Brunsdon Fletcher, is a leading journalist in Australia, associate editor of the Sydney Morning Herald.—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"In this volume, to which Lord Bryce and the Prime minister of Australia have contributed some introductory pages, the author gives a clear and interesting exposition of German policy and aims in the Pacific, and of the long-growing misgivings on the part of Australians respecting the aggressive tendencies of their German neighbours."

+ Ath p247 My '17 80w

Cleveland p99 JI '17 70w

"His indictment of German aims amounts to very little. . . . None the less, the book deserves the attention of American students of the whole political situation. The United States has large interests in the Pacific."

+ Nation 105:42 JI 12 '17 750w

N Y Br Lib News 4:109 JI '17

"We advise every one who wants to understand what Australia looks for in the terms of peace to read this book."

+ Spec 118:590 My 26 '17 1300w

"Mr Brunsdon Fletcher has had access to first-hand information, written and oral, from the best sources; he has presented and arranged his facts with practised skill, grouping them round well-known characters; and the result is a book of singular interest and substantial value. . . . If 'The new Pacific' had no other recommendation, it would be valuable as illustrating very forcibly and with much picturesqueness the great and much underrated influence which missionaries have had upon the onward movement of the British empire."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p147 Mr 29 '17 2100w

FLOURNOY, THEODORE. Philosophy of William James; auth. tr. by Edwin B. Holt and W. James, jr. il *$1.30 (3c) Holt 191

17-6629

The author of this interpretation of William James's philosophy is a professor in the faculty of sciences at the University of Geneva. The book itself is based on lectures which, delivered in 1910, were intended, in a way, as a memorial. In his first chapter the author makes some interesting observations on the importance of James's artistic temperament. "He was a born psychologist and a psychologist of genius precisely because of this artistic insight, which in him, by a rare exception, was combined with the exact scientific spirit." The chapters that follow take up in turn: Early environment; Rejection of monism; Pragmatism; Radical empiricism; Pluralism; Tychism; Meliorism and moralism; Theism; The will to believe; Summary and conclusion. A review of "The varieties of religious experience," from the Revue Philosophique, is reprinted in an appendix.

+ A L A Bkl 13:373 Je '17

"This study of the philosophy of James is admitted by many to be the best that has been written upon the philosopher and is now translated into English by two men who personally and professionally are especially well fitted to be just both to James and to Professor Flournoy. . . . It reminds us of the work of James himself in its very readable character."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 28 '17 350w

"It is clearly and simply written and furnishes an admirable introduction to the study of William James—quite the best that we have seen.

And it is, moreover, a book that will be read with equal pleasure and profit by those already familiar with his work."

+ Nation 104:462 Ap 19 '17 1000w

"Written in so simple a style that even those unversed in philosophical technology need not feel doubtful concerning it."

+ N Y Times 22:141 Ap 15 '17 270w

St Louis 15:135 My '17 14w

+ Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 19 '17 290w

* + The Times [London] Lit Sup p376 Ag 9 '17 1750w

FLOWERS, MONTAVILLE. Japanese conquest of American opinion. *$1.50 (2c) Doran 325.7 17-3170

The author believes that the Japanese are carrying on a systematic campaign to win over American public opinion. The objects to be gained are: "The removal of restrictions on immigration; the rights of naturalisation, American citizenship, and of intermarriage with the white race; the overthrow of all anti-Asiatic land legislation in western states; the rapid acquisition of those lands; and all that follows." The book is issued as a warning to America and as an offset to the writings of Sidney Gulick, H. A. Millis and others, deemed by the author vicious. The book consists of three parts: The Japanese problem; Forces and methods of the Japanese conquest; Bases of opinion, old and new.

"Will be useful in debate work."

Cleveland p53 Ap '17 30w

"The temper of Mr Flowers is not altogether admirable. He is sometimes narrow and often vituperative; but he is, as we have noted, sincere and his contribution to the discussion of the 'Japanese problem' is worthy the careful attention of those who differ most widely from him."

N Y Times 22:36 F 4 '17 650w

"His discussion is valuable solely as a presentation of an extreme point of view held by a number which, it may be supposed, increases geometrically as the Pacific coast draws nearer."

Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 8 '17 130w

"We have heard much of Mr Flowers and his diatribes against the Japanese and his dreadful arraignment of such men as Sidney L. Gulick, Hamilton Holt, the late H. W. Mabie, the present reviewer and others. . . . The pith of Mr Flowers' argument is in an outcry against amalgamation. His peculiar ideas as to philosophy, history and ethnology are largely his own. . . . He should have furnished an index for students of his closely printed and rather bulky work, so rich in fallacies." W. E. Griffiths

— Survey 37:690 Mr 17 '17 200w

FOERSTER, NORMAN, and PIERSON, WILLIAM WHATLEY, eds. American ideals. *$1.25 Houghton 815 17-25284

Under the heads of Liberty and union, State and nation, American democracy, American foreign policy, and Foreign opinion of the United States, are brought together certain essays, addresses and state papers that express ideals of statesmen and of men of letters from Thomas Jefferson to Woodrow Wilson, from Alexis de Tocqueville to Alfred J. Balthour. The authors refer to the collection as "expressions of our national and international conscience" on ideals, policies and political tendencies of our country.

A L A Bkl 14:121 Ja '18

"Ushered in by Mr Woodbury's splendid sonnet, 'Our first century,' these selections challenge as well as inspire."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 17 '17 270w

"The purpose of the volume is evident and praiseworthy. It might well be adopted as a school reader. But for the public at large, outside the schools, it is valuable, for it brings together the finest utterances on a theme of vital importance, many of them not easily accessible." J. B. Landfield

+ Educ R 55:75 Ja '18 600w

"The selections are judiciously made and we believe that the book should prove useful in the inculcation of a thoughtful and intelligent patriotism among the rising generation."

+ Ind 92:193 O 27 '17 70w

R of Rs 56:549 N '17 60w

FOGARTY, KATE HAMMOND. Story of Montana. il *$1 (1½c) Barnes 978.6 16-16737

This story of Montana was written "to meet the demand for a suitable textbook for schools, and also for the many lovers of Montana who wish to become familiar with the main facts of its early as well as present-day history without having to consult many separate volumes." (Preface) The book is made up of ten chapters: Early explorers in Montana; The Indians; The fur trade; Visitors to the posts; The missionaries to the Indians; The first settlers; The soldiers in Montana; Development of the state; Transformation of the Indians; National problems in Montana. The national problems treated in this last chapter are Irrigation, Dry-land farming and Forestry.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 31 '17 110w

"Intended as a text-book for the public schools, 'The story of Montana' also makes its appeal to the adult reader."

+ R of Rs 54:683 D '16 50w

FOOTE, JOHN TAINTOR. Dumb-Bell of Brookfield. il *$1.35 Appleton 17-6535

"One need not be an enthusiast about hunting dogs or dogs in general to appreciate and thoroughly enjoy half a dozen stories, all related, that are grouped in this volume. Dumb-Bell appears first as a runt of a puppy, the son of the late champion setter, but so insignificant as to be 'a stone despised by the builders, that is made the head of the corner.' His anonymous triumph puts him instantly on the throne of his father, as told in the first story. Later chapters have to do partly with his own career and partly with his owners and other people and dogs at Brookfield."—Spring'd Republican

"Full of pathos and humor, they show a complete understanding of dogs without making them in the least human. Good for reading aloud."

+ A L A Bkl 13:315 Ap '17

+ N Y Times 22:136 Ap 15 '17 200w

+ Spring'd Republican p17 Ap 29 '17 150w

"Somewhat out of the ordinary. Appeared in American Magazine."

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:158 My '17 20w

FOOTE, MRS MARY (HALLOCK). Edith Bonham. *$1.50 (2c) Houghton 17-8582

The friendship between two women is the foundation of this story. One of them marries and goes out into the unknown West. (The time of the story is fully a generation ago.) Here the other, Edith Bonham, follows her some years later, intending to make her home there and to help in caring for her friend's children. She arrives just in time to learn of Anne's death. For the sake of the children, she remains, resolved to make up as best she can for their loss. She at first wholly misunderstands her friend's husband, a quiet man of deep feeling and few words. But in time a sympathetic understanding breaks down the barriers and they are drawn together.

"Distinctly a woman's book, one of the few which interpret the best American types."

+ A L A Bkl 13:402 Je '17

"The reader may find himself (if not herself) in a rather impatient mood before all the misapprehensions and mystifications of a fairly simple situation are permitted to be cleared up. Mrs Foote's style, as always, with its quiet clarity, offers grateful refreshment to ears which may be a trifle weary of the din and 'punch' of the current literary mode." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:648 Ag '17 350w

"Will probably be considered her most appealing novel. Mrs Foote writes with the method of the great novelists of an earlier generation. There is nothing of sketchiness in her literary product. Her characters are limned with delightful attention to details." H. S. K.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 21 '17 550w

"A detailed leisurely story with a few excellent characterizations but with what seems to be a wilful and superfluous piling up of barriers between the two chief characters."

+ Cleveland p63 My '17 50w

"Mrs Foote is one of our veteran novelists and she knows her business. I ask, however, with due respect whether the book should not end on page 321, whether the postscript is not superfluous." J. Macy

+ Dial 63:113 Ag 16 '17 100w

"So much for the crude substance of the book: its merit lies elsewhere, in the quiet and sure rendering of that substance by a delicate womanly hand."

+ Natlon 105:40 Jl 12 '17 500w

"The story has the human appeal and sure touch in dealing with life found always in Mrs Foote's work."

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:158 My '17 50w

FOR France; ed. by C. Hanson Towne. il *$2.50 Doubleday 940.91 17-29466

Tributes to France in story, poem and song, from the hearts of a notable group of America's authors, painters, musicians, sculptors and actors. The offerings are all short, with a note of deep loyalty and affection for the people who from '76-'83 sent us their money and their men under the leadership of their Lafayette and Rochambeau. The chapters, full of sympathy, and of the sense of debt we owe, have a heartening message for the heroic, dry-eyed patriots who have been shaken to the depths with sorrow; while for Americans they serve as a new spur to fight the harder for justice, humanity, liberty, democracy.

Reviewed by Albert Schinz

+ Bookm 46:292 N '17 150w

"While there is much repetition of sentiment in it, and while some of the writers are so emotional and temperamentally strung that they are unable to give vision to their words, there are, nevertheless, a number of notable and significant contributions. Such, for example, is Mr Owen Wister's address in French. But from the standpoint of literary permanence the volume is sorely lacking."

+ Ind 92:561 D 22 '17 140w

"It is amazing simply as a collection of names, if nothing more. The volume strikes a lofty note as a work of art—art with a purpose, certainly. A peculiarly rich and beautiful tribute to France."

+ N Y Times 22:476 N 13 '17 850w

"It appears to us that the theme has appealed to the writers and artists and that there is little or nothing in the volume that is not inspired by very genuine feeling."

+ Outlook 117:521 N 28 '17 90w

+ Spring'd Republican p8 N 23 '17 410w

FOR the right; essays and addresses by members of the "Fight for right movement." *$1.50 Putnam (*5s T. Fisher Unwin, London) 940.91 (Eng ed 17-3133)

"A series of addresses, which were delivered at King's college, London, to explain the principles for which the Allies are fighting and to show how they may be established in the life of nations when the peace settlement has been made. The aim of the Fight for right movement is to keep these ideals before the nation, and prevent it from being diverted by 'minor questions of trade and territory and retaliation.' The authors of the papers included in the present volume are Lord Bryce, Sir Henry Newbolt, Mr Maurice Hewlett, Mr Wilfrid Ward, Dr Robert Bridges, Dr L. P. Jacks, Prof. Gilbert Murray, Prof. Ramsay Muir, Sir Frederick Pollock, Mr Philip Kerr, Mr A. F. Whyte, Mr H. Wickham Steed, the Rev. W. Temple, Evelyn Underhill, Mr Arthur Eoutwood, and M.

FOR the right—Continued
Painlevé." (Ath) There is a three-page bibliography for Mr A. F. Whyte's lecture, "The outlook of a good European."

Ath p584 D '16 130w

"We, too, have learned, ever since the second of April last, how much harder is the task, how much greater is the sacrifice we have undertaken than we at first supposed. So it comes about that the words of this book, which were meant for England, seem made for us."

+ Nation 105:228 Ag 30 '17 380w

"'For the right' would make uncomfortable reading for the German Chancellor; it would cause him to search his conscience. Our publicists, now busy with the stale and futile 'barbarian' whipper-up of public feeling, might learn from this even-tempered volume how to put democratic driving-force behind the complex realities of a liberal peace."

+ New Repub 10:303 Ap 7 '17 400w

Pittsburgh 22:681 O '17 130w

FORBES, JOHN MAXWELL. Doubloons—and the girl. il *$1.25 (1½c) Sully & Kleinteich 17-10668

A tale of treasure hunting. The discovery of an old Spanish pirate's chart has the usual effect on the imagination of the finders. No one who has a pirate's chart in his possession can rest easy until he is aboard ship and on his way after the treasure. In this case the search party consists of two old men, one of them the captain, two young men, and one girl, the captain's daughter. The mate, a one-eyed seaman who has discovered the purpose of the expedition, is the villain who all but destroys the success of the expedition. The island on which the treasure is buried is volcanic, and eruptions and earthquakes are added to mutiny to give color to the tale.

Boston Transcript p6 My 2 '17 200w

"The tale is related with some spirit, and is not unentertaining."

+ N Y Times 22:138 Ap 15 '17 200w

"A lively, though conventional tale."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 My 20 '17 200w

FORBES, NEVILL. Russian grammar, 2d ed rev and enl *$2 Oxford 491.7 17-13555

"Dr Forbes's 'Russian grammar' is timely. . . . Dr Forbes seems to have made a point of omitting those rules which, although accepted in standard grammars, are nevertheless subject to numerous exceptions. Russian grammar can safely undergo this process of simplification to a considerable extent. . . . Perhaps the greatest difficulty presented by the Russian language lies in the aspects of the verb. . . . The author's treatment of this part of the subject is particularly thorough."—Ath

"The book is intended for the use of students working with a teacher or those who, working alone, wish to learn to read. It seems to us admirably suited for its purpose. . . . We believe that those who have already an elementary knowledge of the subject will find the 'Grammar' excellent."

+ Ath 1915.1:161 F 20 480w

"The interest in Russia that has grown up during the present war has produced a large number of grammars and handbooks to the Russian language. The fullest and most scientific of these books is Mr Nevill Forbes's."

+ St Louis 15:140 My '17 40w (Reprinted from Modern Language Review)

FORBES, NEVILL, ed. Third Russian book. *$1 Oxford 491.7 (Eng ed 18-383)

A reader of selections, supplementing the language teaching of the "First Russian book" and the "Second Russian book." "Four notable men of letters are represented in Mr Forbes's 'Third Russian book': Aksakov, aristocrat, naturalist, sportsman, and author; Grigorovitch, painter, novelist, and art-critic; Herzen, philosopher, historian, reformer, and exile; and Saltykov, satirist. The text is clear, and plentifully provided with foot-notes." (Ath)

Ath p305 Je '17 40w

"The notes are good, though somewhat needlessly full on the simpler passages and scanty on those more difficult; the vocabulary is adequate and carefully prepared. The weak point of the volume is in the choice of material. . . . No one of the authors represented is of the very first rank, and of the five selections two are the opening chapters of novels. It is a model of neat, careful printing."

— + Nation 105:266 S 6 '17 150w

FORBES, WALDO EMERSON. Cycles of personal belief. *$1.25 (3c) Houghton 121 17-10884

The cycle of personal belief which the author traces comprises a process of illusion, disillusion, and disillusion. Disillusion cannot be permanent because of the soul's craving for positive elements. "Thought, phoenix-like, begins perpetually to create new beliefs, to build, to affirm, and to renew the world." But belief, after all, plays little practical part in our lives, for we discover that a perception of truth does not guarantee an obedience to truth. There is another cycle, growing out of experience, that follows the cycle of belief. The stages of this the author terms generation, degeneration and regeneration. But he does not imply that, even with regeneration, a permanent goal is reached: "Our moments of peace are given for the reception of new visions, and these, however gently the hint at first is given, are each and all inceptive to action. Human life embosomed in paradise at one pole plunges into turmoil at the other. The struggle is not over, the problems are not solved."

"Mr Waldo Emerson Forbes has succeeded in cultivating something of the style both of thought and of expression which one finds in the writings of the great essayist, his grandfather, whom his name brings to mind."

+ Nation 105:152 Ag 9 '17 230w

N Y Br Lib News 4:94 Je '17

Pratt p6 O '17 10w

+ St Louis 15:167 Je '17 10w

FORD, SEWELL. Wilt thou, Torchy. il *$1.35 (2c) Clode, E. J. 17-5451

Sewell Ford's clever stories, told in the latest up-to-the-minute vernacular, seem to lose none of their popularity and Torchy is a hero who rivals Shorty McCabe in public favor. This book contains seventeen new stories, reprinted from Every Week. Torchy relates his own adventures, telling of his progress upward in the Corrugated trust company, and of his mishaps and final success in courtship under the keen and not encouraging eye of "Auntie."

"Will be popular."

A L A Bkl 13:353 My '17

"Torchy is still the unique creation of Mr Ford's brain and it is to be hoped that the advancing years will not materially change him, it being taken for granted that more of his delightfully humorous tales will soon be forthcoming to give pleasure to young and old."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 28 '17 230w

+ N Y Times 22:80 Mr 4 '17 150w

Reviewed by E. P. Wyckoff

+ Pub W 91:968 Mr 17 '17 450w

FORDYCE, CLAUDE POWELL. Touring afoot. (Outing handbooks) il *80c (3c) Outing pub. 796 17-4213

A three mile walk daily in the interests of health is the author's advice, given in the first chapter. The man who has kept himself in trim thru this daily exercise will be ready for the longer trips discussed in the remainder of the book. The author writes of: Hitting the trail; Going in "light"; Woods walking with a pack; Map reading; Packs and packing; Footwear; Efficient cruising shelters; Camp making; The outdoor bed question; Choosing the light weight mess kit; The ration list; Health hints for hikers; Winter travel afoot.

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:218, 11 '17 50w

FORNARO, CARLO DE. Modern purgatory. $1.25 (4c) Kennerley 365 17-31926

"This book is a record of the prison experiences of Carlo de Fornaro, artist, writer, editor, revolutionary. It is a record of experiences in the famous Tombs prison, in New York city, and in the New York city penitentiary on Blackwell's Island." (Introd.) The offense against the laws of the state of New York on which the author was convicted was criminal libel against Diaz, then president of Mexico. If the reader does not see the relation between facts and consequences as set forth in the introduction, he must accept the situation as another evidence of the strange and wonderful ways of justice in our land. The book itself is a narrative of daily prison life told without bitterness and with only unspoken condemnation of a heartless and futile system.

"Mr Fornaro's is not what the Puritan calls a pleasant book. But it possesses the rare degree of truth that one finds more often in Russian than in American writing. His is the most vivid, concrete description of the mediaeval survival in the heart of our modern cities, and the most realistic illustration of the need for such reform as Mr Osborne has instituted that has yet appeared."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 15 '17 380w

"The book is interesting, but neither subtle nor detailed enough to rank as literature. He paints at all times with the artist's love of a picture, never with the scientist's love of accurate statement." W. D. Lane

+ — Survey 39:469 Ja 26 '18 450w

FORSTNER, GEORG GUNTHER, freiherr von. Journal of submarine commander von Forstner; tr. by Mrs Russell Codman. il $1 (5½c) Houghton 940.91 18-8

This translation of the journal of a German submarine commander appears in book form with an introduction by John Hays Hammond, jr., who writes of "The challenge to naval supremacy." In her foreword the translator says, "The following pages form an abridged translation of a book published in 1916 by freiherr von Forstner, commander of the first German U-boat. . . . Many repetitions and trivial incidents have been omitted in this translation; but, in order to express the personality of the author, the rendering has been as literal as possible, and it shows the strange mixture of sentimentality and ferocity peculiar to the psychology of the Germans." In part the work is a personal account, in part a technical description of the activities of a submarine. There are seven illustrations from photographs.

"Gives American readers a good opportunity to get the German conception of the deadly efficiency of their favorite sea weapon."

+ R of Rs 57:101 Ja '18 70w

FORSYTH, PETER TAYLOR. Justification of God. (Studies in theology) *90c (1c) Scribner 231 17-9816

"Lectures for war-time on a Christian theodicy" is the sub-title of this book, and the unfamiliar word is defined as "the attempt to adjust the ways of God to conscience." Contents: Overture and outline; The expectations of popular religion and their fate; The problems: revelation and teleology; Metaphysic and redemption; What is redemption? Salvation theological but not systematic; The failure of the church as an international authority; Teleology acute in a theodicy; Philosophical theodicy; The eternal cruciality of the cross for destiny; Saving judgment; History and judgment; The conquest of time by eternity; Bibliography.

"It is a pity the book could not have been written in simpler style. To understand it will be far beyond the average layman, and parts of it will puzzle the theologian. Taken as a whole, however, the purpose of the author is clear and his reasoning conclusive."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 S 12 '17 180w

N Y Times 22:500 N 25 '17 50w

FORTESCUE, GRANVILLE ROLAND. France bears the burden. il $1.25 (3c) Macmillan 940.91 17-30748

This book devoted to France and her part in the war consists of chapters on: The glory of France; Monsieur Poilu of Paris; Verdun, the battle epic; In the Argonne; In the stream of the Somme fighting; The business of war; The flying fighters; Thoughts on shrapnel and tanks; Who pays for the war? The burden France has borne. In a letter, reprinted as a foreword, M. André Tardieu says to the author: "That which, in my opinion, gives special value to your book on France in war time, is that you have not been content only to gather therein the excellent articles sent by you from Paris and the front to the Washington Post, but you also, from your observations and experiences, develop a picture of the whole subject. Yours is the work of the historian." Major Fortescue is author of "At the front with three armies," and other works.

"Full appreciation of France is revealed on every page of Mr Fortescue's book. One might almost complain that his praise of France and her brave men implies a discrimination against the British and American troops."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Ja 2 '18 200w

"Much above the average level of the descriptive war books now appearing." Joshua Wanhope

+ N Y Call p14 D 29 '17 320w

+ Outlook 118:32 Ja 2 '18 50w

FOSDICK, HARRY EMERSON. Challenge of the present crisis. *50c (3c) Assn. press 172.4 17-28192

A message for all who are asking these questions: In what mood shall a Christian, or for that matter an idealist of any kind, face the catastrophe? With what considerations and insights can he support his faith and hope? How can he harmonize his ideals with his necessities of action in a time of war? His answer gives reasons for accepting the present crisis as a challenge and concludes with: "The present war is an appalling commentary upon our failure to fulfil or even to acknowledge our obligations. We have seen our duty in too little terms; we have but dimly understood what the Master wanted of us. We are challenged to understand it now; the call is written in lines of fire on the map of the world; and we shall be renegade, indeed, if we do not now accept before it is too late the opportunity for international service which this war reveals."

"A sane and thoughtful consideration of the relations of war and Christianity."

+ A L A Bkl 14:74 D '17

FOSTER, MAXIMILIAN. Shoestrings. il $1.40 Appleton 17-6533

"It is concerned primarily with the ambitions and the adventures of J. Lester Tams, who began his career as a bundle boy in a San Francisco department store and after many years of struggle had achieved eminence as a floorwalker. . . . Mr Tams's purpose in life was to become a gentleman. To that end he toiled, to that end he studied—books of etiquette were the subjects of his mental effort, and to that end he had in sixteen years succeeded in saving the sum of $1,700. Then came a lucky plunge—a splashing bucket shop plunge, it was—in war stocks; and Mr Tams and every one else in Mrs Tams's boarding house got rich."—N Y Times

"Full of funny character sketches, and good for reading aloud. Appeared in the Saturday Evening Post."

+ A L A Bkl 13:315 Ap '17

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 1 '17 120w

"Emphatically a tale to amuse an idle hour. And a most amusing tale it is."

+ N Y Times 22:155 Ap 15 '17 200w

FOSTER, ROBERT FREDERICK. Foster's pirate bridge; the latest development of auction bridge, with the full code of the official laws, il *$1.50 (3½c) Dutton 795 17-4824

The aim of this book is "to set before the reader a complete description and exposition of the latest candidate for public favor in the realm of cards, without assuming on the reader's part any previous knowledge of similar games, although it is naturally expected that the largest appeal will be to those who are already familiar with auction bridge. The author has endeavored to explain the logic of the bidding as clearly as possible, illustrating the more interesting situations by hands from actual play." (Preface) The author is an authority who has issued a number of other works on bridge.

"The first book to describe this latest development of auction bridge."

A L A Bkl 13:339 My '17

"In addition to a clear setting-forth of this new development in auction and its laws, Mr Foster has included in 'Pirate bridge' many chapters of great use to all auction players, his skill at play and his ability to teach being equally well-established in the card-loving world."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 16 '17 390w

N Y Br Lib News 4:75 My '17

R of Rs 56:332 S '17 60w

St Louis 15:150 My '17 14w

Springf'd Republican p6 J1 31 '17 120w

"Written with all the skill and thoroughness and lucidity of style which we should expect from one of the 'old masters.' . . . Mr Foster, in his chapters on tactics, proves, we think, that the game contains some interesting new opportunities for cleverness alike in the declarations, the acceptances, and the play of the hand; but at the same time we also think that, in proportion to their offering themselves to the clever player only, they spoil the game, and make it distinctly inferior to auction for nine people out of ten."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p504 O 18 '17 1650w

FOSTER, ROBERT FREDERICK, ed. Hoyle up-to-date; the official rules of card games. *$1 (1c) Sully & Kleinteich 795 A17-393

This work was first copyrighted in 1897 and it has run thru many editions. The whist rules are by Walter H. Barney; the poker rules by David A. Curtis.

"Formerly published in paper binding at 25c, by the United States playing card company. While the paper is poor and the type small, it is useful as containing the official rules of all card games, revised to date."

A L A Bkl 13:363 My '17

N Y Br Lib News 4:75 My '17

St Louis 15:181 Je '17 10w

"While the new edition in the main is singularly complete, one fails to note in the discussion of stud poker the generally accepted rule that four-flush beats a pair, although otherwise the poker section presents an admirable survey of the American game."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 15 '17 60w

FOSTER, WILLIAM TRUFANT. Argumentation and debating. rev ed *$1.40 Houghton 808.5 17-23795

A revised edition whose changes have been based upon suggestions from more than a hundred college teachers who have used the book as a textbook. "The aim of the revised edition is to present the essentials of argumentation and debating as simply as possible, following the order in which the difficulties arise in actual practice. The order is psychological rather than logical. The point of view is that of the student rather than that of the instructor." (Preface)

A L A Bkl 14:66 N '17

"Fresh and timely illustrations bring the book down to date. Moreover, the Houghton Mifflin Co. has produced a book well-nigh mechanically perfect in form and appearance."

E. F. Guyer and R. L. Lyman
+ School R 25:611 O '17 50w

FOSTER, WILLIAM TRUFANT. Should students study? *50c (3c) Harper 378 17-9712

The president of Reed college questions the time-old assertion that it is the "college life" that counts. Is there any relation between a high grade of scholarship in college and success in after-life? He brings forward some interesting statistics that bear on the question. Contents: College life; Differences—east and west; College life and college studies; Promise and performance; Success in studies and in life; Genius as a substitute for study; Thinking by proxy; Should specialists specialize? Ultimately practical studies.

+ A L A Bkl 13:376 Je '17

"It would be interesting to hear what so skillful a pleader as Mr Foster might say on the subject of adapting colleges more closely than now to the manifold needs of the time. But it would be unfair to imply that this book is not a stimulating one. It carries its points with force, and it is written in a style that is pungent and at times brilliant."

+ Dial 63:69 J1 19 '17 280w

"A telling little review, excellent to put in the hands of careless freshmen and indifferent parents."

+ Ind 90:518 Je 16 '17 40w

St Louis 15:140 My '17 9w

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 24 '17 500w

FOWLER, HENRY THATCHER. Origin and growth of the Hebrew religion. (Handbooks of ethics and religion) *$1 Univ. of Chicago press 296 16-25219

"A book written for the general student. The author says: 'The present volume is designed to offer a guide for study rather than simply a new essay or treatise upon the history of Israel's religion.' The principal source book for this field of investigation is the Old Testament. He gives a very brief chronological outline of Hebrew history; and a similar outline of the Hebrew literature from the beginnings before 1040 B. C.' to the Mishnah, about 200 A. D. Preceding the text of each chapter are given the references to the biblical materials, and at the close of each chapter are given the names of books for supplementary reading."—Boston Transcript

"The main themes of the book are allowed to stand out clearly so that they can be grasped without difficulty, and the summary at the close gathers up the results of the previous studies succinctly and forcibly. A definite impression is thus left upon the reader's mind, and this is most desirable. This impression will enable him to proceed farther into biblical studies with a correct sense of direction." Kemper Fullerton
+ Am J Theol 21:610 O '17 680w

"The present writer belongs to the progressive group, and has a vital sympathy for religious ideals and struggles of the true prophets of the Hebrews. . . . For a clear and concise exposition and guide for the general student of Israel's religion this is one of the best works published."

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 28 '17 450w

"One of the best hand books on the subject for college classes or other groups of advanced Bible students. It is especially to be commended for its readability and clear presentation of the various stages thru which the Old Testament religion advanced to its final expression in Judaism."

+ Ind 90:517 Je 16 '17 60w

"His discrimination between the higher and lower sides of Old Testament ideas enables him to express distinctly his sympathy with the better thought of the prophets and psalmists, and so to guide the student into an intelligent view of the development of the Israelitish conscience."

+ Nation 105:725 D 27 '17 130w

"While Prof. Fowler applies the results of higher criticism and research he does it so wisely and unobtrusively that the story is enriched, instead of erased."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 9 '17 270w

FOWLER, NATHANIEL CLARK, jr. Grasping opportunity. *75c (2c) Sully & Kleinteich 174 17-10888

"Mr Fowler has had considerable experience in training young people for positions in the business world, and in the course of his experience has analyzed the major reasons for success or failure. These he gives in his book, which is largely written in conversational form."—Springf'd Republican

"Of value to inexperienced young people."

+ Cleveland p76 Je '17 50w

"Admirable, straight-from-the-shoulder advice to young people who are, or are about to be associated with the business world."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 J1 8 '17 150w

FOWLER, WILLIAM WARDE. Essays in brief for war-time. *90c Longmans 824 (Eng ed 17-13920)

"Papers, 'nearly all written during the early stress of the battle at Verdun,' dealing with topics as diverse as 'Birds at the front in France,' 'An old-fashioned recreation,' 'Civis Germanus sum,' and 'Two ideal schoolmasters.'"—Ath

+ Ath p43 Ja '17 80w

+ Pratt p37 O '17 26w

"They are just what one wants for an odd half-hour. The first essay recalls old Fuller's 'Good thoughts in bad times,' which he wrote to soothe his troubled spirit during the civil war; it ought to be reprinted now."

+ Spec 117:589 N 11 '16 170w

"The essayist, with his mellow wisdom and kindly humor, is a master of his art."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p475 O 5 '16 1050w

FOX, EDWARD LYELL. New Gethsemane. 11 *60c (9c) McBride 17-25121

This is the story of Anhalt, the cobbler of Oberammergau and the Christus of the Passion play, who, believing it wrong to kill, refused to answer the call to the colors, and was shot. The episode is pure fiction. The story was first published in 1916 in the Woman's World.

"An excellent little story for Christians who happen to be pacifists. It is fiction, of course, but exceedingly well used to point a moral and adorn a tale." Joshua Wanhope

+ N Y Call p14 O 28 '17 320w

"It is regrettable that the author should deal so largely with Anhalt's conduct, with the obvious action rather than with the complexities of Anhalt's dreadful struggle with himself. It is a simple tale, told with the simplicity due rather to omission than to careful pruning."

N Y Times 22:414 O 21 '17 110w

FOX, EDWARD LYELL. Wilhelm Hohenzollern & co. 11 *$1.50 (2½c) McBride 940.91 17-15168

Mr Fox is an American newspaper correspondent and author of "Behind the scenes in warring Germany." He has made three trips to Germany during the war and seems to have been afforded opportunity for gathering a good deal of information. He gives a gossipy account of the Kaiser, the Crown prince, and the men who surround them, followed by a chapter entitled "Inside the iron ring," which deals with the supply of food and of materials needed in war industries, and a final chapter entitled "Why we are fighting Germany." The chapter on "The Kaiser and the Big Three," (Beth-mann-Hollweg, Hindenburg, and Ludendorff) is of special interest at present.

"His book gains value more from the fact that his opportunity was unique than that his writing is good. It is not good; it is sensational, imaginative (to speak mildly), but amazingly interesting. . . . In spite of his flights of fancy, his judgment of people is fairly correct. Much of what he says is a repetition of previous surmises and rumors and commonplace observations, but his outlook is in the main fresh and original."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Je 30 '17 520w

"Character sketches, somewhat in Sunday supplement style. The author's estimate of the Kaiser will seem to many to err on the side of leniency."

+ — Cleveland p101 S '17 50w

"All the way he is, or tries to be, the cool, calm, impartial investigator. And he is rewarded for this admirable attitude by having produced an admirable book." J. W.

+ N Y Call p15 Ag 19 '17 500w

Pittsburgh 22:672 O '17 50w

FOX, JOHN (WILLIAM). In Happy Valley 11 *$1.35 (5c) Scribner 17-25585

Ten short stories of the Kentucky mountaineers, six of which appeared in Scribner's Magazine in 1911. Contents: The courtship of Allaphair; The compact of Christopher; The Lord's own level; The Marquise of Queensberry; His last Christmas gift; The angel from Viper; The pope of the Big Sandy; The goddess of Happy Valley; The battle-prayer of Parson Small; The Christmas tree on Pigeon.

A L A Bkl 14:95 D '17

"These are good stories and affecting stories, with the advantage of a quaint setting and atmosphere; they are, I suppose, less true to 'life' than to that wistful dream of life which is called sentiment." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:341 N '17 120w

"In these stories we have Mr Fox at his best." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 21 '17 510w

"The best story in the collection is 'His last Christmas gift,' a grim little masterpiece softened by a touch that almost brings tears. The other tales lack somewhat in compactness and unity, but there is enough interesting material, warmly and humanly presented, to make them all very good reading."

+ — Cath World 106:694 F '18 100w

"The inspiration that he seemed to draw from those earlier days at the Gap, when the mountains were really what one imagines the mountains to be, is somewhat dimmed. But the point is that he sees below the surface into the real lives of his people, and that he enriches mere incident with the warmth that comes from an appreciation of the values from which it springs."

+ — Dial 63:464 N 8 '17 280w

"Mr Fox knows how to capture the sometimes primitive instinct and passions of the hard-working, impoverished lives of the people of Happy Valley. Mr Fox has made these people lovable in this happy addition to his work."

+ New Repub 13:556 N 10 '17 110w

+ N Y Times 22:366 S 30 '17 400w

"It is his first book for some years and, altho collected from the magazines, a re-reading is merely like greeting old friends, not like being bored by tiresome acquaintances. You get much the same pleasure out of re-reading the story of the fight between Ham Cage and King Camp, refereed by the little school teacher according to what she could remember of the Marquis of Queensbury's rules, that you do from re-reading a favorite bit of Thackeray." E. P. Wyckoff

+ Pub W 92:1376 O 20 '17 330w

"But whatever its tone, each story graphically pictures some phase of life, habit or scene in this well-nigh alien colony in the backwater of American life."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 D 9 '17 220w

FRANCE, ANATOLE, pseud. (JACQUES ANATOLE THIBAUT). Human tragedy; a tr. by Alfred Allinson. il *$3 (1½c) Lane 17-29339

A holiday edition of the translation of a story contained in the series "Le puits de Sainte-Claire." The translation was previously published in Chapman's English edition of the works of Anatole France, 1909. It is the story of Fra Giovanni, who, inspired by the example of St Francis, took the vows of poverty and lived "humble and despised, his soul a garden of flowers fenced about with walls." As did Adam of old he eats of the fruit of the knowledge of good and evil offered to him by the adversary. The evil spirit subtly appears in many guises, drawing his net tight about his victim until Giovanni cries out: "Thru you it is I suffer, and I love you. I love you because you are my misery and my pride, my joy and my sorrow, the splendour and the cruelty of things created, because you are desire and speculation, and because you have made me like unto yourself." The story becomes a parable of the universal human tragedy of thought.

"The illustrations are extremely original and well suited to M. France's deeply satirical imitation of a saint's chronicle. It is a delectable book."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 9 '18 400w

"Will probably be welcomed chiefly for the excellent English into which it has been rendered and for the interesting full-color illustrations by the Russian artist Michel Sevier, whose style suggests Bakst and the Moscow art theatre."

+ Dial 63:531 N 22 '17 190w

"Besides the involved picturesque, and highly poetic thought and expression of Mr France, we have the unusual colored illustrations of Sevier, which are also mystical. They add much to the book's attractiveness."

+ Lit D 55:42 D 8 '17 160w

N Y Br Lib News 4:74 My '17

"This well-translated fanciful tale, superbly illustrated, shows Anatole France in a characteristic mood."

+ Outlook 117:510 N 28 '17 10w

"The volume may appeal to people of artistic temperament; both text and paintings are bizarre."

+ Springfd Republican p15 D 1 '17 110w

FRANCK, HARRY ALVERSON. Vagabonding down the Andes. il *$4 (1½c) Century 918 17-25152

The author of "A vagabond journey around the world," etc., spent four years traveling in Mexico, Central and South America. A considerable portion of this journey was made on foot. The present book deals with the author's tramp down the ridge of the Andes to Buenos Aires. He tells us that his purpose "was primarily to study the ways of the common people," that too many of the books on Latin America have whitewashed everything and that he is interested "only in giving as faithful a picture as possible." He warns us that he has "taken for granted in the reader a certain basic knowledge of South America," and also that "this is no tale of adventures." The numerous illustrations are from photographs by the author and there is a map showing the route.

"Not so gay as his former books, but contains an immense amount of useful information."

+ A L A Bkl 14:92 D '17

"Although the author refers to his journey as vagabonding and to himself as a vagabond, his book reveals him as a keen-eyed, observant traveller with a fund of dry Yankee humour and common sense. The volume therefore is not only a rare record of endurance and adventure in out-of-the-way places, but in addition is a valuable contribution to our knowledge of the Andes and the Andeans." A. M. Chase

+ Bookm 46:334 N '17 450w

"Not a tale of adventure but unwhitewashed pictures of the fantastic everyday life of Latin Americans."

+ Cleveland p138 D '17 70w

+ Lit D 55:42 D 8 '17 190w

"Franck's books justify the day-to-day diary form; he is a master of detail, of local vignettes, of discriminate minutiae. The photographs taken by this literary vagabond are excellent and appropriate to the text. The omission of an index is quite inexcusable, and reduces the value of the book to that derived from a mere casual reading."

+ Nation 106:20 Ja 3 '18 290w

"The book makes a fine antidote to the top-hat, frock-coat style of grandiloquence about South America, favored by chambers of commerce and explorers who keep within a five minutes' radius of the best hotels in Buenos Aires, Valparaiso and Rio de Janeiro."

+ New Repub 13:sup18 N 17 '17 220w

"There are two particulars in which the volume might easily be improved; one is the addition of an index, the other is the omission of the illustrations, or most of them. They add little except bulk. Those who delight in real adventure will find it here in plenty. Those who want social information of a kind studiously omitted from most volumes will find much of it scattered through more than 600 pages." F. M.

+ N Y Call p15 D 2 '17 550w

"Mr Franck has written a book of immense value. The reader soon comes to trust his report of conditions, so far as he saw them. His reports of chance conversations alone are worth reading the book for."

+ N Y Sun p6 O 6 '17 1350w

"A brilliant, colorful, enthralling story of adventure this volume is beyond doubt the most entertaining work on South America that has yet appeared in the English language—or in any other, for that matter."

+ N Y Times 22:460 N 11 '17 1850w

"He tells, as charitably as possible, how he found the Latin American, and if in the telling many praiseworthy things are overshadowed by the less laudable, his impressions at least have the virtue of frankness."

+ Pittsburgh 22:759 N '17 100w

"The present reviewer would not have missed this book for a whole week's salary and he's going to turn right around and read it again." Robert Lynd

+ Pub W 92:810 S 15 '17 500w

+ R of Rs 56:551 N '17 150w

"A most entertaining book, full of color, adventure and incident." P. B.

+ St Louis 15:431 D '17 20w

"He has made a book full of interest, one filled with vivid pictures of life and scenery for which we are indebted to both his pen and his camera. Text and picture supplement each other admirably."

+ Springfd Republican p17 D 8 '17 1450w

FRANK, WALDO DAVID. Unwelcome man. *$1.50 (1½c) Little 17-2340

He was an unwelcome child. Born the fifth son in a family of eight, he was wanted by nobody. His father openly disliked him. His brothers and sisters never made a place for him. His mother, though she loved him with a fierce maternal tenderness that tried to atone for her lack of joy at his birth, never understood him. He was a sensitive child, always conscious of his anomalous position in the family life. The story is a study of his childhood and youth. In college as in his home, he is out of place. He leaves before the end of his senior year to go into business, where he loses himself in the stream of mediocrity.

"The style of 'The unwelcome man', like its philosophy, is a thing to be consciously accepted or summated if one is to read the book at all. It is pretentious, formal, often inflated, sometimes trivial. . . . The book with all its realism of scene and episode is less a story than a parable; and it is a parable based upon despair." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:205 Ap '17 470w

"The story naturally is not a happy one. Indeed, its situation of selfish introspection comes perilously near being wearisome if not actually depressing at times. But technically, as an analysis of character, it is distinctly admirable." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ja 13 '17 550w

"The vitality of Mr Frank's conception is shown by the fact that it provides a concrete touchstone for most of the problems of our contemporary civilization. . . . Is it a successful work of art? Rather an extremely interesting than a successful one." Van Wyck Brooks

+ Dial 62:244 Mr 22 '17 1000w

"Philosophizing pessimism."

Nation 104:269 Mr 8 '17 450w

N Y Br Lib News 4:24 F '17

"The book contains a good many ideas, is somewhat out of the ordinary, and has evidently been written for its own sake."

+ N Y Times 22:89 Mr 11 '17 410w

"An unusually able first novel by an author whom America should note carefully. American to the core, it challenges comparison with the work of such men as Theodore Dreiser and Ernest Poole. In fact, from its relentless realism, one easily guesses that Mr Frank is a close student of Dreiser—tho he has not copied that writer's sexual obsession." Robert Lynd

+ Pub W 91:204 Ja 20 '17 550w

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Mr 18 '17 330w

FRANKLIN, WILLIAM SUDDARDS, and MAC-NUTT, BARRY. General physics; an elementary treatise on natural philosophy, il *$2.75 McGraw 530 17-7555

"The subtitle of this book is the key to the contents. It is intentionally a somewhat dilute philosophical discussion of those natural phenomena whose study we commonly include under 'physics.' . . . The book runs the whole gamut of classical physics, covering mechanics, dynamics, hydraulics, heat, electricity, magnetism, light and sound. There is nothing particularly strange encountered, except in the discussion on thermodynamics, where great attention is paid to entropy." (Engin N) "Little space is given to the atomic theory. There are excellent bibliographies and an explanatory chapter on mathematics." (Ind)

"The authors endeavor to show that entropy is a measurable property of a substance and that the different values of such measured property, before and after a thermodynamic degeneration, measure the sweeping process. The authors' approach is very acceptable indeed to people who have a considerable knowledge of physics and an inherent and sustained interest in the science, but it will be an extremely difficult, if not an impossible, task to try to make young students absorb this line of reasoning."

+ Engin N 77:435 Mr 15 '17 350w

"An unusually good elementary textbook for colleges and technical schools. The authors have the power of clear, concise statement."

+ Ind 90:382 My 26 '17 50w

Pittsburgh 22:335 Ap '17 40w

FRANKS, THETTA (QUAY) (MRS ROBERT A. FRANKS). Household organization for war service. *$1 (8c) Putnam 640 17-14701

The author has written books on "Efficiency in the household," "The reward of thrift," etc. This small book offers a general discussion of the need for better household organization rather than specific suggestions or plans. A list of helpful books for the household is given at the close.

A L A Bki 14:45 N '17

"An excellent and timely little book."

+ Cleveland p87 Jl '17 50w

"American housewives are so used to advice introduced by genial assurances of their ignorance, stupidity and selfishness that the laying of most national defects on their kitchen door stones will not in the least affect their appreciation of these very practical and suggestive pages."

+ Ind 91:136 Jl 28 '17 60w

+ N Y Times 22:246 Jl 1 '17 380w

"Many of these suggestions are as sensible and helpful in peace times as in war."

+ R of Rs 56:214 Ag '17 30w

St Louis 15:331 S '17 20w

FRANKS, THETTA (QUAY) (MRS ROBERT A. FRANKS). Margin of happiness; the reward of thrift. il *$1.50 (3½c) Putnam 640 17-18488

"This book is the outcome of a series of informal talks which Mrs Franks gave before a large class of women in the Oranges, N. J., organized to study business methods of administering a household, intelligent and economic buying of food, its proper cooking, and the value to health of a balanced ration. [It aims] to set forth woman's work in the household as a profession which ought to be prepared for as zealously as a man prepares for the profession which is to be his lifework and its duties discharged with as much satisfaction in the ability to do so efficiently and successfully. . . . An appendix contains an account of the plan on which the classes mentioned above were carried on, an alphabetical 'grocery list' which gives concise information and advice as to each article, and a list of 'helpful books.'"—N Y Times

Am Econ R 7:902 D '17 60w

+ Ind 91:353 S 1 '17 80w

"It is, in effect, a complete manual or guide-book for students on household subjects and written in a style adapted to students of all ages. To be the ideal housewife here described will make necessary cooperation on the part of husbands, for it involves a separate bank-account and a real business partnership."

+ Lit D 55:53 D 1 '17 180w

"Mrs Franks writes with eloquence and with that knowledge of her theme that comes from much study, much thought, and much experience."

+ N Y Times 22:246 Jl 1 '17 350w

"Of great use to all housekeepers and to every one who believes in thrift and in conserving the food supply of the nation."

R of Rs '56:331 S '17 130w

"Similar in purpose to Frederick's 'The new housekeeping,' but less definite in its information and covering a little different field."

+ Wis Lib Bul 14:29 Ja '18 80w

FREEMAN, JOHN. Moderns; essays in literary criticism. *$1.75 Crowell 820.4 (Eng ed 17-26878)

Contents: George Bernard Shaw; H. G. Wells; Thomas Hardy; Maurice Maeterlinck; Henry James; Joseph Conrad; Coventry Patmore and Francis Thompson; Robert Bridges.

"Discerning and readable, the usefulness of the compact discussions of the authors' works is somewhat lessened because there is no index."

+ A L A Bki 14:86 D '17

"The author's survey is acute and well-balanced, showing a sound general knowledge of his material and a well-defined individual standard of taste. His own style inclines to the parenthetical, enlivened with many well-turned phrases."

Ath p43 Ja '17 80w

+ Ath p85 F '17 350w

Boston Transcript p7 Jl 25 '17 1150w

+ Dial 63:164 Ag 30 '17 300w

"In matters of form and style he is less acute than elsewhere—he speaks, for example, with undue contempt of Mr Shaw's prose as prose and with extravagant admiration of Mr Hardy's verse as verse; and he finds poetical felicities in Patmore and Robert Bridges which few will share with him. He is strong in his applications of common-sense and the emotions attendant upon it to the paradox, the bombast, and the sentimental flummery of our fashionable contemporaries. . . . Mr Freeman is at his best and happiest in his recognitions of spiritual values."

FREEMAN, JOHN—Continued

+ — Nation 105:296 S 13 '17 410w
 R of Rs 56:553 N '17 30w

FREEMAN, MRS MARY ELEANOR (WILKINS), and KINGSLEY, MRS FLORENCE (MORSE). Alabaster box. il *$1.50 Appleton 17-9343

"The people of Brookville, a characteristic little New England village, did not recognize how beautiful was the alabaster box when one came bearing it among them and wished to pour all its contents at their feet. . . . Miss Lydia Orr is an appealing heroine whose unusual character is realized in a strong and vital but delicate portraiture. All the years of her girlhood she has fed her inner self upon the dream of going back to Brookville with plenty of money wherewith to repay to the villagers in one way or another the money they had once lost through her father. And at last it becomes possible. But she finds his memory so hated and all the villagers still dwelling so angrily upon the wrong he had done them that she has difficulty in carrying out her scheme."—N Y Times

+ A L A Bkl 13:403 Je '17

"It is a pity that Mrs Freeman should lend her name and her left hand to work so shallow and perfunctory as this." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:93 S '17 330w

"Miss Wilkins needs to reestablish her reputation after this. 'An alabaster box' will satisfy only those who do not know her past work. Except for those bits in it that signify a familiar skill that lingers in the memory, it is unworthy of the name it bears on its title-page. Certainly Miss Wilkins should henceforth get along without a collaborator." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p12 Ap 7 '17 1200w

+ Dial 62:527 Je 11 '17 120w

"Two love stories add to the real interest we feel in very real fictional personalities. A healthy American story."

+ Ind 90:471 Je 9 '17 110w

"Mrs Freeman's delicate touch in the limning of character is often in evidence, especially in the portrayal of the heroine, but the general effect of the story is more suggestive of Mrs Kingsley's work than of Mrs Freeman's."

+ N Y Times 22:114 Ap 1 '17 420w

Reviewed by Frank O'Neil

+ Pub W 91:970 Mr 17 '17 520w

"The story is highly interesting, and the several characters are delightfully portrayed."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 22 '17 330w

"The moral is made palatable by the cleverly drawn village life and characters, and two stories of young love."

Wis Lib Bul 13:158 My '17 50w

FRESE, JOHN HENRY, comp. New pocket dictionary of the English and Russian languages; English-Russian. *$2 Dutton 491.7

"The dictionary is preceded by an introduction explaining the use of the prepositional prefixes and giving valuable lists of the nominal and adjectival suffixes; also by notes on the phonetic laws, the aspects and pronunciation, with a large-type picture of the alphabet."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"When a book represents a distinct advance over any previous work of similar character, it is not altogether pleasant to point out its weaker sides. This is emphatically true of 'A new pocket dictionary of the English and Russian languages.'"

+ — Nation 105:265 S 6 '17 370w

"Cheap, well-printed, and compendious."

+ Spec 117:269 S 2 '16 120w

"Admirable in every respect. The dictionary is very full, and no important words seem to have been omitted; moreover, all parts of verbs which are at all different from the infinitive and all parts of nouns which are different from the nominative singular are given, an innovation for which novices will be extremely grateful."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p329 JI 13 '16 280w

FRENCH, ALLEN. At Plattsburg. *$1.35 (2c) Scribner 17-13200

The daily life of a Plattsburg recruit is described in a series of letters. The preface states that the letters are based on personal experience and that the author's purpose in writing them was to give a "general picture of the fun and work at a training camp." But while based on fact the narrative is thrown into fiction form, with a bit of love interest added for good measure.

"Written with patriotic fervor and with a slight story and a vein of romance."

+ A L A Bkl 13:376 Je '17

"The writer's style is lively and entertaining."

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 19 '17 130w

"It is a play-time Plattsburg which Mr French has described so agreeably,—a Plattsburg already past,—a stepping-stone toward the universal American army, which in turn will do away with all such effervescences. That old Plattsburg was unique, and a unique success."

+ Dial 62:528 Je 14 '17 450w

+ Ind 90:473 Je 9 '17 100w

"It is what the 'rookie' does at Plattsburg, and perhaps even more, it is what Plattsburg does in the life and thought of the rookie, that gives the book not only its value but its charm. . . . But perhaps its chief value lies in the specific following of the Plattsburg program from the camp's assembly to its break up at the end of the famous hike. . . . A book which many Americans will want to read just now."

+ N Y Times 22:178 My 6 '17 730w

"Mr French puts into Private Godwin's letters enough of the philosophy of preparedness as it unfolds to Plattsburg students to make the book as valuable from such an angle as it is interesting as a story."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 10 '17 500w

FRENCH, ALLEN. Golden Eagle. il *$1.25 (3c) Century 17-24399

A book that will be popular with boys and girls who understand sail boats. The "Golden Eagle" is a trophy that goes to the winner of a boat race. Three young people, Howard Winslow, his sister Ruth, and Fred Barnes are tied for first place and a third race, which is to decide the matter, is pending when the trophy disappears. The search for it and its recovery, a rescue from a wrecked boat, and the great race itself are the main incidents of the story.

+ A L A Bkl 14:100 D '17

"It has a good ethical tone. The illustrations are appropriate."

+ Ind 92:447 D 1 '17 30w

"Allen French has proved himself ere this a popular writer of breezy stories for young folks, and 'The Golden Eagle' will increase his popularity."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 11 '17 140w

FRENCH, ALLEN. Hiding-places. *$1.35 (1½c) Scribner 17-8201

Great wealth of treasure lay hidden somewhere on the two farms. An old buccaneer ancestor, seventy years earlier, had taken this method of leaving his wealth to his descendants. In the form of precious gems, he had concealed it in various hiding places. His will gave faint clues and stated clearly that finders were to be keepers. In order that the finders should always be members of the family, it became imperative that trespassing should be forbidden, that hired labor should be dispensed with and that guests should be chosen with care. At the time of this story the farms are in the possession of two cousins. Not for forty years has there been any discovery of treasure. Then Binney Hartwell, son of one of the cousins, finds one of the hidden boxes. Unhappiness, ill-luck and family dissension follow, but the disclosure of the final hiding place restores harmony.

A L A Bkl 13:353 My '17

"A kind of romance which would be contemptible if it were done cheaply; but it is done very well indeed, with, for good measure, some touches of genuine characterisation—a thing which cannot fairly be demanded of a pure romancer." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:313 My '17 350w

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 29 '17 300w

"To say that the tale is exciting is to pay slight tribute to a novel containing so clever a plot and such excellent characterizations as those of the hero, his mother, and his cousin. Mr French has set out to write a story, but in accomplishing his end he has shown respect for his public and himself."

+ Dial 62:314 Ap 5 '17 200w

"A good story, well contrived and well told, and it shows that its author, whose first novel it is, has the story-teller's instinct."

+ N Y Times 22:94 Mr 18 '17 450w

"A tale worth reading."

+ Outlook 115:622 Ap 4 '17 40w

+ Springf'd Republican p19 My 13 '17 450w

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:158 My '17 60w

FRENCH, GEORGE. How to advertise; a guide to designing, laying out, and composing advertisements; pub. for the Associated advertising clubs of the world. 11 *$2 (4c) Doubleday 659 17-6656

"The object of this book is to suggest how advertising may be made more effective by making it more attractive—giving it more 'attention value.'" (Preface) Contents: What the advertisement must do; The personal equation; The human interest appeal; Advertising display; The appeal of the display; "What has art got to do with advertising?" What is art? The all-type advertisement; Type; The illustrated advertisement; Illustrations; The decorative advertisement; Decorations; Optics and the advertisement; The form of the advertisement; Getting the copy ready; Assembling the units; In conclusion. The book is well illustrated, with twenty-six halftone plates and numerous line drawings.

A L A Bkl 14:45 N '17

"Its general spirit is to develop the critical factor of the advertiser himself. The book will have a worthy place in every business man's library." H. W. H.

+ Ann Am Acad 73:231 S '17 160w

"What he says of advertising as a business force is both authoritative and helpful. The citation of concrete examples, good and bad, increases the book's value."

+ Ind 90:556 Je 23 '17 70w

N Y Br Lib News 4:59 Ap '17

Pittsburgh 22:523 Je '17

"The author is editor of the Advertising News."

St Louis 15:144 My '17 30w

"The book is meant for a particular class of readers rather than the public, but in its own field it is bound to rank high."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 S 2 '17 250w

FREUND, ERNST. Standards of American legislation: an estimate of restrictive and constructive factors. *$1.50 Univ. of Chicago press 342.7 17-10693

"On its concrete side, the present work may be said to be a continuation of the standard treatise, 'Police power,' by the same author. It is an expansion of a series of lectures delivered at Johns Hopkins university. . . . The object sought 'is to suggest the possibility of supplementing the established doctrine of constitutional law which enforces legislative norms through ex post facto review and negation, by a system of positive principles that should guide and control the making of statutes, and give a more definite meaning and content to the concept of due process of law.'" (Int J Ethics) The table of contents is followed by a summary of the contents. The introduction cites a number of cases that illustrate the changed attitude of the courts toward social legislation, and touches on the movement for judicial recall. The chapters then take up: Historic changes of policy and the modern concept of social legislation; The common law and public policy; The tasks and hazards of legislation; Constitutional provisions; Judicial doctrines; The meaning of principle in legislation; Constructive factors. The author is professor of jurisprudence and public law in the University of Chicago.

Reviewed by A. B. Hall

+ Am J Soc 23:540 Ja '18 1150w

"Professor Freund's purpose is to estimate the factors by the aid of which a system of constructive principles of legislation may be built up. This purpose distinguishes his book at once from such an excellent treatise as Jethro Brown's 'The underlying principles of modern legislation,' which deals, not with principles of legislation as Professor Freund defines the term, but with policy, and from Chester Lloyd Jones's valuable 'Statute law making in the United States,' which deals exclusively with legislative practice." A. N. Holcombe

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:580 Ag '17 620w

"A book which, in a lucid and uninvolved manner traces the development of the policies of modern legislation in the exercise of what must be recognized as 'a political and not strictly judicial function.'"

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 23 '17 210w

"The field occupied by Professor Freund is a new one in nearly all its avenues of approach; and it is extremely fortunate that a writer of his wide professorial experience, and interest, in the subject, has undertaken to publish the results of his research and reflection. . . . From the adverse side, we believe the title does not accurately represent the matters treated, and yet we would have great difficulty in suggesting another. The index is not altogether satisfactory. . . . This defect is in part relieved by a chapter summary." Albert Kocourek * + — Int J Ethics 28:123 O '17 1600w

Reviewed by H. W. Ballantine

+ J Pol Econ 25:1050 D '17 1000w

Pittsburgh 22:765 N '17 60w

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Je 28 '17 550w

"It stimulates thought and suggests further studies. It is a work which jurists and constitutional lawyers will read with profit; however, it will also interest the layman who appreciates the increasing importance of statute law." E. E. Witte

+ Survey 39:45 O 13 '17 330w

FREYTAG, GUSTAV. Doctor Luther; tr. by G. C. L. Riemer. il *$1 (3c) Lutheran pub. soc. 16-16678

Freytag's work on Martin Luther is one of his "Pictures of the German past," five historical volumes written and published between 1859 and 1867. The work consists of four chapters: At the beginning of the 16th century; Struggles in the soul of a young man and his entrance into the monastery; Out of monastic confinement into battle; Doctor Luther. These are followed by biographic and geographic notes and a table of dates. A brief sketch of the author is included by way of preface.

+ Ind 89:274 F 12 '17 40w

FROM Dartmouth to the Dardanelles. (Soldiers' tales of the great war) *60c (2c) Dutton 940.91 (Eng ed 17-3142)

The Dartmouth of the title is the British naval training college of that name. The young cadet whose story is told here was a boy of barely sixteen. His narrative was written while at home on sick leave in December, 1915, and has been edited for publication by his mother, who has made the necessary alterations in names of officers, ships, etc., leaving the boy's

FROM Dartmouth to the Dardanelles—Cont. story as nearly as possible as he wrote it. His experiences included rescue from death after his ship had been sunk.

+ Cath World 105:697 Ag '17 230w

+ Ind 90:297 My 12 '17 50w

"Full of interest, simply but vividly told."

+ Nation 104:412 Ap 5 '17 260w

"The reader cannot fail to note in the book the strange gradual maturity that came in that year to this child of fifteen. 'From Dartmouth to the Dardanelles' is one of the unique personal records from this war."

+ N Y Times 22:78 Mr 4 '17 550w

Pratt p42 Ap '17 10w

R of Rs 55:445 Ap '17 40w

"Make-up and binding very poor."

Wis Lib Bul 13:123 Ap '17 50w

FROTHINGHAM, EUGENIA BROOKS. Way of the wind. *$1.40 (3c) Houghton 17-6326

An unusual love story, the theme of which is the attachment between an older woman and a man who is little more than a boy. Janet Eversly is past thirty when she first meets Edgar Chilworth, a boy in the early twenties. She is the guest of his sister in the New Hampshire hills, and it is Fanny Chilworth's harshness in her treatment of the wayward, reckless youth that first draws Janet toward him. He is touched by Janet's pity, and before they are aware, tenderness on the one side and gratitude on the other have merged into love. The situation is worked out slowly, with many failures on Edgar's part and sorely-tried faith on Janet's.

"Not necessary, seems to be founded on false psychology."

— A L A Bkl 13:403 Je '17

"The author has accomplished something very much worth while when she has drawn this portrait of Edgar Chilworth. . . . On account of this character study the story is exceptionally praiseworthy as well as being psychologically interesting." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 10 '17 950w

— New Repub 10:sup22 Ap 21 '17 300w

+ N Y Times 22:138 Ap 15 '17 310w

FROTHINGHAM, PAUL REVERE. Confusion of tongues. *$1.25 Houghton 170 17-10441

"A volume of essay-sermons that deal not directly with the great war, but that touch various aspects of life affected by it. None of the discourses would be the same except for the colossal tragedy across the sea. They represent an attempt to ease a little the present mental strain, to restore the confidence of people, and to lead the mind back to the everlasting verities of life and duty. The title of the book is intended to symbolize the far-reaching effect of the European camps along the battlefield." (Boston Transcript) "Contents: A confusion of tongues; The conduct of life; A motto; The little book; Making the best of things; How to choose; The "if" and "though" of faith; Extra pennies; The departure into Egypt; Unshaken things." (N Y Br Lib News) The author has been the minister of the Arlington Street church (Unitarian), Boston, since 1900.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 23 '17 170w

+ Dial 63:535 N 22 '17 150w

"There is something a little out of the ordinary in the quiet sanity of Paul Revere Frothingham's volume of essay-sermons."

+ Nation 105:72 Jl 19 '17 280w

N Y Br Lib News 4:94 Je '17

+ R of Rs 56:330 S '17 80w

"Wholesome and helpful as these brief essays are in encouraging the cultivation of personal rectitude and helpfulness, they fall far short of measuring the shock which faith has suffered under the heel of war in 'Christendom.'" G. T.

+ Survey 38:574 S 29 '17 140w

FRYER, EUGÉNIE MARY. Hill-towns of France. il *$2.50 Dutton 914.4 17-30063

"This book is a story of wanderings among the picturesque hill-towns of France in times of peace. These hill-towns, the traveller-author tells us, are of four distinct types: first, the large town, commanded and protected by the turrets and massive towers of its walls and citadel; second, the feudal castle, the residence of some great lord about whose walls a straggling town has grown up; third, the fortified town, communal in character, which, governed by no over-lord and possessed of no castle, yet protects itself from invasion by fortifying its houses and its churches also; and fourth, the monastic hill-town, its defences built primarily to defend a shrine. . . . In tracing the history of these four types of hill towns in France, the writer has traced the welding of these divergent strands into a united whole, which comprises the French nation of today."—Boston Transcript

"A pleasant book, with fine illustrations of some of the most picturesque spots of France, such illustrations as would almost provide an excuse for dispensing with reading the text." Albert Schinz

+ Bookm 46:292 N '17 230w

"The descriptive style of the narrative is picturesque and vigorous."

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 1 '17 320w

"Most of the articles are reprints of papers from former publications, but the collection makes a handy reference volume."

+ Lit D 56:39 Ja 12 '18 150w

"Her book furnishes a new viewpoint from which to approach France and French life and history."

+ N Y Times 22:579 D 30 '17 200w

+ Outlook 117:654 D 19 '17 70w

+ R of Rs 57:219 F '18 40w

+ Spring'd Republican p17 D 8 '17 100w

FRYER, MRS JANE (EAYRE). Mary Frances first aid book. (Mary Frances story instruction handbook ser.) il *$1 Winston 614 16-24933

"The Mary Frances first aid book" is a combination of story with information. . . . It is printed in colors with fifty colored illustrations and has a ready reference list of ordinary accidents and illnesses, with approved home remedies, alphabetically arranged. . . . The children who are the chief characters are entrusted with a group of doll patients on whom they practice what they learn about bandages and liniments, and the cure for burns and other injuries."—Spring'd Republican

"Of use to smaller Camp fire girls."

— A L A Bkl 13:407 Je '17

"It is to be regretted that the author, a member of the New Jersey Women's division, National Preparedness association, has by much of her context infused the pages with the spirit of militarism and 'flag waving.' Otherwise the book has many valuable points and may be commended, especially for its illustrations and generally fine make-up." M. G. S.

— N Y Call p14 Ap 15 '17 120w

"At the present moment a practical first-aid book like this should be very popular."

— Spring'd Republican p17 Ap 15 '17 120w

FUESS, CLAUDE MOORE. Old New England school. il *$4 (3c) Houghton 273 17-13971

A history of Phillips academy, Andover, founded in 1778. Among the chapters are: A Purlan family; The founders. The founding of a school; An eighteenth-century pedagogue; The founding of Andover theological seminary; The School and the Hill in the mid-century; Student societies and enterprises; Some baseball stories; Football and its heroes; Phillips academy in the twentieth century. The volume is well illustrated.

"More feasible for libraries if it had been condensed and sold at half the price."

+ — A L A Bkl 14:75 D '17

"The mere fact that Oliver Wendell Holmes was there fitted for college, as we know from his own pen, is enough to make the academy and its history objects of unfailing interest."

+ Dial 63:408 O 25 '17 200w

+ Ind 91:296 Ag 25 '17 70w

"For those not directly interested in the academy it affords a glimpse into those pioneer days of American institutions of learning that were over full of history in the making."

+ Lit D 55:33 S 1 '17 600w

"The institution stands today as about the best known and perhaps without exception the most effectively equipped secondary school of America. . . . We cannot avoid the feeling that Mr Fuess falls somewhat short of the proper degree of sympathy and understanding in dealing with the earlier history of the school, and especially with such a character as that of Principal Samuel H. Taylor. . . . Aside from reservations which some may feel inclined to make on the point just mentioned, the author has done his work well and has written a chapter in the history of American education which should have a wide reading."

+ Nation 105:68 J1 19 '17 1250w

+ N Y Times 22:582 D 30 '17 340w

Pittsburgh 22:692 O '17

"Much of what he has brought to light is of significance not merely as the record of a school but as New England social history."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Je 14 '17 1100w

FULLER, SIR BAMPFYLDE. Man as he is: essays in a new psychology. *$2.50 Stokes 150 (Eng ed 17-13409)

"Retired from a distinguished career in India, Sir Bampfylde Fuller has devoted himself to psychological studies and has already published (in addition to two books on India) a work of value called 'Life and human nature.' He now gives us what may be called a contribution to the study of human impulses; for in these developing into rational choice and based on memory—the excellences of memory being the chief mark of man's predominance over other animals—he finds the key to the human mind and conduct."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

+ Ath p473 O '16 80w

"The first chapter, however, is too brief a statement of principles to form a really adequate introduction to the ambitiously planned inquiry."

+ — N Y Times 22:402 O 14 '17 500w

"His treatment of man in these essays is wholly as 'the paragon of animals.' Nothing turns on any specific difference, any spiritual element which distinguishes man from animal. But there is no tone of brutality in the book, no cynicism, no Nietzsche nonsense, and we mark frequently with a certain amusement the conventional and even commonplace morality which pervades its rigid realistic and positive analysis of man purely as a terrestrial creature."

Sat R 123:322 Ap 7 '17 500w

"The book contains much acute analysis based not only on reflection, but on a singularly wide acquaintance with men and affairs."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p491 O 12 '16 110w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p555 N 23 '16 1050w

FULLER, HENRY BLAKE. Lines long and short. *$1.25 Houghton 911 17-4572

A volume of "biographical sketches in various rhythms." Mr Fuller has told twenty stories in free verse, analyzing motives and exposing shams with something of the keen satire of the "Spoon River anthology" but with less of its sordidness. Some of the poems are reprinted from Poetry, the Chicago Tribune and the New Republic.

"Without Edgar Lee Masters's power to burn to the quick with the caustic of satire, he has yet the trained, clear-seeing eyes of the psychologist, the sense of human values of the novelist, and his people are real and unforgettable. The man who put off living until life would have none of him, stands out in particular relief." J. B. Rittenhouse

+ — Bookm 46:439 D '17 110w

"Mr Fuller is more rhythmical than Mr Masters. But though he has a spice of cynicism, his work is tempered with wit, and while he makes fun not only of his subjects and of himself, he has something worth telling and not one of his 'little stories' lacks zest. They are well worth reading." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 7 '17 550w

+ Cleveland p65 My '17 60w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

Dial 62:300 Ap 5 '17 1200w

N Y Br Lib News 1:62 Ap '17

FULTON, MAURICE GARLAND, ed. Southern life in southern literature. 1l 80c Ginn 810.8 17-6667

Selections from southern literature, arranged in three parts: The old South in literature; Poetry of the Civil war; The new South in literature. The editor says, "My attempt has been not merely to show the value of literary effort in the South as absolute achievement but also to emphasize its importance as a record of southern life and character." Essayists, poets, story writers and humorists are included. In selecting from recent novelists and story writers the author has limited himself, with one exception, "to the five pioneers in the new development of fiction in the eighties." These are George W. Cable, Joel Chandler Harris, Mary N. Murfree, Thomas Nelson Page and James Lane Allen. The exception is O. Henry.

+ School R 25:302 Ap '17 30w

"Should be an acceptable book for supplementary reading in any high school, but particularly in the South, where its historical element would naturally make the greatest appeal and would serve as an excellent approach to the book. As a whole, the book is well organized, satisfactory in the point of notes, both explanatory and biographical, and commendable for the selection of subject-matter." E. F. Geyer and R. L. Lyman

+ School R 25:609 O '17 90w

FURNISS, HENRY SANDERSON, ed. Industrial outlook. *3s 6d Chatto & Windus, London (Eng ed 17-4219)

"A collection of nine essays, edited by the principal of Ruskin college, who speaks of 'the control of industry' as the keynote of the book, so far as it has one. . . . The contributors are G. W. Daniels, lecturer on economics in the University of Manchester; H. Clay; J. R. Taylor, lecturer in the University of Leeds; W. Piercy and T. E. Gregory, both lecturers at the London school of economics; A. W. Ashby, assistant in the Institute for research in agricultural economics at Oxford; and W. H. Pringle. Assistance has been received in the preparation of the book from Professor E. Cannan and Mr A. E. Zimmern."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The writers have not a common point of view or a common terminology or a common way of approach. . . . A book such as this cannot be judged as a book—each essay must be taken separately and judged for what it is in itself without reference to the rest. There are at least two essays which are really admirable; that of Mr Henry Clay on 'The war and the status of the wage-earner,' and that of Mr J. R. Taylor on 'Labour organization.' These two chapters should be read by everybody who really desires to understand the labour movement and the point of view of the trade unionist of to-day. Mr Ashby's chapter on 'The rural problem' is also excellent. . . . and should be an excellent tonic for all those who still have sentimental aspirations after the small holding or the peasant proprietor."

+ — Ath p347 J1 '17 780w

"Mr Taylor's account of the new tendencies in trade unionism and the rise of the great

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

FURNISS, HENRY SANDERSON, ed.—Cont.
 industrial union, like the National union of railwaymen, as contrasted with the older craft unions, is especially interesting and valuable.”

+ Spec 119:193 Ag 25 '17 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p34 Ja
 18 '17 170w

G

GADE, JOHN ALLYNE. Charles the Twelfth, king of Sweden. il *$3 (2½c) Houghton
 16-22250

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"Hitherto Voltaire's 'Charles XII,' of unstated literary charm, and the late R. Nisbet Bain's useful sketch in the Heroes of the nations series have been the only attempts to write, in a non-Scandinavian tongue, the story career of one of the most picturesque and striking figures in modern history. Now comes Mr Gade, . . .
 who has assumed the role of translator of the contemporaneous manuscripts of one Carl Gustafson Klingspor, devoted follower and companion in arms of the king. While the 'translator' provides an index and a very considerable bibliography, abounding in Scandinavian titles, his manner of writing, his soaring enthusiasm, and his penchant for dramatic effect suggest the historical novelist rather than the orthodox historical biographer. . . . Those who, in spite of the grim realities of the present conflict, still yearn for a true tale of military adventure, in the main well told, will welcome this book; but it still leaves the way open for an exhaustive critical biography. The volume is handsomely bound and printed, while of errors there are comparatively few, though 1583 should be 1688 (p. 22)." A. L. C.

Am Hist R 22:705 Ap '17 400w

"Charles XII of Sweden has ever furnished an inspiring theme to writers of the most different stamp—from the keen contemporary Voltaire to the manly and tender Verner V. Heiden-stam in our own days. Mr John A. Gade has hit upon the device of writing a book purporting to be a translation of the manuscript of one Colonel Klingspor. . . . In most other respects Mr Gade is credible enough, fortified and enlivened as his account is with the contemporary observations and anecdotes now accessible in a number of published journals of the Carolines. The recently published five volumes of memoirs of soldiers under Charles, edited by Quennerstedt, seem to have been especially drawn upon. . . . In but one respect does there appear to be uncertainty of planning. For whom in particular was this eloquent account written? For youths to be fired with a noble emulation of a great character, so one would judge from the general tone of the book, which lays the greatest stress on the Spartan virtues.
 But if so, why the salacious anecdotes, e.g., about August the Strong, told in contrast though they be? . . . The book is well illustrated with portraits and plates. There is one altogether unserviceable map."

Nation 104:495 Ap 26 '17 420w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ap 26 '17 400w

GAGER, CHARLES STUART. Fundamentals of botany. il *$1.50 Blakiston 581 16-19673

"Gager's text is evidently intended as a guide for an introductory, cultural course for college students, which shall at the same time serve as a foundational one for students who are to pursue the subject further. . . . Part 1 (Introduction) deals with the organs of the cormophyte and the structure of the cell. Part 2 (The Vegetative functions of plants) includes chapters on the loss of water, absorption of water, the path of liquids in the plant, nutrition, fermentation, respiration, growth, and adjustment to surroundings. . . . The 26 chapters of part 3 (Structure and life histories) include discussions of the life histories of a considerable number of types, especially of the mosses, ferns, and flowering plants."—Bot Gaz

"The book is abundantly illustrated with 434 figures, a good share of which are original drawings or halftones. While the appearance, for example, of such illustrations as figs. 127, 198, 263, and 286 is to be welcomed, the same cannot justly be said of some others."

+ Bot Gaz 63:324 Ap '17 400w

"Excellent text-book by director of the Brooklyn botanic garden. Presents some original ideas in the teaching of botany. Very fully illustrated."

+ Pittsburgh 22:41 Ja '17 20w

"It will be noted that although a physiologist in outlook, he has properly emphasized the historical and structural point of view so often and so deplorably neglected by the cultivators of disembodied plant physiology. The author obviously considers that living matter is to be studied 'in vita' rather than 'in vitro' (whether in glass models or merely in chemical glassware)." F. C. Jeffrey

+ Science n s 46:617 D 21 '17 750w

GAINES, RUTH LOUISE, and READ,
 GEORGIA WILLIS. Village shield. il *$1.50
 (3½c) Dutton 17-13622

Florence Converse, editor of the "Little schoolmates" series, writes an introductory "Letter to the one who reads this book" in which she says that this present day story of Porfiria and Ramon is a story of "real Mexicans; not the fierce and noisy men who are fighting and quarrelling among themselves and sometimes with us . . . but the Indians of pure blood, descendants or successors of the Aztec people." Translations and explanations of terms used in the text are not given in footnotes but in eight pages of "Notes" at the end of the story.

"Well illustrated with historic pictures taken from old books of travel. Will interest older children."

+ A L A Bkl 14:29 O '17

"It is rich in local color and rather too rich in Spanish phrases inserted to enhance that color."

+ Ind 92:260 N 3 '17 40w

"It is a weaker and feminine story of the type popular in the Rover series, the Boy scout books, and the like. The illustrations, too, taken outright from Mexican books of travel of the early forties and fifties, are quite untrue to Mexican life today. And yet it is harmless enough, and might be absorbing to a child." C. W.

N Y Call p15 Je 24 '17 180w

"The story is told with skill. . . . The illustrations, of which four are colored plates, deserve a word of mention because of their historic and artistic interest. The twelve full-page pictures are from famous books of travel in Mexico of more than half a century ago, while more than a score of tailpieces and medallions have been redrawn from the picture-writings of the Mexican Indians, some of them antedating the Spanish conquest."

+ N Y Times 22:249 J1 '17 800w

"While written for children, has interest for the older reader."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 D 9 '17 290w

GAIRDNER, WILLIAM HENRY TEMPLE.
 Egyptian colloquial Arabic; a conversation grammar and reader. il *12s 6d Heffer, Cambridge, England 492.7

"Mr Gairdner, of the Church missionary society, who is the superintendent of Arabic studies at the Cairo study centre, has done a great service . . . by preparing this practical conversation grammar and reader of the spoken language of the people. He discards the Arabic symbols for a modified Roman alphabet." (Spec)
 "He has endeavoured to apply to Egyptian Arabic some of the modern methods used in teaching languages. Disconnected sentences, verb conjugations and paradigms, and grammatical rules preceding each exercise, have been omitted. For the last-named Mr Gairdner has substituted leading questions, which will enable students themselves to deduce the grammar illustrated by the subject-matter of each section.

An advocate of direct methods, Mr Gairdner from the outset uses Arabic as the medium of instruction; and he gives good reasons for the particular system of Romic symbols adopted. The book contains tables of Egyptian-Arabic sounds, and of the consonants, vowels, and diphthongs; exercises in sound-drill and practice in reading; and a vocabulary of the chief words occurring in the reader." (Ath) Mr Gairdner has been assisted by Sheikh Kurayyim Sailam.

+ Ath p409 Ag '17 130w

"The book is, in its way, almost as epoch-making as that of Spitta; it shows, for all its modernity, very careful scholarship and it may be thoroughly recommended. The home-staying Arabist will probably get good results by combining it with Spitta's 'Contes Arabes.'" + Nation 105:491 N 1 '17 350w

+ Spec 118:94 J1 28 '17 90w

GALBRAITH, ANNA MARY. Personal hygiene and physical training for women. 2d ed rev il *$2.25 (2c) Saunders 613 17-2511

For this second edition the chapter on Digestion and nutrition has been rewritten to bring it into conformity with present day knowledge of the nutritive value of foods, etc. Chapter 1 on The wisdom of physical efficiency has been revised to include the results of statistical studies made by the author. A section on dancing, with plates and description of simple steps, has been added.

A L A Bkl 13:273 Mr '17

GALE, ZONA. Daughter of the morning. il *$1.40 (2½c) Bobbs 17-28848

"Cosma Wakely was a village girl of twenty years, in speech, manner, and environment the antipodes of everything that culture stands for. Her story, told by herself, begins as ungrammatically and crudely as the character demands. But during a morning's walk she meets a stranger whose talk with her changes at once all her personal ideals and her entire outlook upon life. Obeying the hint he has given her in regard to seeking wider horizons, she breaks her engagement with a country lover, and, taking with her the wife and child of a drunken brute, seeks employment in the city. There her great beauty subjects her to the usual peril from predacious man, but, saving herself by her quick wits, she soon enters a career of triumph, and is sent to school. . . . She becomes secretary to the very man who first planted within her the seeds of ambition; and of course, of course—we easily guess the rest."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 14:131 Ja '18

"A daughter of the morning" must be set down as a 'fact story,' good enough for those that like their sociology, as well as their advertising, in tract form, but not to be considered from the viewpoint of fiction."

+ Dial 63:531 N 22 '17 170w

+ Ind 92:604 D 29 '17 50w

"The superficial philosophy and the weak love interest may appeal to the sentimental high school girl. But the note of protest against the sterility and lack of promise that country life offers to a girl redeems the book from many of its faults."

+ New Repub 13:158 D 8 '17 100w

"All the details of this impossible story are as far removed from things as they are as is the history of its heroine. Miss Gale scores, in that, despite the unrealities of her tale, and its being somewhat overloaded with her theories, she has made it interesting."

+ N Y Times 22:517 D 2 '17 460w

"With the gentle simplicity and sincerity so characteristic of Miss Gale's work, she has said here many fundamental truths. She has clothed them with a gently appealing human touch that will carry the lesson far." G. I. Colbron

+ Pub W 92:1375 O 20 '17 460w

"As a novel the book holds its reader closely; as a novel with a purpose it is to be classed among the worth-while books of 1917."

+ Spring'd Republican p19 D 2 '17 300w

GALLATIN, ALBERT EUGENE. Paul Manship; a critical essay on his sculpture and an iconography. il *$5 Lane 735 17-12503

"The future of sculpture [in America] at present lies in the hands of some half dozen acknowledged artists and many others who are gradually winning a reputation. One of the few who has gone 'over the top' although quite a young man, is Paul Manship. . . . In clear, concise terms, the author has summed up the art of Manship and placed him where he belongs. That is an art in itself. Further than this the dainty little volume contains a very complete iconography, accompanied by eight full-page illustrations, thoroughly representative pieces of sculpture having been selected for the purpose." (Int Studio) The book, which is of a few pages only other than the illustrations, was printed at the Merrymount press, Boston, in an edition of one hundred and fifty copies.

"The author is a past master in iconography, and employs a terse epigrammatic phraseology which clothes well his very individual views upon the artists of his choice."

+ Int Studio 62:65 S '17 230w

Pittsburgh 22:512 Je '17

GALLICHAN, CATHERINE GASQUOINE (HARTLEY) (MRS WALTER M. GALLICHAN). Motherhood and the relationships of the sexes. *$2.50 (2½c) Dodd 176 17-14556

This book, which the author had had in mind for some time, has been written and published during the war, because she believes that it has a vital bearing on present conditions in England. On the one hand, she sees the need of building up the population of a decimated country, on the other, she sees women crowding into occupations that are inimical to motherhood. She says, "The object of my book is two-fold. First, to put forward a fresh plea for assigning that high value to motherhood in practice which at present it receives only in words. . . . In the second place, I wish to set forth what seem to be the chief causes that hitherto have hindered motherhood and bound my sex from the full enjoyment of life; and to suggest that the reason . . . is due to women's own actions, to their absurdly wrong education and entire misunderstanding of the sexual life." The four parts of the book following the Introduction, which treats of the effects of the war, are: The maternal instinct in the making; The primitive family; Motherhood and the relationships of the sexes; Sexual education. There is a bibliography of several pages at the close.

A L A Bkl 14:41 N '17

"The whole book is an impassioned plea for enlightened motherhood, a reverence for and conservation of human life by women such as men and governments have never given it. It is a terrific indictment, not of the individual mother, but of the evils of civilisation." Edna Kenton

+ Bookm 46:345 N '17 600w

Cleveland p124 N '17 70w

"She represents the older, motherly feminism with its rather self-conscious responsibility and its weakness in referring to criteria of biological science where only an artistic sense of personal relations should rule. Much unity and sanctity, the psychologists are discovering, could pass from the family without hurting it. Mrs Gallichan's book moves too much in the realm of conventionalized emotions." Randolph Bourne

+ Dial 63:103 Ag 16 '17 450w

"In this new book she brings her very thorough equipment as a scholar and a thinker to bear upon the conditions which the world must face as the result of the effects of the great war upon the race. Her work, therefore, is very timely and, although it is written with reference only to the British Isles, almost all that she says is quite as applicable to the United States."

+ N Y Times 22:262 J1 15 '17 550w

Pittsburgh 22:700 O '17 20w

GALLICHAN, C. G.—Continued

"Child welfare workers who believe that 'the welfare of the child is the one consideration that matters,' will find much to interest them in this volume, especially the discussion of infant mortality, its relation to the employment of mothers and other prenatal conditions." B. F. Johnson, M.D.

+ Survey 38:371 J1 28 '17 370w

"Readers of it will find that on a good many sides of the question she has something cogent to say; but they will get a little impatient with the large amount of space devoted to the sex life of animals and of primitive man. The lessons of war are at the moment much more interesting than any theories drawn from biology or anthropology."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p300 Je 21 '17 550w

GALLISHAW, JOHN, and LYNCH, WILLIAM.

Man in the ranks. *$1 (8c) Houghton 355 17-24714

This book of advice for new recruits is written by a soldier who was at Gallipoli in 1915 and a sergeant instructor of the Plattsburg training camp. The advice is given under the headings: Getting started right; The first days in camp; Marksmanship; Keeping fit; A successful soldier; A talk on personal conduct; Tips from the trenches. There is a list of "Things to remember not to forget." A number of pages at the end are left blank to be used as a diary, and a place is provided for addresses.

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. Beyond. *$1.50 (1½c) Scribner 17-22092

When "Gyp" Winton was flowering into womanhood she overheard it said that Major Winton, her straight-thinking, straight-riding guardian was indeed her father. That knowledge influenced her attitude toward the world of society she was about to enter. He had answered her question about it simply and directly: "Yes, Gyp; your mother and I loved each other." To Gyp, then, honesty, her music, and love were the three things needful. Against her father's wishes she married Fiorsen, the gifted, moody, intemperate, wholly selfish Swedish violinist, only to discover later that their union was founded on passion on his side and a mistaken infatuation on hers. With all her strength she tried to keep the bargain she had made, but when he broke his marriage vow and in a fit of ungovernable temper maltreated their child, she left him and went back to her father and that simpler outdoor life to which she had been bred. Dreading the English divorce court, she did not legally free herself, and, when later, Bryan Summerbay came into her life and won her passionate affection she gave herself to him, believing that to her had come such undying love as she had seen her father hold for the mother who had died at her child's birth. The weight of the past and oncoming tragedy in the book is relieved only by Gyp's love for her daughter and Major Winton's unquestioned, unflinching devotion to them both.

"Mr Galsworthy's latest novel is quite readable—and disappointing, because we expected something which we could strongly praise or severely criticize."

+ — Ath p527 O '17 60w

"Half concealed by his cold and reserved manner lurks, to put it frankly, the sex obsession of the sceptical bachelor." H. W. Boynton

— Bookm 46:339 N '17 180w

"Although problems of sex have been utilized by Mr Galsworthy in the making of his novels, never before has he been so obsessed by them as in 'Beyond.' But for the graces of its style, 'Beyond' would be utterly negligible." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Ag 25 '17 1600w

"Those who see in the story only a sensational appeal to our sexual emotions miss the theme. It is the gospel according to Browning. Stake everything and pocket your losses without whimpering. Stoicism is an old philosophy, often enough repeated in abstract terms. The novelist here has shown real people, dominated by passion, terribly hurt by it, then dominant over their sorrow, and not so small as to indulge in regrets. It is a superb piece of work." J: Macy

+ Dial 63:272 S 27 '17 1600w

"It is an inconclusive book, and for that reason lacks the greatness that compels the reader's sympathy for the actors in the tragedy."

+ — Ind 91:473 S 22 '17 160w

"Mr Galsworthy is not a treader in the gross and miry ways of sex; if he were, 'The dark flower' would have seemed to some of us a book less damnable. He is that more insidious influence, an eloquent and honest pleader from false premises."

— Nation 105:292 S 13 '17 700w

"'Beyond' shows his usual firmness of structure and grace of style, but it adds nothing to his interpretation of life, does nothing to broaden or sweeten it." H. W. Boynton

+ — Nation 105:600 N 29 '17 110w

"As a Galsworthy performance, a novel out of the man who wrote 'The island Pharisees' and 'Fraternity' and 'Strife' and 'Justice' and 'The mob' and 'A commentary' and 'The silver box,' it is one of the most extraordinary bits of degeneracy, literary degeneracy, that was ever exposed. It is more facile than his other stories. It is quick and neat and fluent. It is dramatic. But its texture shows a complacency and flabbiness so amazing that one who sees the dedication to Thomas Hardy is inclined to look the other way." F. H.

— New Repub 12:194 S 15 '17 1750w

"Poor fare from the author of 'Justice' and the 'Man of property.' One leaves the book with a feeling of futility." F. J. K.

— N Y Call p15 N 18 '17 950w

"The story carries the reader on by the tense interest of its conflict of souls, their struggles to harmonize themselves with one another, and the breaking out from the self-imposed bonds now of one and now of another."

+ — N Y Times 22:310 Ag 26 '17 1300w

"Of the essential indecency of Gyp's course, its human and spiritual malfeasance, its blend of sentimentality and obtuseness, Mr Galsworthy reveals no consciousness. One has small affection for Fiorsen. But even the unlovable may justifiably resent betrayal; and it is our main quarrel with Mr Galsworthy that he seems to have no perception of the case that might be made out—that must be made out—for Fiorsen. Mr Galsworthy used to have a shrewd and vibrant sense of humor. It would not formerly have been easy to impeach him for artless banalities, for economy of thought, for undistinguished writing." Lawrence Gilman

— No Am 206:628 O '17 1700w

"In quality and literary texture and in the apparently easy but really artful way in which the interest is sustained this novel has not been excelled by anything Mr Galsworthy has done. It is hard, however, to see what social conclusion is suggested or intended."

+ — Outlook 117:64 S 12 '17 150w

"The book is inferior to the author's best work."

— Pittsburgh 22:749 N '17 40w

"We confess to having been perfectly bored by Mr John Galsworthy's last novel."

— Sat R 124:208 S 15 '17 650w

"We wish that he would widen his view of life in his fiction as he has done in his plays, but we gladly recognize the high literary merit, the skilful construction, the play of humour and fancy, the adroit management of the chief situations in this new novel, which is in some respects the best that he has produced."

+ — Spec 119:272 S 15 '17 520w

"In Mr Galsworthy's new novel the people fill us with alarm, because they appear all more or less under the influence of the great narcotic and therefore not quite responsible for their actions. They have been out hunting all day for so many generations that they are now perpetually in this evening condition of physical well-being and spiritual simplicity. This of course, is an exaggeration, but some theory of the kind must be fabricated to explain this rather queer book. 'Beyond.'

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p415 Ag 30 '17 1450w

GAMEWELL, MRS MARY NINDE (PORTER). Gateway to China; pictures of Shanghai. il *$1.50 Revell 915.1 17-206

"The gateway to China' is a descriptive work on Shanghai. The idea of a gateway comes from the investment of the city by France and Great Britain and the cosmopolitan character of its population. Each feature of the city's history, from the time that Great Britain opened it as a port by treaty in 1842 to the present, passes in review. Police department, shops, schools, rickshas, streets, houses, hospitals, sanitation, press, factories, customs, present and ancient, are described from the standpoint of a resident rather than a visitor." —Springf'd Republican

"An uncommonly vivid piece of descriptive writing."

+ Ind 88:410 D 4 '16 70w

Springf'd Republican p6 F 6 '17 130w

"The book is decidedly interesting and entertaining." Gertrude Seymour

+ Survey 37:614 F 24 '17 250w

GANONG, WILLIAM FRANCIS. Textbook of botany for colleges. il *$2.50 Macmillan 580 17-22350

"The course outlined in this book is specifically designed as 'an introductory course in botany,' as 'a part of a general education, and not as a preparation for a professional botanical career.' . . . Professor Ganong has not felt responsible for telling all known botanical facts about each topic discussed, since he has attempted rather to present major truths with enough morphological details to give a clear setting to the major truth."—School R

+ A L A Bkl 13:295 Ap '17

+ Bot Gaz 63:323 Ap '17 300w

"Prof. Ganong's treatment is somewhat unconventional. The text makes easy reading, and is facilitated by a large number of good figures; but there is sometimes a suggestion of scarpiness."

+ Nature 99:261 My 31 '17 550w

"The book is an excellent contribution to our rapidly growing list of available texts for college botany and is the outcome of years of successful experience in teaching botany in a college [Smith] whose general courses in that science have become well known because of their effectiveness and attractiveness." O. W. Caldwell

+ School R 24:778 D '16 600w

GARDINER, ALFRED G. (ALPHA OF THE PLOUGH, pseud.). Pebbles on the shore. (Wayfarer's library) '50c Dutton 824

A series of essays first published in England. "Contents: On choosing a name; On letter-writing; On reading in bed; On cats and dogs; On seeing visions; On black sheep; The village and the war; On umbrella morals; On talking to one's self; On Boswell and his miracle; On seeing ourselves; On the English spirit; On falling in love; On living again; On points of view; On the guinea stamp; On the dislike of lawyers; On the cheerfulness of the blind; On thoughts at fifty; On the philosophy of hats; On seeing London; On the intelligent golf ball; On a prisoner of war; On the world we live in; In praise of walking, etc." (N Y Br Lib News)

+ A L A Bkl 14:121 Ja '18

Ath p675 D '17 30w

Boston Transcript p7 Je 30 '17 750w

+ Ind 91:189 Ag 4 '17 90w

N Y Br Lib News 4:123 Ag '17

+ Spec 119:sup549 N 17 '17 30w

"He has a knack of being genially discursive without being trivial and of bringing a certain elevation of mind to bear upon his subject that shows his similarity to E. V. Lucas. The charm, the gentle modulated style is there. . . . There is something to give pleasure on every page."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Je 21 '17 1050w

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 20 '17 950w

"Papers by a writer who has to the full the gift of 'causerie.' . . . Mr Brock's excellent pen and ink and head and tail pieces are a great addition."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p519 O 25

'17 40w

GARDNER, LUCY, ed. Hope for society; essays on social reconstruction after the war. *3s G. Bell & sons, London 330.4

(Eng ed 17-18995)

"These twelve essays were delivered as lectures at the Interdenominational summer school held at Swanwick, Derbyshire, from June 24 to July 3, 1916. The Bishop of Oxford contributes an essay on 'The hope for society,' and there are papers by Mr J. St G. Heath ('The new social conscience as to use of income'), Mr J. A. Hobson ('Industrial and financial conditions after the war'), Mr C. Roden Buxton ('The land question after the war'), Sir Hugh Bell ('Trade-union regulations: the employer's point of view'), Mrs Pethick Lawrence ('The new outlook of the woman's movement'), Miss Margaret Bondfield ('The position of women in industry'), and others."—Ath

+ Ath p95 F '17 130w

"Mr Christopher Turnor's paper on the development of English life is especially valuable. On the social side, the papers contain many suggestions which deserve consideration in the reconstruction period." M. J.

+ Int J Ethics 27:539 Jl '17 100w

+ Spec 118:276 Mr 3 '17 200w

"The real educational value of these lectures is that they do not deal solely with collective measures of amelioration. . . . Mr Clutton Brock, in his denunciation of the trash of civilization passed off as art—'hankering after Bondstreet' he calls it—goes to the heart of the matter when, with silence as to big legislative measures, he says, 'If you want to make anybody good, make yourself.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit-Sup p278 Je 14

'17 1350w

GAREY, ENOCH BARTON, and ELLIS, OLIN O. Junior Plattsburg manual. il *$1.50 Century 355 17-26655

The authors of the "Plattsburg manual," captains in the United States infantry who were instructors in the Plattsburg training camp in 1916, have prepared this textbook on physical and military training for the use of the preparatory, public, and high schools of the United States. "Its further purpose is to assist in developing all young men of this country into good, efficient and patriotic citizens." (Preface) Major-general John F. O'Ryan, chairman of the military training commission of the State of New York, draws attention in a foreword to the military and physical drill now legally required in the New York state schools and especially commends the clear style of the authors in setting forth the schools of the soldier, squads, and company, and the arrangement of the 250 illustrations by which it is shown how to do and how not to do the essential things. The chapter on Physical development can be of use to all. The chapters on Marching and camping and First aid to the injured with their practical directions will be widely read. The large type and clear printing are to be especially commended.

"Well illustrated."

+ A L A Bkl 14:5 O '17

"Many excellent illustrations and diagrams make the directions in the text easy to follow."

+ Cleveland p119 N '17 20w

Lit D 55:54 D 8 '17 110w

N Y P L New Tech Bks p14 Jl '17 20w

+ N Y Times 22:379 O 7 '17 170w

Pittsburgh 22:695 O '17 50w

Quar List New Tech Bks O '17 30w

GARIS, HOWARD ROGER. Venture boys afloat; or, The wreck of the Fausta. il *$1.25 (2c) Harper 17-28657

Tom Ware, Dick Parker and Harry Nolan, three boys who live in a Hudson river town, are saving money to buy a motor boat. Their plan is to cruise up and down the river. But an invitation from Tom's uncle, a seaman, takes them on a much more ambitious voyage, down the Atlantic coast. This trip is taken for pleasure, but in Tom's heart is the hope that they may overtake his father's wrecked schooner, the "Fausta," now derelict somewhere in southern waters, and his hope is rewarded after an exciting race with a government derelict destroyer. Incidentally the boys learn something of American history. The book is the first of a series.

Reviewed by J. Walcott
Bookm 46:498 D '17 80w
N Y Times 22:466 N 11 '17 150w

GARLAND, HAMLIN. Son of the middle border. il *$1.60 Macmillan 17-22272

"A son of the middle border" is Mr Garland's view of himself and of the life he encountered along a vista that has seen one era after another of American progress give place to its successor. It is, moreover, a story of the advance of an American boy which is none the less miraculous because it has been repeated so often in our history. . . . He was born in 1860 and his infancy and early childhood coincided with the most critical period in American history. His father, who had come to Wisconsin from Maine, after three years of work in Boston, enlisted in the Union army in 1863, and among the boy's earliest recollections is the memory of his return. . . . Scene after scene of his childhood, face after face out of a past rich in recollections, Mr Garland brings before us, as his father restlessly moved westward from Wisconsin to Minnesota, from Minnesota to Iowa, and from Iowa to Dakota. . . . With his brother Franklin he went on his adventure into the east. . . . This was in 1883, when Mr Garland was twenty-three years of age. His real invasion of Boston came a little later. For nearly ten years he was a Bostonian, winning his way against obstacles that would have daunted many a less ambitious young man. . . . Finally he became a professional man of letters."—Boston Transcript

+ A L A BkI 14:57 N '17

"So understanding and skillful a portrayal of characteristic spiritual values gives the book added importance, makes it a contribution to our social history that is well worth while. As autobiography, it is an original and distinctive piece of work and illustrates the possibilities of varied and unique treatment to be found in the writing of American biography." F. F. Kelly
+ Bookm 46:327 N '17 430w

"A son of the middle border" has all the charm of the novels and short stories by Mr Garland and other writers which have depicted the valiant struggles of the ambitious boy who is able to look beyond the border of the world of his upbringing. . . . Valuable and encouraging is his story, but it is more than that. It is a contribution to American autobiographical literature." E. F. E.
+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 29 '17 1750w

"Mr Garland is unusually successful in his portraits of his father and mother. A notable memorial of a bygone phase of American life."
+ Cleveland p126 N '17 90w

"A biography must necessarily be a life seen thru a temperament and experiences that would have been a matter of course or even interesting to a 'born farmer,' or a biologist revolted the bookish lad whose tastes were cultural and never agricultural. And the man with a real love for the farm does not write books about it. With this reservation 'A son of the middle border' seems to us a great and a true book; a contribution to our annals of the settlement of our country."
+ Ind 92:256 N 3 '17 830w

"There are hardly enough life and inspiration in the narrative to warrant its being so long, but its directness and honest purpose deserve a reading, altho it is a life much like many other lives."

+ — Lit D 55:42 O 27 '17 120w

+ Lit D 56:36 Ja 26 '18 140w

"The autobiographer is a rarer bird than the novelist; and we believe that this record may take its place among the handful of American classics of its kind."

+ — Nation 105:719 D 27 '17 1650w

"Mr Garland's best work, like 'Main-travelled roads,' was built directly out of the stones of his autobiographical quarry. But how much more vivid and alluring is the quarry than the constructed short stories and novels. The inventive writer, after long struggling with stiff fictional forms, suddenly discovers himself as his own best artistic form and material and bursts out into the freshest of self-revelations, without self-consciousness and yet with an insight that makes silly the legend that the American has no talent for introspection and resents its expression." R. B. . . .
+ New Repub 12:333 O 20 '17 2900w

"In all the region of autobiography, so far as I know it, I do not know quite the like of Mr Garland's story of his life, and I should rank it with the very greatest of that kind in literature. . . . As you read it you realize it the memorial of a generation, of a whole order of American experience; as you review it you perceive it an epic of such mood and make as has not been imagined before." W. D. Howells
+ N Y Times 22:309 Ag 26 '17 3200w

"Nothing could be more American than the mingling of practicality and idealism that is felt everywhere in the story. Nothing could be more wholesome in these times than the lesson of intellectual honesty and large sympathy which is implicit in it."
+ No Am 206:796 N '17 480w

"An autobiography with the fascination of romance, and in a measure the form of fiction. . . . It is a book well worth reading and re-reading."
+ Outlook 117:100 S 19 '17 50w

+ Pittsburgh 22:743 N '17 60w

"Those who lived in rural Wisconsin, Iowa, and the Dakotas during those days will remark the striking fidelity of the picture. There were so many Garland families in the border movement of the '60's, '70's, and '80's of the last century!"
+ R of Rs 56:439 O '17 140w

"Mr Garland has written a book deserving of a wide reading, and likely to get it by virtue of the style in which it is written. The narrative flows easily—a little diffusely, in fact—with a great fund of incidents, keen observations and incisive, albeit idealized portraits of character. Perhaps the best work in the last of those categories is the picture of his mother. She represents a memorable type of American womanhood—tender mother, brave, uncompromising pioneer woman and splendid wife."
+ Springf'd Republican p15 S 23 '17 3600w

GARRISON, MRS THEODOSIA (PICKERING). Dreamers, and other poems. *$1.25 Doran 111 17-28183

This is a collection of lyrical poems previously printed in seventeen different periodicals. Seven Irish poems are given at the end of the book, under the title "Songs of himself."

"The verse of Theodosia Garrison is restful; it is a retreat, a haven from the tumult of to-day's singing. She invites you to partake of her quiet dreams and unpretentious fancies, much as a friend invites you to the hearthside to pass a tranquil evening. If one is not thrilled, one is at least soothed by her hospitality. Little by little you become aware of something in the experience that has a fineness and distinction of its own." W. S. B.
+ Boston Transcript p8 N 7 '17 630w

Reviewed by Conrad Aiken
— Dial 63:513 N 22 '17 400w

"In her 'Dreamers, and other poems' Theodosia Garrison has given us some of her best work."

+ Lit D 56:34 Ja 5 '18 200w

GARVIN, JOHN WILLIAM, ed. Canadian poets and poetry. il *$3 Stokes 811.08 17-10982

An anthology of Canadian verse with brief biographical sketches of the fifty-one authors represented. The editor says of these authors: "Many of their poems are indigenous to the soil,—vitaly, healthfully Canadian; others are tinged with the legendary and mythical lore of older lands; but all are of Canada, inasmuch as the writers have lived in this country, and have been influenced by its history and atmosphere at a formative period of their lives." Among those whose names are somewhat widely known outside their own country are: Charles G. D. Roberts, Bliss Carman, William Henry Drummond, Isabel Ecclestone Mackay, Marjorie L. C. Pickthall, Arthur Stringer and Robert W. Service.

"About twenty of these poets are not included in the 'Oxford book of Canadian verse' (Book-list 10:385 Je '14), which includes the work of one hundred poets from earliest colonial days down to the present. Libraries having the 'Oxford book' will not need this unless there is special interest."

A L A Bkl 13:390 Je '17

N Y Br Lib News 4:62 Ap '17 140w

+ N Y Times 22:124 Ap 1 '17 350w

GATES, ELEANOR (MRS FREDERICK FERDINAND MOORE). Apron-strings. *$1.35 (2c) Sully & Kleinteich 17-29731

The two central figures in this story are Mrs Milo and her daughter Sue. Mrs Milo is the type of mother described by the author in a prefatory note: "The kind that does not plan for, or want, a child, but, having borne one, invariably takes the high air of martyrdom feeling that she has rendered the supreme service, and that, henceforth, nothing is too good for her." Her demands on her daughter have kept the girl from marriage, and as a woman of forty-five, Sue is finding what satisfaction she can in mothering an orphanage. In the end she finds a more intimate happiness in adopting one of the children for her own.

"As a character study, built around the leading character, the book presents reasonable claim to favorable notice. Mrs Milo, the managing and domineering mother, is a real literary creation."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 2 '18 260w

"Miss Gates's theme is an interesting one, but she treats it sentimentally and thereby fails to give it the effectiveness which is its due."

— + N Y Times 22:490 N 25 '17 470w

GATES, HERBERT WRIGHT. Recreation and the church. (Principles and methods of religious education) il *$1 (3c) Univ. of Chicago press 261 17-15665

There has been started a strong movement in the direction of making churches social centers. The experiments enlarged upon in this volume show the value of the wider use of churches. The writer who is director of religious education in the Brick church institute, Rochester, N.Y., contends that there is no more potent influence or favorable approach to the inner life of childhood and youth than is found in recreational interests and activities. He shows the religious educational value of play, shows how to go about studying the recreational needs of a community, offers a constructive recreational program, gives some typical church programs and devotes a chapter to equipment and organization.

A L A Bkl 14:156 F '18

"A bibliography of play and recreation enhances the value of this very useful handbook, which cannot fail to increase the efficiency of educational and recreational workers in the church and elsewhere." G. T.

+ Survey 39:327 D 15 '17 240w

GAUTIER, JUDITH. Memoirs of a white elephant; tr. from the French by S. A. B. Harvey. il *$1.50 (3½c) Duffield 16-23442

Judith Gautier, who was joint author with Pierre Loti of "The daughter of heaven," is an authority on oriental lore. She has written this book for children, allowing "Iravata," the white elephant, to tell his own story.

"Well told and unaffected."

+ A L A Bkl 13:269 Mr '17

+ Lit D 53:1562 D 9 '16 100w

"The excellent illustrations are the work of L. H. Smith and S. B. Kite."

+ R of Rs 55:102 Ja '17 60w

+ Spring'rd Republican p15 D 2 '16 160w

GAYLEY, CHARLES MILLS. Shakespeare and the founders of liberty in America. *$1.50 (2c) Macmillan 822.3 18-3

The writer says: "In this period of conflict, the sternest that the world has known, when we have joined heart and hand with Great Britain, it may profit Americans to recall how essentially at one with Englishmen we have always been in everything that counts. That the speech, the poetry, of the race are ours and theirs in common, we know—they are Shakespeare. But that the institutions, the law and the liberty, the democracy administered by the fittest, are not only theirs and ours in common, but are derived from Shakespeare's England, and are Shakespeare, too, we do not generally know or, if we have known, we do not always remember." The chapter headings suggest how the writer has pursued his novel idea: The foundations of liberty in America; Shakespeare and the liberals of the Virginia company; The tempest and an unpublished letter from Virginia; The leader of the liberal movement—Sir Edwin Sandys; Richard Hooker and the principles of American liberty; Shakespeare's views of the individual in relation to the state; Shakespeare and Hooker; The heritage in common: England, America, France; The meaning for us today.

"His association of Shakespeare with these ideas [suggested by chapter headings] of course takes it for granted that whenever any of his characters speak in the plays, there speak also the inmost thoughts and beliefs of the dramatist. This is a supposition too often made to prove that a dramatist or a poet is first of all a propagandist or a preacher when as a matter of fact he is neither. It overlooks the first principles of imaginative writing—that a poem, a play or a novel is a work written to present a certain phase of life in artistic form and not to promulgate a theory. If Shakespeare was preaching democracy in his plays then so much the less Shakespeare he. Despite the undoubted ingenuity and historical interest of Professor Gayley's arguments there are many of us who will remain perfectly willing to look upon Shakespeare as a man who wrote his plays with no other thought than to have them receive the approval and applause of the Elizabethan public." E. F. E.

— + Boston Transcript p11 D 12 '17 830w

R of Rs 57:216 F '18 90w

GEARY, BLANCHE. Handbook of the association cafeteria. il pa 50c Y.W.C.A. 642 17-20661

This handbook gives the purpose of a Y. W.C.A. cafeteria and outlines its organization, including committees, selection of premises, general equipment, staff and employees, menu, service and cleaning. It treats of business administration and under the heading Points in policy advises on such subjects as Emergency fund, Eight hour day, Outside business, etc. The book is compiled by those who know the needs of the workers whom the cafeteria is to serve and can detail clearly methods for meeting them.

GEHRS, JOHN HENRY. Productive agriculture. il *$1 Macmillan 630 17-14154

"The purpose of this book is to meet the need and the demand for a text that will standardize seventh- and eighth-grade agriculture. . . . Topics relating to productive agriculture and not topics about agriculture are given chief consideration. . . . The book contains a section of from four to eight chapters in length on each of the following big topics: "Farm crops," "Animal husbandry," "Soils," "Horticulture," and "Farm management." There is also a brief bibliography of material relating to each of these large topics. The laboratory exercises at the end of each chapter . . . can be done with a minimum amount of schoolroom equipment, the farm it, self furnishing the requisite laboratory. (School R) The author is associate professor of agriculture of the Warrensburg State normal school, Warrensburg, Mo.

GEHRs, JOHN HENRY—Continued

+ Ind 91:265 Ag 16 '17 40w
St Louis 15:330 S '17

"Anyone interested in texts in agriculture adapted to grades seven and eight or to the junior high school will be well paid for the time and effort required to give this book a careful consideration."

+ School R 25:532 S '17 180w

GEIKIE, SIR ARCHIBALD. Birds of Shakespeare. il *$1.25 Macmillan 322.3
(Eng ed 17-13372)

"In this charming essay the veteran geologist collects Shakespeare's references to birds, of which he names at least fifty species, and shows once more how intimate a knowledge of wild nature he had acquired in the woods and lanes of leafy Warwickshire."—Spec

Ath p432 S '16 90w

"It is all that it claims to be, and will fill a vacant place on the shelves of those who do not possess Mr J. E. Harting's standard work."

+ Nature 98:147 O 28 '16 430w

N Y Br Lib News 4:40 Mr '17

Sat R 123:sup10 Mr 31 '17 120w

"Twenty excellent woodcuts from Saunders's 'Manual of British birds' illustrate the book."

+ Spec 117:419 O 7 '16 70w

"This little book is enticing; one to be read by all who love either birds or Shakespeare or both."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p426 S 7 '16 1300w

GEIL, WILLIAM EDGAR. Adventures in the African Jungle hunting pigmies. il *$1.35 (2c) Doubleday 17-8202

"This book for boys is one of the volumes of "The true adventure series." The author is an explorer of note and the story is based on first-hand acquaintance with Africa. Billy Benson, a boy of about sixteen, accompanies his uncle on an exploring expedition into the heart of Africa. Their object is to discover a band of pigmies, supposed to inhabit a part of the jungle. Lions, leopards, elephants and other natives of the African forest play a part in their adventures. The young hero is refreshingly boyish. No feats of impossible prowess are attributed to him, and never does he outdo his uncle, the noted explorer, in sagacity or achievement.

GENEVOIX, MAURICE. 'Neath Verdun; tr. by H. Grahame Richards. *$1.60 (2½c) Stokes 940.91
(Eng ed 17-26253)

The author of this book was a second-year student at the École normale, Paris, in 1914. His book is a day-by-day account of the first months of the war, from August to October, 1914. Ernest Lavisse says in his introduction: "He supplies us with an invaluable picture of the war. In the first place, the writer is endowed with astonishing powers of observation; he sees all in a glance, he hears everything. The intense power of concentration he possesses enables him instantly to seize upon all essentials of a particular incident or scene, and so to harmonize them as to produce a picture true to life."

+ A L A Bkl 13:306 Ap '17

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 14 '17 250w

"His book is one of the real contributions of the war's writing. For here, for us to read and learn from, is something of the war itself."

+ N Y Times 22:34 F 4 '17 600w

"Perhaps it is well that the ghastly side of the war should not be tucked away as though it did not exist. Horror is treated here with a French power of rhetoric and insistence."

+ Spec 118:105 Ja 27 '17 150w

GEORGE, HEREFORD BROOKE. Genealogical tables illustrative of modern history. 5th ed. rev and enl *$2.50 Oxford 929.7 16-22139

"The 'Genealogical tables illustrative of modern history' first published by the late Rev. Hereford B. George more than forty years ago have long acquired and deserved an established position as a work of reference. They now appear in a fifth edition, revised and enlarged by Mr J. R. H. Weaver. The enlargement consists mainly in the continuation of the reigning houses down to their last changes and the insertion of their younger members; there is also added a list of the presidents of the United States of America."—Eng Hist R

"The size of the print and the general openness of the tables make them easy to consult and the book should enter upon a further career of usefulness."

+ Am Hist R 22:435 Ja '17 200w

"The work of correction has been carefully done; we have looked for facts omitted in the earlier editions and have found them duly inserted. . . . In the first three editions the tables were folded and mounted on guards, and the book was easy to handle; now that the tables are bound up flat and the book requires 2 ft. 8 in. of space to open out, it cannot be described as convenient for practical use." R. L. P.

+ Eng Hist R 31:660 O '16 450w

GEPHART, WILLIAM FRANKLIN. Principles of insurance. 2v ea *$1.50 (1½c) Macmillan 368 17-2500

"A discussion of life and fire insurance offered for classroom use in schools and colleges. . . . The author has had experience in the insurance business and in association with insurance organizations, as well as in teaching." (R of Rs) "There are two volumes, devoted, respectively, to Life Insurance and Fire Insurance, the former replacing the author's well-known earlier work, devoted mainly to life insurance, which has now been thoroughly revised, amplified, and brought down to date. The volume on fire insurance contains twelve chapters in which are treated such pertinent topics as the economics and business organization of fire insurance, hazards, rates and rating problems, the nature of the contract, adjustment of losses, fire protection, and the relation of the state to insurance." (Nation)

"Mr Gephart has well met the problem. His book is simple and readable and yet broad, and adequate to give not only an understanding of the fundamental principles but a great deal of the practical business side. The book avoids a difficulty which sometimes occurs when those outside of the business attempt to write about it; namely, the difficulty of supporting theories which, for practical reasons, are unworkable. The arrangement is a little unfortunate." W. M. Strong

+ Am Econ R 7:670 S '17 1100w (Review of v 1)

"It would be too much to claim that the author has entirely mastered a subject of which the depths have by no means been sounded by those who spend their lives in the work or that all of his statements would pass without challenge from underwriters, but it is certain that he has written a clear, interesting, and admirably balanced study of the principles of fire insurance." W. E. Mallalieu

+ Am Econ R 7:672 S '17 900w (Review of v 2)

+ A L A Bkl 13:376 Je '17

"The volume on life insurance is on the whole a contribution to the subject, the various topics being carefully arranged and the exposition clear. One may seriously object, however, to the issuance of a revised edition which does not follow the progress in the business in certain directions. The volume on fire insurance appears to possess certain serious defects as well as commendable features. The strongest criticism which can be advanced, viewing it in the light of a text, is its seeming lack of plan and arrangement of chapters. Prior to his work no adequate description of some of the more recent developments of the business was available. He has therefore rendered a service in producing a relatively up-to-date textbook. Secondly, he has incorporated to a greater degree than any other writer a discussion of fire insurance from the social viewpoint." Robert Riegel

+ Ann Am Acad 74:296 N '17 400w

"Though adapted to the purposes of the general reader, the business man, and the student, the volumes will, in all probability, find their chief use as textbooks, for which they seem excellently adapted. At the close of the various chapters are lists of references covering the main topics treated, and each volume contains a carefully selected general bibliography, including the standard works on both life and fire insurance."

+ Natlon 104:245 Mr 1 '17 230w

"Those seeking and those selling insurance would profit by this conservative statement of principles which fit the reader for his individual decision of moot points, which are frankly indicated and argued fairly."

+ N Y Times 22:174 Ap 29 '17 180w

"Heretofore it has been difficult to obtain material on this subject in convenient form for educational purposes. Most of it has been confined to government documents, official reports of insurance companies, published addresses, and pamphlets."

+ R of Rs 55:443 Ap '17 70w

"The author is professor of economics in Washington university."

St Louis 15:139 My '17 9w

"There are interesting chapters on the economics, business organization and, last but not least, the immense historic development of the insurance business."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Ag 30 '17 110w

GÉRALDY, PAUL. The war, Madame . . . ; tr. by Barton Blake. *75c (5c) Scribner

17-8886

This little story is merely an account of one day in the life of a French soldier who, after thirteen months of service, returns to Paris. His sensations on again finding himself in his loved city are described, and in conversations with two of his women friends scenes from the front are pictured.

"A lively, graceful, quite irresponsible and unreflecting narrative of a young soldier's last day of leave in Paris before returning to the front to be killed." C. M. Francis

+ Bookm 46:451 D '17 140w

"As we read his pages, we understand more clearly than ever before how it is possible for men to go through the ghastly struggle and not come out thoroughly embittered. . . This account seems to approach nearer to the probable mean of reality than any of the many war books that have already been written."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 4 '17 770w

"So different is it from the France and the Paris of which correspondents and returning war-workers of one sort or another have told us that, since it is written by a Frenchman, one marvels and wonders whether he is a better observer and a truer reporter than they."

N Y Times 22:172 Ap 29 '17 300w

St Louis 15:314 S 17 30w

GERARD, JAMES WATSON. My four years in Germany. il *$2 (2c) Doran 940.91

17-25143

The late ambassador to the German imperial court has written this account of his four years experience to prove to America that "we are in this war because we were forced into it," and that "unless Germany is beaten the whole world will be compelled to turn itself into an armed camp, until the German autocracy either brings every nation under its dominion or is forever wiped out as a form of government." (Foreword) Mr Gerard tells us about the political system in Germany, German militarism, German commerce, the Kaiser, the Crown prince, and various high officials of the government, and about his own diplomatic work, though he is necessarily silent on many things connected with this work. Some of the chapters are: Psychology and causes which prepared the nation for war; At Kiel just before the war; Prisoners of war; War charities; and The German people in war. There are a number of illustrations and several facsimile reproductions of documents, among them one of the much discussed telegram which the Kaiser gave Ambassador Gerard for transmission to President Wilson. The material of the book has appeared in the Philadelphia Ledger and the New York American.

"One must remember that the author has written for a large audience. From this point of view, Mr Gerard's light treatment is quite justified, as are also the journalistic, popular style, the frequent use of the personal pronoun, and perhaps even the reproductions of court invitations. For such a presentation will appeal to millions who would ignore a more formidable treatise. Unfortunately, the mechanics of the book are poorly handled." B. E. Schmitt

+ Am Hist R 23:398 Ja '18 1650w

A L A Bkl 14:56 N '17

"His book is a candid, unadorned, and convincing account of what has been going on in Germany during the war. His record is welcome in this permanent form."

+ Ath p683 D '17 190w

Reviewed by C. H. P. Thurston

Bookm 46:286 N '17 50w

+ Cleveland p130 D '17 140w

+ Dial 63:460 N 8 '17 230w

"From a literary point of view the book is a queer mixture, much of it the sort of thing that ordinary tourists turn out by the volume, part of diplomatic secrets of the highest importance which nobody else could have known. The book is poorly composed and carelessly revised, but that does not detract from its importance as a historical document of the first order."

+ Ind 92:486 D 8 '17 1250w

"It is in every respect an important historical document, despite the chatty and easy style in which it is written, and throws an illuminating light upon many dark places in European diplomacy and modes of thought. His book will furnish convincing proof, if any American still feels the need of proof, of the sinister intentions of the ruling powers in Germany, and of their utter disregard of all recognized conventions, ethical or political, in an effort to attain their ambitions."

+ Lit D 55:31 O 27 '17 1800w

+ Lit D 55:43 D 8 '17 250w

"We think the telling of this story was a service to the American people; and at a time when there is so much to be read that this is distinctly one of the books to be chosen. The description of German government and institutions is excellent; it would be difficult for the ordinary reader to find anywhere a better popular account. The most important chapters relate to diplomatic affairs, and to the attitude of Germany towards the American people."

+ Nation 105:484 N 1 '17 1750w

"In Mr Gerard's remarkable book there is an enlightening chapter which reveals, to some extent, how organized capital in Germany, aided by the state, is still seeking to dominate the world." T. E. Thorpe

+ Nature 100:361 Ja 10 '18 1900w

"All this variety gives the book, inevitably, a certain scrappiness of effect, but vastly increases its interest and value as a report upon another nation. Its report, by necessity, is one of superficial observation. Mr Gerard nowhere makes pretense of profound study of the German people or their affairs."

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

GERARD, JAMES WATSON—Continued

+ N Y Times 22:378 O 7 '17 1000w
Pittsburgh 22:762 N '17 50w

"Considering its source and timeliness, such a book would in any event have real significance, but there is a danger that the general reading public will seek that significance in the wrong place. The real value of what Mr Gerard has to tell us lies entirely aside from the personal equation. . . . Spicy as this book is, it leaves a somewhat tantalizing impression that the author has reserved a good deal of his most piquant matter for publication some time in the dim future." F. T. Cooper

+ Pub W 92:1383 O 20 '17 600w

"The volume carries with it its own justification. . . . There is a straightforward sincerity about this book that must impress all readers. While it condemns Germany, it does not appeal to the spirit of hatred." A. S.

+ R of Rs 56:528 N '17 800w
+ Spec 119:572 N 17 '17 170w

"The book is of more value from a historical viewpoint than as mere literature. The author has something to tell that the public wants to know and in such case substance takes precedence of form."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 4 '17 800w

"To English readers the most interesting pages in the book will probably be those in which the ambassador relates his efforts to alleviate the lot of British prisoners."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p517 N 15 '17 950w

GERMAN deserter's war experience; tr. by J. Koettgen. *$1 (1½c) Huebsch 940.91

17-13674

The author is a German Socialist and anti-militarist, who after fourteen months of fighting in Belgium and France escaped into Holland and came to America. His story was first published in the New Yorker Volkszeitung. He describes the entry into Belgium, the advance and retreat at the Marne, the beginning of trench warfare, the famous Christmas truce, etc. The translator says, "The chief value of this soldier's narrative lies in his destructive, annihilating criticism of the romance and fabled virtues of war." The author, in concluding, says, "Today I have recovered sufficiently to take up again in the ranks of the American Socialists the fight against capitalism. . . . A relentless struggle to the bitter end is necessary to show the ruling war-provoking caste who is the stronger, so that it no longer may be in the power of that class to provoke such a murderous war as that in which the working-class of Europe is now bleeding to death."

"Written with a strong anti-militarist and socialist bias."

A L A Bkl 13:443 Jl '17

"The writer's deep hatred of war and all its works, not only the actual bloodshed and cruelty, but also the unnatural and humiliating relations of men to officers in the German army itself, speaks in every page. The whole story is told with the vividness that comes of recent deep and indelible impressions of soul-stirring experiences."

+ Dial 63:101 O 25 '17 160w

"He accuses his officers of both deliberate cruelty and cowardice, giving instances in the advance on the Marne, and flight from it, to sustain his charges. This part of his book is an astounding revelation. He asserts on several occasions the men refused to obey orders to shoot wounded enemy soldiers and helpless civilians, and were more tortured than punished for such insubordination."

+ Ind 90:472 Je 9 '17 200w

"It will rekindle our determination not to become swamped in the war to the point where we forget our chief purpose—not defeat of Germany so much as defeat of war as an institution. . . . 'A German deserter's war experience,' with its directness and almost clumsy sincerity, is a chastening and thrilling book for all of us, but it is as a symbol of revolt that one will not wish to forget it." H. S.

+ New Repub 11:193 Je 16 '17 1050w

"The volume is the output of a very keen observer, a man who kept his wits about him in every possible situation and was able to recount what he saw afterwards. . . . The volume is one of the best descriptive works that we have yet seen on this subject. . . . Much praise is due the translator, Comrade J. Koettgen, for a careful and yet spirited account of war as seen through the eyes of a Socialist participant." J. W.

+ N Y Call p14 My 20 '17 1050w

N Y Times 22:306 Ag 19 '17 120w

Pittsburgh 22:681 O '17 50w

Pratt p40 O '17 40w

"The writer is a man of the people, a foreman miner, and tells his story straightforwardly, intelligently and without conscious art. . . .

Of widest interest are the detailed descriptions of the advance thru Belgium, the battle of the Marne and the retreat. There have been numerous accounts of these events by French witnesses and by newspaper men who have repeated the tales of participants, but, except for the official German account, this book is the first to come from that side."

+ Pub W 91:210 Ja 20 '17 150w

R of Rs 55:668 Je '17 80w

"Whether true or not—and the balance swings in favor of the affirmative, it is an absorbing story."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Je 13 '17 280w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p596 D 6 '17 650w

GEROULD, GORDON HALL, Peter Sanders, retired. *$1.50 (1½c) Scribner 17-11709

When his gambling house in New York was closed down, Peter Sanders became a wanderer. He was a gentleman of quiet tastes, and a lover of books, with a leaning toward the classics. He meets adventures in various parts of Europe, but his inclinations call him back to America, even tho his return means the hiding of his identity under a false name. Accompanied by his faithful servant, Henry, he becomes familiar with corners of his native land before unknown to him. He makes new friends too and comes to think better of his fellow men than he had in the old days when he saw them only thru a gambler's eyes. Finally when he is reinstated in New York, it is to find that he has become a new man and that the old ways no longer hold any charm for him.

"A leisurely tale 'gay without rapidity and adventurous without sensationalism.'"

+ A L A Bkl 11:60 N '17

"What we assist at is a gradual change in point of view and emphasis rather than a radical change of character." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:410 Je '17 650w

"This Mr Silcox is a very credible old gentleman. . . . The thing that is not quite believable is Peter Sanders. . . . We feel sure that, although many a novelist has done worse, Mr Gerould could have done far better."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 13 '17 300w

"Thoroughly to enjoy it, one should know that Mr Gerould is a college professor; his interest in ex-gamblers gains piquancy from this fact."

+ Dial 63:73 Jl 19 '17 330w

"The story (which is not, we suspect, without its foundation in fact) is in its way a romance, and long before we are done with him we have formed a proper romantic affection for its stout and aging hero."

+ Nation 104:580 My 10 '17 350w

"The novel is written with a sense of irony which gives it a certain pungency."

+ N Y Times 22:163 Ap 22 '17 300w

"The story is well written and gently humorous. The resemblance of Mr Sanders to a noted New York gambler lately deceased is striking."

+ Outlook 116:32 My 2 '17 60w
+ Spring'd Republican p8 My 8 '17 400w

GEROULD, KATHARINE (FULLERTON) (MRS. GORDON HALL GEROULD). Change of air. il *$1.25 Scribner 17-25861

"The book opens with a scene in the drawing rooms of Miss Cordelia Wheaton. Miss Wheaton, a rich woman, had a very large number of poor friends, and she had sent for them all to come to her house on a certain day. There they sit at the beginning of the first chapter: 'and they waited, unprotesting; for they were all poor.' At last, when the rooms are full, Miss Wheaton appears and makes the surprising announcement that she has decided to divide the greater part of her fortune among them at once, instead of doing it in her will. Each is to receive a certain sum—how much no one of the others will ever know. She carries out her plan, and the effect of this 'windfall' upon the lives and characters of some few of her beneficiaries, and ultimately upon Miss Wheaton herself, form the theme—or perhaps it would be better to say the themes—of the book."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 14:131 Ja '18

"To Walter Leaven we owe the story's rescue from bitter comedy to a finale of exquisite romance. It is his figure, treading devotedly towards its goal of self-realisation through self-devotion, that makes a story out of what might otherwise have been a mere group of satirical episodes." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:691 F '18 590w
+ Nation 105:695 D 20 '17 220w

"Though there are frequent fine penetrations in her account of people, and a sharp wit to clinch the penetration, she has a constant tendency to substitute the values of polite society for the values that a genuine artist would discern. Her bristling smartness, her complaisance, her snobbishness, are difficult traits to tolerate in a novelist of manners."

+ New Repub 13:223 D 22 '17 650w

"The book is very short, very clever, very cynical."

+ N Y Times 22:394 O 14 '17 800w

"A good story idea only moderately well carried out."

+ Outlook 117:386 N 7 '17 50w
+ Pittsburgh 22:749 N '17 30w

Reviewed by Doris Webb

+ Pub W 92:2028 D 8 '17 280w

"It is all very brilliant, but one shudders to see life chiseled with such delicate scalpels and with so sure and unshamed a pagan touch."

+ Spring'd Republican p17 N 13 '17 480w

GERRISH, FREDERIC HENRY. Sex-hygiene; a talk to college boys. (Present day problems ser.) *60c (8c) Badger, R: G. 612.6 17-13326

"In 1911 there was given to Bowdoin college a fund the income of which was to be devoted to the instruction of the students in the proper relations of the sexes. As a part of this instruction the following lecture has been given to the freshman class of each succeeding year. It has been given, also, in a number of other institutions for the education of young men and boys." (Preface) The lecturer is professor emeritus of surgery at Bowdoin college, and author of several standard medical books.

Cleveland p91 Jl '17 50w

"One of the most useful books of its kind. . . . It is plain and direct and is without an excess of detail. . . . Bowdoin college has announced that it is going to give a copy to every member of each freshman class from now on."

+ Spring'd Republican p15 Ag 26 '17 130w

GERSTENBERG, CHARLES W., and JOHN-SON, WALTER SEELY. Organization and control. (Modern business, v. 3) il Alexander Hamilton inst. 658 17-1816

"'Organization and control' deals not with the internal management and control of business units, but rather with the external organization and ownership of industrial enterprises and the control of their business policies. In other words, this is not a work on business management, but on the structure of the business unit. . . . The book approaches the subject largely from the legal standpoint, although there is nothing of a technical legal nature in the content. . . . The closing chapters deal with the questions growing out of concentration and combination in business. In them the author examines the causes that have led up to the present high degree of centralized control, traces the evolution of the 'trust' through the various forms which it has taken and outlines the advantages resulting from industrial consolidation. Illegal combinations are discussed and the book closes with a history of the law of monopolies and an analysis of recent legislation on the trust question."—Am Econ R

"It presents the subject in a remarkably clear and readable manner, illuminates the material with a number of well-selected business forms, and arouses interest by suggestive questions on hypothetical corporate problems." F. E. Armstrong

+ Am Econ R 7:648 S '17 380w
Pratt p23 Jl '17

GERSTER, ARPAD GEYZA CHARLES. Recollections of a New York surgeon. il $3.50 Hoeber 17-29633

"Born in Hungary in 1848, Dr Gerster came to this country in 1873 and settled for practice in New York city. His family origin was Swiss and his forebears were sturdy peasants or burghers, who did not fail to do their part in freeing Europe from the feudal subjection to the Hapsburg and Burgundian overlords. . . . He writes of the public service of his ancestors—of John Gerster of Kaufbeuren who held various offices in the Basel city government prior to 1532, when he was pensioned, of Ottmar Gerster, who commanded the peasant army in the war waged against Abbot Ulrich VIII of Sankt Gallen to gain liberation from the overlordship of the monastery. . . . In 1866 Gerster entered the University of Vienna as a medical student. There he remained seven years and went through all the experiences of student life, including the duel requirements. . . . His surgical practice in New York began in a very humble way, and for some years was confined to work among the very poor. Later he won renown and wealth. The closing section of his book is devoted to 'diversions.'"—Boston Transcript

"And he writes delightfully of music, sketching, wood-carving and etching." H. S. K.
+ Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '17 650w

"Throughout the book there is evident a genial, eager personality whose keen interest in the world and all its people, in nature and all her manifestations, has filled the days of his life with enjoyment. Particularly wholesome reading will the book be for young medical students and practitioners."

+ N Y Times 22:573 D 23 '17 480w

GIBBONS, MRS HELEN DAVENPORT (BROWN). Red rugs of Tarsus. *$1.25 (3c) Century 956 17-10364

An account of the Armenian massacre of 1909. The author, with her husband, Herbert Adams Gibbons, was spending the year 1909 in Tarsus and teaching in a mission school. Since then she has tried to put the experience of that year out of her mind. "But," she says, "recent events in Armenia brought it all back again. My indignation, and a sense of duty and of pity, transcended all personal feelings. I lived again that night in Tarsus, when we—seven defenseless women, our one foreign man . . . and 4,800 Armenians waited our turn at the hands of the Kurds." The story is told from the letters written at that time to her mother in America.

GIBBONS, MRS. H. D.—Continued

+ A L A Bkl 14:22 O '17

"She gives bright and humorous descriptions of her new experiences, which, however, soon cease to be merely amusing. The horror of an Armenian massacre converts the airy narrative into a grim recital of terrible deeds."

+ Dial 62:447 My 17 '17 200w

"Unfortunately many of these letters to Mrs Gibbons' mother contain information which must have interested her mother greatly, but which will seem irrelevant to the public, or trivial, when thought of in relation to such great happenings."

Ind 91:78 JI 14 '17 70w

+ Lit D 54:2006 Je 30 '17 150w

"A fine and significant book. . . . Of the moments of her own peril Mrs Gibbons has written with a simplicity, almost an unconsciousness, that is magnificently fine and dramatic to read, now that it is all over, and she and her husband were saved. But the record as a whole, including those terrible hours with the rest, is one of stark, close, immediate realities, known and faced. The book will give the American reader food for more than one kind of thought."

+ N Y Times 22:201 My 20 '17 500w

"A very vital, realistic, graphic portrayal of one of the terrible tragedies of modern history."

+ Outlook 116:627 Ag 22 '17 60w

Pittsburgh 22:527 Je '17 50w

St Louis 15:186 Je '17

"The deposition of Abdul Hamid and the triumph of the Young Turks occurred while the family was at Mersina, and the popular impression that the new régime was more tolerant is contradicted by what Mrs Gibbons writes of the early days of its intolerance."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Je 24 '17 450w

GIBBONS, HERBERT ADAMS. Reconstruction of Poland and the Near East; problems of peace. *$1 (3c) Century 940.91 17-21742

"These chapters were written as a series of articles for the Century Magazine. At the time of the Russian revolution and the intervention of the United States, the chapters on Poland and Constantinople had already been published and the others were in print." (Foreword) Mr Gibbons treats some events in outline only, and makes references that assume the reader's knowledge of modern European history. His chapters all deal with the wrongs of small nations, whom he shows to have been ill-treated by the Entente allies as well as by Germany, and with the way the small nations should be treated to secure a durable peace. Despite his "horrors and detestation of what Jews and Poles and Armenians and Belgians and Serbians are being made to suffer," he does not think that the punishment of and a change in the political status of Russia, Turkey, Germany, and Austria-Hungary would prevent the renewal in the very near future of wrongs inflicted upon small and weak nations, but believes the formula for the readjustment of the world to be "government by the consent of the governed." He therefore argues that the reconstituted Polish state must not be subject in any way to either Germany or Russia and that its boundaries must be determined by ethnological, economic and political, rather than historical, considerations; that Constantinople must be considered "in the light of principle and not as a pawn"; that the peace conference must prove the intention of Europe to put "local Mohammedan interests ahead of European interest in Mohammedan countries"; and that the Entente powers must "guarantee the Balkan peninsula to the Balkan peoples," as otherwise "Germany will keep the hegemony in the Balkans that she has already won."

A L A Bkl 14:19 O '17

"The book interprets for us the passionate racial desires for freedom and the inalienable right to enjoy that freedom, of all the minor weaker states now in the whirlpool of war." S. A.

Boston Transcript p6 S 12 '17 410w

+ Cleveland p138 D '17 60w

"The author writes from long and intimate knowledge of eastern European politics, and his suggestions are worthy of the earnest attention of statesmen and diplomats." F: A. Ogg

+ Dial 63:583 D 6 '17 520w

Ind 91:475 S 22 '17 250w

+ Lit D 55:46 D 29 '17 370w

"The attitude of the writer is rather that of a thoughtful observer than an incisive critic. He has no definite solution to offer for any of the problems which are sure to plague mankind after peace negotiations shall have begun."

+ — Nation 105:609 N 29 '17 500w

"Mr Gibbons is the author of two recent and very valuable works. 'The new map of Africa' and 'The new map of Europe.' In the present work he departs from his special forte of describing what has happened in the way of territorial changes to suggest changes that may happen in the future. . . . The value of the work consists far more in the information given regarding the past status of these countries than in what he suggests for the future. . . . In his past work he was on sure ground, in this it is unavoidably different." J. W.

+ — N Y Call p15 S 2 '17 400w

"Mr Gibbons gives a lucid and vigorous presentation of the issues at stake in Poland and the Near East, pointing out that if the war is to continue in the character of a struggle for democracy against autocracy, the issues must be defined to meet the requirements of democracy. . . . In his point of view he is accurately representative of American nationalism."

+ N Y Times 22:306 Ag 19 '17 540w

"A useful work of historical reference and suggestion. It should have an index."

+ — Outlook 117:26 S 5 '17 360w

Pittsburgh 22:825 D '17 90w

"An important contribution to the literature on American foreign relations emphasizes that the principles of American policy concerning the Near East are fundamentally and necessarily different from those of our allies. . . . The author sets right misad public opinion in this country concerning the nature of Panislamism and the Islam conception of the state." Bruno Lasker

+ Survey 38:550 S 22 '17 720w

GIBBONS, JAMES, cardinal. Retrospect of fifty years. 2v *$2 (1½c) Murphy, J: 282 17-88

These two volumes contain a selection from the essays and sermons of Cardinal Gibbons. His introduction expresses the belief that they may be of historical importance as a record of the times in which he has lived. He says "I have lived a long time, and I have lived through a very critical time. Not only have I held office many years, but I have held office during a time of transition, when the old order was changed." A large part of the first volume is devoted to the Vatican council (1869-1870), of which Cardinal Gibbons is the last surviving member. Other miscellaneous papers of general interest included in the two volumes are: The Knights of labor; The church and the republic; Irish immigration to the United States; Patriotism and politics; Will the American republic endure?

"The reader will not find in this book any aids to an exact knowledge of historic facts, nor will the non-Catholic find any arguments to persuade him to join the church, but he will feel that the country has been very fortunate to have had a man of broad sympathies, of generous temper, of great patience and Christian charity at the head of the Catholic church in America during the last fifty years." H: D. Sedgwick

Am Hist R 22:887 JI '17 1050w

"Of interest to both Catholics and Protestants alike."

+ A L A Bkl 13:285 Ap '17

"He was already a priest during the Civil war, followed Abraham Lincoln's body in procession when it was brought to Baltimore, and has been personally acquainted with most of the American presidents since Lincoln's death."
+ Ath p255 My '17 120w

"The essay on the Knights of labour is one of the most important, as the part played by Cardinal Gibbons in their behalf is one of his noblest achievements. . . . In every essay, the character of the man is unconsciously made clear. And one arises from such reading with the conviction that this man is greater than any of his writings or deeds, and that such a man is one of the greatest assets of a nation or a church." F. P. Lyons, C. S. P.
+ Bookm 45:193 Ap '17 1000w

"Many of the papers and addresses embraced in the 'Retrospect' deal with civic affairs. . . . In these we get an ineffaceable impression of the distinguished author as the type of the militant citizen who rebukes the wrong and defends the right, and yet through all retains an unshakable faith in his country and its institutions which glows like a torch to guide all who call themselves Americans."
+ Cath World 104:689 F '17 800w
+ Lit D 54:911 Mr 31 '17 950w
R of Rs 55:667 Je '17 80w

GIBBS, GEORGE FORT. Secret witness. il
*$1.50 Appleton 17-22296

"The author, in an explanatory final chapter, seems to claim that some evidence exists of the truth of the incidents described in the novel as preceding the assassination of the Austrian archduke at Sarajevo. According to this theory, the German Kaiser and the Archduke had formed a secret alliance in which, after the death of Emperor Francis Joseph, they were to divide between them Austria, Serbia, Poland, and other territory, the Archduke to hold the eastern section and to found a dynasty through his children, whose right to succeed him was denied by Austria. The story gives an Austrian origin to the plot and assassination. The secret interview between the Kaiser and Archduke is overheard by a young Austrian countess and a young English diplomat who are in love with each other and who conceive it to be their duty to report the matter—one to the Austrian emperor, the other to the English ambassador. Out of this naturally come plots and counterplots and adventures of startling character."—Outlook

A L A Bkl 14:95 D '17

+ Boston Transcript p11 O 6 '17 300w

"Not so skillfully written as Buchan's 'Greenmantle,' but of similar interest."

+ Cleveland p128 N '17 70w

Dial 64:78 Ja '17 '18 60w

"A technically adroit, plausible and attractively written story."

+ New Repub 12:226 S 22 '17 200w

"There is plenty of variety in the scenes which are laid in many and very different places, including a Turkish harem and an ancient, supposedly abandoned castle high up in the Tatra range of the Carpathians. . . . A swift-moving, entertaining story with an ingenious plot."

+ N Y Times 22:343 S 16 '17 320w

Outlook 117:142 S 26 '17 160w

Pratt p51 O '17 10w

"A second 'Prisoner of Zenda' in its headlong pace, picturesque situations, adventure and love interest."

+ R of Rs 56:556 N '17 200w

GIBBS, PHILIP. Battles of the Somme. *$2
(2c) Doran 940.91 17-3464

This is Mr Gibbs's second war book. "The soul of the war" was written while he was a free-lance journalist in France and Belgium. He is now an officially accredited correspondent with the British armies in the field. In this book he has brought together articles written in the three months following July 1, 1916. He is one of the most brilliant men writing from the front. He kept close to the fighting forces, and makes the daily life of the men in action very vivid. There are two folding maps.

+ A L A Bkl 13:345 My '17

"Mr Gibbs's book is the war. . . . The reader sees and senses the horror and the nastiness and the incredible folly of it all; but, shining through the sombreness, the glory of those golden lads who, knowing the war and hating it like the hell it is, went steadfastly forward into the flames with smiling eyes and a jest on their lips." A. R. Dodd

+ Bookm 45:196 Ap '17 600w

"No man who writes from the front writes more sensitively than does Philip Gibbs. . . . His best pictures are of men." W. A. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 29 '17 950w

+ Ind 90:472 Je 9 '17 140w

+ Lit D 54:1708 Je 2 '17 550w

+ New Repub 10:sup16 Ap 21 '17 550w

"If Mr Gibbs can see the saving humors in the warring days, he can see the hideousness, too, and the fineness, and the tenderness that so often goes hand in hand with the heroism. It is because he can see all of these things—and makes us see them—that his book is so good."

+ N Y Times 22:57 F 18 '17 500w

+ Outlook 116:75 My 9 '17 50w

Pratt p40 O '17 20w

+ Spec 118:239 F 24 '17 600w

"The two excellent maps appended to the book, while they fulfil the purpose of their insertion by recording the progress made in the early weeks of the battle, are of no use in following the present movement. The Germans have been backed clean off them."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Mr 13 '17 550w

"His record appeared from day to day, in either the Daily Telegraph or the Daily Chronicle. . . . On the tanks Mr Gibbs speaks with a certain guarded enthusiasm. . . . 'If we had enough of them—and it would be a big number—trench warfare would go for ever and machine-gun redoubts would lose their terror.'"

+ The Times [London] Lt Sup p38 Ja 25 '17 700w

GIBBS, WINIFRED STUART. Minimum cost of living. *$1 Macmillan 331.83 17-10221

"This work is based on a methodical study of the food habits, as compared with the scientifically-estimated food requirements, of a number of New York families cared for by the Association for improving the condition of the poor; this study seems to have succeeded in multiplying the effectiveness of the money spent in relieving want, and as an unintentional byproduct food economies are suggested which are undoubtedly feasible on a larger scale. The contribution of the book to present needs lies in these statistics of food use and food needs."—Spring'd Republican

"An accurate laboratory contribution to family budget literature, of use to every student of social conditions. Further, it demonstrates the practicability of using the family budget as a lever to raise the living standards both of dependent and of independent families, and will, therefore, be of service to every social worker." W. E. Clark

+ Am Econ R 7:665 S '17 500w

Reviewed by Florence Nesbitt

Am J Soc 23:277 S '17 60w

A L A Bkl 14:6 O '17

"It must be kept in mind, however, in reading this book that the budgets given are not to be set up as standards for the cost of living. The clothing estimate is admittedly inadequate even when eked out by gifts of clothing from relations." N. D. H.

+ Ann Am Acad 72:237 Jl '17 90w

"While primarily a book for charity visitors and district nurses, it should interest all social workers for it records with modesty a fine piece

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

GIBBS, WINIFRED STUART—Continued
of constructive work to help families left without an adult male wage-earner, to spend their incomes wisely."

- + Cleveland p77 Je '17 60w
- Dial 63:351 O 11 '17 120w
- J Pol Econ 25:1059 D '17 60w

"Of peculiar interest, now that the war has given prominence to the question of food-economy."

- + Nation 105:272 S 6 '17 360w
- N Y Br Lib News 4:90 Je '17 50w
- Pittsburgh 22:689 O '17 40w
- Pratt p25 O '17 20w

Reviewed by Graham Lusk

- + Science n's 46:13 Jl 6 '17 230w

"The explanatory text is rather incoherently assembled, but there are enough figures in handy form to give the amateur economist a good working basis."

- + Spring'd Republican p8 My 3 '17 440w

"It gives concrete evidence for the philanthropist, the law-maker, and the employer regarding the now undeniable interrelation between human progress and the minimum wage."

L. E. Mendel

- + Survey 38:331 S 15 '17 200w

GIBSON, CHARLES R. War inventions and how they were invented. il *$1 Lippincott 355 (Eng ed 17-1945)

"An attractive book which answers a good many of the questions—about guns and shells and range-finding, for instance—which the layman is always asking himself or others equally ignorant." (Spec) "Contents: How guns were invented; How guns were made to shoot straight; Guns that fire 1,000 shots per minute; Giant guns; What is an explosive? How shells were invented; How we came to make iron ships; Ships that go under the sea; Some questions about submarines; About the deadly torpedo; How torpedoes and mines are exploded; A very dangerous occupation; The eye of the submarine; Measuring the distance to the enemy; Ships that go up in the air; War in the air." (Pittsburgh)

- + Pittsburgh 22:124 Mv '17 80w

"Mr Gibson is not afraid to begin at the beginning and explain the very elements of gunnery and torpedo-work, and he has a clear and pleasant style."

- + Spec 117:sup685 D 2 '16 60w

GIBSON, HUGH. Journal from our legation in Belgium. il *$2.50 (21c) Doubleday 940.91 17-29362

This volume is the private journal of the first secretary to the American legation in Brussels "jotted down hastily from day to day in odd moments, when more pressing duties would permit." (Intro.) It runs from July 4 to December 31, 1914. Appended to it as a final chapter is an article on the case of Miss Cavell, which has appeared in the World's Work. "Much material has been eliminated as of little interest. Other material of interest has been left out because it cannot be published at this time." (Intro.) Most of the matter about the early history of the Commission for relief in Belgium has been eliminated, because Mr Gibson felt that his record of it was inadequate and knew that Dr Vernon Kellogg was to publish an authoritative account of the Commission's work. There are numerous illustrations from photographs. Among these are portraits of Edith Cavell, Herbert C. Hoover and Cardinal Mercier. There is no index.

- + A L A Bkl 11:89 D '17
- + Cleveland p130 D '17 100w

"This is one of the best books which the war has given us. The writing is not beautiful or fine, but the story is so surpassingly good that it never is tiresome or dull."

- + Nation 105:665 D 13 '17 2350w

"What one gleams from this book, even more than the sensations of Belgium invaded—amplified as they are by numerous photographs and proclamations—is a pronounced impression of the Germany that invaded her, the Germans that went to make up that formidable force which Mr Gibson observes so sensibly, with such disintegrating critical gaze." F. H.

- + New Repub 13:101 N 24 '17 1750w

"In this long and absorbing record of early war days there is much to clear up perplexities and to give us new facts and new light on old knowledge. . . . Simple, vivid, concrete, informative, it is to repeat, a book that every American ought to read."

- + N Y Times 22:439 O 28 '17 1500w

"His knowledge of the mind and spirit of the invaded, coupled with his power to portray the Germans, renders his narrative unusually absorbing and convincing."

- + Pittsburgh 22:826 D '17 80w

"This is one of those exceptionally privileged volumes which make the great mass of current war literature seem tame and commonplace." F. T. Cooper

- + Pub W 92:2025 D 8 '17 450w

"It forms a vivid and convincing story of what went on in Belgium during the first year of the war. It should be read by all who have any remaining doubts as to the spirit and intent of the German administration in Belgium."

- + R of Rs 57:101 Ja '18 170w

"The poignant merit of this book consists, not in the novelty of the facts, which are but too familiar, but in the authority of the writer."

- + Sat R 124:506 D 22 '17 1300w

GIBSON, WILFRID WILSON. Livelihood; dramatic reveries. *$1.25 Macmillan 821 17-1621

Mr Gibson has brought together twenty of his recent poems. They are narratives of humble life, stories of men and women who, "in spite of everything," have learned "to take their luck through life and find it good." They bring out some of those imperishable qualities in human nature which neither hardship nor poverty nor war has power wholly to destroy.

- + A L A Bkl 13:391 Je '17

- + Ath p290 Ap '17 270w

"He is truly a poet of the people. . . . To be a poet of the people, the people must understand you; they must do more, they must know you understand them." W. S. B.

- + Boston Transcript p7 Ja 20 '17 1600w

"The muse of Mr Gibson drowns in 'Livelihood.' . . . Equally unfortunate is the lapse of that faculty of enlargement which gave compass and vista to those low-life themes which cramp the unsympathetic or unimaginative mind. Comparatively speaking, the persons in 'Livelihood' are passive, and their sorrows oppress rather than excite us. Exceptions occur, or the volume would hardly be Mr Gibson's. 'The news' is an affecting though diluted story, and 'The old nail shop' illustrates the resurgence of vigor." O. W. Firkins

- + Nation 105:66 Jl 19 '17 350w

"Not that Gibson is faultless; he has at times a distressing tendency to take the phrase or word that comes first into his head; he does not always labor until he has secured the inevitable and creative phrase, as, for instance, Robert Frost usually does. But this does not detract from the beauty he often achieves, or his significance as a poet of labor." Clement Wood

- + N Y Call p14 Ap 29 '17 660w

"Very tender and gentle is Mr Gibson's touch upon life in these poems, wherein he sees only the solemn glory in each humble soul and has no eyes for its baseness."

- + N Y Times 22:14 Ja 14 '17 900w

- + R of Rs 55:211 F '17 50w

"Though these tales in verse are not poetry in the fullest and highest sense, though they are too merely individual and too photographic for that, yet they are what every one may well be grateful for. . . . There is not a dull page in them; the book is a compound of constant cleverness, much sympathy, some imagination, scarcely any music of speech."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p79 F 15
17 1300w

"The chief defect in the book is a want of the joy of life; there is a sombreness over it all; there is resignation rather than happiness. The chief delight of his men and women is in the remembering of past days. It may be that 'Between the lines' gives a clue to this; the shadow of the war has not yet fallen upon us." E: B. Reed

+ Yale R n s 6:862 J1 '17 150w

GIBSON, WILFRID WILSON. Poems (1904-1917). il *$2.25 Macmillan 821 17-24679

The publishers state that "here is brought together in one volume all of Mr Gibson's writings which he wishes to preserve." Contents: Akra the slave; Stonefolds; Daily bread; Womenkind; Fires; Thoroughfares; Borderlands; Battle; Friends; Livelihood.

A L A Bkl 14:66 N '17

"His work is simple, rough-hewn and frequently unbeautiful, but his sympathies penetrate to the innermost heart of humble life."

+ Cleveland p121 N '17 60w

"It is, of course, too early to attempt a placing of Mr Gibson. For the present it is enough to say that he has developed a style peculiarly effective, and valuable too for its influence on contemporary poetry. Mr Gibson has clearly proved that poetry can deal with the commonplaces of daily life,—with the bitter and trivial and powerful and universal commonplaces of human consciousness,—and do it with force and beauty." Conrad Aiken

+ Dial 63:453 N 8 '17 700w

"Such sketches of the individual soldier in the trenches as make up the section 'Battle' are so brief, so compact, so single in their purpose that every lyric suggests the flight of a bullet. And, like bullets, these war poems either hit altogether or not at all. They are all perfect; the three or four of them are perfect failures. . . . In war and peace alike, Gibson selects by preference the themes that are commonplace or even disagreeable and makes them splendid by revealing the heroism and kindness which lie deep in the hearts of common folk."

+ Ind 92:62 O 6 '17 250w

Lit D 55:32 N 3 '17 120w

"He has diction, but hardly phrase; he has passion, but hardly drama; he has humanity, but hardly character. He is concise, but is prodigal of concision. A master of point when he wills, he keeps that mastery in habitual abeyance. Yet so abounding, so dominating, are his diction, his passion, his humanity, that the negations, in the hour of contact, are scarcely credible or visible." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 106:89 Ja 24 '18 730w

"Wilfrid Wilson Gibson gets into these idylls the kindness of the English folk. Through his work we see England, not as a great imperial system, but as a not too prosperous nationality where a laborious, poorly rewarded folk love their soil and love their kind." Padraic Colum

+ New Repub 13:sup11 N 17 '17 1000w

"What he has done, here grouped together, makes him one of labor's strongest voices; we are justly proud of him." Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p16 Ja 19 '18 650w

"Like Wordsworth, Mr Gibson has a plain, severe way of writing which degenerates only too often into aridity and baldness; like Wordsworth, too, he is almost exclusively interested in the lives of the simple and the poor." There, unfortunately, the resemblance stops."

— N Y Times 22:383 O 7 '17 450w

GIDDINGS, HOWARD ANDREW, comp. Handbook of military signaling. il *60c Appleton 623.7 17-28811

A revised edition of a handbook published in 1896 with the title "Instructions in military signaling." The preface says, "The changes in codes and signaling systems have been so extensive that the handbook is in effect a new one. The signal codes, conventional signals, letter codes, emergency signals, etc., are taken from the Signal book, U.S. army, 1916."

"Useful, compact little volume."

+ Nation 106:120 Ja 31 '18 40w

N Y Br Lib News 4:187 D '17 10w

R of Rs 57:102 Ja '18 20w

GILBERT, ARTHUR WITTER, and others. Potato. (Rural science ser.) il *$1.50 Macmillan 635 17-10445

"The author states in his preface that the book is intended to give brief and practical suggestions on the growing, breeding and marketing of potatoes." (Science) "Mr Dean is a grower of potatoes on a large scale and has studied the business of potato growing in all parts of the United States. His chapters in the book deal with the practical work of planting and cultivating, Dr Barrus's with the diseases of the potato and how to treat them, and Dr Gilbert's with the different varieties and what each needs in the way of soil and care." (N Y Times)

"Unquestionably one of the most important agricultural books of the year."

+ Agricultural Digest 2:504 Je '17 60w

+ A L A Bkl 13:433 J1 '17

Cleveland p95 J1 '17 30w

"Has the usual solid merits of the volumes in Professor Bailey's Rural science series. Of timely value is the chapter on the problems of marketing and storage."

+ Nation 105:154 Ag 9 '17 550w

+ N Y Times 22:165 Ap 29 '17 130w

Pratt p21 J1 '17 20w

St Louis 15:174 Je '17

"This publication, in addition to being up-to-date in its cultural directions, devotes considerably more attention to the subject of potato breeding than any of our preceding American treatises on the potato. . . . The discussion of potato diseases and their control is clear and convincing and should prove very helpful to both the farmer and the student. A chapter on 'Markets, marketing and storage' is both suggestive and helpful, as is also that on the cost of growing potatoes." W: Stuart

+ Science n s 45:462 My 11 '17 300w

GILBERT, GEORGE HOLLEY. Jesus for the men of today; when science aids religion. *$1 Doran 232 17-17183

"'Jesus: for the men of today,' by Prof. George H. Gilbert, is a life of Christ in story form. The main facts of the gospel narrative are made to live again amid the homely human surroundings of Galilee and Judea."—Ind

"It reveals the human and lovely character of Jesus with the power of a poet's interpretation; it discloses the soul of the writer as well, and the vision is most beautiful. The book must have been written originally more or less in blank verse or else the writer unconsciously pens prose that admits scanning."

+ Bib World 50:315 N '17 210w

"The ample historical and archeological knowledge of the author guarantee the accuracy of the picture, and the characters are sketched with the modern touches of realism."

+ Ind 91:354 S 1 '17 70w

GILBERTSON, HENRY STIMSON. County—the "dark continent" of American politics. $2 National short ballot organization 352 17-12496

"Since 1910, when the American political science association gave the county a place on the program of its annual meeting, a number of valuable studies of the county have been made. . . . The work under review by H. S. Gilbertson, secretary of the New York short ballot organization, is the first attempt to set forth within the covers of a single book 'the outlines of a very real and important "county problem.'" The purpose of the work, as stated in the preface, is to stimulate a 'much wider and more thorough research into the subject than has yet been attempted' and 'to throw a new light upon the "democratic experiment" in America.' Within the first 119 pages the author presents his 'indictment of the county.' This is followed (86 pages) by a constructive program of county reform. An appendix of 77 pages contains a number of valuable constitutional and legislative documents relating to county government. . . . A comprehensive bibliography and an adequate index enhance the value of the book."—Am Pol Sci R

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

GILBERTSON, HENRY STIMSON—Continued

A L A Bkl 14:6 O '17

Reviewed by O. C. Hormell

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:587 Ag '17 650w

+ Cleveland p107 S '17 20w

"The political student and worker will find this book truly useful, the more so if he keep in mind how easy it is whenever a bad spot is found in officialdom to assault the governmental system."

+ Ind 90:555 Je 23 '17 80w

Pratt p9 O '17 40w

"Since Mr Gilbertson began the inquiry, something has been done here and there towards untangling the county knot, for example, the work of the Public efficiency society of Cook county, Ill., the Westchester research bureau of New York, and the Tax association of Alameda county in California—and the results of his work justify a degree of optimism for the future."

+ R of Rs 56:326 S '17 210w

St Louis 15:170 Je '17

GILMAN, STEPHEN. Principles of accounting. 33 LaSalle extension univ. 657 16-15136

"Principles of accounting," for trained book-keepers, is a complete discussion, made clearer by careful illustration, of the forms and values of accurate accounting in its modern meaning where the aim of the business man is not merely a balancing of accounts, but such a comparison of facts and values as will give him the truest estimate of his business transactions."—ind

"On the whole, it may be said that the book does not undertake to advance new theories but to present clearly the principles underlying the best accounting practice. The point of view is modern, the treatment comprehensive and usually adequate, and the style simple and clear. Effective use is made of charts, examples, problems, and summaries. . . . The author's acquaintance with accounting theory, however, is evidently not equalled by his knowledge of economic theory, else why say: 'In a natural state, water may be obtained without effort; hence it has no utility?'" C. C. Huntington

+ Am Econ R 7:133 Mr '17 1500w

+ Ann Am Acad 72:228 JI '17 100w

+ Ind 87:212 Ag 14 '16 60w

GIRAULT, ARTHUR. Colonial tariff policy of France; ed. by C. Gide. *$2.50 Oxford 337 (Eng ed 16-23596)

"This is one of the two initial publications issued by the Division of economics and history of the Carnegie endowment for international peace; the other being Grunzel's 'Economic protectionism.' . . . The book gives a narrative and critical account of the colonial policy of France. A first part, comprising about half the contents, gives a historical sketch of that policy. The second and concluding part takes up the present colonies one by one—the small colonies, Indo-China, Madagascar and dependencies, West Africa, Equatorial Africa, Algeria, Tunis, and Morocco—and describes and discusses their present relations with the mother country."—Am Econ R

"In style and arrangement it is a typical and creditable example of French scholarly work. It is fluently and clearly written, well arranged, supplied with convenient introductions and summaries; and there is a good index. The passages that involve criticism and reasoning are sensible, but cannot be said to show a thorough grasp of general economic theory or of the principles of international trade." F. W. Taussig

+ Am Econ R 7:155 Mr '17 900w

"Professor Girault is at his best in the historical and descriptive parts of the work. A certain looseness and inconsistency characterizes his generalizations and his deductions as well as his reasoning as to the policy which France of to-day should pursue towards some of her colonies. . . . The real merit of this work lies in the analysis of the causes of the colonial tariff policies under the changing governments of France and in a careful presentation of the effect of these policies upon the economic status of each colony; as such it forms an important contribution to the study of the subject." Simon Litman

+ Am Hist R 22:94 JI '17 600w

Reviewed by R. S. MacElwee

Ann Am Acad 71:234 My '17 470w

St Louis 15:357 O '17 60w

"The severity and lucidity of the main argument, the incontrovertibility of the historical facts built into the exposition, and the wealth of the statistical evidence certainly establish its title to be a work of reference for historians, economists, and the public; but it would require more than one expert thoroughly to sift the premises and test the conclusions stated with moderation but with an impressive conviction by the author. Professor Girault is handling a subject the general principles of which he had worked out in his 'Principles de colonisation et de legislation coloniale,' and he is careful to correlate the specific analysis of the French system with the wider principles of colonial policy in general. . . . Professor Girault has provided the French delegates at the future conference with an indispensable dossier."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p59 Ja 25 '17 1900w

GLADSTONE, WILLIAM EWART. Speeches; descriptive index and bibliography; with a preface by Viscount Bryce. *12s 6d Methuen & co., London 308 (Eng ed 17-14978)

"Mr Bassett has compiled an invaluable supplement to Lord Morley's 'Life of Gladstone,' comprising an index to his speeches from June 3rd, 1833, to May 4th, 1897, and a bibliography of his writings. . . . The index is briefly annotated and gives the length of each speech. Fourteen of the most notable orations are reprinted in full, with useful introductions by Mr Herbert Paul. They include his attack on Palmerston's foreign policy (1850), his denunciation of the treaty of Berlin (1873), and his famous opening speech in the Midlothian campaign of 1879, expressing a detestation of the Turk. His first Budget speech and his speech introducing the first Home rule bill are of much historic interest."—Spec

N Y Br Lib News 4:88 Je '17 80w

+ Spec 118:417 Ap 7 '17 250w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p569 N 30 '16 650w

GLAENZER, RICHARD BUTLER. Beggar and king. *$1 Yale univ. press 811 17-29491

Contains among its best pieces "Masters of earth," "Sure, it's fun!" "The golden plover," "Measure for measure," and "April's fool." A handful among the sheaf are steeped in orientalism. Others sing loud and exultantly, drowning "sneers of humankind." Some are war songs. One of the latter, "The new beatitude," with a few strokes sets ruined Picardy and Poland before the eye, where "rasps through the reek this whisper raucous and low, Blessed are they which died a year ago!"

"Mr Glaenzler's volume is somewhat of a disappointment. With a few exceptions the works he has chosen to include are of ordinary significance. It is his workmanship rather than theme or conception that does him the greater credit. 'Sure, it's fun!' one of the recent flashing bits of verse brought forth by the war shows how well Mr Gleazer can succeed in being poetical; and the charming poem "To a vireo" . . . proves that when he abandons himself to light moods he can sing effectively and graciously. It is when he strives to be more ambitious, to sound the vague and complex depths of human experience that he fails to satisfy and merely irritates the reader by producing clever workmanship." W. S. B.

— + Boston Transcript p6 D 22 '17 250w

"The workmanship is thorough, but the volume seems somewhat to lack the freshness that makes much of today's poetry interesting."

— + N Y Times 23:33 Ja 27 '18 140w

"He is thoroughly original in everything he writes, with the possible exception of lyrics which only in notable cases differ radically in the year 1917. Mr Gleazer delights in cynicism. His lyrics are tinged and also tarnished by this trait. Try as he may to climb to the subjective heights of lyricists, there is always some repelling incident to make him slip. For this reason he never effervesces nor thrills with emotional ecstasy. The coquette amuses him. There is always some regret or falling in his theme to dull the brilliance of the glittering peak."

+ — Springf'd Republican p15 Ja 13 '18 650w

GLEASON, ARTHUR HUNTINGTON. Inside the British Isles. *$2 (2c) Century. 942.08 17-14222

A series of papers on Great Britain in wartime, arranged in four groups: Labor; Women; Ireland; Social studies, followed by a study of Lloyd-George and a conclusion. In concluding the author says, "I have sought to show the passing of England,—Little England, Old England,—the crumbling of its caste system, and the emergence of the England of John Bull and Cromwell's soldiers from inarticulateness into power. And a yet greater thing has come—the advent of the new British commonwealth." He adds further, "I am convinced that our own future is bound up with that of England, that together with England and France we can face the world with security, and gradually and painfully make the democratic principle prevail."

A L A Bkl 14:19 O '17

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 9 '17 280w

"The impression he creates is of a mind previously made up, and using only those facts which will support his thesis. . . . In other words, Mr Gleason is a special pleader rather than a philosophic investigator, and it is only a philosophic investigator who could convincingly treat such a subject as that of the present book."

— Cath World 106:261 N '17 510w

Cleveland p99 Jl '17 70w

"Everyone is there—Mr Lansbury, Mr Zimmern, Mr Lionel Curtis, Mr Webb. Labels of identification are attached to them all. An ordinary Englishman like myself may again and again have real difficulty in recognizing some of the portraits. Mr Gleason works rapidly, and he is a little naïve. But his book has a real interim value as a cinematograph and it is extraordinarily pleasant reading." H. J. Laski

Dial 63:15 Je 28 '17 80w

"Contains uncommonly keen analyses of certain aspects of the national characteristics. Thus, his grasp on the Irish problem in relation to the gulf of feeling and sentiment separating the Irish from the English people goes true to the very bone of the difficulty."

+ Ind 90:553 Je 23 '17 300w

"Mr Gleason writes with a rush and a whirl. He offers a minimum of specific data and a maximum of generalization. Yet we feel sure that no one will put down Mr Gleason's book without a clear impression that England is today in revolution. His account is, beyond question, the most comprehensive and the most stimulating that has thus far appeared."

+ — Nation 105:246 S 6 '17 1100w

"Mr Gleason is to be complimented in his piecing together of all the fragmentary information, heretofore available only from time to time in the hurriedly read columns of the press, and furnishing a fairly synthetic picture of all that has taken place. . . . He is careful to tell us that 'Marxian socialism' is 'obsolete.' And this is the only thing in the volume that he doesn't apparently know anything about." J. W.

+ N Y Call p14 Je 3 '17 570w

"Sometimes one wonders if perhaps Mr Gleason in his enthusiasm exaggerates the importance of the changes he observes going on, thinks them significant of deeper forces than they represent, mistakes the temporary adjustment to suit temporary conditions for permanent evolution. . . . Nevertheless, whether one agrees or not, the book has peculiar interest and high importance. . . . But the volume contains a half dozen or more pages on 'The new Americanism' which might very well have been omitted because they are utterly irrelevant to the subject of the book and because they amazingly misunderstand and misinterpret facts and conditions in this country."

+ N Y Times 22:231 Je 17 '17 800w

Pittsburgh 22:674 O '17 30w

+ Pratt p16 O '17 30w

"The advantage possessed by Arthur Gleason as an interpreter of English life for Americans is that he has a fresh and active mind and knows what aspects of England American readers would like to hear about. The disadvantage is that his familiarity with British affairs—if familiarity is the proper word—is apparently a very recent growth. . . . Having a keen and alert eye and a facile habit of deduction, he seldom fails to be interesting, though he frequently does fail to be significant."

+ — Springf'd Republican p17 Jl 8 '17 1100w

"The primary value of this book to the student of contemporary events is its description of tendencies, accompanied in nearly all cases by sufficient evidence to allow the reader to judge for himself what amount of intended or unconscious exaggeration there may be in the predictions made." Bruno Lasker

+ Survey 38:548 S 22 '17 850w

GLEASON, ARTHUR HUNTINGTON. Our part in the great war. il *$1.35 (2c) Stokes 940.91 17-13604

This book is made up of four sections. Section 1, Americans who helped, consists of accounts of relief work in France, based on the author's experience with an ambulance corps. Section 2, Why some Americans are neutral, has chapters on: Neutrality; an interpretation of the Middle West; Social workers and the war; Forgetting the American tradition, etc. Section 3, The Germans that rose from the dead, is based largely on gleanings from German war diaries. Section 4, The peasants, is a series of sketches, drawn from the author's experience in Belgium and France. In addition there are two letters in an appendix addressed to the reader and to neutral critics.

A L A Bkl 13:443 Jl '17

Cleveland p86 Jl '17 90w

+ Dial 63:349 O 11 '17 200w

"So rapidly have events moved that Mr Gleason's book has become, in ways, somewhat out of date even by the day of its publication. And that is a pity, for it contains so much valuable contribution to our knowledge of the war and is written in a spirit so earnest and, in the best sense, so patriotic that the reading of it ought still to have a tonic effect."

+ N Y Times 22:270 Jl 22 '17 550w

+ R of Rs 56:213 Ag '17 130w

GLOVER, TERROT REAVELEY. Jesus of history; with a foreword by the Archbishop of Canterbury. *$1 (1c) Assn. press 232 17-9479

This work was prepared for the British Student Christian movement and published in Great Britain by that organization. It is based, however, on lectures given in India in the winter of 1915-16 by the author, who is fellow of St John's college, Cambridge, and university lecturer in ancient history. The aim of the book, the author says "is, after all, not to achieve a final presentment of the historical Jesus, but to suggest lines of study that will deepen our interest in him and our love of him."

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

GLOVER, TERROT REAVELEY—Continued
 Contents: The study of the gospels; Childhood and youth; The man and his mind; The teacher and the disciples; The teaching of Jesus upon God; Jesus and man; Jesus' teaching upon sin; The choice of the cross; The Christian church in the Roman empire; Jesus in Christian thought.

A L A Bkl 13:424 J1 '17

+ Bib World 50:254 O '17 220w

"Will appeal to those who find experience and life a guide to the understanding of the gospels rather than technical theology." James Moffatt
 + Hibbert J 15:679 J1 '17 100w

"The prolix and involved presentation, however, make the argument difficult to follow; and one lays down the work with a sigh of disappointment, at the little this eminent scholar has contributed to our knowledge or understanding of Jesus."

— + Ind 91:137 J1 28 '17 80w

+ Outlook 116:116 My 16 '17 190w

Reviewed by M. K. Reely

Pub W 91:1323 Ap 21 '17 350w

"In the foreword which the Archbishop of Canterbury contributes to this book he speaks of its author's 'rare power of reverently handling familiar truths or facts in such manner as to make them seem to be almost new.' In saying that he expresses what every one will feel to be the chief distinction of the book."

+ Spec 119:143 Ag 11 '17 620w

"Dr Glover's gifts of vivid description and graphic exposition have enabled him to provide a study of the central figure of the synoptic gospels which must evoke and retain the interest of even the least sympathetic readers. . . . It is certainly unconventional and sometimes daring in its interpretations, but it is always reverent and full of the force of a man who has a strong personal grasp of what he believes to be 'the fact of Christ.'"

The Times [London] Lit Sup p80 F 15 '17 590w

GODFREY, THOMAS. Prince of Parthia. il
 *$2.50 Little 812 17-14983

This book is a reprint of "the first tragedy ever composed by a native American and produced on the professional stage in the United States." (R of Rs) It has heretofore been available only in the original edition of 1765, and "is now published in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of its production [in Philadelphia], without variation from the original, and accompanied by a biography and historical and critical introduction by Archibald Henderson." (R of Rs) Only 550 copies were printed for sale.

Reviewed by Algernon Tassin
 Bookm 46:316 N '17 350w

"Godfrey was in no sense a great poet, not even a poet of great promise; but he was remarkable for the number and the variety of the English masters whom he was able, at the age of twenty-three, to echo in a way that showed appreciation if not originality. . . . Many known facts go to show that his real importance in the history of eighteenth-century American literature has not been adequately recognized."

Dial 63:215 S 13 '17 500w

N Y Br Lib News 4:108 J1 '17

"The tragedy has many passages of great beauty. . . . This is the first adequate account of Thomas Godfrey, and one that presents a picture drawn from historical data, of the literary and cultural conditions of American society in Philadelphia and Wilmington 1750-67."

R of Rs 56:443 O '17 250w

GOGOL, NIKOLAI VASILIEVITCH. Inspector-general; a comedy in five acts; tr. from the Russian by T. Seltzer. (Borzoi plays) *$1 Knopf 891.7 17-78

"In this satire (written in the third decade of the last century) Gogol takes you to a little town of provincial Russia and introduces you to conditions there. Great excitement prevails in the town; for news of the coming of a government inspector has reached the town officials, and they tremble at the prospect of an investigation. . . . In their panic fear they take the first man who arrives in town for the dreaded 'Revizor.' He happens to be a penniless adventurer from Petrograd, and to him each of the local officials, from the governor down, comes to reveal the venality of the others. . . . The play is an unsparing castigation of 'official' incompetence, dishonesty and baseness."—N Y Call

"It is theatrical, it is obvious. . . . But it is irresistible fun." O. M. Saylor
 + Dial 62:142 F 22 '17 120w

Reviewed by L. S. Friedland
 N Y Call p15 F 25 '17 350w

"A Russian critic writes: 'Russia possesses only one comedy, "The inspector general."' This volume is a new and complete version of Gogol's four-act play written in 1835, which, by holding up to ridicule the officials of a typical municipality, struck a definite blow at the tyrannous bureaucracy of the Russian government."

+ R of Rs 55:440 Ap '17 50w

"Means very much more to the Russian than even 'The school for scandal' or 'She stoops to conquer' does to the English-speaking world. . . . Also known by its more literal title of 'The revizor.'"

+ Spring'd Republican p6 F 22 '17 70w

GOLDMAN, MAYER C. Public defender; a necessary factor in the administration of justice. *$1 (7c) Putnam 343 17-7209

The author bases his plea for the establishment of the office of public defender on two principles: "(1) That it is as much the function of the state to shield the innocent as to convict the guilty; (2) That the 'presumption of innocence' requires the state to defend as well as to prosecute accused persons." He discusses the subject in eight chapters: The public defender idea; The injustice of the "assigned counsel" system; Public prosecution and prosecutors; Analysis of the public defender; The ancient conception of crime; Specific objections considered; Other remedies inadequate; The march of the movement. The author is a member of the New York bar and the book has a foreword by Justice Wesley O. Howard of the Appellate division, New York Supreme court.

"The author has approached the subject from many angles and we believe has presented an exceptionally able brief in support of his premise and has answered in full, all criticisms and objections which have been raised."

+ Cleveland p92 J1 '17 110w (Reprinted from American Law Review)

"A valuable feature of the book is an appendix giving the chronology of the movement in this country and setting forth the most important facts regarding its present employment."

+ Dial 63:30 Je 28 '17 330w

New Repub 11:142 Je 2 '17 160w

"The author is an attorney who drew both the bills for a public defender which were introduced into the New York legislature in 1915."

N Y Br Lib News 4:50 Ap '17 60w

+ N Y Call p11 Mr 18 '17 200w

N Y Times 22:386 O 7 '17 60w

Pittsburgh 22:769 N '17 80w

R of Rs 55:444 Ap '17 80w

"The public defender idea has met opposition from bar associations, judges, newspapers and others who have believed that accused persons are sufficiently protected in our courts under existing safeguards. Meanwhile, it has won increasing attention from the public generally."

W. D. Lane

Survey 38:361 J1 21 '17 520w

GOLDSMITH, ROBERT. League to enforce peace; with a special introduction by A. Lawrence Lowell. *$1.50 (2c) Macmillan 341.1 17-6558

The "League to enforce peace," organized in June, 1915, with ex-President Taft, A. Lawrence Lowell, and others as its promoters, is one of the associations that are trying to work out a practical program for the insurance of peace. A discussion of this program is the substance of the present work. It is divided into three parts. In part 1, the author considers the forces that failed, examining some of the agencies that broke down in 1914. Part 2 is devoted to an exposition of the principles and platform of the League to enforce peace. Part 3 is an examination of the creed of militarism, with a refutation of the militarist arguments. Endorsements of the League, etc., are given in an appendix. There is a bibliography and an index.

A L A Bkl 13:330 My '17
Ann Am Acad 74:301 N '17 260w

"The author of this comprehensive discussion of the subject is a working member of the League and his book has had the examination and approval of several of its officials." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 45:183 Ap '17 400w

"An unusually thin mess of intellectual porridge. . . . The book slides along from easy platitude to easy platitude, without any genuine criticism or even analysis of the idea it professes to expound." Randolph Bourne

- Dial 62:387 My 3 '17 1050w

"The book, tho rather diffuse in thought and arrangement, is nevertheless sound in principle, comprehensive, and well written. It should do much, especially in schools and colleges, to spread the idea that the cooperation of nations and not the competition of nations will alone insure eternal peace when the war ends."

+ Ind 90:380 My 26 '17 120w

"An excellent bibliography of books on the war and reconstruction is appended to a volume which does its admirable 'bit' towards making an old idea fresh and alive."

+ New Repub 10:sup20 Ap 21 '17 250w

- N Y Call p15 Ap 15 '17 500w

"Throughout the book, both in his exposition of the league's proposals and in his discussion of conditions out of which it has grown and of opinions concerning those conditions, Mr Goldsmith never loses sight of the ideal that is aimed at nor of the practical steps by which it can be attained."

+ N Y Times 22:64 F 25 '17 800w

+ Outlook 116:304 Je 20 '17 90w

+ Pittsburgh 22:701 O '17 10w

"A 'League to enforce peace' ought to do much toward keeping us in intellectual equilibrium, not so much perhaps because of the startling or unusual in its pages as for the simplicity with which oft-expressed ideas are set forth."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 6 '17 480w

GOLTZ, HORST VON DER. My adventures as a German secret agent. il *$1.50 (2½c) McBride 940.91 17-29598

Chance slipped the young von der Goltz into the hands of the Prussian intelligence bureau and after years of shaping he was turned out a finished secret diplomatic agent. His adventures as secret agent in Russia, France, Spain, Switzerland, Mexico, the United States and England came to an abrupt end when England caught him and put him in prison. In this autobiographical volume he betrays Germany and divulges the entire structure and workings of her efficient spy system as it has been operative among the Allies. Of the United States he says: "Let me repeat again that Germany has installed in this country thousands of men, whose nationality and habits are such as to protect them from suspicion, who work silently and alone, because they know that their very lives depend upon their silence, and who are in communication with no central spy organization, for the very simple reason that no such organization exists. . . . Eternal vigilance, here as elsewhere, is the price of security."

"He makes an exciting tale, though it may be hard to believe everything he says, and most of the intrigues have already been exposed in the papers."

+ A L A Bkl 11:123 Ja '18

"Interesting as is Baron von der Goltz's exposure of German character, it yet fails in the appeal to our sympathies that its author evidently intended. Like every German he supposes that the average human mind works as the German mind works. He builds the whole structure of his book about his ridiculous slander against the late Empress Frederick. The American is accordingly prepared to believe nothing. Nevertheless, the rest of the narrative rings true."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 8 '17 430w
Dial 61:36 Ja 3 '18 90w

"The volume is interesting, however the reader may regard it. If it is considered as fiction, it has its merits; and equally so if it is considered as fact." Joshua Wanhope

+ N Y Call p14 O 28 '17 700w

N Y Times 22:435 O 28 '17 880w

St Louis 15:419 D '17 30w

GOODMAN, PAUL, and LEWIS, ARTHUR D., eds. Zionism; problems and views. *$1.50 Bloch 296 17-4978

"This book consists of twenty-three papers by as many Anglo-Jewish contributors, with an introduction by Dr Max Nordau, the present leader of the movement of Zionism. . . . What the capacities of the Jews are for national life, what they have done in Palestine already, may be read in this book. It is a study of the Jews, full of information little known to the Gentile, which appeals at least to intellectual curiosity, and very considerably to the sympathies of all educated readers."—Sat R

N Y Br Lib News 4:13 Ja '17 70w

Pittsburgh 22:53 Ja '17 5w

+ Sat R 122:137 Ag 5 '16 1200w

GORDON, GEORGE ANGLIER. Appeal of the nation. *75c (4½c) Pilgrim press 172 17-13744

Five patriotic addresses by the minister of Old South church, Boston. Contents: American freedom; The foreign-born American citizen; Christian and citizen; American loyalty; The nation and humanity.

"These lecture-sermons are as Christian as they are patriotic."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 19 '17 300w

"Of the five stirring addresses that make Dr George A. Gordon's 'Appeal of the nation,' all are worth reading, but that on our foreign-born citizens preaches an understanding sympathy that it were well if all native Americans could feel."

+ Ind 90:555 Je 23 '17 40w

GORDON, JAN. Balkan freebooter. il *$3 Dutton (Eng ed 17-9486)

"'A Balkan freebooter' is a picturesque account, for whose truth the author vouches, of a Servian outlaw and comitaj whose career, still unfinished, is a compound of those of Robin Hood and Raffles. His name is Petko Moritch, and his biographer has had his story from Petko's own lips, altering only the names of the principals, including 'Petko's.'—Springf'd Republican

"The story of his eventful life rings with the romance that only truth, that strangest thing in the universe, is able to supply. It shows the fighting character of the modern Serb, who, like Petko, has tramped the plain of Kossovo, fleeing mountainwards, and by some miracle of survival, by some quality of superhuman strength, is winning his way back into freedom. Mr Gordon's narrative is particularly timely and interesting." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 14 '17 600w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

GORDON, JAN—Continued

- "A fascinating book."
 + N Y Times 22:88 Mr 11 '17 700w
 + Springfield Republican p17 Mr 11 '17 250w

GORDON, KATE. Educational psychology. il
 *$1.35 (2c) Holt 370.1 17-25490

"The course of study which this book presents is designed for students of pedagogy in colleges and normal schools. It presupposes an elementary knowledge of psychology. In the earlier chapters . . . a certain amount of child psychology has been included. . . . In later chapters, as on memory and reasoning, the procedure of certain class experiments has been reported in some detail. . . . The last three chapters take up some of the concrete questions of teaching in three quite dissimilar school subjects. They are intended to illustrate the way in which psychological applications can be made." (Preface) The three subjects referred to are Language teaching, Drawing and Arithmetic. An eight-page list of references and an index complete the work. The author is assistant professor of psychology in the Carnegie institute of technology.

"While the book does present a rather useful collection of experimental facts with reference to certain phases of psychology as related to education, it is defective as a text in educational psychology because of its too great emphasis upon the psychological aspect of the subject, because of its style, which is unsuited to relatively immature students, and because of its uneven emphasis upon different topics." F. N. Freeman

- + El School J 18:236 N '17 800w
 Pittsburgh 22:839 D '17 50w

GORELL, RONALD GORELL BARNES, 3d baron. In the night. *$1.25 (3c) Longmans 17-29538

This detective story was planned by Lord Gorell in a base-hospital in France, and written during recovery at home. The author who has been irritated by writers of detective stories that do not take the reader into their confidence, states that in his tale, "every essential fact is related as it is discovered and readers are, as far as possible, given the eyes of the investigators and equal opportunities with them of arriving at the truth." Sir Roger Penterton is found by his secretary, in the middle of the night, lying dead in the hall of his country home. The house is occupied by the dead man's wife, their daughter, another young woman, the daughter's most intimate friend, Sir Roger's secretary, and the servants. Miss Temple, the friend, working on lines of her own, is able to give some assistance to Inspector Humblethorne. Various theories are developed to account for the crime, all of which prove wrong in the end when the mystery is finally solved.

"The author has worked out his theme ingeniously, developing various theories to account for the crime and find the guilty person, and finally, when he nears the end, providing a double climax of surprises before the mystery is finally solved."

- + N Y Times 22:279 J1 29 '17 330w
 + Spec 118:732 Je 30 '17 30w

"It is an exciting tale. It seems to be straightening itself out, and all of a sudden it is in a tangle again. During the short hour or two that the reading of it takes, the size of a shoe becomes of more importance than the Hindenburg line. We come back, blinking, to a world which we are grateful to the author for helping us to forget."

- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p236 My 17 '17 300w

GORKY, MAXIM, pseud. (ALEXEI MAXIMOVITCH PYESHKOFF). In the world. *$2 (1½c) Century 17-21677

"A year after 'My childhood' comes 'In the world,' a record of Gorky's experiences whose closing pages find him still a boy. It purports to relate the true story of his early life, and it does narrate with an extraordinary particularity the scenes he saw, the people he encountered and the events of which he was a part during a few of his boyhood years. He drifts hither and thither through Russia, inevitably returning again and again to the wonderful old grandmother with whom he first made us acquainted in 'My childhood.' He is a veritable jack-at-all-trades, becoming at intervals a shoe-store boy, an assistant in an ikon shop, an architect's helper and a cook's assistant on a Volga steambot. And during the greater part of this period he read many books, and began to make attempts at the writing of prose and verse." (Boston Transcript) The translation is by Mrs Gertrude M. Foakes.

A L A Bkl 14:23 O '17

"The book contains many sayings embodying a deep-rooted philosophy of common life."
 + Ath p675 D '17 160w

"He wrote fiction as if it were autobiography; he writes autobiography as if it were fiction. The result is essentially a novel, with himself as its hero." E. F. E.

- + Boston Transcript p6 Ag 8 '17 1400w

"Everywhere in this, the second, volume of his life, one finds the shining virtues of brevity, concreteness, vigor—always unflinching vigor. That there is also a moving sincerity goes without saying, since Gorky is in the great Russian tradition. . . . The volume gives us two or three years only of his life in the world. . . . Thus it is still almost a child's world in which we are moving—a world seen with that fascinating mixture of sophistication and simplicity which his genius made possible." G. B. Donlin

- + Dial 63:154 Ag 30 '17 1800w
 + Ind 92:68 O 6 '17 340w

"It is difficult to understand wherein lies any fascination in these pages, which chronicle cruelty, brutality, and a life of coarse and often loathsome surroundings, but fascinating they are, grippingly interesting, brutally frank, and full of a faith in the Russian race."

- + Lit D 55:40 N 17 '17 290w
 + New Repub 13:26 N 3 '17 1200w

"There is much in the book that is terrible; there is no little beauty, too; and there is a vast amount of fascinating portraiture. Gorky's grandmother is here again, with her strength, her idealism, her superstitions, her sympathy. . . . The book is crowded with people, each sharply individualized, hauntingly alive, fascinating."

- + N Y Times 22:297 Ag 12 '17 1450w
 + Outlook 116:626 Ag 22 '17 50w
 Pittsburgh 22:743 N '17 70w

- + Springfield Republican p6 S 10 '17 440w

"It is a wonderfully penetrating piece of self-analysis. It displays every great literary quality except charm. But charm is lacking. One feels very sorry for the ugly duckling of the steppes whose mental fumbblings are so elaborately portrayed; but one is never drawn to like him, and one never gets away from the painful impression of a world full of people whom it would be very unpleasant to associate with."

- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p514 O 25 '17 1050w

GORKY, MAXIM, pseud. (ALEXEI MAXIMOVITCH PYESHKOFF); ANDREIEFF, LEONID NIKOLAEVICH; and SOLOGUB, FEDOR, pseud. (FEDOR KUZMICH TETERNIKOV), eds. The shield; with a foreword by W; English Welling; tr. from the Russian by A. Yarmolinsky. *$1.25 (4c) Knopf .296 17-14798

The original work from which the selections translated for this volume are taken was published last year in Petrograd. It consists of studies, essays, stories and poems bearing on the Jewish problem in Russia. The editor of the English edition says, "In making a selection for the present volume, I have thought it advisable to give decided preference to the publicistic articles of the original collection. [It] contains practically all the various important studies and essays of the Russian 'Shield,' while most of the stories have been omitted, without great detriment to the book." Among the contributors are Maxim Gorky, writing of Russia and the Jews; Leonid Andreyev, The first step; Paul Milyukov, The Jewish question in Russia; M. Bernatzky, The Jews and Russian economic life; Prince Paul Dolgorukov, The war and the status of the Jew; Fyodor Sologub, The fatherland for all. William English Walling in commending the book says that the rebirth in Russia cannot be understood apart from the Jewish problem.

"A truly remarkable revelation of the spirit and purpose of the best elements of that New Russia which is now in the making." Abraham Yarmolinsky

+ Bookm 46:484 D '17 160w
Ind 91:20 J1 7 '17 80w

"The work is not a defense of the Jews,—praise be! 'The shield' has the historic interest of a great and noble document, not only because of the prominence of the contributors to the volume, but also because it is a voluntary and free recognition of human rights, a sort of Magna charta to all those who are downtrodden and humiliated." L. S. Friedland
+ N Y Call p14 S 9 '17 600w

"The viewpoint of the Russian educated class is nowhere so clearly presented as in 'The shield,' a volume published in Russia by the Society for the study of Jewish life (in which no Jews are allowed membership), and now offered in an English translation. 'The shield' is significant in that fifteen men of letters, publicists, and scientists unite in demanding the abrogation of Jewish disabilities in Russia."

+ R of Rs 56:101 J1 '17 100w
St Louis 15:419 D '17 40w

+ Springfd Republican p15 J1 15 '17 1150w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p600 D 6 '17 80w

"Apart from the foreword, the book deserves recognition as a striking indication of the fact that before the revolution the leading Russian writers were overwhelmingly in favour of the total abolition of the shocking disabilities to which the Jews had long been subject in Russia. Unfortunately neither Mr Walling nor any one of the distinguished Russian editors has thought of informing us when the various articles that make up this little book were written. The book gives us no word as to the actual position today."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p606 D 13 '17 970w

GOSSE, EDMUND WILLIAM. Life of Algeron Charles Swinburne. il *$3.50 Macmillan 17-12487

The only memoir of Swinburne that had been published before the appearance of this volume was the sketch contributed by Mr Gosse to the "Dictionary of national biography" in 1912. This sketch has been used as the basis for this more complete work. Much new material has come to the author's hands however, and he says, "My narrative is therefore not merely much fuller than it would have been in 1912, but in various respects more accurate." Contents: Childhood—Eton (1837-1853); Oxford (1853-1859); Early life in London (1859-1865); "Atalanta in Calydon," "Chastelard"; "Poems and ballads" (1866); Songs of the republic (1867-1870); The middle years (1870-1879); Putney (1879-1909); Personal characteristics. Additional letters are given in appendixes. The illustrations are worthy of special note.

+ A L A Bkl 14:57 N '17

"Mr Gosse has written a discriminating and worthy biography of a great poet, and has created a strikingly vivid picture of one who might truthfully be described, without irreverence, as an illustrious oddity. . . . The book is biography, not criticism; but we are given particulars relating to 'Atalanta in Calydon,' 'Chastelard,' 'Poems and ballads,' 'Songs before sunrise,' 'Tristram of Lyonesse,' and much of Swinburne's other work, which will be read with interest by every admirer of the poet."

+ Ath p256 My '17 170w

"Excellent as is his very careful and most interesting account of Swinburne's life and character and work, there are in it here and there such evidences of personal bias and even of bitterness as are, at least, surprising. This is the more deplorable since there was no one so well equipped as Mr Gosse for the writing of a full and authoritative biography of Swinburne." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 45:290 My '17 450w

"The reader will receive from Mr Gosse's biography a clear series of impressions of both Swinburne and his work. But it leaves so much unsaid, it refers so vaguely to so many significant episodes in Swinburne's career, that the real and complete biography of him remains to be written." E. P. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 23 '17 2250w

"Will probably remain the standard life of Swinburne."

+ Cath World 106:259 N '17 600w

"An extraordinarily vivid and many-sided characterization, with some tantalizing reticences and many features of unique interest, such as the chapters on Swinburne as a parodist and as a poet of children."

+ Cleveland p15 S '17 80w

"Mr Gosse's volume is chronological and anecdotal, there is hardly a page that is not enriched by some delightful incident or jest concerning Swinburne's time and associates.

. . . The work speaks from the atmosphere of intimacy, and in that position one can sympathetically understand the instinctive reticence, tact and diplomacy for which the English reviewers are so heartily praising him. But as an 'authentication' of the sacred legend the volume is not wholly successful. For, in spite of biographer and reviewers, Swinburne wrote and was unashamed of that unique volume, the first series of 'Poems and ballads.'" B. I. Kinne

Dial 63:21 Je 28 '17 1800w

Ind 92:65 O 6 '17 300w

"The biographer has succeeded in presenting a substantially truthful as well as a vivid picture. He succeeds in conveying the right impression, that is to say, the impression which seems to have been formed by nearly every one who knew Swinburne intimately, that he was a sort of 'lusus naturæ.' The record of his life which has now been given to us does not seem likely to be superseded."

+ Nation 105:201 Ag 23 '17 2050w

"One of the most interesting volumes of biography to come from the presses in a long time. . . . Mr Gosse's attitude toward Theodore Watts-Dunton, with whom Swinburne spent the last thirty years of his life, seems unfair, at the very least."

+ N Y Times 22:181 My 6 '17 1700w

+ Pittsburgh 22:745 N '17 50w

Pratt p48 O '17 30w

+ R of Rs 56:103 J1 '17 320w

"Mr Gosse's 'Life of Swinburne' is a brilliant affair in which the results of long and careful study come out as easily as if he had been at no pains to delve here and there to clear up the difficulties which usually attend the careers of men of letters, and to put casual misconceptions straight. . . . He has not found room to supply an estimate of Swinburne's comparative place in literature, and particularly in the history of poetry, but his comments on the various poems as they pass under review are usually sound and always neat. The volume includes some excellent portraits."

+ Sat R 124:sup3 J1 7 '17 1350w

"As a friend of thirty years' standing, a poet, and an accomplished critic and man of letters, Mr Edmund Gosse comes to his difficult task with an equipment which raises high expectations, largely fulfilled by the result. He has given us an extremely interesting and skillful memoir of an extraordinary man, and though the limitations necessarily imposed on him prevent it from being a complete picture, it is not likely to be superseded for a good many years to come. These limitations are due to a regard for the living as well as the dead."

GOSSE, EDMUND WILLIAM—Continued

- * + Spec 118:462 Ap 21 '17 1800w
- * + Spec 118:490 Ap 28 '17 1900w

"A concrete, well-balanced portrait, the more entertaining for the judiciously selected anecdotes and incidents, and the more valuable for the authentic glimpses of contacts with other very interesting people."

- + Springf'd Republican p6 Je 4 '17 1200w

"You cannot glance at this book without reading it through; and having read it you will wish to read the poems again. . . . There is in his book that real reverence which does not fear to tell the affectionate truth."

- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p169 Ap 12 '17 1500w

"Mr Gosse has condensed the last thirty years of the poet's life into a single chapter, and has devoted the bulk of his volume to the years before 1879. He has made his hero a vital if not a very admirable figure. He has given us clear sight, though not always full sympathy. This vitality of portraiture is likely to be the abiding value of Mr Gosse's book. Faults it has: it is quite too fragmentary to be a definite biography; it leaves too much unsaid; there are many passages in the life of the poet which are obviously glossed over." C. B. Tinker

- + — Yale R n s 7:195 O '17 900w

GOUDGE, HENRY LEIGHTON, and others.

Place of women in the church. (Handbooks of Catholic faith and practice) *$1.15
Young ch. 396 A17-1510

The American edition of a volume which was brought out in England and to which eight men and women have contributed chapters strongly opposing the right of women to exercise any official ministry in the churches. Contents: The teaching of St Paul as to the position of women; Ministrations of women in church; The ministry of women and the tradition of the church; The claim of the priesthood for women; The ordination of women; The medical ministry of women; The religious life for women; Younger women and the church.

"The longest and most important is from the pen of Canon Goudge, who deals with 'The teaching of St Paul on the position of women.' It is an instructive exposition of the Apostle's teaching, but it scarcely does justice to the plea of those who urge that the Apostle's arguments and directions deal with circumstances altogether different from those of the twentieth century. This volume will be welcomed by those who desire to know how it is proposed to meet the arguments of Canon Streeter and Miss Picton-Turberville and Mr Allworthy in which they plead for some extension, under proper safeguards, of the ministry of women in the church."

- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p329 Jl 12 '17 540w

GOUDIE, WILLIAM JOHN. Steam turbines.
il *$4 Longmans 621.1 17-14113

"A text-book for engineering students [which] describes clearly the various types of land and marine types now on the market (including the Ljungström); expounds the theory underlying design and action; gives calculations on consumption, efficiency, and the various sources of loss; and the design of typical turbines of the various classes, including a set of marine turbines of 18,000 shaft horse-power. The allied subjects of condensers and condensing plants, however, are not included. Clearly illustrated, also well supplied with mathematical and steam tables."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

- A L A Bkl 14:80 D '17
- Cleveland p110 S '17 30w

"'Altogether this is an excellent treatise, well gotten up, and published at a very reasonable price, and although it is described as a text-book for engineering students, it should prove of great value to the marine engineer, to whom a knowledge of the steam turbine is becoming of increasing importance. We can recommend it with the utmost confidence."

- + N Y P L New Tech Bks p12 Ap '17 130w (Reprinted from Shipbuilding and Shipping Record F 22 '17)

Pittsburgh 22:662 O '17 10w
St Louis 15:174 Je '17

GOUGH, GEORGE W. Yeoman adventurer. il
*$1.40 (1c) Putnam 17-26322

A tale of adventure in the days of Bonnie Prince Charlie. Master Oliver Wheatman is a young Staffordshire farmer who, in spite of bookish tastes, yearns for a life of action. The fate that keeps him tied down to his ancestral acres, while his chum Jack Dobson goes off to fight for the king, seems most unkindly. Then the adventure for which he longs is brought into his life most unexpectedly with the advent of Mistress Margaret Waynflete, and he finds himself enlisted in the Jacobite cause. Exciting incidents follow thick and fast and Master Oliver, the yeoman turned soldier, has no longer cause to complain of inactivity, and when at the end, he returns to his home, he does not come alone.

A L A Bkl 13:353 My '17

"The characters are all delightfully modern, both in speech and in action; consequently they are thoroughly lifelike, the bad as well as the good, instead of being mere puppets dressed in the costumes of 1745."

- + Ath p195 Ap '16 50w

"The author has been unusually fortunate in the way in which he has succeeded in making the period real to his readers."

- + Boston Transcript p6 My 9 '17 250w

"Told with an unflagging zest."

- + Boston Transcript p6 Je 30 '17 320w

"A rather commonplace tale in which youth and beauty play the leading parts. . . . As a narrative it is neither better nor worse than most of its sort."

Dial 62:313 Ap 5 '17 90w

"A costume story, if you like, an affair of pleasant superficial illusion, but of illusion which, one feels, the author himself cheerfully and spontaneously shares."

- + Nation 104:460 Ap 19 '17 150w

- + N Y Times 22:136 Ap 15 '17 250w

"An unusually good specimen of the old-fashioned semi-historical romance."

- + Outlook 115:668 Ap 11 '17 30w

"As this is a first novel and is of remarkable promise, we may perhaps be allowed to advise the author to avoid making use of 'types' in his characters, and to describe rather 'hungering, thirsting men.'"

- + — Spec 116:555 Ap 29 '16 150w

- + Springf'd Republican p17 Ap 8 '17 120w

"Mr Gough is so intent on his tale that he has little time to spare for much artistry, but he keeps Oliver's view-point steadily before him and merits a big share of the praise due to his hero's robust and tireless efforts."

- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p164 Ap 6 '16 350w

GOURVITCH, PAUL PENSAC. How Germany does business. *$1 (4½c) Huebsch 382

17-31429

An exposition of Germany's methods of export and finance, with chapters on: Politics and economics; Banking facilities; Credits; Germany's merchant marine; Export articles; Reducing the buyer's effort to the minimum; Germany's economic expansion as a beneficial factor in international development; The export of men; Imitation and counterfeiting; The cost of labor; etc. The author writes with particular reference to the business relations of Germany and Russia. The book has a preface by Dr B. E. Shatsky, of Petrograd.

"It is written with a manifest prejudice against Germany, and hence cannot be taken as an entirely reliable survey of German business methods in foreign trade. . . . This book should be of interest to American exporters. However much we may disagree with Germany's motives in trade development and with certain of her export practices we acknowledge that she built up a remarkable foreign trade and we may profit by the adoption of many of the principles here briefly set forth." H. T. Collings

+ — J Pol Econ 26:102 Ja '18 710w

+ New Repub 13:253 D 29 '17 450w

"Outside of trifles which we dare say will be corrected in future editions, the work is on the whole well written, and both interesting and instructive." J. W.

+ — N Y Call p14 Ja 5 '18 540w

"The author of 'How Germany does business' appears sometimes to be disingenuous—or, at least, if he is not that, he is either lacking in information (which seems improbable) or takes the complaisant view that whatever succeeds is right. . . . Especially blind, ethically, is the opening chapter on the general question of Germany's commercial expansion in recent years."

— N Y Times 22:574 D 23 '17 650w

R of Rs 57:101 Ja '18 70w

GRABO, CARL HENRY. Amateur philosopher.
*$1.50 (2c) Scribner 204 17-7480

"As introduction to his book the author says: 'Because I believe the construction of a philosophy to be the chief end of man, I have made bold to write the following pages.' . . . 'The amateur philosopher' is the personal record of one man's search for a philosophy of life in this present complex day. Dr Grabo was born and brought up in a middle western town, conservative, comfortable, orthodox. He was educated at an American college. He is now a professor in an American university. It is highly probable that thousands of Americans, reading his book, will chuckle or sigh over moments of what amounts to pure reminiscence from their own lives. . . . The writer is old enough, too, to possess both perspective and tolerance, while he is essentially young in the sense of being, not an eager youth who thinks the world can be set right by the wish for upheaval, but an active, forward-thinking worker, 'in the prime of life,' in the world of today."—N Y Times

"It has been criticized as being 'destructive in tone, without the substitution of anything better.'"

A L A Bkl 13:391 Je '17

"Most of the deep emotional experiences of life were unknown to him. And so the value of the book is in the author's account of the way he found a place for the spiritual realities in his scheme of things."

Boston Transcript p7 My 19 '17 600w

+ Cleveland p66 My '17 80w

"His critique of the college is forceful and true. . . . In these first chapters full of charm, Mr Grabo details his universal experience. Then suddenly, as if stung with modesty, he slips into an impersonal outline of his matured philosophy. The result is not happy." R. B.

+ — New Repub 10:383 Ap 28 '17 450w

"It is in response to the average American's need that his book is unique and valuable. . . . In all the fourteen chapters of 'The amateur philosopher' there is not a word of dogmatism, intolerance, arrogance of thought, or faith. The book is written with a freshness, a sanity, a sympathetic understanding of human need that give it a well-nigh universal quality."

+ N Y Times 22:67 F 25 '17 900w

Pratt p37 O '17 10w

Reviewed by Robert Lynd

+ Pub W 91:592 F 17 '17 600w

"Mr Grabo is a trifle disappointing in that he fails to live up to his interesting title. Still for one unfamiliar with the terminology of philosophers, Mr Grabo's book will be very welcome. His style is simple and clear."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 D 8 '17 210w

GRAHAM, JOHN WILLIAM. William Penn. il
*$2.50 Stokes

"The present work, by the principal of Dalton Hall, Manchester, is adapted for the English reader; and no 'Life' in the usual sense has, so Mr Graham states, ever been written by an English friend." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "The book comprises extracts from Penn's voluminous writings, controversial and other; an interesting description of the trial of Penn and Mead at the Old Bailey, where the accused gloriously defended and asserted the liberties of Englishmen; an account of the foundation of Pennsylvania; a sketch of the enlightened system of government established in the province, and of Penn's delightfully humane relations with the Indians; and many details of the anxieties, trials, and misfortunes which beset the founder in his later years." (Ath) "It is not a book which represents original research, but it is a well-written, sympathetic biography, and one of moderate scope; with bibliography and many illustrations, notes about which are given in an appendix." (The Times [London] Lit Sup)

+ Ath p365 J1 '17 290w

"Having access to all available material and possessing a strong biographical sense, the author has presented interestingly and concisely one of the best stories of the Quaker colonizer extant." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p11 D 5 '17 780w

"In style the book is a trifle disconcerting, but it offers an ample reward to the reader that approaches it with an open mind."

+ — N Y Times 23:3 Ja 6 '18 500w

"Mr Graham's style is fluent and unpretentious. He arranges his narrative clearly and tells it vividly. He lets his hero speak for himself where possible, and where he has to summarize or assign motives, we have no doubt he correctly interprets Penn's attitude."

+ Spec 118:91 J1 28 '17 1400w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p250 My 24 '17 140w

"The writer, indeed, is at home with his reader and addresses to him many asides bearing upon the interests of the present hour, as for example upon the Society for psychical research and the maxims of George Bernard Shaw. But the interest of the book will centre for most readers in the account of the 'Holy experiment' in Pennsylvania, where an attempt was made to order a society on the generous and humane principles which Penn laid down."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p269 Je 7 '17 1500w

GRAHAM, STEPHEN. Priest of the ideal.
*$1.60 (1½c) Macmillan 17-25855

A piece of fiction that has drawn largely upon the imagination of the writer rather than upon the world of facts. It represents the clash between modern material greed and early church mysticism. An American, representing a syndicate with some billions of dollars to spend, approaches the English in this state of mind: "As a result of the expense of war you English are now much poorer, we Americans are rich. You must be ready to sell certain things to raise money." His hope is to buy out of England's superfluity of castles, abbeys, monuments, historical buildings, etc., enough to serve as a much needed background for the new American race. In company with a wandering priest the American visits objects of his quest, learning meantime from the lips of this idealist that "there is nothing in England which has been outlived and which, therefore, could be sold or given away; that it was futile to covet the spiritual background of England, the only way to acquire material things that symbolize ideals is to fight for the ideals."

"We hardly think the author has hit upon the literary form appropriate to his idea or his own capacities."

— Ath p596 N '17 80w

"In a sense, Mr Graham's 'priest of the ideal' is merely another of those pseudo-Christ's whom every modern novelist seems to feel free to create in his own image; and the action in which he is concerned is very tenuous and impalpable indeed." H. W. Boynton

GRAHAM, STEPHEN—Continued
— Bookm 46:600 Ja '18 700w

"In Mr Graham, there is a voice as fearless if not as exceptional as Tolstoy's. His book is, in fact, a review of England through Russian eyes, in Russian terms."

+ Dial 64:115 Ja 31 '18 470w

"Some of the descriptions are well done, but the book as a whole is tiresome, and its religious mysticism is more than slightly touched with hysteria. There is not a single character in it who is real for an instant, and while there are a few interesting bits of comment, they are not numerous."

— N Y Times 22:442 O 28 '17 370w

"The romance repays perusal if only for the exquisite delicacy of style, and the high level of its spiritual perception."

+ Outlook 117:475 N 21 '17 60w

"The strength of the book lies, not in the actuality of its characters or in any exciting stir of incident, but in its handling of the vital problem which is ever present and never completely solved—the conduct of our daily lives. We have one very minor and incidental point to urge against Mr Graham before we finish: he owes it to himself to pay more attention to the rhythm of his style. Some of his most impressive passages are spoiled by the suggested lilt of a verse metre."

+ — Spec 119:sup623 D 1 '17 1500w

"In its sluggish, eventless speculativeness, it is a Russian kind of a book. Only a Russian would have done it far better. It is Mr Graham's first novel—if, indeed, it can be classified as a novel—and, one believes, his first complete failure."

— Springf'd Republican p17 N 11 '17 700w

"A book into which the author has poured his thoughts and feelings as they came to him, with more care for their immediate expression than for the form of the whole. Yet the reader may fairly ask himself how much of his dissatisfaction—his sense of having looked up and not been fed, but swollen with wind and mist—may be due to some lack of time and opportunity which compelled Mr Graham to be careless of the whole. . . . If it is inconsistent, self-contradictory, vague, and here and there (doubtless owing to that lack of time and opportunity at which we have hinted) nothing else than flabby, it is bright with beautiful thoughts and warm with a passion for beautiful living."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p503 O 18 '17 820w

GRAHAM, STEPHEN. Russia In 1916. ll
*$1.25 (4½c) Macmillan 914.7 17-6752

The author believes that the people of the two allied countries, Great Britain and Russia, should keep in touch with one another, and publishes this little book of impressions in the interests of a better understanding. He writes of: A journey to Ekaterina; The dark haven; The new Archangel; The cost of living; Life in the country; A Russian countess; Russian literature in 1916; Without vodka, beer, or wine, etc.

+ A L A Bkl 13:319 My '17

"There is neither insight nor foresight in this 'little book of the hour.'" Abraham Yarmolinsky

— Bookm 46:482 D '17 160w

"A slender volume of less than two hundred pages, but it reveals, as always in everything Mr Graham writes, the ability to understand Russia and a skill at making her understood by the people of other nations." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 7 '17 1350w

"The information contained is of precisely the sort that the average reader is most eager for."

+ Cath World 105:536 Jl '17 470w

Reviewed by L. S. Friedland

Dial 63:265 S 27 '17 500w

"Slight, but based on three seasons' personal observations."

+ Ind 90:269 My 12 '17 30w

"There is nevertheless much here which the practical reader will find of uncommon interest. The descriptions of Ekaterina and Archangel are admirable. The world has been waiting for just the kind of knowledge regarding Russia's new Arctic port that Mr Graham gives us."

+ Nation 104:430 Ap 12 '17 1550w

"Discount the politics and the war prophecies, and much that is genuinely revelatory and illuminating does emerge. . . . His picture of the mood in which Russia accepts the war will endure. Even at the risk of displeasing the western political radicals Mr Graham should not be frightened from his attempts to convey to us the religious background of Russia. He can bring out the shadows and spiritual chiaroscuro of the thrilling panorama of revolution." H. S.

+ — New Repub 11:165 Je 9 '17 950w

"When Stephen Graham splutters: 'The Russia which Gorky attacks is just that which is spiritually interesting to us in England—the mystical and impractical Russia,' he reveals himself a downright dilettante, an epicurean, an 'intellectual' gourmand." D. Rosenstein

— N Y Call p15 Ag 12 '17 1450w

+ N Y Times 22:108 Mr 25 '17 850w

"An entertaining record of his experiences, although naturally it is hardly a work of permanent value."

+ Outlook 116:116 My 16 '17 40w

Pratt p46 O '17 30w

+ R of Rs 55:552 My '17 130w

St Louis 15:374 O '17 30w

+ Spec 118:392 Mr 31 '17 110w

"He belongs to that class of English writers who took it upon themselves to whitewash the Russian autocracy and so misrepresent all those who had fought against it for more than half a century. I do not believe that anybody cares to know now anything about the devotion of the Russian people to Czar Nicholas II, or about his angelic disposition and his artistic soul." H.

— Survey 38:76 Ap 21 '17 70w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p99 Mr 1 '17 420w

"Mr Graham's style, often slipshod and careless, occasionally, under the inspiration of deep feeling, rises to a height of real beauty." W: L. Phelps

+ — Yale R n s 7:187 O '17 200w

GRAHAM-WHITE, CLAUDE, and HARPER, HARRY. Air power; naval, military, commercial. ll *$3 Stokes 623.7

(Eng ed War17-85)

"The authors regard the greatest lesson of the war as being that in the future a nation which dominates the aerial highways will dominate also those of the land and sea, and that a dominion of the air must mean, ultimately, the dominion of the world. They illustrate this view in a series of chapters dealing with the war in the air, problems in construction, after-war policy, factors of safety (the phrase is used in more than the engineering sense), popularizing travel by air, laws of the air, and the commercial era of flight. They draw an alluring picture of the time when a man will be able to dine one evening in New York and the next in London, and when aerial excursions will be possible at rates which will put them within the reach of all."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

A L A Bkl 14:80 D '17

"The programme outlined is scarcely ever outside the bounds of possibility, but views on aviation will have changed greatly long before the programme is completed."

+ — Nature 92:481 Ag 16 '17 670w

N Y P L New Tech Bks p3 Jl '17 60w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p192 Ap 19 '17 130w

GRANT, ARTHUR. On the wings of the morning. *$2 Dutton 828

"Echoes of George Borrow, of Gilbert White, of Richard Jefferies sound forth from the pages of Mr Grant's book of essays. As he journeys 'On the wings of the morning' into the heart of historic Britain he sees there the glory of her past and the beauty of her present. . . . Every corner of the island whence has arisen a mighty empire contains its historic scenes, and in every hill and valley is to be found something quaint, something picturesque and something of alluring grandeur. Much of all this Mr Grant has witnessed and much of it he records in his book. And through it all runs an undercurrent of thought that reflects the spirit of the day in which it is written, that reveals how constantly in all our minds is the present fighting of Britain and her many Allies for God and the right, for a world-peace that can only come through sacrifice." —Boston Transcript

"His book should be received with appreciation by those familiar with the places named and their literary associations, and attract many others to enjoy them."

+ Ath p524 O '17 90w

"The linking of people with places, and of places with people, gives to Mr Grant's essays one of their principal charms." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 29 '17 1200w

GRANT, MADISON. Passing of the great race; or, The racial basis of European history, maps *$2 (4c) Scribner 572 16-22372

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"The book contains much solid scientific and historical truth set forth with dignity and clearness, although often with a lack of coherence. It affords evidence of minute and careful study, even though the author never cites his authority for particular statements and supplies but a limited bibliography in the appendix. . . . But the 'Passing of the great race' is not so much an objective scientific treatise as a carefully reasoned argument in support of preconceived convictions. . . . The argument of the book must stand for what it is worth. To the present reviewer it is unconvincing, partly because it rests on debatable assumptions, partly because the method of the argument seems itself unsound. . . . His determinations often rest on the most questionable evidence. . . . Mr Grant's book can hardly be regarded as an important contribution to historical science. Its dogmatic assurance and its partizanship impair its value to learning. Its main thesis is not established, and, in the present state of scholarship, is not capable of establishment. For guidance in matters relating to European race problems American students of history will continue to depend, as they have done for nearly twenty years, on Ripley's solid and discriminating 'Races of Europe.'" A. B. S.

+ Am Hist R 22:842 JI '17 850w

"Brevity often forces a more dogmatic opinion than the author probably holds, but so many extreme statements are made that the reader often wonders what evidence there is. Little mention is made of other writers, and even in the bibliography the names of Ammon, Lapouge, Reibmayr, Schallmaier, who have advocated similar claims, and opponents like Finot and Novicow, are omitted. In spite of many defects the position of the author has much to commend it. The volume should be studied by all who are interested in the future of our own country and in democracy at large." C. K.

+ Ann Am Acad 70:330 Mr '17 180w

"The migrations of the three races during different periods are illustrated by a series of striking maps."

Ath p250 My '17 190w

"We had thought that this species of race ecstasy, this enthusiasm for laying stress on the racial basis of European history, with which the name of Houston Stewart Chamberlain is associated, was going out of fashion, even in Germany. But that a writer in democratic America should give currency to these doctrines is passing strange."

— Ath p347 JI '17 650w

"Mr Madison Grant echoes the absurdities of Mr Houston Chamberlain." H. M. Kallen

— Dial 62:432 My 17 '17 920w

"Mr Grant's account of the distribution of the different races is interesting and no doubt as accurate as such speculations can be made, but the superstructure of theory and policy which he builds thereon must be judged by each reader for himself."

+ Ind 89:362 F 26 '17 180w

+ Int J Ethnics 23:295 Ja '18 160w

"We do not recall any other single work which presents, within the limited space of one volume, so comprehensive a survey of heredity, eugenics, racial characteristics, ruling dynasties, and the steady elimination of the unfit."

+ Lit D 54:2000 Je 30 '17 450w

"Three brief chapters present a résumé of our knowledge of prehistoric man in the stone and bronze ages. It is interesting to note that the detailed treatment begins where Professor Osborn's recent monumental work on 'Men of the old stone age' leaves off, and in certain ways may be regarded as directly supplemental. . . . Slight reference is made to the European war, but the application of all the data which Mr Grant has assembled to the causes, psychology, and ultimate results of this conflict is plainly evident. This and the intelligent attention which is directed to the unparalleled mixing of races in our own country are the two most potent memories of a perusal of this volume. . . . A bibliography and thorough index round out a volume of marked originality and considerable interest."

+ Nation 104:466 Ap 19 '17 770w

Nature 99:502 Ag 23 '17 620w

"For our part, we should like to have the facts examined with much more care than Mr Grant has paid them before accepting his doleful predictions as true, or even probable."

— Spec 119:385 O 13 '17 1550w

Reviewed by E. G. Balch

— Survey 39:262 D 1 '17 550w

"All that can be said of some of the statements brought forward by Mr Grant as scientific evidence of his thesis is that they are incorrect."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p209 My

3 '17 1450w

"Many readers will question Grant's conclusions, and some will resent them. . . . Yet his statement of the problem demands serious consideration, and his sketch of the development and expansion of the Nordic races is an excellent historical résumé. . . . The whole lesson of biology is that America is seriously endangering her future by making fetishes of equality, democracy, and universal education. They are of great value, but only when they have good hereditary material upon which to work. The books of Morgan, Conklin, and Grant all show that we must drastically revise our immigration policy and must strive even more diligently to perpetuate the rapidly diminishing type of strong-willed idealists who have been the country's chief leaders." Ellsworth Huntington

+ Yale R ns 6:670 Ap '17 400w

GRAY, VIOLET GORDON. Margery Morris. il 2 *$1.25 (1½c) Penn 17-29733

Margery Morris, the young heroine of this story for girls, comes from California to spend a summer with her grandfather in a small Quaker village in New Jersey. An unknown boy cousin meets her at the train and tells her that her grandfather is away. Margery, who is something of a little snob, finds it necessary to adapt herself to the simple living of a plain old-fashioned farm house. She learns to like the two boys who call themselves her cousins; makes friends with two jolly girls, and only later learns that thru confusion of names she has come to visit in the wrong house. Other books in the series are promised.

+ Yale R ns 6:670 Ap '17 400w

GRAY, VIOLET GORDON. Margery Morris. il 2 *$1.25 (1½c) Penn 17-29733

Margery Morris, the young heroine of this story for girls, comes from California to spend a summer with her grandfather in a small Quaker village in New Jersey. An unknown boy cousin meets her at the train and tells her that her grandfather is away. Margery, who is something of a little snob, finds it necessary to adapt herself to the simple living of a plain old-fashioned farm house. She learns to like the two boys who call themselves her cousins; makes friends with two jolly girls, and only later learns that thru confusion of names she has come to visit in the wrong house. Other books in the series are promised.

N Y Times 22:547 D 9 '17 70w

GREEN, JOHN RICHARD. Short history of the English people; rev. and enl., with epilogue by Alice S. Green. maps *$2 Am. bk. 942 16-18300

"The present one-volume edition now given to the public contains all the material except the illustrations in the four-volume edition of 1887 and, in addition, some modifications in the history of Ireland which Mrs Green believes her husband would have incorporated had he been living. They are due to new material discovered in the last thirty-five years since the 'Short history' was published."—Outlook

"The 'Epilogue' is a summary written with a fervid eloquence which makes it in its own way singularly attractive. But the fervour sometimes leaves the facts obscure; for instance, no one who did not know the sequence of events could extract the truth from the summary of the Crimean war; whilst an account of the mutiny which does not mention John Lawrence and has but a bare reference to his brother can only be described as a curiosity. The 'Epilogue' is not indeed a 'history,' and as a review it is written with a definite outlook, which if stimulating and suggestive, makes it hardly suitable for instruction to those who are not already fairly familiar with the facts." A.

Eng Hist R 32:149 Ja '17 250w

+ Outlook 115:208 Ja 31 '17 200w

"In the latest reprint Mrs J. R. Green has added an epilogue of one hundred and seventy-two pages covering the century from 1815 to 1914. A spirited sketch of the social changes and of the imperial and foreign problems which have confronted us, it is as dogmatic, as biased, and almost as entertaining as J. R. Green's own work, though he might not have given so much prominence to the so-called Celtic influence in British politics. He would certainly have described the causes of the war more clearly and more accurately, instead of veiling Germany's direct responsibility for the conflict. An historian of the English people ought, we think, to be perfectly definite about this important matter. Mrs Green handles it gingerly, as if she doubted our good faith and our intense desire to keep the peace."

Spec 117:348 S 23 '16 140w

"The keenest-eyed literary critic would find it difficult to determine from internal evidence where J. R. Green laid down the pen and Mrs Green has taken it up. There is the same picturesque style, the same gift of epigrammatic expression and faculty for seizing the essential detail, the same command of apt quotation, the same imaginative intuition, broad outlook on human affairs, and sympathy with national and democratic movements."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p365 Ag 3 '16 600w

GREEN, LILIAN (BAYLISS) (MRS ALBERT RANDOLPH GREEN). Effective small home. II *$1.50 McBride 640 17-8603

The author was formerly editor of the Little house department of the Ladies' Home Journal. To help those who live on small incomes and in small quarters is her aim in this book. Part 1 is personal. In it she writes of her own varied experiences in housekeeping. Part 2 is amplified from material prepared for the Ladies' Home Journal, and has chapters on: Suggestions for furnishing, Lighting fixtures, The hanging of curtains, Floor coverings, etc. In addition there are appendices giving suggestions for cleaning, recipes, etc. There is a short bibliography and an index.

"The book is full of personality, has some charm and many suggestive ideas. It makes a contribution in regard to the treatment of apartments and very small rooms. It contains no principles or standards by which to decorate, and is a record of ingenuity and taste rather than of principles and artistic standards."

+ A L A Bkl 13:387 Je '17

"A practical book for young housekeepers of moderate means."

+ Cleveland p114 S '17 60w

"A pleasantly personal tone pervades Mrs Green's contribution."

+ Nation 105:608 N 29 '17 250w

+ N Y Br Lib News 4:75 My '17 80w

+ N Y Times 22:201 My 20 '17 30w

Pittsburgh 22:666 O '17 50w

Pratt p25 O '17 10w

"The work points out many short cuts for women who are anxiously striving for beauty in the home."

+ Spring'd Republican p8 N 27 '17 110w

GREEN, MARY, pseud. (MRS MARIETTA [MCPHERSON] GREENOUGH). Better meals for less money. *$1.25 Holt 641.5 17-13798

"It is the plan of this book," says the author, "to include a variety of (1) recipes which require only a small amount of meat; (2) recipes for vegetable dishes which can take the place of meat; (3) recipes for the economical use of cereals, dairy products, and other common inexpensive foods; (4) recipes for breads, cakes, and desserts requiring only a small amount of butter and eggs; and (5) recipes for a few relishes, condiments, and other accessories which lend variety and interest." The first chapter is devoted to General suggestions for economy.

"The general suggestions for economy are useful but the title is rather misleading as no meals are planned and the book is just another good cook book of selected recipes, well indexed with an appendix which gives tables of weights and measures, temperature, caloric values, time tables for cooking and a list (2p.) of government publications on foods and cooking."

+ A L A Bkl 13:434 Jl '17

+ Cath World 105:412 Je '17 110w

Cleveland p87 Jl '17 90w

"Not intended as a complete guide to cookery, this new book, so admirable in form and contents, presupposes an elementary knowledge of the care and preparation of food, and imparts much knowledge that is not elementary."

+ Lit D 55:40 N 3 '17 120w

"Altogether this little book is indispensable for owners of small kitchens."

+ Nation 105:347 S 27 '17 330w

"We have personally tested many of the recipes for salads and puddings and found them excellent. The author preaches a sort of sensible economy which the housewife can practice with much profit." M. G. S.

+ N Y Call p14 My 20 '17 120w

+ N Y Times 22:173 Ap 29 '17 80w

Pratt p26 O '17 40w

"The preface gives general suggestions for economy—the kind a sensible housewife can really practise."

+ R of Rs 56:554 N '17 90w

"Another good point about the book is the finding, which is of the practical kind that may be handled without soiling."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Ag 14 '17 250w

GREENE, CARLETON. Wharves and piers; their design, construction and equipment. II *$3 McGraw 627 17-9604

"The book is frankly a catalog of standard designs. There appears little attempt to expand theory, but as a catalog, using that word in its best sense, there is little to be wished for. The main section is devoted to the structure of the piers and wharves themselves. The following and less exhaustive part takes up the design of sheds for wharves and piers and a final and still less ambitious section is devoted to cargo-handling machinery. Finally, a number of detail costs afford some general information on that important subject."—Engin News-Rec

Cleveland p111 S '17 20w

"In no branch of engineering have there been so many strides forward in the past decade as in the design and construction of wharves and piers for harbors. . . . In spite of this great advance, or perhaps because of it, the literature on the subject is most meager. Practically everything that can be found on recent wharf and pier construction must be sought in the files of technical magazines and society publications. Mr Greene has, therefore, done a considerable service for the profession in collecting the many types which appear in his new book."

+ Engin News-Rec 79:325 Ag 16 '17 300w

N Y Br Lib News 4:76 My '17

"The drawings, most of them dimensioned, are clearly executed."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p6 Ap '17 70w

"The subject of pile-driving has not been treated at length in this book."

Pittsburgh 22:453 My '17 50w (Reprinted from Journal of the Western Society of Engineers p122 F '17)

Pratt p19 J1 '17 40w

GREENE, FREDERICK STUART, ed. Grim thirteen. *$1.50 (1½c) Dodd 17-23978

Edward J. O'Brien, editor of "The best short stories of 1916," in his introduction, tells us that six people, four writers, two critics and a publisher, talking over the short story became convinced that "a grim story, no matter whether it was a literary masterpiece or not, was hoodooed." They then decided to select and publish in book form thirteen good stories that had been repeatedly rejected by American magazines. All of these stories were praised by editors who rejected them. Contents: The day of Dahelmus, by Vance Thompson; Rain, by Dana Burnett; Old fags, by Stacy Aumonier; The head of his house, by Conrad Richter; The Abigail Sheriff memorial, by Vincent O'Sullivan; Easy, by Ethel Watts Mumford; The draw-keeper, by Wadsworth Camp; The razor of Pedro Dutel, by Richard Matthews Hallet; Knute Ericson's celebration, by Robert Alexander Wason; The parcel, by Mrs Belloc Lowndes; Back o' the yards, by Will Levington Comfort and H. A. Sturtzel; The end of the game, by William Ashley Anderson; The black pool, by Frederick Stuart Greene.

"They form a protest against the commercial standards which have shown these writers that some of their finest imaginative work could not achieve magazine publication without sensible modification." Not written for immature minds."

+ A L A Bkl 14:60 N '17

"Capt. Greene has proved all he has undertaken to prove and suggested very potent reasons for the freeing of our creative literature from the shackles at present imposed upon it." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 26 '18 1000w

"There is not one story in the volume that is mechanical, mediocre, or of the merely competent order that suffices for our monthly fiction. And what is similarly surprising is the distinguished style, the poetic perception, the high literary quality revealed in most of the rejected thirteen." L. Untermeyer

+ Dial 64:70 Ja 17 '18 1150w

"There is not a story with the indubitable touch of genius to lift it from the 'grim' to the tragic. Half of them are written in the same style, the American Magazine or, let us say, Saturday Evening Post style, and might have been written by the same brisk, ingenious hand."

— Nation 105:694 D 20 '17 370w

"The circumstances under which the book is spun out at the public over the heads of the rejecting editors are an indictment of the magazine editors of the whole country. And it is a mighty good thing that somebody has had the spirit and the confidence in the American public to make such a test of its intelligence. Some of the thirteen stories reach a much higher level of literary quality than do others. For it is easy to see, with some of them, that gruesome theme or unhappy ending was not the sole reason for their untoward fate in magazine offices. But some of them are so true in their picturing of life, so fine in their artistry, and so high in their literary quality that one marvels at their continued rejection."

+ N Y Times 22:329 S 9 '17 1800w

"In tone and atmosphere the stories must be classified with that grimly imaginative school of which Poe was the master. Still each plot is distinctly original. Each one is vivid, thrilling and direct, and many of them display a keen intuition and a sense of psychological values."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 4 '17 360w

GREENE, HARRY PLUNKET. Pilot, and other stories. il *$2 (5c) Macmillan 16-22978

"Pilot," the longest of the six stories in this book, is the story of a dog. Pilot is an English dog with a fondness for poaching, and his adventures are many and amusing. The remaining stories are about children and animals; among them there is one story for fishermen. Eight of the illustrations are in color.

+ N Y Times 22:41 F 4 '17 80w

"Our notice must not end without a few words of praise for the admirable illustrations of Mr H. J. Ford, so long and honourably associated with the fairy books of the late Andrew Lang. Here, however, he shows a range and versatility for which we were hardly prepared, and has collaborated with the author with most delightful results, whether his aim has been realistic, grotesque, or fantastic."

+ Spec 117:706 D 2 '16 700w

"The story of his doings is so entertainingly and humorously told that the book should prove interesting to readers of all ages."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 D 2 '16 70w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p603 D 14 '16 350w

GREENE, HOMER. Flag. il *$1.25 (2c) Jacobs 17-22701

In a school-boy snowball battle, one of the two leaders wraps himself in the American flag as a means of protection in an assault, but his opponent, Penfield Butler, tears it from him and it is trampled and torn under their feet. Made to feel that his act was unpardonable, called "Benedict Arnold" by his companions, Penfield is forced to leave school. Thereafter he goes branded, is refused admission to the national guard, but finally takes part in the European war and thereby regains his good name.

"Marred by sentimentality."

+ — A L A Bkl 14:173 F '18

Ind 92:448 D 1 '17 30w

Pittsburgh 22:840 D '17 50w

"A wholesome story of military patriotism for boys told in a manly, straightforward style."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 S 23 '17 80w

GREENE, KATHLEEN CONYNGHAM. Little boy out of the wood, and other dream plays. *75c Lane 322 16-23242

A collection of fanciful little plays for reading. The titles are: The little boy out of the wood; Night watch; The poppy seller; The first Christmas eve; The vision splendid; The princess on the road; The two bad fairies. A note says, "Of the plays that form this book only one—The two bad fairies—was written for a stage. The other six are dreams."

"Recalling in the delicate allegory Olive Schreiner's 'Dreams' comes 'The little boy out of the wood.' These are 'dream plays,' tragic and comic, and exquisite in workmanship."

+ Ind 89:274 F 12 '17 30w

N Y Br Lib News 4:21 F '17 30w

"Arranged for reading aloud."

R of Rs 55:441 Ap '17 70w

GREENOUGH, CHESTER NOYES, and HERSEY, FRANK WILSON CHENEY. English composition. il *$1.40 Macmillan 808

17-15557

"Professor Greenough and Mr Hersey have prepared a most interesting text-book on 'English composition.' What they term 'mechanics,' that is troublesome points of grammar, punctuation, spelling are touched in short final chapters.

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

GREENOUGH, C. N., and HERSEY, F. W. C.

Continued

The main chapters are on exposition, argument, description, narration, structure, with clear and suggestive discussion of the topics, and fine examples. The first chapter on gathering and weighing of material is especially to be noted, for it gives the pupil all sorts of practical, helpful hints that students must usually work out for themselves slowly at great waste of time or never work out at all." (Ind) Dr Greenough is professor of English at Harvard university.

"Occasionally a volume appears which from its preface onward towers above the jumble of its competitors. Such a volume is this 'English composition.' The arrangement of the contents is unexceptionable. Better even than the arrangement, however, is the excellence of the presentation."

+ Dial 63:410 O 25 '17 120w
+ Ind 91:235 Ag 11 '17 100w

"If a criticism were to be made it would be that the authors treat composition as chiefly an exhibition of cleverness. They send a chiel out into the world notebook in hand and eye alert chiefly for the technical tricks of the trade. . . . Beyond such technical matters a book on composition is perhaps not bound to go; within this field it would be difficult to find one that functions more efficiently; it makes one cast about at once for a sharp pencil. An interesting concession to the present interest in the spoken word, the book contains a rather prim little chapter on pronunciation."

+ Nation 105:260 S 6 '17 220w
N Y Br Lib News 4:124 Ag '17

"The first work of its kind to bring the student ample descriptive extracts from famous writers illustrated with photographs of the actual scenes described by them."

+ R of Rs 56:216 Ag '17 290w

GREGOR, ELMER RUSSELL. White Otter. II
*$1.35 (2c) Appleton 17-5686

A sequel to "The red arrow." White Otter is the young Sioux who was the hero of that tale. In this story he is again pitted against his tribal enemies, the Pawnees. In a great battle his grandfather, the Sioux chieftain, is taken prisoner and White Otter, following on the enemy's trail, sets him free. It is a story of Indian life before the coming of the white man.

A L A Bkl 13:453 Jl '17
N Y Times 22:314 Ag 26 '17 50w
St Louis 15:401 N '17 20w

GREGOROVITSH, DIMITRY. Fishermen.
*$1.50 (1½c) McBride

Dimitry Gregorovitch was a contemporary of Tourgeniev. Angelo S. Rappoport, in the Introduction to this novel, says that he is rightly considered one of the best exponents of the life of the Russian working people. The present story, here translated into English for the first time, centers about the family of Glyeb Savinitsh, a fisherman. Vanja, Glyeb's youngest son, and Grishka, an adopted child, are boys of the same age who grow up together, sharing alike in the family fortunes. Indeed, in spite of his shortcomings, Grishka seems to hold first place in the affections of the father. Knowing that Dounia, the girl both young men come to love, has given herself to Grishka, Vanja takes his foster brother's place as conscript in the army. Grishka, left free, marries Dounia and wrecks her happiness as he does that of the family that has sheltered him. An evil influence in the story is that of Zakhar, a product of the factory system, which, at the time that the book was written, was only beginning to invade the rural villages of Russia.

+ Cleveland p132 D '17 60w

"Grigorovich lacked deep psychological insight; he was more of a careful landscapist and an ethnographic observer than a vivisector of the human soul. Only in exceptional cases did he succeed in depicting a boldly outstanding character, as, for instance, in the old fisherman Glyeb."

+ — Nation 106:20 Ja 3 '18 330w

"Though 'The fishermen' has a slightly old-fashioned air about it, it is an air of sentiment rather than of sentimentality, and gives to realism the balance necessary to save it from becoming naturalism. 'The fishermen' reminds one of George Sand's pastoral tales; it possesses a charm which is not glamour and a truth which is not all ugliness."

+ N Y Times 22:570 D 23 '17 600w

Pratt p51 O '17 10w

"The author stands only in the second or third rank of Russian literature, has no life-message as Dostoevsky and Tolstoy have, and the picture which he gives of Russian life is not distinctive. The patriarchal life of Glyeb's family ought to be interesting, but one never gets into the midst of it, and evidently the author himself is an outsider, having only a partial sympathy. . . . The translation is without charm, and if the author is prolix the translator emphasizes the defect."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p42 Ja 25 '17 850w

GREGORY, JACKSON. Wolf breed. II *$1.40
(2c) Dodd 17-25854

The North woods provide the setting of a tale of avarice, jealousy and passion among men who, for greed of gold or refuge from the law, collect there in strange ill-assortment. Among the habitués of a frontier settlement house is No Luck Drennen who had grown hard, cynical, and evil-minded thru loss of faith in men he had trusted. He knows where to find gold; others know that he knows. Drennen becomes suspicious that every body is trying to pry into his secret and wrest from him his prospects. He includes in his suspicions a southern girl who mysteriously appears at the settlement. Woman hater tho he be and sharp of tongue he finds a match in Ygerne Bellaire whose clever fencing wins the admiration and love of the "lone wolf." Treachery and misunderstanding make their romance a difficult one but they find a way out to happiness.

Boston Transcript p6 Ja 2 '18 190w

"It may be summed up as a tale of red blood pumped up by machine."

— Nation 105:687 D 13 '17 90w

"The tale of these fights and entanglements, the thrill and the zest of it, is well told. It is like nothing so much as the novellization of one of the famous ballads of Robert W. Service."

+ N Y Times 22:469 N 11 '17 250w

"It is a lively and quite impossible tale."

+ Spring'd Republican p17 O 21 '17 320w

GREGORY, RICHARD ARMAN. Discovery; or, The spirit and service of science. II *$1.75
Macmillan 304 (Eng ed A16-1381)

"The spirit in which men of science devote themselves to the investigation and understanding of nature, the results of their discoveries in the increase of man's power—these are the themes of the book." (Sat R) "In his references to the life and work of men like Galileo, Newton, Faraday, Darwin, Huxley, Kelvin, and Pasteur, the author illustrates the spirit of the discoverer—his fanaticism for the sanctity of truth, his disinterestedness and impersonal detachment, his delight in his work, and his cautious yet alert recognition of the possibility of error. . . . Much of the book is an eloquent commentary on the text: 'The future of our civilisation depends upon the widening spread and deepening hold of the scientific habit of mind.'" (Nature)

"The essays, twelve in number, are readable, concrete in their treatment, and meant for the layman."

+ A L A Bkl 13:382 Je '17

+ Cleveland p149 D '16 40w

Reviewed by J. A. Thomson

+ Nature 97:438 Jl 27 '16 950w

N Y Br Lib News 3:151 O '16

Pittsburgh 22:239 Mr '17

Pratt p15 Ap '17 20w

+ Sat R 122:59 Jl 22 '16 1000w

"The appearance of this book could not well have been more timely." T. E. Robertson
+ Science n s 45:143 F 9 '17 300w

GREW, EDWIN SHARPE, and others. Field-Marshal Lord Kitchener; his life and work for the empire. 3v il *25s 6d Gresham pub. co., London

A life of Lord Kitchener complete in three volumes. "The first volume deals with Kitchener's early years, his work in Palestine, and the Egyptian campaign. The second volume begins with the Fashoda incident, and then deals with the Boer war." (Ath) "The third volume treats of the present war, of Lord Kitchener's magnificent work in raising the new armies, and of his death in the 'Hampshire' on June 5th last." (Spec)

"A useful and careful piece of work. . . . At the same time we should welcome a little more biography and a little less history."

+ Ath p599 D '16 70w (Review of v 1 and 2)

"Carefully written and contains a good deal of new matter."

+ Spec 117:448 O 14 '16 80w (Review of v 1)

+ Spec 118:368 Mr 24 '17 70w (Review of v 2 and 3)

The Times [London] Lit Sup p454 S 21 '16 80w (Review of v 1)

"Cooperative biography is not an ideal arrangement, but in this case the chapters blend surprisingly well, and the whole narrative flows with an ease which makes it a pleasure to read throughout."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p612 D 14 '16 450w (Review of v 1 and 2)

GREY, ZANE. Wildfire. il *$1.35 (1½c) Harper 17-2028

Wildfire, an untamed red stallion, is the hero of this story. Lucy Bostil, the pride of her father's heart and a girl who doesn't know the meaning of fear, is its heroine. Lin Stone, who tracks Wildfire up from Utah and captures him, is the horse's nominal owner, but Lucy is the real owner, for it is to her the beautiful wild horse gives his heart. Lucy rides him once in a race against her father's favorite, Sage King. She rides him again in a race for life against prairie fire. It is an exciting story of the days when Colorado was less settled and civilized than it is today.

"More sensational than some of his other stories."

A L A Bkl 13:315 Ap '17

"The story would make an excellent foundation for a moving-picture scenario. But still, 'Wildfire' possesses certain virtues of its own—the virtue of being straight, clean, and exciting, and the virtue of lacking the psychological sickness and the maunderings of much of our third-rate fiction."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Mr 17 '17 230w

"After one has followed the story even with intensity, it fades a little in the mind in the days that come after, while one still remembers the atmosphere of the book or the characters." E: E. Hale

+ Dial 62:105 F 8 '17 500w

"Will add nothing to the author's reputation. It lacks the atmosphere of his early novels and falls short of their restrained power. It is a shallow and sensational story."

— Ind 90:87 Ap 7 '17 50w

+ N Y Times 22:21 Ja 21 '17 350w

"It is not like other books. It's a horse story and—actually—unique." M. A. Hopkins

+ Pub W 91:210 Ja 20 '17 350w

"Compares favorably with Mr Grey's best stories."

+ Springfd Republican p17 Mr 11 '17 200w

GRIBBLE, FRANCIS HENRY. Women in war. *$2.75 Dutton 920.7 (Eng ed 16-23097)

"This book, so eminently topical, was yet written, Mr Gribble tells us, before the world-war was talked of. It is an interesting account of individual women or groups of women noted for deeds of bravery, adventurous exploits, or for some special association with war from the time of Boadicea to that of Florence Nightingale. In an epilogue, in which Mr Gribble endeavours to bring the record somewhat up to date, he tells us that he was interned in Germany, and has something to say of German women in war time. . . . The epilogue also records the experiences of some of the women who have served in the Russian and Austro-Hungarian armies—'no fewer than twenty of them in the Voluntary Ukraine legion alone'—and of the women doctors and nurses who went through the Serbian campaign."—Spec

"Mr Gribble writes of Jeanne d'Arc in detail, and with an open mind attempts to give her a proper place in history, conceding neither to M. Anatole France that she was merely the tool of the clergy, nor to Andrew Lang that she was the great military leader he thought her. His searching desire for fairness toward Jeanne d'Arc gives one confidence in the author's estimate of other women warriors with whose reputation the reviewer is less familiar."

+ Dial 63:166 Ag 30 '17 230w

"It sketches in a light superficial manner the heroic or eccentric doings of a motley group of thirty or forty women, ranging in point of time from Countess Matilda of Tuscany to Miss Edith Cavell. The only nexus among them all is that each was in some way connected with war, either leading it like Jeanne D'Arc, or in supposedly causing it like the Empress Eugénie, or in suffering from it like Lady Sale, or in some other more or less remote fashion."

Nation 105:204 Ag 23 '17 350w

"Mr Gribble has made for himself more or less of a reputation as an entertaining but superficial writer on some of the intimate phases of history, especially those connected, and too often scandalously, with women. In this book he has collected with great industry an immense amount of information about what specific women have done in war and in the influencing of countries or individuals in times of war and as companions of warriors."

N Y Times 22:348 S 16 '17 140w

"Reading Mr Gribble's pages, one can hardly realize that they record historical facts. The stories that he relates have all the fascination of fiction."

+ R of Rs 56:215 Ag '17 120w

+ Spec 117:632 N 18 '16 210w

Reviewed by L. A. Mead

Survey 38:553 S 22 '17 230w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p532 N 9 '16 1000w

GRIERSON, RONALD. Some modern methods of ventilation. il *$3 Van Nostrand 697 17-12836

"The author's expressed purpose is to present, in as simple and concise a form as possible, the general principles and practice of design of a modern ventilating plant. This is accomplished as fully as could be expected in a book of less than 200 pages. . . . Although based upon English practice, it presents American practices more fully and correctly than any other British book on this subject known to the reviewer. Many of its 40 tables are from American authorities, and all are in accordance with the most modern practice. A similar statement would apply to the illustrations."—Engin News-Rec

Cleveland p113 S '17 30w

"Although the book will scarcely meet the needs of the student beginner in this subject, nor completely satisfy the needs of the well-informed engineer, yet it may well interest both and it is a desirable addition to any library on the subject of ventilation. The descriptions and definitions are models of conciseness and clearness. . . . As a whole, the book appears to be the product of one who is thoroughly versed in the theory and practice of modern ventilating work." D. D. Kimball

+ Engin News-Rec 78:602 Je 21 '17 350w

GRIERSON, RONALD—Continued
N Y Br Lib News 4:106 J1 '17

"The author of this contribution to a literature which is admittedly scanty has not attempted an exhaustive theoretical treatise. He has sifted with a good deal of skill bred of intimate knowledge of the practical side of his subject. Moreover the plan, instruments and methods of which he treats are up-to-date and fairly comprehensive, so that the result is a satisfactory and useful statement of things as they are."

+ Pittsburg 22:453 My '17 70w (Reprinted from Ironmonger p186 Mr 24 '17)
Pittsburg 22:518 Je '17

GRIFFITH, IRA SAMUEL. Carpentry. il $1
Manual arts press 694 17-1599

"This is really the complete story of the building of a modern house, from surveying and staking out to hanging the windows and doors."—School Arts Magazine

"A textbook for use by trade apprentices, students in vocational and trade schools and students of manual arts. It is a clear treatise on the every-day problems of the carpenter and house builder. As a textbook on carpentry, it meets every requirement of the student. No other publication has ever undertaken to cover the essentials of house building in a manner adapted for school use as this book on 'Carpentry.'"

+ Pittsburg 22:453 My '17 100w (Reprinted from Furniture Manufacturer and Artisan p139 Mr '17)

"Author is an experienced carpenter and is chairman of the Manual arts department, University of Missouri. He has written several excellent elementary books on woodworking, which are recommended."

+ Quar List New Tech Bks Ap '17 70w

"There are more than 150 illustrations. It is a book for apprentices, trade school students, and anybody who wants to know how houses are built."

+ School Arts Magazine 16:356 Ap '17 60w

"One of the best textbooks for students beginning a study of this subject." F. M. Leavitt and Margaret Taylor

+ School R 26:63 Ja '18 120w

GRIFFITH, WILLIAM. Loves and losses of Pierrot. il $1 Shores 811 16-22429

"In his 'Loves and losses of Pierrot,' William Griffith again proves the validity of his poet-gifts and the great charm of a suggestive sketch-book manner of using the old meters. . . . Aside from the origins of the Pierrot legend, there are many suggestions that Mr Griffith has gone deep into the study of eighteenth-century France."—N Y Times

+ Dial 61:543 D 14 '16 90w

"A slender book of delicately alluring lyrics finely and gracefully wrought."

+ Ind 89:235 F 5 '17 40w

+ Lit D 54:209 Ja 27 '17 130w

"'Spring life and spring sadness,' is Mr Le Gallienne's deft characterization of these songs, and little more is to be said."

+ N Y Times 22:55 F 18 '17 150w

GRIMM, MINERVA E., comp. Translations of foreign novels; a selected list. (Useful reference ser.) $1 Boston bk. 016.8

This bibliography aims to bring together in convenient form some of the translations of foreign fiction. The general arrangement is by language. French and German first, these being the largest divisions. Then follow in alphabetical order: Belgian; Chinese; Danish; Dutch; Egyptian; Flemish; Greek; Hungarian; Italian; Norwegian; Polish; Roumanian; Russian; Spanish; Swedish; Yiddish. Under each language there is an alphabetical arrangement by author. The title index is arranged alphabetically according to title, with the language designated after each author and with cross references from other titles for the same book.

The list was originally compiled as a bibliography presented for graduation in the New York library school in 1914, and was brought up-to-date before publication. "Each book in the list was examined at the time of compilation. It was available either in the reference department, the circulation department, or in the Library school of the New York public library. Some of the earlier publications are probably out of print, but entries were made for every book in fair condition, with a reasonable length of life before it." (Preface)

GRISAR, HARTMANN. Luther; authorized tr. from the German, by E. M. Lamond; ed. by Luigi Cappadelta. v 6 $3.25 Herder 15-12670

The final volume of Father Grisar's study of Luther comes from the press in the year of the 400th anniversary of the reformation. In conclusion the author says that his constant endeavor has been "to get as close as possible to the real Luther and not to present a painted or fictitious one." The volume contains the index for the entire work.

"The sixth volume of Prof. Grisar's biography of the reformer displays, equally with the previous volumes, the author's scholarship, industry, and endeavor to write with impartiality."

+ Ath p418 Ag '17 50w

"The readers of these six volumes of Father Grisar must indeed recognize that he has written the most objective, the most thorough and most unprejudiced life of Luther."

+ Cath World 106:247 N '17 600w

"As a Jesuit, the author has no sympathy for Luther, but he has spared no pains to state the facts about the reformer, and his general estimate of Luther's character, especially in its mystical and its intolerant phases, is well worth reading."

+ Spec 119:16 J1 7 '17 100w

"Perhaps it is in the nature of the case impossible that a man who is so identified with the Roman system as an earnest and able Jesuit must needs be should be able to appreciate the motive force of its most deadly opponent. He is so absorbed in his psychological theories, and in minute points of historical accuracy, that he fails to grasp and to describe the great currents of Luther's thought and action. Professor Grisar does not give a living history, but an elaborate and critical commentary on the history."

* — + The Times [London] Lit Sup p521 N 1 '17 3750w

GRONER, AUGUSTA. Joe Muller, detective; tr. by Grace Isabel Colbron. $1.25 Duffield

"A little, mild-looking, meek-mannered, gentle-voiced man—and the best, most famous detective attached to the Secret Service of the Austrian police; such is Joe Muller, the hero and principal figure in the five ingenious tales which make up this little book. The first and longest, a novelette, in fact, rather than a short story, is the one entitled 'The lamp that went out.' One of those murder cases which seem so simple and obvious, and are really so very complicated, is this tale of the man whose dead body was found in a lonely road." (N Y Times) The other titles are: The case of the registered letter; The case of the pocket diary found in the snow; The case of the pool of blood in the pastor's study; The case of the golden bullet.

N Y Br Lib News 4:131 S '17 30w

+ N Y Times 22:276 J1 22 '17 230w

GROSVENOR, JOHNSTON. Strange stories of the great valley. il $1 (2½c) Harper 17-12138

A story of the Ohio valley one hundred years ago. The young hero, Obadiah Holman, a New England boy, floats down the Ohio river, with his parents, to find a new home in Indiana. He meets and makes friends with many of the great men of the time and with one boy who was to become a great man, Abraham Lincoln. Of the incidents of the book, the author says, "They are almost true. . . . In substance they are a faithful picture of the sort of adventures that helped pioneer lads of the great valley to grow into the full measure of men."

"A really good, human book for children."

+ N Y Times 22:314 Ag 26 '17 70w

"Each story is complete in itself, but they fit together and are all the better for it; and Mr Grosvenor is a capital story teller."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 26 '17 190w

GROTIUS, HUGO. Freedom of the seas; or, The right which belongs to the Dutch to take part in the East Indian trade. *$1 Oxford 341 16-10705

"A translation of Grotius's famous treatise, one of the foundations and sources of international law. The book contains the Latin text of 1633, revised and an English translation by Ralph Van Deman Magoffin, associate in Greek and Roman history, and Roman archaeology in the Johns Hopkins university. There is an introductory note by James Brown Scott, director of the division of international law of Carnegie endowment. Grotius's treatise was naturally not altogether popular in England in the 17th century because he denied to any nation the right to claim large tracts of the open sea for its own particular use. The work was not, however, directed against England. It was written to make good the right of the Dutch to continue trading with the East Indies."—Springf'd Republican

Springf'd Republican p6 O 15 '17 200w

"The work is singularly unsuggestive as to present or probable future controversies."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p86 F 22 '17 1250w

GRUMBACH, S. Germany's annexationist aims; tr., abbreviated and introduced by J. Ellis Barker. *$1.50 Dutton 327.43 17-29849

"Mr Barker is familiar with the politics, language, and literature of Germany, and held international rank as an authority in regard thereto before war began. In his introduction to this book he says that 'Germany's war-aims are not sufficiently known in this country'; and he proceeds to speak of 'Herr S. Grumbach's monumental' volume. 'Das annexionistische Deutschland,' published by Payot & Co., at Lausanne, in 1917,' as affording the information not hitherto accessible here. To render it so has been his wish, as translator and abbreviator. It is his conviction, well based, as his numerous quotations and excerpts prove, that 'German annexationists, belonging to all classes of society, have formed almost boundless plans of conquest in Europe and on the continents beyond.'"—Lit D

Ath p671 D '17 110w

Lit D 56:39 Ja 12 '18 250w

+ Spec 119:sup474 N 3 '17 100w

"On some points his book shows the result of haste in its compilation, but none the less it is a very useful piece of work, which should be widely known."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p522 N 1 '17 850w

GRUNSKY, CARL EWALD, and GRUNSKY, CARL EWALD, Jr. Valuation, depreciation and the rate-base. diags *$4 Wiley 338 17-1339

"This volume is a notable addition to the small number of books that treat at all fully the subject of valuation and related problems. It contains an introductory discussion; carefully written definitions of many of the terms used; a statement of fundamental principles; a full discussion of the various matters that effect valuation and rate making; chapters relating to the value of real estate, water rights and reservoir and watershed lands; a special chapter by Carl Ewald Grunsky, Jr., on the valuation of mines and oil properties. . . . tables giving the probable useful life of various articles and expectancy of life and remaining value upon a given theoretical basis; and a series of tables relating to compound interest, present worth, annuities, amortization and depreciation."—Engin N

"Less a comprehensive and systematic discussion of valuation and rate making in accordance with present procedure than the presentation of particular views based on personal experience and study. There is commendable omission of numerous elementary commonplaces, but unfortunately particular points are uselessly repeated over and over and, in general, material, much of it irrelevant, is presented in a very disorganized fashion." J: Bauer

+ Am Econ R 7:634 S '17 1000w

+ American Gas Engineering Journal p302 Mr 24 '17

Cleveland p107 S '17 10w

"While, as indicated above, the book in some of its main features seems not to make recommendations along practical and progressive lines, it is the result of personal contact, long experience and much study of the valuation problem, has been written with much care and contains many valuable ideas, so that it should have a place in the library of all those interested in valuation." F: P. Stearns

+ Engin N 77:434 Mr 15 '17 1100w

"Chapter 12, on the accounting system, is not up to date. . . . The reviewer commends the book to the libraries of valuation men, not because it is a model of clearness, nor even because he thinks the depreciation problem is as desperately complex as the authors make it, but because the authors have painstakingly expounded a fair-minded theory about which valuation men should know something, and because they have presented some remarkably complete tables." C. W. Stark

+ Engin Rec 75:475 Mr 24 '17 850w

"This work on the valuation of utilities and mines contains little new material for most students of the subject. It is primarily an exposition of established practices in valuation without much critical appraisal of their soundness. Students beginning the study of valuation, however, will find the work a clear and helpful presentation of the subject."

+ J Pol Econ 25:757 J1 '17 370w

"The book is not suited for popular reading, but has value for technicians. Its preparation marks a decided step in the regulation of utilities. We hear so much about it that it might be thought an old art. In fact, it is so new that it has hardly developed its science."

+ N Y Times 22:174 Ap 29 '17 220w

+ Pittsburgh 22:336 Ap '17 50w

"The engineer or utility official . . . will probably find the mathematical and tabular information of considerable value."

+ Pittsburgh 22:453 My '17 170w (Reprinted from Electric Railway Journal p674 Ap 7 '17)

+ Pittsburgh 22:322 D '17 20w

+ Railway Review p539 Ap 14 '17

GRUNZEL, JOSEF. Economic protectionism; ed. by Eugen von Philippovich. *$2.90 Oxford 337 (Eng ed 16-23811)

"This volume is the first published by the Division of economics and history of the Carnegie endowment for international peace. . . . The book covers a much wider range of topics than is ordinarily covered in books on the protective question. Not duties upon imports alone are considered, but also the regulation and manipulation of railway rates for the purpose of affording protection, and administrative measures which, though nominally for hygienic and sanitary purposes, in reality are designed to impede importation. Export duties naturally receive attention; and further, the import and export of capital, and immigration and emigration."—Nation

Reviewed by A. L. Bishop

Am Econ R 7:659 S '17 600w

GRUNZEL, JOSEF—Continued

"The volume will be chiefly valuable as a general presentation of a subject, too much neglected by American writers, which is bound to attract greater attention in the immediate future. More particularly the second part will be useful, for few people realize the wide extent of the measures already adopted by various countries in carrying out this policy. But as a theoretical discussion of the economic soundness and political wisdom of the policy as a whole it is inadequate." C. W. Wright

+ — Am Hist R 22:851 J1 '17 700w

"It has been strongly criticized for its protectionist bias."

A L A Bkl 13:376 Je '17

"Its purpose is to survey the problem of protectionist policy as a whole, and summarize the results of the past research. The committee wisely committed this task to a scholar who believed in protection. The result is a most useful volume, although it throws little light on the problem of the causation of war."

+ — Ath p22 Ja '17 1450w

"Professor Grunzel's chief field of activity seems to be in the Austrian ministry of commerce, as adviser and administrator; and this accounts for the fulness of his information upon such concrete matters as were just referred to. No doubt it serves also to account for the general character of the present performance. The book is not such as would come from a scholar or from any one having capacity for intellectual discrimination. It is frankly, almost naively protectionist; indeed, exhibits protectionism in its vulgar form. The verdict, alas, must be that it is full of superficialities, question-begging phrases, muddy reasoning. . . . As an intellectual performance, it is negligible. But as an indication of the ways, and purposes of the economic politician, it is of sad and portentous significance."

— Nation 101:239 Mr 1 '17 1400w

GUÉRARD, ALBERT LÉON. Five masters of French romance. *$1.50 Scribner 843

17-26178

"The present volume is, in the main, independent of politics, though we do not overlook the introductory and concluding chapters—'The twilight of a world,' 'Geniuses as cannon-fodder and survival of the fittest,' 'Regeneration,' and so on. The writers studied are Anatole France, primate of French literature; Pierre Loti, exotic representative of French Protestantism, and on the surface the least Protestant of all; Paul Bourget, 'the most skilful technician'; Maurice Barrès, 'defender of tradition'; and Romain Rolland, author of 'one of the world's classics.'"—Dial

+ A L A Bkl 13:257 Mr '17

"The criticism is sane, the argument popular, the substance interesting and the tone serious, while the style sparkles with a true French vivacity which has not had to suffer by translation. . . . While it would be impossible to subscribe to everyone of M. Guérard's appreciations, he would be himself the first to disavow any such necessity."

+ Cath World 104:694 F '17 350w

"Professor Guérard is a well-read man and he has written a useful book of a secondary sort. His book is, as his college lectures doubtless are, highly instructive to those who are not already well informed in the field traversed. His exposition of French novels and French culture is discrete and balanced, and his knowledge of American life, its standards and limitations, adds to his conservatism in the present work. There is no heat or passion here, either for men or works or ideas, and the level style and equal temper of the essays make them all the more judicious and all the less inspiring."

+ — Dial 62:113 F 8 '17 350w

+ Ind 91:351 S F '17 130w

+ N Y Times 22:187 My 13 '17 920w

Outlook 115:116 Ja 17 '17 100w

"Especially circumstanced for interpreting to Americans the personal and literary characteristics of modern French authors is Albert Leon Guérard, a Frenchman born and bred, but now an American of more than ten years' standing who is professor of French in the Rice institute, at Houston, Tex."

+ Springfd Republican p10 My 10 '17 350w

"He wants to be on the side of the heavy angel, sociology, yet he is by inclination a connoisseur of literature. . . . He is so anxious to convince Texas that French yellow-backs are worthy of serious attention that he is a little unscrupulous as to the kind of attention he secures for them. Secretly convinced that they are to be judged as literature, he has not the courage of his conviction, and serves them up as documents of social history. Unsteadiness of aim makes a bad book, and Mr Guérard's is not a good one. And yet it might have been had not the American conscience so much perturbed the French taste."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p622 D 21 '16 700w

"Useful for readers who wish short-cuts to a knowledge of these French writers and their novels, but are hardly equal to Miss Stephens' 'French novelists of today.'"

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:156 My '17 70w

GUEST, EDGAR ALBERT. Heap o' livin'. *$1.25 Reilly & B. 811

16-21963

"Mr Guest chooses the old familiar themes of domestic joys and sorrows, the ups and downs of life, the high hopes and the grievous disappointments common to our lot. . . . This is by no means his first appearance in print, and to his old friends he needs no introduction. Let those who still have before them the pleasure of making his acquaintance try his quality in such poems of the present collection as 'My creed,' 'Spring in the trenches,' 'The other fellow,' 'Father,' and 'Mother.'"—Dial

"Those who like Will Carleton and James Whitcomb Riley will not dislike Mr Guest."

+ Dial 61:355 N 2 '16 200w

"Homely poetry, full of health and vigor."

+ Lit D 53:1727 D 30 '16 350w

"Inspiration may or may not lie between its covers, but love and good solid, spiritual fellowship for the common man are there."

+ Springfd Republican p5 My 1 '17 250w

GUEST, FLORA (BIGELOW) (MRS LIONEL GEORGE WILLIAM GUEST). Cow and milk book. Il *75c (3c) Lane 636 17-12845

A series of short, practical chapters on dairying by a woman who writes from personal experience in Canada. Emphasis is placed on cleanliness, careful inspection, etc. Among the subjects taken up are: Beef versus milk, The care of milk, The price of milk, Housing the cattle, Housing calves, To start a herd on economical lines, Advanced registry of cattle, How to choose a dairy cow, Stall-fed cows, Bedding, Watering the cattle.

"Will be found as helpful as the more scientific guides, most of which have the herd owner in mind."

Ind 90:516 Je 16 '17 40w

"Mrs Lionel Guest was the daughter of the late John Bigelow. . . . She has a successful dairy farm near Montreal which she superintends, and this little book offers the results of her own experience. It is thoroughly practical and deals with all the phases of the subject."

+ N Y Times 22:167 Ap 29 '17 150w

GUIMERÁ, ANGEL. La peadora (Daniela); a play in three acts; tr. by Wallace Gillpatrick. (Pub. of Hispanic soc. of Am.) pa *$1.25 Putnam 862 16-22623

For the English version of this play by the author of "Marta of the Lowlands," we are indebted to Mexico City. The translator saw its first performance there in 1902 and, impressed with its merits, obtained permission from the author to translate it into English. The scene is in a little Spanish village. A great singer, after fifteen years of absence, has just returned to her childhood home. She is broken in health and her hopes of renewing her strength among well loved scenes are frustrated by the suspicions of her old friends, and especially by the jealousy of the wife of her one-time sweetheart.

"Wallace Gillpatrick has translated 'La peca-dora' and has brought over into English most if not all of the hot and fluid passion of the original. . . . For acting purposes, at least with us, some of the scenes, notably the first half of the first act, would have to be condensed, but it makes easier reading as it stands, affording the opportunity to come slowly and surely under the spell of the emotions and the sensibilities of another race." O. M. Saylor
+ Dial 62:142 F 22 '17 120w

"For sheer dramatic intensity the second act has been equalled by few plays in the past half century. . . . Guimerà's play should be accessible in the theater. It probably will not be. There is too much of the primitive and the true in it, and nothing whatever of the veiled sex appeal. . . . As a reading play it is fascinating, and we fortunately have it in an admirable translation." Frank Macdonald
+ N Y Call p14 Mr 11 '17 850w
Pratt p36 O '17 10w

+ R of Rs 55:441 Ap '17 160w

GULICK, LUTHER HALSEY. Dynamic of manhood. *75c (3c) Assn. press; *$1 (4c) Doran 170 17-21790

Dr Gulick says that human desires, or hungers, may be divided into two classes: (1) those that seek some benefit for one's self; and (2) those that seek some benefit for others. The first are stomach-hungers—or Hunger; the second are heart-hungers—or Love. It is with these "heart-hungers" that his book is concerned. Contents: The two major motives; Hunger for a friend; Hunger for woman; Hunger for children; Hunger for God. The two editions are printed from the same plates, altho that issued by the Association Press is in smaller form.

+ A L A BkI 14:149 F '18

"His conclusions coincide with and add weight to the best thought of the day, from the viewpoint of religion as well as from that of science."
+ Boston Transcript p6 D 22 '17 100w

"The opening chapter on unsexed persons gives the book an excessively physiological keynote, and does not establish the author's thesis. Dr Gulick has, however, an excellent chapter on the dangers of talking sexual subjects so as to arouse prurieny in children and his presentation of the ideal of romantic marriage is sincere and high-principled."

+ — Springfd Republican p17 N 18 '17 150w

GULLIVER, JULIA HENRIETTA. Studies in democracy. *$1 (6c) Putnam 321.8 17-6232

Three addresses by the president of Rockford college for women. In the first, The essence of democracy, delivered as a baccalaureate address in 1915, the author expresses the belief that "the impulse toward expansion, which underlies the present world-upheaval, is the impulse toward the democratizing of Europe." The second, The twentieth-century search for the Holy Grail, delivered before the State federation of women's clubs in Rockford, Ill., in 1915, is a study of the work of American women along economic, civic and legislative lines. The third, The efficiency of democracy, a baccalaureate address of 1916, is given to a comparison of the methods of a democracy and an autocracy, as represented by the United States and Germany, with suggestions as to what each can learn from the other.

"While it contains nothing that is novel or striking, the book is interesting, cogent in its expression of ideas and possesses more literary merit than most brief discussions of its kind."

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:366 My '17 80w
Boston Transcript p6 My 29 '17 280w
N Y Br Lib News 4:43 Mr '17 10w

R of Rs 55:444 Ap '17 20w

"The fact that two of them are baccalaureate sermons may explain their limitations, for nothing seems to stultify original thought like the necessity of imparting it to June graduates."

+ Springfd Republican p15 Jl 29 '17 200w

GUTHRIE, WILLIAM DAMERON. Magna carta, and other addresses. *$1.50 (2c) Columbia univ. press 342.7 16-17474

The address on Magna carta which opens this volume was delivered before the Constitutional convention of the State of New York in 1915. The other addresses, also prepared for special occasions, are: The Mayflower compact; Constitutional morality; The eleventh amendment; Criticism of the courts; Graduated or progressive taxation; The duty of citizenship; Nominating conventions; Catholic parochial schools; The France-America committee of New York.

"Mr Guthrie's addresses add very little to the discussion of the problems which they are concerned with, but they have their value as a statement of the conservative view by a learned and clear-thinking student and teacher of the law. The essay on 'Magna carta' is perhaps the least valuable of the entire collection. In this paper the author presents the older view of the content and purpose of this document, a view that has long since lost credit among English historians."

Dial 62:112 F 8 '17 250w

"On every page there is to be found cogent argument, happy illustration and sound setting forth of vitally important legal and constitutional principles."

+ Educ R 52:529 D '16 90w

"Mr Guthrie's predilection for quasi-historical arguments prevents him from dealing with any issue on its merits. However, in the essay on the income tax, he shows his moral insight and social wisdom in his condemnation of a graduated income tax." M. R. Cohen

+ New Repub 9:sup18 N 18 '16 800w

+ Springfd Republican p6 Ja 12 '17 450w

GWATKIN, HENRY MELVILL. Church and state in England to the death of Queen Anne; with a preface by the Rev. E. W. Watson. *$5 (3c) Longmans 274.2 17-27958

Dr Gwatkin did not live to revise his manuscript, and it is offered with some imperfections which the editors deemed presumptuous to tamper with. It is not a textbook for beginners but for "informed and intelligent students" who wish a survey of England's secular and ecclesiastical development, in due coordination and proportion. A good index is provided.

"If, in consequence of the lamented author's death, some portions of the book are not quite abreast of the most recent knowledge there is compensation in the broadminded and comprehensive treatment of the weighty theme to which Prof. Gwatkin wholeheartedly addressed himself."

+ Ath p590 N '17 190w

"As a scamper through English history this posthumous work, edited by Dr E. W. Watson, is clever. Here and there we find shrewd remarks and phrases. But, whereas the modern historian strives painfully to be coldly neutral, Gwatkin's bias was so vehement that he seldom troubles to argue, or even to be accurate."

+ Sat R 124:465 D 8 '17 1500w

+ The Times [London] Lt Sup p507 O 18 '17 70w

"No references are given, but they are hardly to be expected in a compendium of facts which derives its interest from the personality of the author and the independence of his views. There is no lack of learning, and the book is wonderfully compressed. The character sketches are always interesting, and some of the generalizations on collateral subjects, like the remarks on English foreign policy on page 237, would do credit to a specialized monograph. No

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

GWATKIN, HENRY MELVILL—Continued
ecclesiastical historian has written with a broader outlook on the human side of English history."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p633 D 20
'17 1309w

GWYNN, STEPHEN LUCIUS. Mrs Humphry Ward. (Writers of the day) *60c (3c)
Holt 823 (Eng ed 18-1392)

This study of Mrs Humphry Ward is added to a series which already includes books on Anatole France, Arnold Bennett, H. G. Wells, Joseph Conrad, Henry James, and others. It is Mrs Ward's great and long continued popularity that draws critical attention to her work. As Mr Gwynne says, "Such a success as she has achieved and consolidated does not dictate to critical opinion, but it compels appraisal to be made." Following the introduction, are chapters devoted to: "Robert Elsmere"; Novels of the general world: "Helbeck of Bannisdale" and "Eleanor"; Novels with a historical basis: "The case of Richard Meynell"; Later novels and general appreciation.

"Mr Gwynn takes the candid and reasonable view that the popularity of Mrs Humphry Ward justifies a critical attention which her books hardly deserve on mere literary grounds."

+ Ath p594 N '17 130w

"While he has apparently read Mrs Ward's novels thoroughly, he has little understanding of their purpose. A serious mistake was made by the editor of the series in inviting him to contribute the study of Mrs Humphry Ward." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p8 N 10 '17 650w

"At times his criticism is most caustic, more than is usually found in sketches of this character." D. F. K.

+ N Y Call p14 Ja 5 '18 160w

"It is with unmixed joy that we greet this critical estimate of Mrs Humphry Ward, not because it is vital to have an estimate of Mrs Ward, but because in itself this little study is of unusual value. This critique is excellent from a critical point of view, and well worth reading for its own sake."

+ N Y Times 22:579 D 30 '17 440w

"It is a remarkably spirited and readable appreciation, even though one may not fully agree with the conclusions."

+ R of Rs 57:217 F '18 80w

"Mr Gwynn shows himself at once a sympathetic and a severe critic."

+ Spec 119:529 N 10 '17 140w

"Mr Gwynn has not a few shrewd things to say as to Mrs Ward's mental attitude. His opening pages seem to be imbued with the highly unintelligent view that there must be something suspicious about a large circulation. This leads him to impose upon the reader at the outset what seems to us a wholly unfair view of his subject, and one which he does not prove himself able to substantiate."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p519 O 25
'17 470w

GWYNN, STEPHEN LUCIUS, and TUCKWELL, GERTRUDE M. Life of the Rt Hon Sir Charles W. Dilke. 2v il *$10.50
Macmillan (Eng ed 17-29369)

"It may be expected that this 'Life of Sir Charles Dilke' will at once take its place among standard works of reference, for much of it records in his own words, from notes made day by day, the important events in British and European history of the second half of the nineteenth century in which he took a prominent part. . . . Sir Charles Dilke's activities were many-sided, and his biographers have tried to present a picture of the complete man. Sections are allotted to his lifelong efforts to improve the conditions of the working classes, his care for the rights of native races, and his literary work and interests; and Mr Spenser Wilkinson contributes the chapters describing the active part taken by Sir Charles Dilke in impressing upon the nation the necessity of preparations for imperial defence. In all the activities of the second half of his life Sir Charles had a devoted co-worker in Lady Dilke, and Miss Tuckwell has provided a delightful picture of happy home life."—Ath

"The two volumes are a notable addition to the socio-political history of the last generation. For in the realm of social politics Dilke established a new tradition. In the sphere of foreign policy or imperial policy, on questions relating to the army and navy, he undoubtedly possessed an almost unrivalled knowledge; but these matters were, in a sense, the stock-in-trade of all politicians. In the field of social politics, however, he stood alone—a pioneer."

+ Ath p504 O '17 1900w

"The reader feels that he is a privileged spectator in the actual making of history, and is enabled to realize the personalities of the chief characters who directed the course of events."

+ Ath p530 O '17 480w

"His biographers appear to have magnified his strong and engaging qualities and minimized his failings, which is not an uncommon practice with biographers who are also loving friends. It is unfortunately to be noted that the publishers of this work found it necessary or desirable to give the book a fragile and mechanically poor binding." H. S. K.

+ — Boston Transcript p8 O 17 '17 900w

"There has been no English political biography so valuable as this since Lord Morley summarized an epoch in his life of Gladstone. . . . From whatever angle this life is regarded it is a valuable supplement to what we already possess." H. J. L.

+ New Repub 13:320 Ja 12 '18 2450w

+ N Y Times 22:532 D 2 '17 600w

"It is impossible to praise too highly the industry and tact with which Miss Tuckwell has discharged her task of compiling what will certainly rank as a great political biography. . . . Miss Tuckwell's comments are sparing and relevant; and while she obviously writes as a loving disciple, there is no indiscriminate or emotional eulogy."

+ Sat R 124:sup3 S 29 '17 1200w

"We cannot think of Sir Charles Dilke as a possible prime minister. . . . Miss Tuckwell, however, has unquestionably shown that Sir Charles Dilke was a greater force in Liberal politics before 1885 than many people supposed."

+ — Spec 119:327 S 29 '17 2050w

"It is for their spiritual quite as much as for their historical value that these volumes will take their place in English literature. . . . We find, with some disappointment, in the passages dealing with labour questions a lack of that intimacy, that private estimation of personalities and tendencies, which is so fascinating in other chapters of the book."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p451 S 20
'17 1950w

GWYNN, WALKER. Primitive worship and prayer book; rationale, history, and doctrine of the English, Irish, Scottish, and American books. *$2.50 Longmans 264 17-15175

A study made timely by the work of revision of the prayer book in England, the United States and Canada. The writer traces the origin and development of Christian worship to the present form for English-speaking people. The second part of his work is devoted to a clear explanation of what the church teaches by means of the prayer book—by means of the formularies, traditional customs and interpretative scripture embodied in the prayer book. The book seeks an audience among students, general readers, teachers and candidates for Holy orders.

Pittsburgh 22:698 O '17

"The chapters contain the result of considerable reading in the modern literature on the subject, and show that the writer has the gift of interesting exposition."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p519 O 25
'17 210w

H

HAGEDORN, HERMANN. You are the hope of the world! *50c (5½c) Macmillan 172

17-23661

Mr Hagedorn appeals to the boys and girls of America, especially to those between the ages of ten and seventeen, to realize the responsibility laid upon their shoulders by the great war. He asks them to think squarely about their country, to realize that "democracy isn't a success—yet," that we are wasteful, materialistic, improvident and indifferent, and then to "create a tradition of alert citizenship, a tradition of public service." "Your elder brothers will have to fight with guns. . . . To you is given a work every bit as grand as dying for your country; and that is, living for the highest interests of your country! Those interests are the interests of democracy. If, therefore, you live for the highest interests of America, you live at the same time for the highest interests of the world. You are the hope of the world!"

A L A Bkl 14:136 Ja '18

"Such a book as this cannot be reviewed. It must be read if its mission is to be understood. And all should read it, all Americans who know, who fear to know, or who are anxious to know what America stands for in this war." E. F. E. + Boston Transcript p6 Je 27 '17 270w

+ Cleveland p19 N '17 50w

"Mr Hagedorn has compiled all the patriotic persuasion that he can cram into 100 pages or so, and from a literary point of view, his appeal is well worth reading. It is curious to note how he traverses what 'teacher' told the boys and girls in school about the faultless democracy of Uncle Sam . . . and how we have always been morally, ethically and spiritually right, and those who opposed us wrong." J. W.

N Y Call p15 Ag 5 '17 400w

"This appeal to patriotism is praiseworthy in its musical simplicity of style, and the wholesome tenor of his arguments. . . . If Mr Hagedorn can make this war teach the lesson of obligation and responsibility to our over-fed and under-worked youth, that will be one consolation left us."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 S 16 '17 320w

HAGGARD, SIR HENRY RIDER. Finished. il *$1.40 Longmans 17-24205

"That mighty African hunter and adventurer, Allan Quatermain, who has so often filled the roles of hero and narrator of H. Rider Haggard's romances, is once more pressed into service in 'Finished.' . . . While this story is complete in itself, it forms the concluding unit of a trilogy, of which 'Marie' and 'Child of storm' are the preceding numbers. . . . The story embodies the last episode in the wizard Zikali's mysterious career; but to give it a proper setting, Mr Haggard recounts the events preceding the Zulu-British war of 1879, together with events in the early stages of the strife. Historical facts are, of course, suitably cloaked in romance, and arranged to the needs of the plot."—Springf'd Republican

A L A Bkl 14:96 D '17

"Our old friend, Allan Quatermain tells this story. And he tells it well, even if some of the old glamour seems to be missing."

+ — Ath p527 O '17 60w

"Thirty years have passed since we first heard of Allan Quatermain and he is as much alive today as ever. . . . He is and will remain one of the dominant characters of English romantic fiction." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 15 '17 1150w

"The council at the 'Valley of bones' is the most thrilling and picturesque part of a lively, exciting and readable narrative."

+ Lit D 55:42 O 27 '17 200w

+ Nation 105:694 D 20 '17 150w

"A fascinating mixture of fact and fiction."

+ N Y Times 22:353 S 23 '17 880w

"This latest volume, with its ominous title, 'Finished,' shows us two things clearly: One is that this particular type of romance of adventure, . . . with its long-winded periods and utter lack of characterization in dialog needed a rich imagination that provided thrills in plenty and all the action required to sweep the reader along in a fascination that forgot the cumbersome writing; and the second thing is that Rider Haggard's once so enviably rich and fertile imagination is, if not exactly finished, at least slowing down to an extent that necessitates a change of style to make his books acceptable." G. I. Colbron

+ — Pub W 92:804 S 15 '17 570w

R of Rs 56:557 N '17 100w

"The author re-creates, as no other novelist can, the mysterious, legendary Africa of exploration days, and his stories, which are the outgrowth of a personal knowledge of African pioneering, convey a thrill and interest shared by few adventure tales of the present."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 O 7 '17 320w

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p428 S 6 '17 570w

HALASI, ÖDÖN. Belgium under the German heel. *$1.50 Funk 940.91 17-21999

"M. Halasi, a well-known Hungarian writer, succeeded in gaining the confidence of the German authorities and was allowed in 1916 to spend a few months in Belgium, being given unusual facilities for travelling and seeing everything within the occupied territory. The record of his experiences has been given to the anonymous translator, who has supplemented it by information conveyed by another Magyar, M. Ernő Lovass, who spent eighteen months in Belgium during the war."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"It is evident that Mr Halasi's sympathies are with the Belgium people. . . . He sketches the present condition of Antwerp, Louvain, Namur, Dinant, Liège, and Malines, in the order named, and tells to what extent they have suffered or escaped the horrors of war. He closes his book with a picture of Cardinal Mercier and his efforts on behalf of his fellow-countrymen."

+ Ath p368 JI '17 350w

Lit D 55:43 D 8 '17 160w

"The description offers nothing sensational. The author apparently left Belgium before the time of the deportations; we have here nothing of the nature of the harrowing scenes described in M. Passelecq's book."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p279 Je 14 '17 400w

HALDANE, JOHN SCOTT. Organism and environment as illustrated by the physiology of breathing. (Mrs Hepsa Ely Silliman memorial lectures) *$1.25 Yale univ. press 612 17-9380

"Four lectures dealing respectively with the regulation of breathing; the readjustment of regulation in acclimatization and disease; the regulation of the environment, internal and external; organic regulation as the essence of life—inadequacy of mechanistic and vitalistic conceptions."—Cleveland

"Of interest to biologists, physiologists, philosophers, and physicians."

+ Cleveland p94 JI '17 50w

"Four addresses of dynamic interest, but from two very distinct points of view. The first three are predominantly physiological and technical rather than popular. . . . The fourth lecture is of superlative interest, and is a masterly application of the facts of physiology to the modern theories of life."

+ Nation 104:764 Je 28 '17 600w

"The special value of the book to students lies in the fact that the function of respiration is treated simply as one aspect of the activities of the organism as a whole, as a chapter in the unending series of adaptations, internal and external, which make up the life of an individual." F. H. S.

+ Nature 100:241 N 29 '17 1050w

Pratt p20 O '17 50w

HALDANE, JOHN SCOTT—Continued

"From its detailed study of the processes connected with breathing under so many diverse conditions, the book will be of interest to physicians and physiologists. From its consideration of the conflicting theories of life from the standpoint primarily of breathing, it deserves a place on the shelf of the biologist and natural philosopher."

+ Springfd Republican p6 O 29 '17 700w

"Dr Haldane was invited by Yale university to give the Silliman lectures in 1915. At that time there were expectations about the duration of the war which made it natural that postponement of one year should be asked and granted. In 1916 it was determined to wait no longer, and the events of 1917 have fully justified the judgment. The lectures (on the 'Physiology of breathing') were delivered and are to appear in book form before long. But since they contained much that is technical, Dr Haldane gave also four public lectures on 'points of more general interest,' which are printed in the present volume. There is still enough of technicality left to make it hardish reading for the layman in places, but the reading is well worth while."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p364 Ag 2 '17 1750w

HALE, EDWARD EVERETT, Jr. Life and letters of Edward Everett Hale. 2v il ea *$5 (2c) Little 17-31921

Not a criticism, neither an estimate of the life of Edward Everett Hale, but a portrayal of his personal character and achievements. Making use of a vast amount of material including letters, diaries, day books, sermons, lectures and various contributions to literature the son of Dr Hale has followed the progress of his father's career thru its nearly ninety years. After graduation from Harvard he spent a few years making up his mind what he would do; then turned to the ministry. Middle age found him a leading clergyman; a leader and organizer in and out of his especial denomination, full of ideas for public service; a man of letters who had ahead of him long, useful years before the American public. The spirit of the great American has been immortalized in the story that won him continuous fame, "A man without a country."

"Books of this kind are as rare and as universal in their interest as the characters with which they deal."

+ Lit D 55:44 D 8 '17 149w

"A word of praise should go to Mr Hale not only for the painstaking care, fine discrimination and judicial mind with which he has done this work, but also for the excellent spirit of literary craftsmanship in which the whole work has been conceived and carried out. For it is what one might call, for lack of a better term, creative biography. He has used his materials as a sculptor would use clay, and out of them has made a clear and luminous figure which stands out from the pages, a real and authentic portrait of the man as he was. He has not even allowed his filial love to obscure or to gild or to make deceptively roseate what he felt to be the true lineaments of his subject or the true estimate of his character, his work, and his influence."

+ + N Y Times 22:553 D 16 '17 1600w

"We have had to wait eight years for this story of his life. It was worth waiting for. His son has written, or rather we should say edited, this life with reverencing candor—a combination rare in biographers." Lyman Abbott

+ Outlook 118:146 Ja 23 '18 2800w

"It is good to have this biography of vivid and vivifying life. It will bring closer to the man thousands of readers who have known his books and who may well wish to come, thru this biography, into more direct touch with his personality. The illustrations help toward this end." R. R. Bowker

+ Pub W 93:216 Ja 19 '18 850w

+ R of Rs 57:99 Ja '18 210w

HALL, BOLTON. Thrift. *$1 (1½c) Huebsch 304 17-2049

Education, the cooperative movement, intensive cultivation of the land and natural taxation are some of the subjects discussed in this book. The author does not write of thrift in the vein of Samuel Smiles. It is not a system of saving pennies that he advocates, but rather an organization of all one's resources to the end that life may be enriched. He advocates efficiency, too, but it is not the machine-made efficiency of the experts.

A L A Bkl 13:330 My '17 (Reprinted from Survey)

"Evidence of the up-to-date business promoter sticks out on almost every page. His is the clever, incisive, staccato style." H. S. K. Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '17 330w

Cleveland p38 Mr '17 150w

"It would not be just to imply that there aren't some good things in this book. These good things might have been condensed into a pamphlet. There is chapter 13, for example, on 'Institutional garden thrift.' There is an interesting discussion of coöperatives; and another of taxation of land values. Mr Hall's dissertation on prohibition appears to the reviewer to be partially misleading. Loose thinking characterizes it." D. Rosenstein

+ N Y Call p15 Je 10 '17 770w

Pittsburgh 22:325 Ap '17 20w

"The best chapter preaches 'thrift in happiness,' and points the way to love without possession and to joy that is not dependent upon material success."

R of Rs 55:444 Ap '17 110w

"Addressed to wage earners. A sensible discussion of personal efficiency, waste and extravagance, investments and practical success." P. B.

+ St Louis 15:107 Ap '17 20w

"It is full of bright turns, but it is more than bright,—it is sensible and practical. . . . The argument [about temperance], as far as it goes, is sound, but it doesn't get far into the merits of the question. It is the shallowest part of the book."

+ Springfd Republican p6 Mr 9 '17 330w

"How to become prosperous without petrifying in the process really is Mr Hall's theme; and, though we may not agree with him in every detail of his plan, no one can read this little book without getting benefit from his warm human counsel." B. L.

+ Survey 37:585 F 17 '17 180w

HALL, GERTRUDE. Aurora the magnificent. il *$1.40 (1c) Century 17-10200

Mrs Aurora Hawthorne and her friend Miss Estelle Madison drop on the little Anglo-American colony in Florence, determined to see and to spend and to enjoy. They, in particular Aurora, possess all the failings of the "typical" American abroad, but the Anglo-American colony, led by the American consul and his family, accept Aurora and Estelle without question. The reader can do no less, for there is something about them, particularly Aurora, that is compelling. The Fosses, the American consul's family, are delightful, and worthy of a book all of themselves, but this story as it develops becomes more and more the story of Aurora and Gerald Fane, poor, over-wrought, artistic Gerald alternately moved by a desire to shake Aurora and an impulse to rest his tired head on her generous shoulder.

"Published in the Century."

+ A L A Bkl 13:353 My '17

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:413 Je '17 550w

"The story is simple and comprehensible, the mystery untautling itself bit by bit, as mysteries really do. It is natural and not melodramatic; amusing and thoroughly readable."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 11 '17 330w

+ Cath World 105:555 Jl '17 80w

"People who fanfully enjoy love-mazes will like this story; it is written with grace and simplicity, and an honest insight into the thoughts and experiences with which most folk most of the time are engrossed. Those who yearn for light on the vaster perplexities of the human struggle en masse, might as well pass it by."

Dial 62:401 My 3 '17 230w

"Aurora is that rare thing in popular fiction, an individual, a new personality."

+ Ind 90:471 Je 9 '17 130w

"The main thing, and the overwhelming thing, is our faith in Aurora's greatness as a woman, in her adequacy for life, upon whatever terms it may challenge her. . . . Our Aurora's triumph over us and her Gerald is that we exult in her as she is."

+ Nation 104:581 My 10 '17 470w

"The story is a very fine and generous comedy of Americanism abroad. There is no denying Aurora, or the wholesome elemental womanhood, the ripeness of character, that underlies her outrageous bloom." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 105:601 N 29 '17 90w

"The novel is clever and written with a good deal of charm, but the author has spread her slight plot over far too many pages."

+ N Y Times 22:114 Ap 1 '17 330w

"Reading 'Aurora the magnificent' is like taking a railway journey thru pleasant enough but rather uneventful country and all at once getting somewhere." Doris Webb

+ Pub W 91:973 Mr 17 '17 550w

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:158 My '17 60w

HALL, GRANVILLE STANLEY. Jesus, the Christ, in the light of psychology. 2v *$7.50 (2c) Doubleday 232 17-8497

A psychological study of Jesus is regarded by the author as the logical next step following the historical and critical research of recent years. The introduction says, "It is this step that the author attempts to take in this volume. . . . He regards himself as a pioneer in a new domain in which he is certain to be followed by many others, and is convinced that the psychological Jesus Christ is the true and living Christ of the present and of the future. He is the spiritual Christ of the resurrection whom alone Paul knew and proclaimed, although he is here described in modern terms, and it is this that now chiefly matters rather than what an historical person was or did in Palestine, two thousand years ago." It is Dr Hall's hope that such a study may go far toward the reinterpretation of Christianity which is necessary if it is to remain a vital religion for the modern world. Volume 1 consists of chapters on: Jesus' physical personality; Jesus in literature; Jesus' character, negative views; The nativity; Beginnings of the supreme pedagogy. Volume 2 has chapters on: Messianity, sonship, and the kingdom; Jesus' eschatology, his inner character, purpose, and work; Jesus' ethics and prayer; The parables of Jesus; The miracles; Death and resurrection of Jesus.

"The title is likely to mislead the general reader; the work is not a contribution to the study of Jesus, but to the study of genetic psychology. Librarians need to note this in cataloguing it. The student who wishes to know what Jesus said and did, or to understand the gospels, will find only incidental benefit here; it is not the psychology of Jesus which is treated, but the psychology of those who have reflected on Jesus. How the human mind has reacted upon this name; above all, how a modern encyclopedic mind, superlatively trained in psychological analysis, reacts upon it, is exhaustively and illuminatingly presented." C. R. Bowen

* + Am J Theol 21:612 O '17 3200w

"A book for scholars and serious students."

+ A L A Bkl 14:39 N '17

"That the work will prove valuable will hardly be questioned. . . . Dr Hall will not expect all to agree with his conclusions. We think very few will. But hardly any will fail to appreciate the fine spirit of the author; the great mass of material, gathered by the toil of many years; and his introducing them to a method which is sure to throw much light upon him whom the author calls 'the best of all beings.'" F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 19 '17 1700w

— Cath World 105:245 My '17 1+00w

+ Cleveland p91 Jl '17 60w

Dial 63:70 Jl 19 '17 530w

"A notable contribution to the understanding of Jesus. Probably no other man possesses either the equipment or the sympathy necessary to write this book."

+ Educ R 56:173 F '18 60w

"In his first chapters Dr Hall treats with notable comprehensiveness the conceptions of Christ's physical appearance and character that have been set forth in art and literature from earliest times down to the immediate present, discussing and weighing each with care and thoroughness and judicial temper. Among the very recent books thus considered in which Christ or Christian teachings are the theme are, to mention only a very few of the large and diverse list, Kennedy's 'The servant in the house,' Jerome's 'Passing of the third floor back,' Maxwell's 'The ragged messenger,' Moore's 'The Brook Kerith,' Selma Lagerlöf's 'Miracles of Anti-Christ,' Zangwill's 'The next religion,' while discussion at some length is given to the cult of the superman, which Dr Hall calls 'The chief and most extraordinary literary phenomenon of our time,'"

+ N Y Times 22:246 Jl 1 '17 800w

"Whether God, Jesus Christ, and Christianity are anything more than psychic phenomena according to Dr Hall's philosophy he does not make clear; but he makes it quite clear that he thinks this a question not important to answer."

— + Outlook 117:65 S 12 '17 330w

Pittsburgh 22:437 My '17 40w

St Louis 15:136 My '17 7w

"It is unfortunate that a work containing so much learning and so authentic vision should be expressed in such heavy and difficult English. The style often obscures the ideas it seeks to express. Otherwise, the book is a valuable contribution from one of America's leading psychologists to the pressing religious problems of the time."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 My 22 '17 600w

"The mind of President Hall is singularly unfit for his undertaking. He not only is destitute of historical judgment; he does not even realize that his task requires it." B. W. Bacon

— Yale R n s 7:211 O '17 1850w

HALL, JENNIE. Our ancestors in Europe; ed. by J. Montgomery Gambrill and Lida Lee Tall. il *76c Silver 940 16-14054

"Jennie Hall's book is made up of three main parts, viz.: The ancient world. The newer nations, and Beginnings of our own times. The titles of these parts suggest their contents. One hundred and forty pages are devoted to part 1, one hundred and four to part 2, and eighty-two to part 3. The list of illustrations is a very long one. There is also a considerable number of maps and plans scattered throughout the book. At the end of each chapter one finds a long list of questions. Following the last chapter is a list of important dates." (School R) "The book is designed to furnish pupils in the sixth grade with a background for their imminent study of American history." (Nation)

"The author, Miss Jennie Hall, of the Parker school of Chicago, has shown considerable skill both in selecting the incidents and figures on which to dwell and in making the narrative simple without making it dull or childish."

+ Nation 105:268 S 6 '17 90w

"Generally speaking the make-up of the text is attractive, and the contents deal with concrete material well in the range of the understanding of the pupils for whom the book was written." R M Tryon

+ School R 25:684 N '17 180w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

HALL, JOHN LESSLIE. English usage; studies in the history and uses of English words and phrases. *$1.50 Scott 420.4 17-14826

"A reference book for high school pupils or for teachers. Unlike similar books, it aims to give authorities on both sides, leaving the choice to the reader. It is a protest against the rigid rules of the purists in grammatical form."—Ind

Ind 91:234 Ag 11 '17 80w

"As a history of opinion on the chief disputed points of usage the book is valuable. Its value would have been increased if instead of statistical lists we had more often before us the passages in their context."

+ Nation 105:261 S 6 '17 330w

"In reading the book, one feels less confident than before as to what 'good usage' really is, and also recognizes the danger of concluding that a wrong use of words by a good author makes good usage."

+ Outlook 116:593 Ag 15 '17 120w

Reviewed by E. F. Geyer and K. L. Lyman

+ School R 25:607 O '17 120w

HALL, MAY EMERY. Roger Williams. il *$1.25 (3c) Pilgrim press 17-24423

The story of Roger Williams forms a chapter in the history of the struggle for personal liberty in America, and the author has told it in a popular style that will be attractive to young people. She has based her account on recognized sources. There are several illustrations to add interest to the book.

+ A L A Bkl 14:173 F '18

"Very brightly is the story written, delightfully fascinating and especially attractive in the naive manner in which she rushes into the forum as a special pleader in behalf of her client. For Mrs Hall is confessedly an ardent and enthusiastic admirer of the character of Williams, so ardent and so enthusiastic that she fails to discern his undoubted failings."—E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 20 '17 850w

"His story is always worth retelling, and Mrs Hall's volume is, in its way, a public educator. Issued at smaller cost, as one believes it might be, it would be an excellent work for reading in the schools."

+ Springfield Republican p17 N 4 '17 400w

HALLER, WILLIAM. Early life of Robert Southey, 1774-1803. (Columbia univ. studies in English and comparative literature) *$1.50 (1½c) Columbia univ. press 17-25840

The first portion of the life of a poet who has no adequate detailed biography. It covers the first twenty-nine years of Southey's life: his boyhood at school and university; his reactions to literary and political movements in his youth; his early associations with Coleridge, Lamb, Wordsworth, and others; his share in attempting to establish a communistic society in America; his characteristics as a young man, poet, and man of letters; his connection with the "lake school" of poetry; and his settling down in what became his permanent home in Keswick.

Boston Transcript p6 N 17 '17 1000w

"Southey played so prominent a part in the intellectual and literary generation that sprang from the French revolution that a competent study of him has long been needed. That need is now being supplied. The mere bulk of his writings has frightened scholars. Yet the story of this man is not only worth the telling; it is rich in interest besides."

+ Dial 64:73 Ja 17 '18 470w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p638 D 20 '17 130w

HALSEY, FRANCIS WHITING, ed. Balfour, Viviani and Joffre; their speeches and other public utterances in America. *$1.50 (1½c) Funk 940.91 17-24227

Mr Halsey has collected and arranged, with descriptive matter, as compiled from contemporary accounts, the speeches and other public utterances in America of Mr Balfour, M. Viviani and Marshal Joffre, together with those of Italian, Belgian and Russian commissioners during the great war. To these he has added an account of the arrival of the United States warships and soldiers in England and France under Admiral Sims and General Pershing. The period covered is April 21 to July 4, 1917. The material used was first published in the Congressional Record and Canadian parliamentary reports, the great American and Canadian dailies, the London Times and Morning Post, the Paris Temps and La Victoire, the Literary Digest, etc. The book has no index.

"Newspaper 'clippings,' it would seem, should hardly be given unedited to posterity. They could not include, in this case, much that was of importance concerning these visits; hence the record is neither complete nor accurate."—A. I. A.

— Am Hist R 23:433 Ja '18 350w

A L A Bkl 14:53 N '17

"Mr Halsey's collection of the speeches of the commissioners is a useful work of reference rather than a readable book, for one must grant that the average of eloquence, despite the frequent 'lift' in M. Viviani's addresses, is low, while the passages that are insignificant and that duplicate one another are very numerous indeed."

+ Dial 63:594 D 6 '17 200w

— Ind 91:512 S 29 '17 100w

"Even a hasty reading of the book, however, creates two impressions which one ventures to believe will not later be unjustified by the results of complete investigation. The first is that Mr Balfour is a master of the shrewd, weighed phrase, a genius at resolving dangerous difficulties and at allaying any nascent suspicions. M. Viviani, on the other hand, is easily the most eloquent orator that we have heard in America for a generation."

+ New Repub 13:355 Ja 19 '18 200w

R of Rs 57:214 F '18 40w

+ Spec 119:sup474 N 3 '17 130w

HAMILTON, CLAYTON MEEKER. Problems of the playwright. *$1.60 (2c) Holt 792 17-29336

A companion volume to "The theory of the theatre and studies in stage-craft" which the writer calls "a sort of suffix" to the earlier work. "In this book, the kaleidoscopic field of the contemporary drama is considered from various points of view,—that of the critic, the dramatist, the stage-director, the scenic artist, the manager, and the theatre-going public." Among the chapters, a good many of which have had magazine publication, are: Contrast in the drama; Surprise in the drama; The troublesome last act; Strategy and tactics; Harmony in presentation; High comedy in America; The George M. Cohan school of playwrights; Yvette Guilbert; The magic of Mr Chesterton; Criticism and creation in the drama; A kiss for Cinderella; Dramatic talent and theatrical talent; Stevenson on the stage; The plays of Lord Dunsany; The mood of Maeterlinck; Euripides in New York; Romance and realism in the drama; The new stagecraft; The non-commercial drama; A democratic insurrection in the theatre; What is wrong with the American drama?

A L A Bkl 14:84 D '17

"Mr Hamilton's dominant characteristic as a dramatic critic is his desire always to go behind the specific example, often possessing only a fleeting interest, to the law which controlled it. . . . His enthusiasm is cautiously controlled; and it is set free only when his head is convinced and his heart is touched. He does not allow his judgment to be unduly influenced by the vagaries of public opinion; and the ardent admirers of Mr Galsworthy's plays and the uncritical worshippers at the shrine of Mr Shaw will probably be rudely shocked by the chilly analysis of the merits and demerits of these two favourites of the moment. . . . Mr

Hamilton's criticism is consistently interesting because it has the support of knowledge and the savour of individuality." Brander Matthews

+ Bookm 46:355 N '17 1300w

+ Cleveland p135 D '17 20w

"He isn't a radical in matters dramatic, and he isn't a reactionary. He doesn't champion the newer movements, nor does he evade condemning the older schools. The indecision is largely due to Mr Hamilton's indefinite opinions, and also to his apparent refusal to trace a theme to his logical end. It is a good book with which to interest those who are not interested at all, but it will not appeal to students who have made some progress." L. Gardy

+ N Y Call p16 Ja 19 '18 340w

"The title of Clayton Hamilton's 'Problems of the playwright' is as unfortunate as it is alliterative, for the idea it suggests of the technical side of writing plays is much too narrow to cover the many and varied and suggestive discussions of the contemporary drama."

+ N Y Times 22:578 D 30 '17 220w

"For sheer power to entertain no other writer on stagecraft excels Clayton Hamilton."

+ R of Rs 57:108 Ja '18 110w

"The book deals in general observations, but they are observations that are pertinent because they are fortified by knowledge, earnestness and critical sense. They are not, however, co-ordinated into a study. Mr Hamilton's book has little unity of purpose, though a unity of spirit does pervade it."

+ Spring'd Republican p17 N 11 '17 1100w

"Of interest to satisfy the reader's curiosity as to the author's opinion of certain plays or playwrights, rather than of value as dramatic criticism."

+ Wis Lib Bul 14:30 Ja '18 50w

HAMILTON, COSMO. Joan and the babies and I; being certain chapters from the autobiography of John Mainwaring, the novelist. il $1 (6c) Little (Eng ed 16-15133)

A story which can be summed up in a few words. An Englishman, suffering from nerves and over-indulgence in self analysis, spends a summer on the Massachusetts coast. He makes friends on the beach with two small children, meets their mother, falls in love with her and marries her. It may be that the reason for existence of the book is explained in this sentence, "Being male I intended to follow the law of nature and be the dominating factor—a law which if adopted by American husbands would save many thoughtless women, over-burdened with freedom, from making epic fools of themselves."

"There is a certain sentimental intimacy that some authors affect in relation to their characters that is more repulsive than the most outspoken language of your Fieldings or your Smolletts. . . . Condemned by his own confession, he stands as an exemplar of that lack of reticence—or lack of frankness, it is hard to say which—that is the besetting sin of American literature."

— Dial 62:403 My 3 '17 170w

"In spite of the domestic title of Mr Hamilton's story, and the two delightfully natural children who usher in the first chapter, the little book is decidedly upsetting to a normally constituted mind. . . . It contains some true sentiment and wise conclusions, but, great as are the faults of the present social system, it is more coherent, and certainly, less offensive to good taste than would be a society made up of Johns and Joans."

+ N Y Times 22:155 Ap 15 '17 270w

HAMILTON, COSMO. Scandal. il $1.50 (1½c) Little 17-23982

"Beatrix Vanderdyke was extraordinarily rich, extraordinarily beautiful, extraordinarily charming, and extraordinarily foolish. . . . Her habit of making night time visits to the studio of a rather vulgar portrait painter . . . resulted in scandal. Beatrix's family threatened her with banishment to a cottage in Maine, and to save herself from losing a New York season she declared that she had been secretly married to one of her acquaintances. This gentleman, being a good sport, accepted the challenge and determined to tame the willful Beatrix for the good of her soul. Follows the course of events to be expected in a novel beginning with this kind of a situation, including the usual bedroom scene and ending with the happy conclusion which the reader has long known was sure to come. In the meanwhile there is plenty of sparring between the hero and the more or less unclad heroine, a lady of doubtful antecedents endeavors to intervene, and an obliging fog undertakes the rôle of deus ex machina."—N Y Times

"There is none of the preaching here which was to be found in 'The blindness of virtue' and which the title suggests we may be going to find. It is wholly an entertaining story with those touches of the unconventional with which Mr Hamilton knows so well how to deal." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 26 '17 550w

"Need be taken no more seriously than the fashion-plates in a popular magazine. . . . Those having a taste for the sort of stories usually told over the cigars, after the women have left the room, will enjoy this bit of journalism."

— Dial 63:354 O 11 '17 140w

"The novel has one character, Beatrix's English companion, who is really quite like a human being."

— N Y Times 22:349 S 16 '17 270w

"Mr Hamilton fails to make his American characters convincing, but in the case of his heroine's English duenna from Clapham he is more successful."

+ Spring'd Republican p15 D 23 '17 270w

HAMILTON, LORD ERNEST WILLIAM. Soul of Ulster. $1.25 Dutton 941.5 17-14524

"This volume by the author of 'The first seven divisions' is a concise history of Ulster as it affects the Irish question. Lord Ernest Hamilton shows what, in his opinion, is at the back of the demand for Home rule, and what would happen if it were granted." (Ath) "The book falls into three parts—an historical retrospect, a survey of the situation at the present day, and a forecast of the future possibilities inherent in the Sinn Fein movement. The Ulster question treated historically is, in his view, bound up with the general ethics of colonization. . . . Lord Ernest Hamilton writes as the advocate and champion of the Ulster Protestant colonist and the British garrison, and one may search his pages in vain for any indication of the emergence of the type of Young Ulsterman sketched in Mr St John Ervine's book." (Spec)

A L A Bkl 14:53 N '17

Ath p257 My '17 50w

"Lord Ernest possesses the pen of a ready writer, and is able to retain the reader's interest from cover to cover. . . . He writes from the point of view of the Ulster Unionist, and of his sincerity there can be no doubt. But his judgment and better feelings appear to have been warped by fear, so much so that his conception of Irish character is too black to be credited. . . . 'The soul of Ulster' deserves to be read as a strong presentation of the Unionist case. Before difficulties can be overcome, they must be clearly seen. Lord Ernest Hamilton's book skillfully indicates the difficulties of the Ulster problem."

+ Ath p344 Jl '17 570w

"Of that Irish and Catholic half of Ulster, Mr Hamilton knows nothing—or at best, only the worst! Prejudice and bigotry speak from his every page."

— Cath World 105:326 S '17 600w

"Of course 'The Soul of Ulster' is no more dispassionate than any Sinn Feiner argument. But it is well for us interested onlookers to see the other side of the perennial Irish question."

+ Ind 92:260 N 3 '17 60w

HAMILTON, LORD ERNEST WILLIAM—Cont.

"They do give to the reader who has time to go through them vivid understanding of the difficulties to be encountered by those who would settle Irish affairs. . . . It may be also that perusal of such books will do further good in this country. . . . It has been to small purpose that some informed neither by Tories abroad nor from newspapers of immigrants in New York have pointed out that England has changed, that whatever the sins of the past she is anxious now to do honorable justice, that of late she has made much amends, and is prevented from settling the whole question partly because of circumstances pertaining to Irishmen and beyond her control. The slight and transient and narrow writings which are appearing more frequently as two Irish parties set forth their cause will make it, no doubt, much easier for people to comprehend what these difficulties are."

* Nation 105:149 Ag 9 '17 750w

"It is quite likely that a good many people who do not know nearly as much about Ulster as Lord Ernest Hamilton evidently does will suspect him of prejudice. At any rate, his convictions are very definite and downright and they are expressed with simplicity and force."

N Y Times 22:246 J1 1 '17 650w

"The great surprise of the book is the anticipation that the development of Sinn Feinism, of the origin and organization of which Lord Ernest Hamilton gives a very inadequate and perfunctory account, may provide a solution of the Irish question by its refusal to recognize a standardized religion, and by the consequent fusion of the races by intermarriage. . . . His curious book is not conceived or executed in a judicial spirit, though it contains many wholesome truths and much sane criticism."

Spec 118:541 My 12 '17 1450w

"Ordinarily we in the United States hear only one side of the Irish question. The other side of the picture is vividly, yet fairly, presented by Ernest W. Hamilton."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 30 '17 350w

"Considering the vastness of the literature on Ireland, there is a remarkable dearth of books interpreting the viewpoint of Ulster. Captain Hamilton though he does not perform this service in any scientific spirit and does not assume a judicial attitude which could not be genuine, yet gives us valuable insight into the philosophy of his former constituents by rewriting Irish history as they see it." Bruno Lasker

+ Survey 38:518 S 22 '17 500w

"His book should be read by those who wish to get at a true comprehension of the uncompromising Ulsterman, Lord Ernest Hamilton, who was for some years M. P. for North Tyrone, is also the author of 'The first seven divisions,' and he writes lucidly and forcibly."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p167 Ap 5 '17 420w

HAMILTON, LORD GEORGE FRANCIS. Parliamentary reminiscences and reflections, 1868 to 1885. *$4 Dutton (Eng ed 17-12869)

"Lord George Hamilton was of the House of commons from 1868 to 1896. As son of the Duke of Abercorn, at one time lord-lieutenant of Ireland, he was of the governing class, a fact which accounts for the early age at which a place was found for him in the Disraeli administration of 1874-1880. He was then appointed under-secretary for India, with Salisbury as his chief. In 1878-1880 he was vice-president of the committee of council, practically minister for education. In the short-lived Conservative administration of 1885-1886 he was first lord of the admiralty. He resumed this office when the Unionist administration was formed in 1886, and held it until the Liberals came into power in 1892. From 1895 to 1903, when he retired from the cabinet, he was secretary for India. Only the years from 1868 to 1885 are covered by these reminiscences."—Am Hist R

"For half a dozen reasons they are likely to be of service to students of British politics of the two decades that preceded the realignment of parties after 1886, when Gladstone had committed the Liberal party to Home rule for Ireland. . . . Hamilton went to the India office in 1874, and in detailing his work there as under-secretary, he has written one of the best descriptions of the work of the office, and of its organization, that has ever been embodied in English political memoirs. One other value in these reminiscences has yet to be mentioned. There is more than once in these pages the most sweeping and strongly-worded indictment that has been written or uttered of the Manchester school of politics by any man in the front rank of English political life." E: Porritt

+ Am Hist R 22:855 J1 '17 800w

"The author's attitude is in strong opposition to the 'pacifist or Manchester school of politicians'; and conscientious objectors to military service receive small mercy at Lord George Hamilton's hands. Indeed, there is a good deal of hard hitting in the book."

Ath p50 Ja '17 130w

"Lord George is of the type of English public men who are dogged hard workers, and, no doubt, useful servants of the state, but who are little gifted with the pen, which they hold in a heavy hand. And these notes of events during twenty years of parliamentary experience contain little that is novel or exhilarating. . . . Many personal characterizations occur in his pages, but few of them are penetrating or enlivening."

— Nation 105:44 J1 12 '17 370w

"One feature of these pages that calls for comment is that Disraeli appears throughout in a softened and unusually advantageous light, an accessible and kindly figure."

+ N Y Times 22:368 S 30 '17 600w

R of Rs 56:328 S '17 50w

"This book is disappointing. . . . The historical chapters are a languid rechauffé of events which are, perhaps, too near for historical treatment, but which need not be (as they are) dull. . . . Of personal anecdotes or intimate descriptions of Lord George Hamilton's colleagues—Disraeli, Northcote, Hardy, Beach, Salisbury, Churchill—there are none. . . . The really valuable chapter in the book is the last but one, in which Lord George Hamilton tells us of his doings at the Admiralty as first lord."

— + Sat R 122:601 D 23 '16 850w

"The book is just what such a book should be; it is full of a simple and mellow wisdom; there is not an idea in it that is not practical and rational; and the political ideas are reinforced or illustrated by a flow of anecdotes which are in themselves a delightful entertainment."

+ Spec 118:136 F 3 '17 1950w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p597 D 14 '16 2000w

HAMILTON, JOSEPH GRÉGOIRE DE ROULHAC, and HAMILTON, MARY THOMPSON (MRS J. G. DE R. HAMILTON). Life of Robert E. Lee: for boys and girls. 1l *$1.25 (2½c) Houghton 17-28464

"This book is written with the hope that through it the life and character of Lee may become more real to the generation of young Americans growing up." (Preface) The authors express the further hope that the book may, by making clearer the purity of motive of Lee and those he represented, hasten the day when all sectional bitterness shall have disappeared. Among the books on which the authors have drawn as sources are: Jones's "Life and letters of General Robert E. Lee"; "Recollections and letters of General Lee," by R. E. Lee, Jr.; and Bradford's "Lee, the American." There are four illustrations and an Index.

"A wholesome book for reading by northern children." J: Walcott

+ Bookm 46:496 D '17 50w

+ Cath World 106:694 F '18 150w

"Full of Civil war incidents told from an unbiased standpoint. The character and outlook of the Confederate leader as presented here will appeal to young people."

+ Ind 92:448 D 1 '17 40w

"Gen. Lee now belongs to the nation at large, not simply to the South, and the authors have written an enthusiastic as well as historically sound life of their hero. The book should be welcomed by young people all over the country, but it will be quite as interesting to many 'grown-ups' as well."

+ Springf'd Republican p15 D 1 '17 150w

HAMILTON, ROBERT W. Belinda of the Red cross. il *$1.25 (2c) Sully & Kleinteich 17-24969

"The heroine, born in America, is the grand-daughter on one side of French and on the other of German ancestors. . . . At the beginning of the story she is taking a nurse's training in a big New York hospital in which one of the surgeons is a famous German, resident for ten years in this country. As she nears the end of her course of training a young aviator who has had a fall and smashed one shoulder is brought in. . . . He is Belinda's last patient, and they find each other mutually interesting. After graduation she decides to join the Red cross service in France, and the young aviator, although neither knows the other's purpose, goes over to offer his services to the French army. . . . Belinda works in the field hospitals and the aviator crosses the battle lines and finally they are both caught by the enemy. . . . The two German cousins of Belinda play an important part in the action."—N Y Times

"A thrilling war story."

+ N Y Times 22:372 S 30 '17 280w

"The incidents are highly improbable. The narrative may be found entertaining if the reader is not in a critical mood."

Springf'd Republican p17 O 7 '17 180w

HAMMER, SIMON CHRISTIAN. William the Second. *$1.50 Houghton 17-26781

"The present volume is an English attempt at a calm, clear-cut analysis of the imperial psychology as disclosed by numerous speeches and contemporary German writings."—R of Rs

"Author is an Englishman and his remarks are tinged with prejudice."

+ — A L A BkI 14:53 N '17

"Mr Hammer's picture of the Kaiser will never win him a German decoration, but it bears more of the earmarks of truth than those we are accustomed to." C. H. P. Thurston

+ Bookm 46:290 N '17 40w

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 24 '17 280w

Outlook 117:142 S 26 '17 90w

Pittsburgh 22:745 N '17 70w

R of Rs 56:439 O '17 100w

HAMMOND, JOHN LAWRENCE LE BRETON, and HAMMOND, BARBARA (BRADBY) (MRS JOHN LAWRENCE LE BRETON HAMMOND). Town labourer, 1760-1832; the new civilisation. *$3.50 (3c) Longmans 330.9 17-22687

This volume is the first part of a study of the industrial revolution. It attempts to describe the general features of the new civilization, to picture the effect of the great social change which took place between 1780 and 1832 on the lives of the English working-class, and which turned them, according to the authors, into the "cannon-fodder of industry." About half of the chapters deal with the material surroundings of "the new civilisation"—the "new town," the conditions in mill, mine, and workshop, the administration of justice, the war on trade unions, the employment of children, etc., and the remainder "with the psychological conditions that resulted from them." A table of dates and a list of chief authorities are appended. A second volume is to follow which "will give in detail the history of the work-people in various industries, with a full account of the disturbances known as the Luddite rising, and of those connected with the adventures of Oliver, the famous 'agent provocateur.'" (Preface)

A L A BkI 14:75 D '17

"An arresting and appalling picture."

+ Ath p107 Ag '17 520w

"In their feeling for class attitudes, for the rationalizations that accompany the economic war, for the sinister manipulation of government by capital, the Hammonds have an intellectual tool which should be in the hands of every one who tries to write of this modern industrial era." Randolph Bourne

+ Dial 63:642 D 20 '17 630w

"It is a book to be read by all who are concerned with present labour problems, and conditions of industrial life; for a full understanding of the purgatorial experiences of the working class in the critical years of this great social change is a key to its attitude to-day. The working class, like an oppressed nationality, has its memories." M. J.

+ Int J Ethics 28:281 Ja '18 550w

"This book is valuable as an indisputable record of facts, unpleasant enough to our national self-satisfaction—our besetting sin, as Matthew Arnold declared. It would have been more valuable but for the obvious political bias of its authors, who skillfully heap the blame on the back of the Tory party. In truth, the aristocratic Whigs and the Nonconformist manufacturers and tradesmen were just as much to blame as the Tory government for the state of labour in the pre-reform era. . . . This is not a mere squalid story of slum misery: it is not a sensational 'film,' striking the eyes and 'gingering' the emotion, but leaving the intellect unstirred. This tale of trouble sets one on inquiries innumerable, psychological, spiritual, moral, economic, political."

* + + Sat R 124:169 S 1 '17 2250w

"The book is pleasant to read because of its literary art and mastery; the subject-matter is extremely gloomy. The misery admits of no denial, but we are not persuaded that Mr and Mrs Hammond have given the right values to the various causes when they enter upon explanations. There is something in the temper in which they write which strikes us as mistaken. . . . But we must not express our partial agreement with their spirit at the expense of saying too little about the admirable skill and clearness with which they have presented their facts. They have written the best description of the conditions of the time that we have ever read."

+ — Spec 119:60 JI 21 '17 1550w

"Though the writing of social and industrial history in England has in recent years been carried to a very high point of literary accomplishment combined with careful use of original sources and sound interpretation by such writers as Gilbert Slater, the Webbs, and others, there has been no similar publication so vividly describing this vital period of change. . . . In almost every chapter of Mr and Mrs Hammond's work are lessons of our time. The attitude towards 'the poor,' for instance, was in many respects similar to that yet taken in this country towards the negro. The procedure in the case of strikes often seems to have resembled that now frequently in vogue to meet the real or imagined danger of the I. W. W." Bruno Lasker

+ Survey 39:200 N 24 '17 1250w

"A companion volume to the important work which the authors published in 1911 on the 'Village labourer' during the same period."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p324 JI 5 '17 50w

"A book that should be read by all who are concerned, however indirectly, with what is called 'the labour problem.' The story of the industrial revolution has been told before, but the story of the social revolution which accompanied it has never yet received adequate treatment. . . . The authors have helped towards a better understanding not only of the early nineteenth century but of some of the most obstinate problems of today."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p339 JI 19 '17 1900w

HAMMOND, MELVIN ORMOND. Canadian confederation and its leaders. il *$2.50 (3/2c) Doran 971 18-2512

Canadian confederation was perfected in 1867 and has now known a half century of history. It has seemed a fitting time therefore "to examine the part played by the leaders of that great day in the various provinces in bringing about the union." This has been the object of the author, who has brought together studies of seventeen men, among them Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Oliver Mowat, William McDougall, Sir Alexander T. Galt, Sir George E. Cartier, Thomas D'Arcy McGee, Sir Charles Tupper, and others. The choice has been not wholly limited to those who worked for federation. Leaders of the opposition have been included. The book has an introductory chapter, Before confederation, and a closing chapter, Rounding out confederation, and ends with bibliography and index.

HAMMOND, MELVIN ORMOND—Continued

"Our author gives a close and searching analysis of the character and personality of each of his subjects." H. S. K.

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 3 '17 750w

Ind 92:256 N 3 '17 40w

+ R of Rs 57:104 Ja '18 60w

HANCOCK, HARRIE IRVING. Physical training for business men; basic rules and simple exercises for gaining assured control of the physical self. il *$1.75 (5½c) Putnam 613.7 17-25762

The man who sits at his desk all day and feels stale at night will find in these pages concise instructions for livening up. The exercises outlined are an antidote for physical slovenliness and mental dullness. They are simple leg, arm, trunk and head movements designed to produce in a short space of time poise, alertness, power. Illustrations of the model performances are from photographs which represent the nearest approach possible to a moving picture on a single plate and are, in consequence, easily followed.

"The plain, common-sense general advice and comment is of great value to any man or woman, and would add to efficiency."

+ Dial 63:466 N 8 '17 100w

"Books on physical training are either manuals which most people will open only on doctor's orders, or they are made more readable with the help of a good deal of matter not strictly relevant. The present volume is of the latter variety; it may be added that its 'padding' is interesting and contains many shrewd observations. A. B. Phelan's synthetic photographs may be clever, but on the whole the diagrammatic illustrations of the old handbooks were easier to understand." B. L.

+ — Survey 39:447 Ja 19 '18 330w

HANDY, AMY LITTLEFIELD. War food. il *75c (14c) Houghton 664 17-21110

Miss Handy describes practical and economical methods of keeping vegetables, fruits and meats, and urges the importance of preserving and storing perishable food. There is a chapter on "Canning without sugar." The author hopes that the recipes will prove helpful to those who are trying to carry out Mr Hoover's instructions.

"Miss Handy is explicit in her directions, which cover, we believe, a very wide field of possibilities in canning."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 29 '17 110w

"A good little book to own."

+ Cleveland p131 D '17 30w

N Y P L New Tech Bks p8 J1 '17 20w

"And it is a most valuable book. In the tersest and most practical fashion it sets forth the methods of drying, evaporating, canning, salting, and pickling various articles, with special directions for each. And these methods are inexpensive."

+ N Y Times 22:395 O 14 '17 480w

Pittsburgh 22:668 O '17

Pratt p26 O '17 10w

Springfd Republican p17 O 28 '17 90w

+ R of Rs 56:325 S '17 60w

HANKEY, DONALD WILLIAM ALERS (STUDENT IN ARMS, pseud.). Student in arms. *$1.50 (4c) Dutton 940.91 E17-249

A series of articles written at the front and first printed in the Spectator and the Westminster Gazette. They differ from many other accounts written on the firing line in that they are thoughtful and speculative rather than anecdotal and descriptive. The author writes of: "Kitchener's army"; An experiment in democracy; Discipline and leadership; The religion of the inarticulate; The army and the universities; a study of educational values, etc. There is an introduction by J. St. Loe Strachey, editor of the Spectator.

"The author was killed in action in October, 1916."

+ A L A Bkl 13:345 My '17

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 3 '17 750w

"His interpretation limited to some slight degree by its immaturity, is so sweet with the highest spiritual idealism that the reader pauses and marvels."

+ Cath World 105:544 J1 '17 220w

"The author treats the subject in a matter-of-fact way, which, by its very rarity, becomes effective."

+ Dial 62:532 Je 14 '17 130w

+ Ind 90:381 My 26 '17 40w

"Desperately sincere, openly the product of brave and unsophisticated youth. It is with a sort of reverence that one finishes a book so thoroughly imbued with the most promising of human tendencies, the wish to be justified on a constructive instead of on a destructive basis."

S. K. Toksvig

New Repub 10:sup18 Ap 21 '17 850w

N Y Br Lib News 3:155 O '16

+ N Y Times 22:78 Mr 4 '17 350w

"Where his book is novel is in its sincere and always thoughtful exposition of the philosophy and religion of the trenches, and the changes needed for effective Christianity at home."

+ Sat R 121:sup2 Je 24 '16 300w

+ Spec 116:722 Je 10 '16 1200w

"A book of high spiritual idealism as well as a vivid picture of life in the trenches of Flanders."

+ Springfd Republican p6 Ap 16 '17 200w

"The war has given us no other book like this. It is worthy to stand beside Rupert Brooke's sonnets as an expression of the spiritual attitude of England's educated and gifted young men."

+ Wis Lib Bul 13:123 Ap '17 60w

HANKEY, DONALD WILLIAM ALERS (STUDENT IN ARMS, pseud.). Student in arms: second series; with an introd. by J. St Loe Strachey. il *$1.50 (5½c) Dutton 17-17623

This collection of sketches, conversations and essays suggested by the war, written, with three exceptions, in France in 1916, were for the most part first printed in the Spectator. "The potentate," written for the original volume of "A student in arms," but not published on account of its likeness in subject to Barrie's "Der tag," is included here, as is also the essay entitled "Don't worry." In addition to these, the new volume contains a good deal of biographical matter: a sketch by Miss Hankey, the author's sister, entitled "Something about 'A student in arms'"; a fragment of autobiography entitled "My home and school," and some notes on the autobiography.

A L A Bkl 14:20 O '17

"Like the first series, these sketches are the expression of a forthright idealism and give a version of the hopes, fears and beliefs of the men in the trenches, evidently not heightened for literary or humorous effect."

+ Cleveland p101 S '17 80w

+ Dial 63:213 S 13 '17 270w

"The various papers, are not, it must be confessed, of permanent value as literature, but the total impression of this output by a young man of thirty-two, who died leading a charge which gained a few yards of trenches, is of the immense and irretrievable waste of war."

+ Nation 105:375 O 4 '17 260w

"We can't measure, even approximately, how much 'good' these works will do, but we unhesitatingly affirm that they are exceedingly well worth reading." J. W.

+ N Y Call p14 Ag 19 '17 650w

"The general level of the book is not so high as was that of the first, but, nevertheless, it contains some very good things that are well worth reading. Moreover, in the first volume and also in this Donald Hankey revealed himself a personality so interesting and so lovable that the opportunity this 'Second series' gives to make acquaintance with the man behind the book will be welcomed."

+ N Y Times 22:295 Ag 12 '17 450w

Pittsburgh 22:762 N '17 50w

"Here we shall prefer to dwell upon the fragments of biography and autobiography. The first thing we have to say is that, though they are so slight, they paint the true 'Student in arms,' and show how his life enforced the lessons of his writing. . . . No one was ever less of a prig."

+ Spec 118:589 My 26 '17 1750w

+ Spring'd Republican p8 S 20 '17 200w

"From Rugby he went to Woolwich; spent six years in the artillery; and retired with a view to entering the church after passing through Oxford. He never actually took orders, but shared the lives of the poor by making his home in Bermondsey, travelling steerage, and enlisting as a private when the war broke out. Thus he came to know the men in the ranks from within, without being so closely identified with them as not to recognize their idiosyncrasies as such. This may be one reason why his weary 'Tommies' are not in the least like the epigrammatic comedians of the picturesque writers."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p236 My 17 '17 880w

HANNAY, DAVID. Diaz. il *$2 (2c) Holt (Eng ed 17-26317)

Two opinions exist regarding Porfirio Diaz: He was a great man and a beneficent ruler; he was an unmitigated tyrant and a curse to the country he ruled. The fact that he is included among the "Makers of the nineteenth century" indicates the attitude taken toward him in this book. The general editor, Basil Williams, says in his preface: "He is worthy of note by the student of the nineteenth century, since he brought his country to a more respectable prominence and to greater prosperity than it had enjoyed since its original conquest by the Spaniards." The author says in conclusion: "He showed the world what was the utmost that his country was capable of doing in order to qualify itself to take its place among civilized and progressive states." Mr Hannay is an English journalist and author of "The navy and sea-power."

"Mr Hannay appears to be a man of talents, candor, and good sense, and his book, in addition to being readable, is worth reading; but it can hardly be described as well-proportioned, scholarly, or sound. . . . As might be inferred, the author's 'bibliography' is meagre and his index inadequate." J. H. Smith

+ Am Hist R 22:890 Jl '17 670w

"An authoritative, popular account."

+ A L A Bkl 13:352 My '17

"Mr Hannay's narrative is animated, and well worth reading."

+ Ath p418 Ag '17 130w

Boston Transcript p8 F 14 '17 700w

"It is somewhat tedious and involved; the subject with its fascinating material, could have been made more interesting reading by one whose writing had more of the true charm of a real biographer."

+ Cath World 105:265 My '17 450w

+ Dial 63:279 S 27 '17 400w

"No dry and superficial statement of facts, but a most readable and enlightening story of Mexico and its people from 1854."

+ Ind 90:257 My 5 '17 30w

Lit D 54:1080 Ap 14 '17 400w

"Mr Hannay has treated his interesting hero with a suitably light touch. He neither eulogizes nor condemns him. He presents facts of population and political development with the insight and sympathy of one who is thoroughly familiar with the winning as well as the repellent side of Spanish-America. Thus he frames Diaz in a Mexican frame, and not, as too many authors are inclined to do, in an American or European frame."

+ Nation 105:461 O 25 '17 780w

"Commendable book which might be called 'A political history of Mexico in the time of Diaz.'"

+ Outlook 115:711 Ap 18 '17 100w

+ R of Rs 55:442 Ap '17 90w

St Louis 15:153 My '17

"How was it that Diaz, alone of all Mexican presidents, contrived to retain power for so long? This is the most interesting question raised by his career, and Mr Hannay answers it somewhat fully."

+ Spec 119:190 Ag 25 '17 1600w

"A most scholarly and interesting book."

+ Spring'd Republican p15 Mr 4 '17 600w

"But the interest of this volume at the present time is by no means confined to the light it throws on Mexican conditions from the narrow point of view of anxious investors. This brings us to the main lesson of the history of Mexico and of the career of Diaz for the present generation. It should prove a wholesome corrective to those who believe that the world-war is going to be followed by the millennium and that in that blessed word democracy there has been discovered a universal formula for the perfecting of the world's order."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p27 Jl 12 '17 1900w

HANSCOM, ELIZABETH DEERING, ed. Heart of the Puritan. il *$1.50 (2½c) Macmillan 974 17-29768

The writer takes exception with Mr George Edward Woodberry who has written "The heart of the Puritan is a closed book." Miss Hanscom, professor of English at Smith college, has delved into many dusty tomes for material that refutes Mr Woodberry's contention. She has brought together here excerpts from the letters and journals of Puritans and grouped them under the headings: Of the coming of godly men to these parts; Of Boston; Of affairs domestic and personal; Of matrimony; Of education; Of Indians; Of trade; Of travel; Of holidays; Of episcopacy; Of churches; Of prophecies and warnings; Of witchcraft, and Cor cordium. A valuable aid to the study of history and literature as well as to a study of religious temper in colonial times.

A L A Bkl 14:121 Ja '18

"Miss Hanscom herself is something of a wit, as is shown by her 'Praefatio' and headings; we wish she had been pedant enough to have given the exact provenance of all her extracts. Such an appendix would not have marred her book, but would have added to its interest. Apart from that blemish, the book is excellent. It would be well if some of our smart youths who speak so patronizingly of the Puritans would read this volume of letters, and mark and inwardly digest."

+ Nation 105:697 D 20 '17 160w

"With loving care and a scholar's sense of accuracy and fitness, Miss Hanscom has preserved the spellings of an age that scorned the arts of spelling, and the abbreviations with which that age larded its written discourse. She has supplied chapter and page headings that pique the reader's curiosity. Her preface is delightfully self-effacing and appreciative; in fact, the editor's touch throughout the volume is gracious and good-humoredly keen. The book is meant for reading (in spite of the difficult spellings) and very good reading it makes. Much of Miss Hanscom's book is in light vein,

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

HANSCOM, ELIZABETH DEERING, ed.—Cont. but it all tends to inculcate that tolerant and respectful view of our New England past of which we are much in need."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 N 19 '17 990w

HANSHEW, THOMAS W. (CHARLOTTE MAY KINGSLEY, pseud.). Cleek's government cases. il *$1.35 (1½c) Doubleday 17-5982

"Cleek of Scotland Yard." "The riddle of the night," and "Cleek, the man of the forty faces" are stories that have preceded this. Like the others, this one is made up of distinct episodes in which Cleek, the one time crook, now a detective, displays his skill, but there is a thread of narrative binding the whole together. In the first chapter Cleek finds that his old enemies, the Apaches, are still on his track. He is kidnapped, and after his rescue by his friend, Naikom of Scotland Yard, says, "This is but the first throw of the dice, old friend. . . . This is but the beginning; the end, who shall say?"

"Mr Hanshew never lets the plot grow stale, and he does not leave his readers for even a few moments without excitement."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jt 28 '17 150w

"Lovers of detective stories will find a good deal of entertainment in this new volume which tells of 'Cleek's government cases.'"

+ N Y Times 22:115 Ap 1 '17 330w

"The book compares unfavorably with the Cleek stories published heretofore."

— Springf'd Republican p19 Mr 25 '17 130w

HARBEN, WILLIAM NATHANIEL (WILL N., pseud.). Triumph. il *$1.10 (1c) Harper 17-22297

"Two brothers form the central pivot of 'The triumph,' and one of them has made himself despised by his neighbors because he does not hold the conventional southern view of slavery. Andrew Merlin lives in the little town of Delbridge; his brother Thomas has a plantation some ten miles away and owns many slaves. Because of their opposing opinions, the brothers drift apart, and into Andrew's immediate family trouble comes, for his wife and son feel keenly the ostracism to which they are subjected, while his daughter Anne is wholly on her father's side. The war comes, Georgia is up in arms. Thomas Merlin enlists and becomes a Confederate brigadier general, but Andrew, because of his Union sympathies, and especially because he dares to free a slave who has been forced into his hand to pay a debt, is beset on all sides. He is forced to flee for his life, is overtaken by a band of Confederate bushwhackers, and succeeds in saving his life by a ruse. Enlisting in the Union army, he returns home before the end of the war, and by his injudicious behavior only succeeds in making himself more despised than ever."—Boston Transcript

"It cannot be said that Mr Harben's aristocrats are as 'convincing' as his commonalty; Anne Merlin and Arthur Preston are a singularly wooden pair of leading juveniles." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 16:207 O '17 420w

"Mr Harben's pages contain more accurate knowledge of Georgia men and women, of the Georgia ways of living, of the Georgia passions, than could be revealed in a thousand formal historical narratives. . . . In 'The triumph' Mr Harben goes back to the Civil war period. Many novels have been written about that era, but few of them have the strong equipoise that dominates its plot and its characters. It is a plea for neither side, it contains nothing of the polemic, it merely seeks to present life as Mr Harben found it in his native state during some five years of the strongest social, moral and political upheaval that could overwhelm a stricken people. . . . Something of these Georgians is wholly of Georgia, but something is purely American, and something in them is akin to the peasant character of any country. They are spiritually of the same stuff as the denizens of Hardy's Wessex, of Phillpotts' Dartmoor or of Miss Jewett's New England." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 5 '17 1550w

"He really has a good point to make, and he makes it in spite of the commonplace melodrama to which his plot lends itself."

+ Dial 63:402 O 25 '17 150w

"In withdrawing to the Civil war period, Mr Harben has abandoned that main asset of his and Mr Howells's sort of realism, the thing seen and known at first hand. In consequence, he has not worked freely or spontaneously, and his product is too plainly a made affair. . . . The 'love-interest' is of the most perfunctory sort."

— Nation 105:316 S 20 '17 460w

"Mr Harben's new novel contains many of the elements that make for real greatness."

+ N Y Times 22:326 S 2 '17 580w

HARDING, ALICE (MRS EDWARD HARDING). Book of the peony. il *$6 (18c) Lippincott 716 17-13093

This is said to be the first book published on peony culture. It is made up of chapters on: An appreciation of the peony; The mythology, ancient and modern history of the peony; Best varieties and their characteristics; Extending the period of bloom; Purchasing; Where to plant and how to prepare the soil; Planting and cultivation; Propagation; The tree peony—description and history; Tree peonies; Cultivation, propagation and best varieties; Various species of the peony. A valuable feature of the book is the "main list" of 125 varieties recommended for garden culture, with supplementary lists based on color. Twenty of the illustrations are in color and there are a number of good half-tone plates in addition.

"The format of this, the first book ever devoted to peonies alone, demands appreciation. Covers and typing are distinctive. While the many illustrations in color and in black-and-white, from photographs of peonies in various noted private gardens of the United States, are of a rare beauty vision alone can adequately disclose." F. B.

— Boston Transcript p6 Ap 18 '17 500w

Cleveland p113 S '17 60w

"Although a large bibliography on the peony is given, no other volume yet published appears to be so complete as this one. . . . The two chapters on tree peonies present material new to many gardeners, and Professor H. H. Wietzel's discussion of 'Diseases of the peony' represents the latest research."

+ Dial 62:486 My 31 '17 180w

"Should help all flower-lovers to use it for landscape as well as floral value."

+ Lit D 55:37 S 22 '17 160w

+ N Y Times 22:191 My 13 '17 130w

+ Outlook 115:711 Ap 18 '17 30w

"There is much sound advice for the amateur in the chapter on Purchasing. . . . All of the practical chapters of the book are valuable because drawn from the personal experience of the author. It is a beautiful book and a distinct addition to gardening literature." M. K. Reedy

+ Pub W 91:1325 Ap 21 '17 350w

+ R of Rs 55:661 Je '17 170w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 27 '17 500w

HARDING, LOUIS ALLEN, and WILLARD, ARTHUR CUTTS. Mechanical equipment of buildings: a reference book for engineers and architects. 3v v 2 il *$5 Wiley 690 v 2 Power plants and refrigeration.

"The first volume of this important series was published a few months ago and dealt with the subject of heating and ventilation. The second volume, dealing exhaustively with steam plants and ice and refrigeration machinery, contains a large amount of theoretical and commercial data and discussions of their practical applications." (N Y P L New Tech Bks) "In order to make the volume more complete, several of the chapters appearing in volume 1 have been reprinted, including the chapters on Heat; Water, steam and air; and Fuels and combustion." (Heating and Ventilating Magazine)

"As a reference book and a textbook for students it should be most valuable. The free use of manufacturers' data adds much to the usefulness of this volume. . . . There are several forms of boilers largely used by heating engineers not referred to in this volume or the preceding one." D. D. Kimball
 + — Engin News-Rec 79:130 J1 19 '17 220w

"Special mention should be made of the chapter on 'Chimneys for power boilers' which is remarkably complete, and also the chapter on 'Power plant piping.'"
 + Heating and Ventilating Magazine 14: 51 J1 '17 350w

"Unusually well illustrated with line drawings and charts. Many practical problems are solved step by step."
 + N Y P L New Tech Bks p12 J1 '17 70w

"The authors will probably find that in the next printing it would be well to elaborate more upon the index. The excellent character of the book warrants doing so."
 + — Power 46:238 Ag 14 '17 770w

HARDING, MRS RUTH GUTHRIE. Lark went singing, and other poems; with an introd. by R. Burton. $1 E. D. Brooks, Minneapolis, Minn. 811 16-24958

"This exquisite little volume of lyrics we owe to the gardening sympathies of Richard Burton. Anyone who noted, some years ago, the little slips of song by Ruth Guthrie Harding, rooted here and there in a magazine page, and had the power of discernment, knew they sprung from the seeds of poetry. There they might have withered and died; but this gardener came along and cultivated an indisputable gift of beauty and joy."—Boston Transcript

"The quality is wistful, almost evanescent in the embodiment of simple moods and themes."
 W: S. Braithwaite
 + Bookm 45:433 Je '17 210w

"Here is the whole poetic temperament in this poet, transmitting all that it touches. Every first and last dream, impression, mood, makes you aware of loveliness and nothing but loveliness. This does not mean that experience does not come into the poet's recognition of life and reality, but coming naked she sends it forth clothed with fabrics of spiritual weaving. And this is recognized all the more deeply because of the intense lyrical note which is one of Mrs Harding's most distinctive gifts as a poet."
 + Boston Transcript p6 D 23 '16 850w

"A poet of true promise." O. W. Firkins
 + Nation 104:523 My 3 '17 240w

HARDING, SIDNEY TWITCHELL. Operation and maintenance of irrigation systems. il $2.50 McGraw 631 17-22587

"This book is a compilation of the fundamental principles and representative methods of the operation and maintenance of irrigation systems in the United States. . . . In the first chapter the subject of general maintenance is treated extensively. . . . In the second chapter the relative serviceability, length of life and needful precautionary measures in the maintenance of wooden, steel and concrete structures are discussed. . . . The third chapter is given to the problem of organization, outlining and suggesting appropriate plans for systems of varying sizes and conditions based upon experiences so far available. The methods of delivering irrigation water are treated fully in the fourth chapter. . . . The measurement of irrigation water is treated exhaustively in the fifth chapter. . . . A chapter of fourteen pages is devoted to rules and regulations. . . . The proper apportionment of construction and operation charges receives thorough study and analysis, and the results are summarized in a concluding article. . . . The eighth chapter is devoted to a brief discussion of miscellaneous phases of irrigation operations. . . . At the close a short chapter is given to the subject of accounts."—Engin News-Rec

"This book is timely and useful. It presents in concentrated form a large range of information not elsewhere compiled and of special value to the student of irrigation engineering. It covers much of great value to the engineer or manager charged with construction, as well as operation and betterment, of irrigation works."

 Andrew Weiss

+ Engin News-Rec 79:938 N 15 '17 780w
 "Practical rather than theoretical."
 + Pittsburgh 22:756 N '17 30w

HARDY, ARTHUR SHERBURNE. No. 13, rue du Bon Diable. il $1.35 (3½c) Houghton 17-28186

Mr Hardy has written a new kind of detective story, which begins by telling us just how M. Janvier was murdered, and keeps us intensely interested in the efforts of the detectives to arrive at a solution. M. Janvier is an old bachelor, devoted to his niece Corinne, for whom he has bought a pearl necklace as a birthday present, drawing 30,000 francs from the bank to pay for it. His murderer is finally discovered by M. Joly, the detective who figured in "Diane and her friends."

"Very well written though not as absorbing as others by this author."
 + — A L A Bkl 14:131 Ja '18

"Mr Hardy's detective story is unusual in many ways. There are actually human characters in it, and a swiftly woven texture of motives, and charming bits of color, local and otherwise. . . . In the make-up of the volume there is displayed a feeling for the quality of the text that is seldom found in any but the more expensive books."
 + Dial 63:597 D 6 '17 290w

"Mr Hardy's style has the old distinction; his people are clear-cut as cameos; his psychology is never at fault."
 + — Ind 92:385 N 24 '17 100w

"Mr Hardy's new book differs from the general run of detective stories in that he makes no attempt to mystify or to mislead the reader, but takes him into his confidence at once. The idea is a good one and has some novelty, but one feels that it could have been developed more cleverly and greater ingenuity been shown in the complications."
 + — N Y Times 22:500 N 25 '17 250w

+ Outlook 117:432 N 14 '17 20w
 "The reader enjoys the skill with which the author creates the proper atmosphere for the affair and analyzes the psychology of the participants."
 + Springf'd Republican p17 N 11 '17 250w

HARDY, OSWALD HENRY. In Greek seas, and other poems of travel. il $1.25 Lane 821 17-23683

Things of the spirit cannot be stifled even by the war, the author of this handful of verse asserts. The poems have been written during busy years and they have served as "a refuge from the engrossing calls of official life, and have served to keep alive memories of inspiring travel and of the earlier days when the great ages of Greece and Rome supplied a constant background of dream and happy thought." There are two war poems in the group.

"Fluent and pleasing, several of the shorter pieces, such as 'A mountain pansy' and 'The mountain pine,' merit attention; and some of the lines in the poem which gives its title to the volume, as well as in the verses upon 'The tomb of Columbus in Seville cathedral,' are noteworthy and impressive."
 + Ath p469 S '17 120w

"In the sense that the author who has travelled much records in verse the scenes he has visited and the impressions made upon him, the poems are inspired, but the inspiration is not transformed by an essentially poetic spirit. The results would have been much better recorded in prose, for they strike no emotional register."
 — Boston Transcript p6 O 10 '17 300w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

HARE, CHRISTOPHER, pseud. (MRS MARIAN ANDREWS). Great emperor: Charles V, 1519-1558. il *$3.50 Scribner 17-18588

"This latest biographer of the emperor whose abdication of the throne of Spain was forced in the middle sixteenth century has little except good to write of his subject. The devotion to pious ends and aims, the grief of his devoted family and friends, his benefactions to the church, are all set forth in admiration, while his military glories are fully recounted."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p7 My 12 '17 250w
N Y Br Lib News 4:91 Je '17

"The story of Charles V, . . . has long been recognized as full of fascination and wonder. Christopher Hare tells it with much historic detail, yet with a keen sense of its picturesque personal qualities, its romantic appeal. . . . The book is readable and valuable for the 'general public' and for the student."
+ N Y Times 22:197 My 20 '17 1450w

"Whatever his bias, our author has succeeded in seeing his subject clearly and seeing it whole; he marshals his facts with certainty and skill, and his narrative runs smoothly from the first page to the last. In all its main features the book is a meritorious piece of work, the result of study and sane enthusiasm; there are excellent chapters on the conquest of Mexico and Peru, and the two sketch maps at the beginning and end of the volume are helpful. Indeed, our only real ground of complaint is to be found in the fact that, with all his accumulated knowledge, Mr Hare does not appreciate the value of accuracy in minor matters."
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p125 Mr 15 '17 950w

HARE, WALTER BEN. White Christmas, and 2 other merry Christmas plays. il 75c Denison 812 17-24880

"The white Christmas" is a morality play in one act. One of the other plays in the collection is a dramatization of Dickens' "Christmas carol." The author says, "In these little plays I have tried to bring before the public the two dominant characteristics of the ideal Christmas season, kindness, expressed by 'good will toward men,' and the inward joy wrought by kind acts. . . . Some of the plays are filled with the spirit of fun and jollity that is always associated with Christmas merrymaking; in others I have tried to emphasize the spiritual blessings brought to the children of men on that first white Christmas night." Both children and adults take part in the plays. They are meant to be acted and the necessary stage directions are provided.

"Mr Hare's new volume of plays contains some amusement, but no superlative wit."
+ Boston Transcript p6 D 22 '17 270w

"They are 'merry plays' and the instructions for producing them are very complete."
+ Ind 92:444 D 1 '17 30w

HARGRAVE, JOHN. At Suvla Bay. il *$1.50 Houghton 940.91 (Eng ed 17-1486)

"For the most part Mr Hargrave writes of the Dardanelles campaign. He enlisted as a private at the beginning of the war, going from an outdoor life spent mainly in sketching and writing, to the hardships of camp life. No one reading these notes could doubt that he has seen and experienced all of which he writes. . . . The volume is liberally enlivened with the author's delightful sketches of men and scenes."—Boston Transcript

"Journalistic and conversational, told with a vivid sense of the picturesque, whether enjoying various types on the way or experiencing the horrors of the campaign itself."
+ A L A Bkl 14:20 O '17

"Mr Hargrave is the author of 'Lonecraft' and is a well known scout master, and his work as a scout has made it impossible that he should come to campaigning with the lack of adaptability to conditions which hindered so many of the enlisted men. For this reason, his first chapters describing the hard conditions endured by the soldiers at the beginning of the war have unusual weight."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 6 '17 320w
N Y Br Lib News 4:57 Ap '17
Pittsburgh 22:426 My '17
St Louis 15:314 S '17

HARKER, MRS LIZZIE ALLEN. Jan and her job. il *$1.50 (3c) Scribner 17-10199

Janet Ross goes out to India at the call of her younger sister, Fay. Broken in health and deserted by a husband who has proved faithless to a trust, Fay, with two little children dependent on her, calls for Jan. Her death leaves the children in Jan's charge. She takes them back to England and with the help of a young friend, who insists on acting as nursemaid in cap and apron, brings them up. In India Jan has met Peter Ledgard, and shortly after her departure, Peter finds that he needs a vacation and asks for six months' leave. The captivating little nursemaid has a love affair too. The story comes to an end with August, 1914.

"Appeared in the Delineator as 'Jan her work and love.'"
+ A L A Bkl 13:354 My '17

"This capital story has vivacity, freshness, and humour."
+ Ath p204 Ap '17 60w
+ Ind 90:594 Je 30 '17 60w

"A pleasant, conventional little story, easily and simply told."
+ N Y Times 22:131 Ap 8 '17 220w
+ Spec 118:464 Ap 21 '17 430w

"The story does not depend on its plot. Its attractiveness lies in the portrayal of people who do their best to make the world a pleasanter place to live in. As little as possible is said about the disagreeable characters; the others are saved from insipidity by their foibles."
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p128 Mr 15 '17 420w
+ Wis Lib Bul 13:15x My '17 30w

HARRIS, GARRARD. Treasure of the land; how Alice won her way. il *$1.25 (1½c) Harper 17-22298

This story, by the author of "Joe, the book farmer," tells how Alice Warren, a girl of seventeen, and her brother Henry, encouraged and helped by Miss Allen, the new district school teacher, transform the untidy farmhouse in which they live, learn to apply intelligence to the cultivation of the soil, and finally take prizes for their tomatoes and corn. Miss Allen sees that mere book study is almost valueless in such a farming community as that in which she is teaching, that the people "need first to be taught to live, to lighten the burdens upon themselves, and to give the women a chance." She therefore interests the leading men in raising money for prizes, and gets government experts to organize the boy's corn-club work and the tomato-club and canning work among the girls.

"An interesting, able novel, whose author shows unusual charm in telling a story and pointing an extremely delicate moral while so doing. He evidently knows life on dreary American farm lands and exactly how meagre is the outlook a girl has, who is brought up amid their desolation. Then too, Mr Harris writes excellent dialogue. It does stagger our intellect somewhat to read that the heroine has grown on one tenth of an acre, canned and sold as well, two thousand, one hundred and twenty-five tomatoes, in two pound cans, realizing eight cents per can."
+ Boston Transcript p7 O 10 '17 350w

"Conveys a lesson of encouragement to the country girl who can see no prospect before her but a lifetime of drudgery, by showing what a scientific efficiency may accomplish when backed by earnest purpose."
+ Ind 92:110 O 13 '17 50w

"Mr Harris's practical story about what a few people were able to achieve in one small region in the Middle West ought to be a very great help to all earnest men and women and baffled young people who are trying to improve conditions in country districts."

N Y Times 22:349 S 16 '17 250w

HARRIS, H. WILSON. President Wilson; his problems and his policy. il *$1.75 Stokes 18-3535

This book "has been written by [an Englishman] to interpret President Wilson and his measures to English readers. It was published in England just before our declaration of a state of war with Germany, but the recent American edition includes the author's account of the circumstances leading to the rupture. The book is semi-biographic. The main facts of the President's nativity and education, of his professional and literary life, are outlined by way of prelude to the larger purpose of exhibiting his acts and motives as a statesman. . . . At the conclusion of his book Mr Harris reproduces the President's address to the Senate on January 21, 1917, and his second inaugural."—Bookm

A L A Bkl 14:24 O '17

"Clear and well-written."

+ Ath p233 My '17 230w

+ Ath p257 My '17 120w

"A very compact, well-balanced book. . . . The impersonal temper in which with expert brevity the author has aligned and appraised the acts and objects of the President's domestic policy will be gratifying to his readers on this side. From his ability to look at both sides of a question with admirable disinterestedness, Mr Harris has approached a more complete standard of interpreting the President than Professor Ford [in his volume on Woodrow Wilson] has succeeded in doing." L. E. Robinson

+ Bookm 46:201 O '17 2400w

"This volume is by an Englishman who says: 'I cannot pretend to be entirely free from a certain pro-American bias, though I hope I have not allowed it to color what I have written.' And it is true that the author is not so pro-American that he is blind to some of the blunders of his hero. American readers will find the book exceedingly interesting."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 15 '17 550w

"What may appeal to most Americans as a fundamental error is his assumption that Mr Wilson is primarily an initiating leader. . . . To interpret the public will seems to be his chosen ideal for a leader of democracy. To write successfully the life of such a man requires an intimate knowledge of the politics and politicians of his time. This knowledge Mr Harris admittedly lacks. . . . Upon international questions Mr Wilson spoke for the people, and his purposes rather than those of our people may be read in those utterances. Mr Harris's exposition of Wilson as president of humanity—to use the phrase of a hostile critic—is therefore more accurate and illuminating than his well-intentioned but inadequate presentation of Wilson as president of the United States." D. E. Richberg

+ Dial 63:342 O 11 '17 970w

"He does understand and appreciate the importance of those parts of the country that are not on the Atlantic seaboard in the creation and molding of national life. He is one of the very few European writers upon this country who have sensed that fact. . . . The book will interest Americans primarily because it gives so clear and well-defined a view, from an English standpoint, of President Wilson and of his political policies and leadership. But they may well find it worth reading also because of its unprejudiced and accurate presentation of American history for the last five years and its résumé of Mr Wilson's life. For the author has aimed at neither eulogy nor interpretation. He has been satisfied to present his facts as they are, and to allow his readers to form their own judgment. And that is something that, perhaps, no American writer could do at this time."

+ N Y Times 22:269 J1 22 '17 1000w

Spec 118:517 My 5 '17 1800w

"An excellent short-order biography of Woodrow Wilson. But it is a book which any American of Mr Harris's gifts and sympathies could have written. For the deeper illumination of ourselves, it is still necessary to go to Bryce."

+ Springfd Republican p15 Ag 26 '17 700w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p176 Ap 12 '17 780w

HARRIS, WALTER STEWART. Christian science and the ordinary man. *$1.50 Putnam 615.8 17-7038

The title-page describes this work as "a discussion of some of the teachings of Mary Baker Eddy." In his foreword the author adds, "This book, in addition to being a discussion of Christian science, is in part an attempt to set forth the essential true elements existing in some other beliefs, to the end that a starting point may be found for greater brotherhood among all churches and beliefs, a basis in Christ for the brotherhood of man." Contents: A few preliminary thoughts; "Is God all?" Contradictions: Does matter have reality? Does evil have reality? Christ Jesus and the meaning of life; To church members.

"A sincere attempt to view Christian science from an impartial point of view."

+ Cleveland p53 Ap '17 13w

St Louis 15:107 Ap '17

"The writer is a Presbyterian and has never been a member of any Christian science organization, but he finds that much of what he has written is so far in agreement with the views of Mrs Eddy that he would fail in his obligation of acknowledgment were he to speak of the views he expresses as his own. This accounts for the title of the book, which presents a modification of Christian science set out with an earnestness which does not destroy the author's sense of humour."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p432 S 6 '17 80w

HART, EVANSTON IVES. Virgil C. Hart: missionary statesman. il *$1.50 (2c) Doran 17-13400

The subject of this biography was founder of the American and Canadian missions in central and west China. The foreword says, "Two great missions in China, of which Dr V. C. Hart was the founder, testify to the comprehensive insight he had of China's needs, his recognition of her potential powers, and his appreciation of the forces which would free her from her age-long stagnation and lift her into new life and influence." This story of his life is written by his son.

"This career was not only rich in achievement, but highly picturesque. The biographer, his son, has been able to portray it vividly."

+ Blb World 50:375 D '17 90w

"A straightforward narrative of an unusually picturesque career."

+ R of Rs 55:667 Je '17 30w

HARTMAN, LOUIS O. Popular aspects of oriental religions. il *$1.35 Abingdon press 290 17-13234

"[This book] combines brief surveys of eastern faiths with brief descriptions of the countries where they have their strongholds.

Mr Hartman makes no pretense at thoroughness, but he supplies a lively and informing account of the principal features of oriental religions and describes the scenes with which they are connected, including some of their sacred spots. He gives the results of his own observation and his reading in authoritative treatises. . . . Mr Hartman has words of cordial admiration for the great world-religion of Buddha, and he also does full justice to the aggressive character of Mohammedanism."—Springfd Republican

"Remembering the method and purpose, it should be said that the book is written in an attractive literary style and is splendidly illustrated. It should inspire the beginner to delve deeper into the lore of the history of religions." A. S. W.

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

HARTMAN, LOUIS O.—Continued

+ Am J Theol 22:158 Ja '18 160w

"One of the very best chapters in the book is that on Zoroastrianism. . . . The author is sympathetic but critical, nowhere condemning any of these religions in toto, but finding them inadequate in a progressive civilization. It is an excellent book for the busy person who wishes to know the teachings of these religions, and how these teachings work in practice."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 23 '17 550w

"Numerous well chosen illustrations add to the interest of the narrative."

+ Ind 90:439 Je 2 '17 50w

"An admirable, brief, popular statement of oriental religions. . . . The author writes from the Christian point of view, but his spirit is not that of a partisan but of a lover of truth wherever it exists. It will be found especially valuable for those endeavoring to promote in our churches an intelligent interest in foreign missions."

+ Outlook 116:232 Je 6 '17 80w

"Mr Hartman conducts his inquiry in the proper spirit of appreciation of the notable ethical and spiritual characteristics of eastern religions, but with an eye also to their defects. He takes a common-sense view of the problems of missionaries."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Ap 13 '17 470w

HARVEY, ALEXANDER. William Dean Howells; a study of the achievement of a literary artist. *$1.50 (3½c) Huebsch 17-26889

Mr Harvey, who has held editorial positions on the New York Herald, the Literary Digest, and other papers, has been associate editor of Current Literature since 1905, and is the author of several other books, tells us in this volume some of his thoughts on Mr Howells and a great many of his thoughts on other subjects. This is not a life of Howells, whom Mr Harvey calls "the greatest living artist in the field of fiction who uses the English language," but a "study of his achievements." The author believes that the lack of appreciation of Howells in this country is due to the fact that American literary judgments are made in England, and that England has always underestimated Howells. Altho Mr Harvey ranks Howells so high, he tells us that "Howells is at the head of the sissy school of American literature" which is responsible for the "renaissance of insipidity in Anglo-Saxon literature," that his influence upon the short story has been "especially mischievous," that he is "inadequate to the male factor in human experience," and that were it not for his "intimacy with the soul and the circumstance of woman he could not have written his masterpieces." To Howells' women, therefore, a good deal of space is given. The chapter on "The Howells masterpiece" deals with "The rise of Silas Lapham." The type of the page headlines in the book is pronouncedly unusual.

A L A Bkl 14:86 D '17

"Nothing could be more preposterous than the attitude of Alexander Harvey towards literature in this volume. Nothing pleases him. He attacks everything. He begins with a hatred of the English, and this hatred is reiterated almost to his very last page. Although his theme is ostensibly Howells, he tells us very little about that writer. . . . Another of Mr Harvey's absurd objects of attack is the American book review. He declares that a book review in an American newspaper is either a display of impertinence to an author or of ill-breeding to the public." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 5 '17 860w

"An entertaining and keen, if rather pert study. The index is an alphabetical epitome of the author's own philosophy rather than a key to the book."

+ Cleveland p120 N '17 90w

The author's text is not so much a book as a tirade, not so much a tirade as a miscellany, and not so much a miscellany as the preface to an index. . . . Mr Harvey diverts even while he irritates; and often he is unsurpassably acute. We ask for bread and are given—by no means a stone, but, let us say, a cocktail." H. T. Follett

+ Dial 63:331 O 11 '17 1350w

+ Ind 92:58 O 6 '17 70w

"Mr Harvey selects important aspects of Mr Howells's work for lively and assertive advocacy, but it is abundantly clear from the start that Mr Howells is his point of departure rather than his goal. . . . An arduous task confronted Mr Harvey. . . . It must be said that in being loosely oracular and discursive, instead of attentive, he has missed his hour." Francis Hackett

+ New Repub 10:sup3 Ap 21 '17 2500w

"Such sheer insanity of prejudice is rarely expressed more bluntly. . . . To deny the eminence of British achievements is the giddiest height of fatuity. . . . There is a unique critical index at the end of the book which exhausts the reader and presumably the subject." Max Lustig

+ N Y Call p15 S 23 '17 1000w

"Occasionally you meet with an experience or a thing for which some particular word is the one fit and perfect definition. So with this book. For it the word egregious seems to have been exquisitely invented."

+ N Y Times 22:561 D 16 '17 880w

"People who admire Mr Howells's art and intelligence will have little patience with this farrago of impertinences and irrelevancies."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 S 10 '17 420w

HASLETT, HARRIET HOLMES. Dolores of the Sierra, and other one act plays. *$1.25 Elder 812 17-20676

A half dozen one-act plays, "bits of drama," the author calls them, "fragments of the human life about you." Some of them, "A modern menage" and "When love is blind" commend themselves for acting in the little-theater. The plays are: Dolores of the Sierra; The scoop; Undercurrents; A modern menage; The inventor; When love is blind.

"The promise in the plays of Harriet Holmes Haslett is not so clearly spoken. Her people are types rather than individuals; her plots are more commonplace; her action is too often switched by mere chance; her thought is less mature. She has, however, dexterity in dialogue and has learned to manipulate stage business." Williams Haynes

+ Dial 63:587 D 6 '17 220w

HASTINGS, FRANK SEYMOUR. Navigation. *75c Appleton 527 17-25796

The purpose of this book is to provide a short course explaining the principal problems met with in ordinary, everyday work at sea. The author is instructor in navigation on the U.S.S. "Granite State." Contents: Chart sailing; Mean and apparent time; Compass error; Dead reckoning; Soundings; Corrected altitude; Latitude; Latitude by sun on meridian short rule; Longitude; Latitude by sun, ex-meridian; Chronometer reading; Stars and planets; General remarks.

J of Rs 57:102 Ja '18 60w

HASTINGS, JAMES, and others, eds. Encyclopedia of religion and ethics. v 9 Munda-Phrygians. *$7 Scribner 203 (8-35833)

For descriptive note see Annual for 1909; for reviews of v 8 see Annual for 1916.

+ Ath p519 O '17 70w

"The work holds its place as one of the greatest and most useful reference works ever published. It has no competitor, as it has made a field for itself which is unique; and it is indispensable to the student of the mental and social sciences, as well as to him who is interested in philosophy and theology." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ja 2 '18 1100w

+ Lit D 56:39 Ja 12 '18 360w

+ Outlook 118:67 Ja 9 '18 80w

"This new volume maintains the standard of its predecessors."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p383 Ag '17 230w

"Specially attractive contributions are grouped under the titles of 'Ordeal' and 'Nature,' while the less important subjects, whose number shows the wide field covered by the work, have been entrusted to experts, who inspire the confidence which is half the charm which the ordinary reader feels as he consults a work of this character."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p554 N 15 '17 1150w

HAUSER, HENRI. Germany's commercial grip on the world; her business methods explained; tr. by Manfred Emanuel. *$1.65 Scribner 382 17-14560

"The aim of this work is essentially practical. It is an objective study of facts, not a scientific discussion of economic principles; and its purpose is to promote the future prosperity of France in two ways, a negative and a positive. The first is to avoid the German grip, and the second to apply the lessons to be learnt from German success. . . . The most important lesson of all is that German success has in the main been earned by solid work. . . . As for those who urge 'war on Germany's trade' with the weapons of passion and force, they are merely talking nonsense. Professor Hauser brings out this lesson better than most writers on the same subject."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

A L A Bkl 14:41 N '17
Ath p96 F '17 60w

"Of interest to thoughtful business men, legislators and students of economic and current history."

+ Cleveland p92 J1 '17 60w

+ N Y Times 22:262 J1 15 '17 950w

St Louis 15:320 S '17

"Professor Hauser's book was written for Frenchmen, but it well deserves translation and the widest circulation. It is a penetrating and comprehensive analysis of the economic development of Germany, full of detailed information, acute deductions, and sound conclusions. . . . Professor Hauser's treatment is much more thorough than any hitherto attempted in English, and his conclusions are better informed and better balanced than the hasty and somewhat excited counsels pressed upon us here from various quarters."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p3 Ja 4 '17 900w

HAWKES, CLARENCE. Wood and water friends. Il *$1.25 (1½c) Crowell 590 18-2698

A selection from the author's nature writings. Some of them are sketches from a childhood spent in a happy out-of-door environment, where the foundations were laid for the studies that have been continued even after the loss of eye-sight. The pictures are by Charles Copeland. The selections are arranged miscellaneously without table of contents or index.

"Though physically blind, Mr Hawkes has a wonderful way of making others see. The world is far richer for his book."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 5 '18 140w

"The stories are varied and will interest children and young people of different ages—some of them speak especially to younger folk, while others have a wider field of interest. There is much to commend in the book as an introduction to nature lore."

+ N Y Times 22:501 N 25 '17 300w

"He has developed the happy faculty of telling nature stories that are sometimes true and always interesting. Even the fiction is based on truth."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 D 8 '17 150w

HAWORTH, PAUL LELAND. On the headwaters of Peace river. Il *$4 Scribner 917.11 17-28894

"The journey which Paul Leland Haworth took 'On the headwaters of Peace river,' a thousand-mile canoe trip in the northern wilderness of the Canadian Rockies, is not one that would be practicable for the ordinary traveler. . . . Outfitting at Edmonton, and making his start, with one man, from Hansard, on the Fraser river, he followed the Crooked and the Parsnip rivers to the junction of the latter with the Finlay to make the mighty Peace river, and then went on up the Finlay and well into the country of the Quadcha river, where the author thinks they were the first white men to penetrate. The many beautiful and interesting pictures are from photographs taken by the author."—N Y Times

+ A L A Bkl 14:92 D '17

"Mr Haworth's story of his trip is peculiarly delightful because of his own zest in every experience and in every inspiring sight of mountain, glacier, forest, or noble river, and because of his faculty for having interesting experiences and meeting people who had had strange and varied contacts with life and nature and were willing to talk about them."

+ N Y Times 22:482 N 18 '17 200w

"Will appeal to men who love rifle and canoe."

+ Outlook 117:387 N 7 '17 40w

HAWTHORNE, HILDEGARDE. Rambles in old college towns. Il *$2.50 (3c) Dodd 378 17-29340

Graduates of the following colleges will take keen pleasure in a ramble with Miss Hawthorne to the brightest spot of bygone days: Jefferson's college, William and Mary, Annapolis, Princeton, Yale, Brown university, Harvard, Wellesley, Bowdoin, Dartmouth, Amherst, Smith, Williams, Vassar, West Point and Cornell. It is of the buildings, the campus, the spirit and traditions of these time honored old places of learning that she writes. Of Cornell she quotes: "I don't see but that, by and large, Cornell doesn't pretty well express the whole of this country of ours, male and female, rich and poor, in most of its countless activities and interests. A great democratic university, wonderfully beautiful, magnificently situated, thoroughly alive. It's tremendous!"

A L A Bkl 14:76 D '17

"Life past and present, scenes as they strike the eye and as they bring memories of bygone days, both of the colleges themselves and of their historic surroundings, appeal directly to Miss Hawthorne, and are made memorable to the reader. . . . Miss Hawthorne's description of Harvard is much too casual and perfunctory." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 31 '17 650w

"The descriptions of buildings and of elms grow a trifle monotonous, if one reads the book in course, and will doubtless be the most enjoyable to the students and alumni of the institutions portrayed. There is more variety in the historical anecdotes."

+ Dial 83:534 N 22 '17 250w

+ Lit D 65:44 D 8 '17 110w

"It is the sort of thing for which Miss Hawthorne has a particularly happy faculty. Her mood responds sensitively to every appeal of landscape, tradition, human sentiment, the ever-lasting joyousness of youth, beauty of building or of setting. Her sense of humor is always keen and its expression genial and sunny."

+ N Y Times 22:482 N 18 '17 350w

HAY, JOHN. Complete poetical works. Il *$1.50 Houghton 811

The poems are grouped under the headings: The Pike county ballads; Wanderlieder; New and old; Translations; Uncollected pieces. There is an index of titles and one of first lines. The introduction is by the author's son, Clarence Leonard Hay. The frontispiece is a portrait of the author.

HAY, JOHN—Continued

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 7 '17 320w

"John Hay cannot be ranked among the greatest poets. . . . But there have been few poets whose work maintained a more consistent average of excellence. He was always the competent master of his craft, alike in the delightful 'Pike county ballads' and in his historical verse of classic dignity."

+ Ind 92:63 O 6 '17 120w

"Judged by exacting standards, Mr Hay's poems are in the main more notable for rich thought and balanced human feeling than for the lyrical quality which creates the emotion of beauty. But their place in American letters is secure. Their importance, too, in American life is established because they reveal the true character of one who in the eyes of men was chiefly the statesman and diplomat."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 O 18 '17 290w

HAY, MARLEY FOTHERINGHAM. Secrets of the submarine. il *$1.25 (3c) Dodd 623.8 17-24865

Mr Hay has for seventeen years devoted his time exclusively to the design and construction of submarines. "Touching but lightly on historical development or the technique of hull and engine design (subjects already treated by Burgoyne, Stirling, Hoar, and others), he discusses in clear and simple language the armament of the submarine and the functions of its various mechanisms. . . . He describes the way in which these craft are maintained, operated, and fought; the special dangers to which they and their crews are exposed, and the devices by which it is sought to counteract those dangers. He indicates many of the problems connected with them which remain to be solved and he analyzes Germany's building facilities." (Nation)

+ A L A Bkl 14:80 D '17

"Just the book for the man who is looking for a vide mecum on the subject. It answers practically every possible question."

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 26 '17 300w

+ Cleveland p131 D '17 30w

"Besides giving America credit for the original invention by Holland, the author might also have mentioned Sperry's gyroscopic compass, without which submarines could not navigate under water; Admiral Howell's first employment of the gyroscope to make the torpedo run straight; and the heating of the air in the Whitehead torpedo to gain speed and distance, due to the late Walter N. Hill. The chapter on Submarine antidotes is not encouraging; that on the Sphere of the submarine is conservative, valuable, thoughtful."

+ + — Nation 195:407 O 11 '17 300w

N Y Times 22:551 D 9 '17 70w

"Authentic, up-to-date information."

+ Quar List New Tech Bks O '17 50w

HAYES, CARLTON (JOSEPH HUNTLEY). Political and social history of modern Europe. 2v v 1 *$2; v 2 $2.25 Macmillan 940.5 16-16141

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"In the second volume interest centres in chapters 21-25, which set forth the 'Social factors in recent European history, 1871-1914,' and explain the special form these factors took in England, France, Germany, Russia, and the minor states during that time. . . . In the sections on France in the eighteenth century, especially during the revolution, are statements which need revision." H. E. Bourne

+ Am Hist R 22:638 Ap '17 920w

+ A L A Bkl 13:346 My '17

"The first volume offers an excellent summary of three centuries (1500-1815) in a volume of 597 pages; while the entire second volume of 767 pages is devoted to the period since 1815. The theory of the economic interpretation of history is, of course, accepted, but it is used with moderation. . . . Interesting features are the very full discussion of the eastern question and the expansion of Europe into Asia, Africa, and America. . . . Each volume has its own index and may be used separately." W. R. Smith

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:355 My '17 270w

+ Ath p52 Ja '17 120w

"It is obvious that much which seems almost sacrosanct to the historical specialist must be omitted, but Mr Hayes has been singularly successful in providing a comprehensive, clear, and well-balanced sketch of the development of European politics and society during the last four centuries. There are of course slips, particularly in the sphere of domestic history. Mr Hayes's maps are distinctly good, except that the map of the religious divisions of Europe in 1600 anticipates the plantation of Ulster and gives an Anglican hue to the lands of Tyrone and Tyrconnell. His genealogical and other tables are elaborate and careful, and his bibliographies almost too detailed; but he gives the impression, not too common, of having really read the books he recommends." A. F. P.

+ — Eng Hist R 32:620 O '17 420w

+ Ind 89:270 F 12 '17 250w

"The bibliographies are excellent, so that the student has at once a manual and a guide to fuller reading." J. W. T.

+ J Pol Econ 25:520 My '17 330w

"The central theme is the rise and evolution of the powerful middle class in society—the bourgeoisie—which has done more than all the other social classes put together to create the life and thought of the modern world. There are accordingly such excellent chapters as those on the Commercial revolution of the sixteenth century, Society in the eighteenth century, The industrial revolution, and Social factors, 1870-1914. . . . It is an admirable book to 'grind' for knowledge."

+ Nation 104:554 My 3 '17 300w

Pittsburgh 22:425 My '17 50w

"Makes an excellent preparation for a study of the causes and origin of the war."

+ Pratt p41 Ap '17 20w

"Particular efforts are made to explain the various economic systems with respect to their merits and defects. Thus we have a description of humanism in the 16th century, the influence of socialism in the 20th; the colonization of the 17th century, contrasted with the partitions of Africa and the expansion in the Far East of more recent times."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Mr 9 '17 450w

HAYES, DOREMUS ALMY. John and his writings. (Biblical introduction ser.) *$1.75 Meth. bk. 226 17-6228

"An interpretation of the gospel, the letters, and the apocalypse of John the 'beloved disciple,' founded on the assumption that the John who wrote the five Johannine books was the Apostle John. Over against the tremendous logical structure of the Pauline gospel, Dr Hayes places the gospel according to John, as the doctrine of the church of the future, since it is founded and consummated in love. He regards the first epistle of John as better than any of the epistles of Paul. 'John was a prophet; Paul an advocate. . . . Paul's epistles are treatises. . . . John makes confident assertion of the truth.'"—R of Rs

"His style is clear and full of human touches that are fascinating in their suggestiveness. . . . The discussion of the authorship of the fourth gospel is fair; the various views and their advocates are well and honorably represented. . . . The bibliography is excellent, not being overloaded with technical works in foreign languages."

+ Bib World 50:49 Jl '17 320w

"As an introduction to the Apostle John and his writings this volume is not only the latest, but the best with which we are acquainted. The bold and broad scholarship of the author is reinforced by a keen insight into human nature. . . . Seldom can it be said of a work of introduction to a book of the Bible that it has not a dry or dull page in it; but just that can be said of this work." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 21 '17 750w

"The book moves with persuasive eloquence and ample historical perspective and will prove a great satisfaction to Bible students if one excepts the chapters on the Apocalypse. Dr Hayes admits this book to be the most baffling in the Bible and contents himself with presenting a mass of learned opinion on the subject, clinging to certain literalisms that can be easily explained."

+ R of Rs 55:553 My '17 180w

HAYNES, WILLIAMS, and HARRISON, JOSEPH LEROY, comps. Camp-fire verse. *$1.25 Duffield $11.08 17-25233

In his introduction to this anthology Stewart Edward White points out the change that came over out-door poetry in the period following the nineties, reflecting a change in our attitude to out-door life. In that early verse, he says, "you are apt to have been wearing 'Lincoln green' and a feather in your cap at that. But with Kipling's 'Feet of the young men' as a sort of dividing line, later verse takes an entirely new attitude and you don your khaki." In selecting poems for the volume the compilers have applied a double test: "We have tried to exclude all poems not conceived in the true spirit of the sportsman and to include no poems devoid of literary merit." (Preface)

A L A Bkl 14:86 D '17

"This collection is unique and interesting, and is one which any lover of camp life may be glad to have on his shelves. Most of the pieces are by authors who are, to the present reviewer at least, unknown, and many of them are of the undistinguished sort that serve as space-fillers in the better sporting magazines."

+ — Dial 63:529 N 22 '17 280w

"An amazingly good collection. An excellent index, both of first lines and of titles, with a table of contents listed according to the authors, makes any of the verses easy to find."

+ N Y Times 23:33 Ja 27 '18 390w

+ Springf'd Republican p13 Ja 20 '18 260w

HAYWARD, FRANK HERBERT. Professionalism and originality; with an appendix of suggestions bearing on professional, administrative, and educational topics. *$1.75 (3½c) Open ct. 174 17-17528

Dr Hayward is a school inspector. "His book is a polemic against professionalism. The first part is a catalogue of the vices to which the professional spirit is heir; the second—in intention a study of the characteristics of the living man, i.e., of the original mind—is mainly concerned with the reception which such a mind finds in the world of professionals." (Int J Ethics)

"There are many shrewd and thoughtful comments upon the existing order of things."

+ Ath p245 My '17 70w

"Dr Hayward handles all professions with a fine impartiality. . . . The book is important for its trenchant discussion of many questions which are sadly in need of airing." H. J. W. H. + — Int J Ethics 27:541 J1 '17 260w

"Dr Hayward obviously knows nothing at first hand of the legal profession, nor, we should suppose, of the clerical and medical professions. He takes all his accusations of the legal profession from a book 'The lawyer: our old man of the sea,' by Mr Durrant."

— Sat R 123:530 Je 23 '17 870w

"A highstrung and loosely co-ordinated attack on all kinds of what we in America call 'stand-pattism.' . . . He undertakes no philosophical discussion of that law of life which demands of men that they continually make the effort to strike a balance between the old and the new."

— Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 12 '17 1460w

HAYWARD, WILLIAM RICHART. Money: what it is and how to use it. *80c (3c) Houghton 332 17-11581

The author is principal of the Curtis evening high school in New York city, and this work is a result of both teaching and business experience. Contents: What money is; Barter and primitive money; Development and use of metal money; The relation of money to progress; How money grows; How money is obtained; Keeping account of money; Substitutes for money; Banking; Stocks and bonds; Speculation; Exchange; Money for women; Travel; Buying; Receiving; Paying; Selling; Delivering; Collecting.

"It would make a most desirable textbook for junior high-school commercial courses. The author has been head of the commercial department of a large city high school, has had business experience of several years, has conducted a private business school, and has been editor of the Efficiency Society Journal. He has written into this book the practical outcome of his experience in contact with these different kinds of groups."

+ El School J 17:691 My '17 350w

Ind 91:267 Ag 18 '17 70w

+ N Y Times 22:242 Je 24 '17 270w

Pittsburgh 22:689 O '17 50w

+ Pratt p12 O '17 20w

St Louis 15:358 O '17 20w

"Matters connected with the use and handling of money that the average person would need to know are briefly, simply and very clearly told."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 Je 10 '17 130w

HAZARD, CAROLINE. Yosemite, and other verse. *$1.25 Houghton 311 17-11824

This book of poems by the ex-president of Wellesley college is made up of three parts. Part 1, California verse, contains the title piece and other poems of the far West, among them a sonnet sequence, "The Court of the ages," written in San Francisco in 1915. The second part consists of miscellaneous poems, including a group of Hymns and anthems sung at Wellesley college. Part 3 is made up of five Studies in blank verse.

+ A L A Bkl 13:439 J1 '17

"The religious note, the deep undertone of faith which makes explainable all the sadder, darker sides of life, is always present. It is, we think, more characteristic than any other one element of the spiritual aspects of Miss Hazard's achievement." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 16 '17 1050w

HAZELTINE, ALICE ISABEL, ed. Library work with children. *$1.50 (1½c) Wilson, H. W. 028.5 17-26973

Miss Hazeltine, compiler of this second volume in the series of "Classics of American librarianship," is supervisor of children's work in the St Louis public library. "The volume is an attempt to bring together in accessible form papers representing the growth and tendencies of forty years of library work with children. . . . The papers chosen are primarily of historic rather than of present-day value, although many of them embody principles which govern the practice of today. . . . Several different phases of children's work are represented, although no attempt has been made to make the collection comprehensive. . . . Book-selection for children has not been included except incidentally, since it is expected that this subject will be treated in another volume as part of the general subject of book-selection. In the same way, material on training for library work with children has been reserved for a volume on library training." (Preface)

A L A Bkl 14:110 Ja '18

"Parents who wish to know what the public service is doing for the good of every child will find this book inspiring. And librarians will find much useful matter in the suggestions."

+ Lit D 55:52 D 8 '17 130w

HAZEN, CHARLES DOWNER. Alsace-Lorraine under German rule. *$1.25 (2½c) Holt 943.44 17-30886

A brief, dependable account of the fate of Alsace-Lorraine since its annexation by the Germans at the end of the Franco-Prussian war. A preliminary chapter traces the history of mediaeval Alsace and Lorraine, thru later acquisition by France, the character of French rule for over two hundred years and the part the provinces took in the French revolution, the Napoleonic wars and the war which wrenched them from France. In the main body of the book are treated the German agitation for the conquest of Alsace-Lorraine, arguments for annexation in 1871, the remonstrance of the two provinces against it, the spirit and methods of German rule since annexation, and the resistance to the persistent attempts at Germanization. The writer is professor of history in Columbia university.

HAZEN, CHARLES DOWNER—Continued

"An authoritative and readable study."
+ A L A Bkl 14:123 Ja '18

"By far the best short, yet actually sufficient, presentment of a question that is at the very heart of the present struggle for liberty. In it is to be found an unanswerable brief for France and a stern indictment of Berlin; for Berlin is now Germany." S. A.

+ Boston Transcript p10 D 5 '17 470w

"This book can be depended upon as a complete popular discussion of one of the most important problems of the war."

+ Lit D 55:44 D 8 '17 140w

+ Lit D 55:46 D 29 '17 280w

"Professor Hazen's new book offers the most complete and, basically, the most trustworthy treatment of the theme that has yet appeared in English. It is, however, not difficult to find many flaws in the new book. Historical, in the highest sense, the book is not, as it shows little of the fine balance and breadth of view which the reader expects from the author of 'Europe since 1815.' Rather does it bear frequent evidence of the heat which forged it, of haste, and even of confusion."

+ — Nation 106:19 Ja '18 450w

"The volume has been written with the intention of encouraging Americans and others to continue the strife until the liberation of Alsace-Lorraine is achieved, though, naturally, the author simply assumes that result as a certainty. But while this part is doubtful, the historical portion of the volume has a definite value." Joshua Wanhope

+ N Y Call p15 N 18 '17 780w

"An excellent example of point of view and purpose in the presentation of historical facts. The book is not, properly speaking, a history; it is a footnote to history and a plea for the vindication of a principle. . . . Professor Hazen writes simply and vigorously. He has not the timidity that seeks refuge in qualification and academic jargon. . . . The book is inspiring and informing, and leaves the reader with a forcible impression of the finality of the issue."

+ N Y Times 22:558 D 16 '17 550w

HAZEN, CHARLES DOWNER. French revolution and Napoleon. maps *$2.50 (3½c) Holt 944.04 17-8744

The author has brought together in this volume the chapters from his "Modern European history" that deal with the French revolution and Napoleon. He has done this for the convenience of those who wish to review that period of history, as a means to a better understanding of our present crisis. The author says, "Between that period and our own not only are there points of interesting and suggestive comparison but there is also a distinct line of causation connecting the two."

"A book outwardly attractive and charmingly written; it will probably be a popular text-book and, compared with other volumes of the same size, it will deserve to be popular. Tested by the ideal standard of what such a volume might be, it is more open to criticism. As to the incorrect statements of facts, while there are fewer than in the majority of school-texts dealing with this same period, there are still more than necessary, more than should be allowed to stand in a revised edition of the work. The connection between these periods and the present war is not made especially clear; it is treated very incidentally. Perhaps it could not be made clear in a work that ends with the Congress of Vienna; it might have been shown in two chapters on the great world development that has led to a world war." F. M. Fling

+ Am Hist R 23:149 O '17 750w

Boston Transcript p6 Ap 11 '17 250w

+ Dial 63:30 Je 28 '17 570w

+ Educ R 54:96 Je '17 40w

"His 'French revolution' should really be read in conjunction with Carlyle's. It is exactly the sort of clear, logical, accurate, historical background which these brilliant, literary pictures demand."

+ Ind 90:516 Je 16 '17 240w

Lit D 54:1266 Ap 28 '17 680w

"The work of Professor Hazen is admirably done. He has a rare talent for the clear and compact statement of complex facts. His sense of historic perspective is just and his power of connected narrative is highly developed. His style is animated, simple and happily colored. His volume is generously illustrated with maps, mostly in color."

+ N Y Times 22:127 Ap 8 '17 450w

Pittsburgh 22:322 Ap '17 20w

Pratt p43 O '17 10w

+ R of Rs 56:215 Ag '17 100w

"The author is professor of European history in Columbia university."

St Louis 15:154 My '17 10w

"Fundamentally a text-book. . . . Prof Hazen leaves nothing to your background of information. . . . But the book is splendidly and readably, one might almost say, ingratiatingly, thorough. . . . On almost every one of its 350-odd pages Prof Hazen has displayed his truly remarkable gift for packing an immense amount of information—even dry information sometimes—into charming and spirited paragraphs."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Jl 6 '17 800w

HAZEN, CHARLES DOWNER. Modern European history. (American historical ser.) il $1.75 (1c) Holt 940.9 17-6333

A history of Europe from the French revolution to the European war. The central theme of the book is the struggle for liberty. Two chapters on The old régime in Europe and The old régime in France furnish a background for the story that follows. The one chapter at the end devoted to the European war deals only with causes and the course of events up to the actual outbreak of the conflict. The author is professor of history in Columbia university and author of "Europe since 1815," published in 1910. This work has been drawn on in writing the present book.

"Essentially a textbook, exceptionally well written, authoritative, and superior to others of its class."

+ A L A Bkl 13:395 Je '17

"The book is invaluable to one who would follow the important events now occurring in Europe, in the light of the story of the past." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 17 '17 460w

"As a textbook it will probably find its place in good high schools and in freshman courses in college rather than with more mature college classes. The first two hundred and fifty pages have been published separately in a library edition, without the illustrations, under the title, 'French revolution and Napoleon.'"

+ Nation 104:554 My 3 '17 300w

Pittsburgh 22:678 O '17 100w

"Clear maps set into the chapters which they represent. Profusely illustrated."

+ School R 25:502 Ap '17 20w

"For a course in European history since the French revolution there is probably no better text than Hazen's 'Modern European history.'"

R. N. Tryon

+ School R 25:686 N '17 170w

HAZEN, CHARLES DOWNER, and others. Three peace congresses of the nineteenth century. *75c (4c) Harvard univ. press 341.1 17-13066

The papers on the Peace congresses of Vienna, Paris, and Berlin contained in this volume were written for the meeting of the American historical association held in Cincinnati in 1916. The congress of Vienna is treated by Charles Downer Hazen; The congress of Paris, by William Roscoe Thayer; The congress of Berlin, by Robert Howard Lord. In addition there is a paper on Claimants to Constantinople, by Archibald Cary Coolidge. The problem of Constantinople is pronounced by Henry Eldridge Bourne in his introduction "the most important single question to which the war must furnish an answer."

"All the papers are interesting and suggestive. Mr Thayer's alone is rather shabbily dressed so far as literary form is concerned and not exactly punctilious in its impartiality. Mr Coolidge's article on 'Claimants to Constantinople' is a clear, well-balanced, and fair-minded, though appropriately brief, account of the most difficult question in the international relations of modern times. It deals mainly with the political aspects of the problem, and only incidentally with the economic." C. J. H. Hayes

+ Am Hist R 23:155 O '17 1150w

"Deals rather with the social side than with the political results of the negotiations, the personality of the plenipotentiaries than with their achievements. For those who wish to study the history of the questions involved in them, a useful bibliography is provided." E.

+ Eng Hist R 32:626 O '17 90w

N Y Br Lib News 4:38 Je '17 30w

Pratt p13 O '17

"The basis of Russia's claims apropos of current discussion about the fate of Constantinople is clearly stated."

+ R of Rs 56:108 Jl '17 30w

HEADLAM, JAMES WYCLIFFE. German chancellor and the outbreak of war. *3s 6d T. Fisher Unwin, London 940.91

"This is, in effect, a supplement to the valuable analysis of the diplomatic negotiations immediately preceding the entry of Great Britain into the war which Mr Headlam issued in 1915 under the title 'The history of twelve days.' It includes additional evidence—from Germany—which has since become available, and is concerned mainly with events which intervened between the afternoon of Wednesday, July 29, and midnight on July 30. It challenges the view elaborated for the German public by the Chancellor that the act which made war inevitable was the Russian mobilization, and that for this mobilization Great Britain was really responsible. The five chapters are reprinted (with alterations and additions) from the Westminster Gazette.—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Ath p316 Je '17 170w

"In 1915 Mr Headlam completed his book, 'The history of twelve days,' which is still the best thing about the immediate causes of the war. Now, in this brief, clearly written volume, he has contributed one of the best supplementary things relating to the subject. It is marred in some places by small errors or too positive statement of that which should be conjecture, but in no essential part is the reasoning thereby affected."

+ Nation 105:369 O 4 '17 1250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p191 Ap 19 '17 110w

HEADLAM, JAMES WYCLIFFE. The issue. *$1 (3c) Houghton 940.91 17-4974

Four of the papers in this volume are reprinted from the Nineteenth Century and After and one from the Westminster Gazette. They are discussions of the various suggestions for peace that have come from Germany. The author says there are three issues involved in this war, the Atlantic, the Eastern, and the European. It is with the third, the predominance of Germany in Europe, that he is concerned. This is the great issue with which the war began and with which it will close. Contents: Two manifestoes; The party leaders; The German chancellor and peace; Prince Bülow on peace; Central Europe. Mr Headlam is author of a life of Bismarck.

"The appendixes contain translations of the manifestoes of the six industrial associations and of the German professors to the chancellor."

A L A Bkl 13:425 Jl '17

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:362 My '17 90w

"The evidence of German policy adduced would perhaps have had even more weight with some if it had been allowed to speak for itself than accompanied as it is by the expression of Mr Headlam's strong feeling."

Ath p36 F '17 50w

Cleveland p83 Je '17 50w

"Certainly he is thoroughly sane."

+ Dial 62:529 Je 14 '17 400w

"Of special value to American readers because it states clearly and concisely precisely what the aims of the Allies are in the great war."

+ Ind 90:380 My 26 '17 200w

J Pol Econ 25:1059 D '17 280w

Reviewed by Alvin Johnson

+ New Repub 10:301 Ap 7 '17 1250w

N Y Br Lib News 4:57 Ap '17 20w

Pittsburg 22:528 Je '17 80w

"Mr J. W. Headlam is one of the sanest and best-informed of our critics of German policy."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p619 D 21 '16 750w

HEALY, WILLIAM. Mental conflicts and misconduct. *$2.50 (3c) Little 136.7 17-9835

Mr Healy is director of the Psychopathic institute, in connection with the Juvenile court of Chicago, and author of "The individual delinquent." This work on the part mental conflict plays in delinquency is an outgrowth of his experience. In general the conclusions arrived at conform to those of Freud, but the author is not a Freudian disciple. Acknowledgment is made to the psycho-analytic school for enlightenment, but the author's studies have been followed independently, with no intention of proving any particular theory. The first four chapters are of a general nature, discussing principles, methods, etc. The main body of the book is given up to description and analysis of cases, arranged under such headings as: Conflicts accompanied by obsessive imagery; Conflicts causing impelling ideas; Criminal careers developed from conflicts; Conflict arising from sex experiences; Conflicts arising from secret sex knowledge; Conflicts concerning parentage, etc.

"His exposition of the methods of getting at the mental conflicts, as well as the method itself, is so simple that it obviates much of the occultism of some psycho-analysts. His reliance primarily upon the presentation of the facts of the clinic and the procedure therein makes it a work which must be made a starting-point by any future worker in the same field. It would seem that the cases could have been more carefully classified and presented more systematically. . . . The genius of the author as shown in the application of this method of treatment to a class of juvenile offenders cannot be too highly commended." T: H. Haines, M.D.

+ Am J Soc 23:259 S '17 560w

"Valuable to the eugenist, intelligent parent, teacher or physician. Too pathological for the general reader."

+ A L A Bkl 14:39 N '17

"No writer in the field of criminological literature has done so much as has the author of this volume to analyze the causation underlying criminality. He has established psychological research as one of the most valuable approaches to the real understanding of the problem. This is the first rational explanation of that class of cases where the criminal confesses to impulses which he cannot explain.

HEALY, WILLIAM—Continued

Dr Healy establishes the value of psycho-analysis as a genuine scientific procedure. The work is thoroughly scientific and of absorbing interest to all who are handling misconduct problems, especially those of adolescent children." J. P. L.

+ Ann Am Acad 73:245 S '17 200w

"Forms a notable contribution to the group of writings, mostly of American origin, distinctive of the applied psychology of crime."

+ Dial 63:219 S '17 270w

"To one outside the Freudian fold this theory is unconvincing. The idea of mental conflict is ill-defined, and in the use made of the notion of repression lurk many doubtful assumptions. The sound suggestions given by the author for the treatment of these cases are in no way bound up with the theory of the mental mechanisms with which he connects them."

+ Nation 105:571 N 22 '17 420w

Pittsburgh 22:657 O '17 30w

St Louis 15:171 Je '17 14w

"Psychologically, the author's case-material is of great interest, and the interpretation given, in terms of mental conflict, is likewise of considerable interest, though it does not appear to fit all the cases equally well." R. S. Woodworth

+ Science n s 46:461 N 9 '17 740w

"A work that must prove of absorbing interest to professional people, pastors, judges, court and institution officers, as well as parents and guardians of children. Dr Healy's findings interpret much that has been hitherto misunderstood by those engaged in close study of delinquency."

+ Social Service Review 5:25 Ap '17 100w

"The forty cases are very simply and attractively described and give a picture of an almost uniform pattern bringing home the havoc played in the child's mind by the lottery of naïveté and partial information on sex topics to which the child is exposed. In contrast to the very direct and perhaps over-simple account of records, the general discussion goes at length into a fairly orthodox though somewhat simplified rendering of the Freudian system of interpretations, general principles, applications and methods, with many interesting and helpful discussions, with much evidence of sound experience." Adolph Meyer

+ Survey 38:421 Ag 11 '17 1700w

HEARN, LAFCADIO. Life and literature. *$3.50
Dodd 504 17-21118

Professor John Erskine of Columbia University, editor of Hearn's "Interpretations of literature" and "Appreciations of poetry," is editor also of this third volume. The material which has been secured thru Hearn's Japanese students is in substance the lectures delivered at the University of Tokyo between 1896 and 1902. The volume contains critical comment which confirms Hearn lovers in their impression of his "noble and continuous discrimination, a sustained sympathy, day after day, year after year, towards good books of all sorts, whether contemporary or long published." Some of the chapters are: On reading; in relation to literature; On the relation of life and character to literature; On composition; Literary genius (a fragment); On modern English criticism, and the contemporary relations of English to French literature; The poetry of George Meredith; Note upon Rossetti's prose; Note on some French romances; Note upon an ugly subject; Tolstoi's theory of art; Note upon Tolstoi's "Resurrection"; Some fairy literature; The most beautiful romance of the middle ages.

"Hearn has rendered a service alike to the West by his interpretations of the Japanese mind and to the East by his suggestive study of western literature, and he is certain that by their extraordinary quality they add something of great value to the body of English literary criticism, and that they stand among the best examples of this form of writing. Their remarkable feature is that they appeal to and contain much of value not merely to beginners in the study of English literature, but also to those who are anxious to amplify their knowledge of it." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 1 '17 1200w

"But it all serves admirably for the high-school or university student in our own country, as well as for the older reader who enjoys being freshened up by a series of capable résumés. For matured Anglo-Saxons the most interesting of Hearn's chapters are the first three, which deal with general opinions and which state his views on the reading and writing of literature—particularly the one in which he gives his ideas of composition." H: B. Fuller

+ Dial 64:68 Ja 17 '18 900w

"This third volume is a bit more personal than its predecessors, personal in the sense of bespeaking more clearly the adventure of the critic's taste. And it is of the utmost significance in the extraordinary quality of its interpretation, its literary criticism, not after the manner of the academic or journalistic schools of judgment, but from the point of view of the creative artist."

+ N Y Times 22:531 D 2 '17 900w

HEATH, ARTHUR GEORGE. Letters. *$1.25
Longmans 940.91 17-29759

"Arthur George Heath, fellow of New College, Oxford, and lieutenant in the Royal West Kent regiment, fell on the eighth of October, 1915, his twenty-eighth birthday. . . . He applied for a commission a few days after the declaration of war, and threw himself whole-heartedly into the necessarily abhorrent task, to carry it through or to die at his post. Gentleness and humor, forgetfulness of self and thoughtfulness for those at home, with a scholar's studiousness and earnestness, mark these letters from the field, mostly to the writer's mother, now collected and prefaced with a warmly appreciative memoir by Professor Gilbert Murray, fellow Oxonian and fellow collegian of Heath's."—Dial

"The book takes its place beside similar memorials of Dixon Scott and Rupert Brooke and scores of others, as a sad reminder of high possibilities of achievement sacrificed without a murmur, and also of high actualities of achievement in a great cause."

+ Dial 63:218 S 13 '17 220w

"There is something in the young Oxford don's way of facing the facts of his life honestly, with no illusion of the imagination, yet with a steady and at times humorous desire to make the best of them, something in his sense of routine obligation, in the very absence of a transforming imagination, which makes one feel as if standing on the bedrock of truth."

+ Nation 105:153 Ag 9 '17 230w

HEATH, CARL. Pacific settlement of international disputes. pa *1s Headley bros., London 341 (Eng ed 17-10174)

"This little book by a leading pacifist of advanced views is not a general dissertation but a collection of material; first giving in a concise form for reference the facts as to what has been done in the past by The Hague conventions, the Pacific convention, and International peace commissions; and then considering in order the new propositions for the prevention of war. The recommendations are on international lines. . . . At the end of each chapter are references to a few modern books in which its subject is dealt with at greater length."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Ath p96 F '17 80w

Int J Ethics 27:539 Jl '17 70w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p71 F 8 '17 150w

HEINE, HEINRICH. Poems. II *$2 Holt $31
17-10874

Louis Untermeyer has selected and translated three hundred and twenty-five of the poems of Heinrich Heine. These include not only the well-known "lieder," but selections from "Die Nord see" and some of the poems from "Die Harz reise" series as well. The translator says, "I have endeavored, by the selections chosen, to show Heine's lyrical power not only at its best but at its most characteristic. For this reason I have included many poems usually glossed over by his translators; poems that are trivial enough in themselves, but necessary to the series that contains them, and necessary also to a complete appreciation of Heine's development." The introduction is important as a piece of criticism, and in his translations Mr Untermeyer has endeavored to retain a quality too often lost in the English versions, the bitter flavor that is so characteristically Heine.

"The poems are translated into vivid English verse."

+ A L A Bkl 14:50 N '17

"Mr Untermeyer approaches Heine from three standpoints—that of the man, of the poet and of the paradox. He clears away at the very beginning much of the rubbish which has collected about the Heine tradition. His translation as a whole is not only satisfactory but deserves the highest praise for its faithfulness to both spirit and text and for the keenness with which he has made more clear the complex genius of Heine." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 1 '17 1050w

"Heine's simplicity is a trap for the unwary. That simplicity is the art that conceals art and can be reproduced only by one who is a poet in his own right, responsive to the same medium and claiming the same racial background. It took a Jewish poet to translate the Jewish poet. . . . Comment on the volume would be inadequate without reference to Mr Untermeyer's scholarly (not academic) preface which, except for its failure to praise the translator, constitutes the best possible review of the work." B. W. Huebsch

+ Dial 62:399 My 3 '17 930w

"The book will give to those who do not read German a real knowledge of a great poet; it will please those who do read German because it is a true and faithful rendering; and it will take its place as something more than a translation, because, thanks to the introduction and the choice and arrangement of the poems it is an interpretative and critical essay."

+ Ind 90:554 Je 23 '17 270w

"The result of Mr Untermeyer's labor is not merely passing good, it is surpassingly excellent. His knowledge of German—as is evident from the beginning and becomes more so as one studies his translations—is intimate and fundamentally sound. His greatest attainment is that he has caught the spirit of Heine."

+ Lit D 55:36 S 22 '17 550w

"Mr Untermeyer has unquestionably brought the reader who has no German closer to the source. If he has not quite succeeded in translating Heine the poet, he has succeeded very often in translating Heine the wit. . . . Nevertheless, Mr Untermeyer's volume is a little of a disappointment. One expected something more than a 'libretto' from a poet who takes his calling so seriously. It was really Heine the artist that we wanted." Paul Rosenfeld

+ — New Repub 11:225 Je 23 '17 1000w

N Y Br Lib News 4:78 My '17 30w

Reviewed by Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p12 Ap 22 '17 230w

"His preface is especially illuminating. . . . The defects of the book are small indeed, compared with its qualities. For the first time the English reader is furnished with a genuinely representative selection from Heine's poems, so translated as to give not the apparent or superficial meaning, but their real significance."

+ N Y Times 22:223 Je 10 '17 680w

"It is too much to say that these translations keep Heine's music. They do, however, fairly—at times brilliantly—present his poetic work and are a valuable addition to any library. The preface is unusually good, well worth publishing alone as a critical and interpretative essay on the great German Jew, whose words are immortal."

+ R of Rs 55:660 Je '17 80w

St Louis 15:183 Je '17

"Except for its irony, it gives but little hope for any great revival of interest in Heine's poetry. Heine was above all things musical, but this translation, while ingenious and true to the meaning of the original, does not make him remarkably sweet to the ear or appealing to one's sense of rhythm in words."

— + Spring'd Republican p17 My 6 '17 950w

HELEN of Four Gates. *$1.50 (2c) Dutton

17-16318

An anonymous story of the north country moors, by an Englishwoman said to have worked in a cotton mill for nearly the whole of the twenty years since she was eleven. Her grip upon the elemental in men and women, her uncanny imagination, her power of picturing cruelty and horror, and love unashamed, remind the reader of Eden Phillpotts, of Emily Brontë and of Edgar Allan Poe. An old and well-to-do farmer, Abel Mason, has never forgiven the sweetheart of his youth for casting him aside because of insanity in his family. After she and her husband have died, Abel adopts their daughter, Helen, whom he passes off as his own child in order to sate his longing for revenge upon her. When Helen falls in love with Martin, a lad working on the farm, Abel tells him that Helen carries the taint of insanity in her blood. Martin refuses either to marry Helen or to leave her, and for years the old man watches their sufferings with delight and invents new tortures until, by cunning schemes, he drives Martin from the farm and forces Helen into marriage with a tramp. The happy ending, though unexpected, is convincing, and does not leave the reader with a sense of anti-climax.

— + Ath p362 Jl '17 110w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Bookm 46:94 S '17 450w

"Helen of Four Gates' is an unusual novel. Its atmosphere is dark and morbid and its characters are nearly all abnormal. Nevertheless, the author has created in it a very real atmosphere of terror, and to some extent also of pity. The best work of the novelist is done in the creation of this terrifying monster, [Abel Mason]. For sheer stark horror his character finds few equals in recent fiction."

+ Boston Transcript p10 N 24 '17 490w

"It is plain that in theme and treatment she has been, probably unconsciously, influenced by the writings of Mr Thomas Hardy and Mr Phillpotts: thus the very considerable powers of expression with which she pictures the rich loveliness of an English countryside in springtime throw into ironical and shocking relief the sins and miseries of the human element. The author has somewhat overshot the mark. The material seems at times to get out of hand, the characters are not always intelligible, and there are unnecessary uglinesses."

— + Cath World 105:837 S '17 220w

"It is something more than a merely human struggle that the author has represented, consciously or not. It is the eternal struggle of all elemental, living things to maintain their birthright to freedom of expression in living terms. This is the truth that the 'ex-mill-girl' makes you feel. The dénouement is distinctly disappointing, below the level of the rest." Ruth McIntire

+ — Dial 63:211 S 13 '17 900w

Reviewed by Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p14 Ag 26 '17 480w

"It is all written with an imagination that shrinks from no horror, but is always able with sombre power to depict whatever height or depth of passion or suffering the characters rise or sink to. . . . One closes the book with the conviction that 'An ex-mill girl' has brought a new note to current English fiction, a note that excels in sheer emotional power, in beauty of tone, in imagination, any voice that is now telling stories to the English-speaking peoples."

+ N Y Times 22:265 Jl 15 '17 870w

"It is crude, but it has a certain power and vigour which make it worth reading."

— + Spec 119:192 Ag 25 '17 30w

HELEN of Four Gates—Continued

"In places the story is well nigh revolting, but in its dramatic tensely and insight into primitive human passions it attains a high degree of power."

+ — Spring'd Republican p15 Ag 26 '17 430w

"There is an intensity of emotion in 'Helen of Four Gates' a wild, desperate passion that excites while it oppresses the reader. You experience the same kind of sensation—though in a much stronger degree—that you have when you hold a wild bird in your hand."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p262 My 31 '17 530w

HEMENWAY, HETTY. Four days; the story of a war marriage. il *50c (4½c) Little

17-24973

This is a simply told story of a war marriage—the oft-enacted tale of the young Englishman who comes back from the horrors of the front to his quietly appointed English home with its circle of adoring relatives and his waiting girl bride. It is English in its quiet courage, pathetic in its telling of the stepping aside of the parents that those two might be all in all to each other during the short four days' leave. It is real in its recording of the simple details and the last goodbye at the station where the two smiled back into each other's eyes while a voice sounded behind them: "The average life of an officer in the Dardanelles is eleven days," and above the singing of "Rule Britannia" shrilled the voice of a hunchback "I came that they might have Life."

"Beautifully told, it holds in its small compass the essence of the tragedy of the war for all young lovers."

+ A L A Bkl 14:96 D '17

"A moving and unusually well written short story."

+ Cleveland p128 N '17 40w

"The author is a young Boston woman, a protégée of Mrs Deland. It is a profoundly moving little story, told with an appreciation of the virtue of restraint that is noteworthy in a first book."

+ N Y Times 22:313 S 16 '17 250w

"One of the best bits of work that we have had in this country since the war started." E. P. Wyckoff

+ Pub W 92:808 S 15 '17 250w

HENDERSON, LAWRENCE JOSEPH. Order of nature: an essay. *$1.50 Harvard univ. press 575

17-3165

"Evolution is studied from a new standpoint in 'The order of nature.' . . . The author almost commits himself to the opinion that life is a necessary consequence of the earth's physical and chemical constitution, an opinion which points to a hitherto unrecognized order existing among the properties of matter. As a setting for the problem the teleological principles of Aristotle and of the philosophers of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries are sketched, and then the biological and evolutionary doctrines are briefly reviewed. . . . The last chapters are given to a discussion of the unique properties of the three elements, hydrogen, carbon, and oxygen. And it is on the examination of the properties and activities of these elements that the author hopes to show the teleological order of the universe. A proof is not pretended."—Nation

"Valuable and stimulating to readers with a knowledge of chemistry, physics, mathematics, and the researches of J. Willard Gibbs. For the large reference library."

+ A L A Bkl 14:39 N '17

Ath p250 My '17 90w

Dial 63:528 N 22 '17 480w

"The adaptation of organic life to its environment has been a favorite theme. As a rule, the physical and chemical aspects of the problem have been neglected, and Professor Henderson, by calling attention to them, has started an investigation which will certainly be continued."

+ Nation 104:739 Je 21 '17 250w

"It has come to be assumed that the reason why the physical and chemical environment appears to be specially fitted for life is simply that life has, by natural selection, been so moulded as to fit its environment. Against this conclusion the main chapters of the book are directed; and the argument is the more remarkable and original since the author accepts without question the theory of natural selection. His discussion of Spencer's conception of evolution is perhaps specially luminous." J. S. H.

+ Nature 100:262 D 6 '17 1000w

+ N Y Times 22:143 Ap 15 '17 60w

St Louis 15:327 S '17 10w

HENDERSON, W. E. B. Behind the thicket. *$1.50 Dutton

"This is a novel with a somewhat unusual theme, placed in a setting which is not unusual at all. The little English village of Wokeborough, near London, is not in the least unlike any number of small English towns. . . . Michael is the leading character, a boy of six when the story begins, a young man when it closes. And it is the strange influence upon him of the woods which is the dominant theme of the novel, an influence which shows itself during his childhood and becomes stronger and stronger as the story progresses, ending at last in nymph-love and a tragedy understood only by the old Greek scholar who had been so fond of him always. . . . Side by side with it, however, runs an interesting, realistic account of the relations of a mother and daughter, the conflict of two generations which failed to understand each other."—N Y Times

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Bookm 46:206 O '17 330w

"Less delicately it treads the ground which Mr Forrest Reid touched recently in 'The spring song.'"

+ — Nation 105:247 S 6 '17 270w

"The book is very well written, despite its author's too great fondness for quotations, and some of the descriptions have in them more than a touch of poetry. If the difficulties inherent in the blending of the mystic, nature-worship theme with that of everyday life are not always entirely surmounted, the attempt is nevertheless a very interesting one."

+ N Y Times 22:250 J1 1 '17 500w

HENDRYX, JAMES B. Gun-brand. il *$1.50 (2c) Putnam

17-13183

Perhaps it was a little inconsistent that a girl who "felt the irresistible call of the raw," who languished in a civilized atmosphere should be obsessed with the idea of carrying the blessings of civilization to the Indian. Nevertheless the school that she is to establish gives the needed pretext for getting Chloe Elliston into the north, and that is all that matters. Once there her interest is divided between two men, Pierre Lapiere and Bob, called Brute, MacNair. Both are free traders and there is rivalry to the death between them. One is a dastard and knave, one an honest man, and, under his crude exterior, a gentleman. But Chloe makes the mistake of misjudging each and confusing the characters of the two. Blood flows freely before the tale is ended and the "raw" for which Chloe had yearned is hers in good measure.

A L A Bkl 13:119 J1 '17

"Mr Hendryx is a past master in the art of serving up fiction à la northwest. The subtler seasoning of plausibility and characterization are lacking in his handiwork, but the lover of such fiction will find it sufficiently wholesome and stimulating to be worth a hasty reading."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Ag 1 '17 200w

"The plot, which of course is the important matter in a book of this type, is sufficiently ingenious. . . . Occasionally the author forgets to be grandiloquent, which is fortunate for the book. The story moves swiftly, and will probably please the kind of reader for whom it is written."

N Y Times 22:258 J1 S '17 260w

Reviewed by Joseph Mosher

+ — Pub W 91:1317 Ap 21 '17 300w

"The reader's pleasure in 'The gun brand' will be in ratio to his credulity. The story is characteristic, but less spontaneous than Mr Hendryx's earlier tales."

+ — Springf'd Republican p15 S 2 '17 320w

HENNEBOIS, CHARLES. In German hands: the diary of a severely wounded prisoner; with a preface by Ernest Daudet. (Soldiers' tales of the great war) *$1.50 Dutton 940.91 (Eng ed 16-24983)

"Charles Hennebois was a volunteer in the French army, a poet-acquaintance of Daudet, and fell severely wounded on October 12, 1914, before Saint Michiel after only a few weeks of service. He was left lying uncared for between the lines until the 16th, when the Germans gathered him up, sent him to Metz, and amputated his leg—an operation which another German surgeon later told him was unnecessary. Moved from Metz to Montigny and later to Offenburg in Baden, M. Hennebois was the victim and witness of many German brutalities, and the book is practically the diary he kept during those months. . . . Incapacitated for further service, this Frenchman was fortunate enough to be exchanged, and in July, 1915, he was once more back in his home in 'Toulouse.'"—Springf'd Republican

A L A Bkl 14:123 Ja '18

"A striking exposition of German cruelty and oppression."

+ Sat R 122:420 O 28 '16 210w

"Something different from the usual 'war book.'"

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 28 '17 370w

"He is a man of letters by profession, not a writer for this occasion only, and knows how to tell his story instead of merely blurting it out. His tone is scrupulously fair."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p518 N 2 '16 530w

HENRY, FRANCIS AUGUSTUS. Jesus and the Christian religion. *$3 (2c) Putnam 236 16-22324

In this day of religious questioning, thinks the author, "we cannot do better than to turn from disputation and go back to the fountain-head of Christianity, the life and teaching of Him we call our Lord and Master; to try to enter into His mind and gain an insight of the religion He believed in and lived by. The following pages are an attempt to bring before the reader some of the leading principles of that religion with the purpose and the hope of inducing him to make a thorough study of a subject until recently too much neglected—the truth as it is in Jesus," and not as it is in the churches or in the Letter-writers of the New Testament." The trend of the author's discussion all goes to show that the history of the Christian church has been one of deviation from the teachings of its founder. In this he finds the explanation of the weakness of the church in modern life. He quotes Lessing's words, "After eighteen centuries of Christianity it is high time to go back to Christ."

N Y Br Lib News 3:183 D '16

"The argument is conducted on an extensive scale and with ability."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p131 Mr 15 '17 180w

HERFORD, OLIVER (PETER SIMPLE, pseud.). Confessions of a caricaturist. il *$1 Scribner 817 17-24407

This little volume consists of thirty-two caricatures, accompanied by Mr Herford's verses, of Napoleon, Roosevelt, Pierpont Morgan, Arnold Bennett, Peter Dunne, St Paul, John D. Rockefeller, "F. W. Hohenzollern," and others.

"Clever caricatures of famous men with an equally clever short rhyme for each picture."

+ A L A Bkl 14:50 N '17

"Here is an American humorist who can write and draw out of an abounding sense of fun, whose brain is fertile in conceits, and who is never insipid when his object is merely to provoke a smile. Best of all, when his purpose is satiric, his genial mood does not depart from him."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 O 14 '17 750w

HERGESHEIMER, JOSEPH. Three black Pennys. *$1.50 Knopf 17-25287

"The story depicts characteristics in the Penny family. The first is the survival of a strain, appearing in widely separated generations, which had given the possessor the distinguishing title of 'Black' Penny; and the second—also an attribute of the strain—a black, scornful mood, an impatience at restraint and an egoistic, antisocial attitude toward life. The story is divided into three distinct parts, in each of which a 'Black' Penny moves upon the stage and contributes his share to the drama begun centuries earlier by the first embodiment of the foreign strain."—Springf'd Republican

"Uncommon as this book ['Secret bread,' by F. T. Jesse] is in mood and quality, as well as in fitness of style, we have two American novels of the season that may fairly be matched with it. One is Ernest Poole's 'His family,' on which I have already said my enthusiastic say. The second is 'The three black Pennys.'" H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 46:487 D '17 900w

"Mr Hergesheimer is a master in his portrayal of the mind of man and the blind, not-understood, forces which urge him to what he does." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p10 D 12 '17 1650w

"Contributing also to the ultimate failure of the work as a novel is a smaller flaw. The characters move in the setting as though it were a mere stage back-drop. The moods, the thoughts, the spirits of the various characters are in no way changed by those minute influences which make up so large a part of the mosaic of life. Memories of the exquisite blending of man and nature by such men as Meredith, Maupassant, and Flaubert flood into the reviewer's mind. The virtue of the book is its psychology." B. I. Kinne

+ — Dial 63:643 D 20 '17 1250w

"We do not suggest the quality of the tale; how, in the artist's hands, this material, which in outline will seem merely clever or sensational, assumes dignity and a kind of beauty such as, if we were to search for an analogue, might lead us to Hawthorne rather than elsewhere."

+ Nation 105:432 O 18 '17 400w

"In spite of the sting of its fine artistry, its adroit blend of high literary models, only fitfully and uncertainly does it touch creative height." H. S.

+ — New Repub 12:334 O 20 '17 1050w

"Joseph Hergesheimer in this book has shown an exquisite mastery of prose form. The description of the modern iron furnace, for instance, is one of the finest word-paintings in recent fiction." Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p18 D 15 '17 640w

"He has here fashioned a novel out of distinctively American life on an original pattern, caught the very air and flavor of three widely separated epochs of our history."

+ N Y Times 22:342 S 16 '17 1200w

"The chief weakness of the present volume is that while the connection between the several parts is plausible, you feel that there is no inexorable connection between cause and effect. In fact, his work would have lost nothing essential if he had given it to us in the form of three unrelated short stories." Grant Hosmer

+ — Pub W 92:1378 O 20 '17 1000w

"He adopts an ambitious plan for a writer who has been before the reading public for so short a time, but he develops his theme with skill and notable success."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 O 14 '17 480w

HERING, CARL, and GETMAN, FREDERICK HUTTON. Standard table of electrochemical equivalents and their derivatives. il *$2 (7c) Van Nostrand 541.37 17-20864

"The chief purpose of this publication is to serve as a reference book on account of the tables and other data given in it, and not as a treatise on electrochemistry in general; sufficient explanatory text has however been added to enable the data to be used for most purposes without the need of a further treatise on the subject." (Preface) The table of electrochemical equivalents is based on one worked out by Mr Hering in 1903, but it has been entirely recalculated from the latest and best internationally adopted values, including the atomic weights for 1917. Glossary and index are provided at the end.

HERRICK, FRANCIS HOBART. Audubon, the naturalist; a history of his life and time. 2v il *$7.50 (3½c) Appleton 17-29872

The discovery in France of a collection of fresh material bearing on Audubon's ancestry and early life has enabled the author to write what may be called the first complete biography of the naturalist. Heretofore all that has been written on Audubon's life has been based almost wholly on a brief sketch which he himself put together hastily in 1835, characterizing it as "a very imperfect account of my early life." The new material supplements this fragmentary sketch and corrects it in many of its statements of fact. The two volume work, which is very fully illustrated, follows Audubon's adventurous career in detail. The appendixes contain valuable matter, including the complete text of the French documents, some in the original, others in translation, and a bibliography, containing a fully annotated list of Audubon's writings, biographies, criticism, and Auduboniana. Volume 2 contains the index for the complete work.

A L A Bkl 14:127 Ja '18

"One closes Mr Herrick's notable book with a feeling of keen satisfaction over the pleasure it has afforded and of gratitude to the author for having written it. . . . The scores of beautiful and most interesting illustrations also deserve mention." F. F. Kelly
+ Bookm 46:329 N '17 250w

"Combines scholarship with a popular style and is enhanced by many fine illustrations."
+ Cleveland p12 Ja '18 70w

"This work by the professor of biology in Western Reserve university, himself a well-known ornithologist, is the first thorough and authoritative biography of the great naturalist whose life was one of the most romantic in American history."
+ Lit D 55:44 D S '17 140w

"The volumes are beautifully printed and magnificently illustrated, many of the plates being reproductions in color of Audubon's drawings. For the reader whose interest in Audubon is scientific the book is invaluable; the more general reader will find it a fascinating story of tremendous struggle and great achievement."
+ N Y Times 22:478 N 18 '17 1400w

+ Outlook 118:31 Ja 2 '18 80w

"The present work gives from start to finish a sustained impression of a pioneer work. Even in the chapters that are necessarily based upon old, well-worked material, there is absolute freshness of treatment and point of view. . . . As a crowning merit the work is equipped with an admirable bibliography." Calvin Winter
+ Pub W 92:1388 O 20 '17 670w
+ R of Rs 57:99 Ja '18 130w

HERRON, GEORGE DAVIS. Menace of peace. *$1 (6c) Kennerley 910.91 (Eng ed 17-13835)

This little book is directed against the "clamour for a peace that shall leave the causes of the war unknown, the embattled questions unanswered," and argues that "a peace based upon a drawn battle between the Germanic powers and the Allies is nothing else than the capitulation of the world to Prussian might and mastery," whereas the victory of the Allies "will lead to the banishment of war from our planet." Mr Herron believes that peace without victory "would be to the interest of the munition-makers, because Europe would then continue to arm for war, and to the interest of the Vatican because, if autocracy should perish in Germany, it would perish elsewhere, and "the Catholic power depends upon the subjection of the peoples."

Reviewed by C. H. P. Thurston
— Bookm 46:289 N '17 10w

"An eloquent appeal to the Allies to endure to the end and win a complete victory for the sake of the spiritual values of humanity."
+ Ind 92:60 O 6 '17 30w

"The burden of Dr Herron's adjuration is 'Germania est delenda!' He doesn't put it in exactly these terms; calls it necessary chastisement, justice and things of that kind. . . . It is written with all the powerful and graceful diction of which Dr Herron is an undoubted master. But we cannot in common honesty say that we are greatly impressed with it." J. W.
+ — N Y Call p14 Jl 8 '17 700w

"Few writers upon the subject have stated the case with such comprehensive understanding of its factors, implications, and possible consequences, such compactness of presentation, such sturdy basing of argument upon the democracy that is at stake and such noble utterance."
+ N Y Times 22:344 S 16 '17 450w

"Written in the fiery eloquence of style and elegance of diction which have always characterized Dr Herron's polemic writings. It has incidental interest as another vigorous expression of a well-known American socialist in direct opposition to the Socialist party's policy of pacifism."
+ Springf'd Republican p15 Jl 15 '17 270w

HERRON, GEORGE DAVIS. Woodrow Wilson and the world's peace. il *$1.25 (5c) Kennerley 940.91 17-25519

The author of "The menace of peace," a Socialist, has collected in this volume six papers in defense of President Wilson's policy and against a premature peace. All except the first, which was originally printed in the New Age of London, and afterwards in Die Freie Zeitung of Bern, were written for continental European readers, and published from Dec. 31, 1916, to July 1, 1917. The papers have been "somewhat developed," but stand substantially as written. "Each paper has had two or more translations into other languages, other countries, than that in which it was originally published." (Explanations and dedication) The frontispiece pictures the bust of President Wilson modeled in 1916 by Jo Davidson. Contents: Woodrow Wilson and the world's peace; The man and the president; His initial effort; The pro-German morality of the pacifist; Pro-America; Appendix: an apologia.

A L A Bkl 14:89 D '17

— Nation 106:96 Ja 24 '18 300w

"It is exceedingly difficult to adequately review a work of this kind, when one has not the viewpoint of the author, and especially when that viewpoint shifts." J. W.

— N Y Call p14 O 21 '17 500w

"Americans ought to be thankful that so sturdy and understanding a fellow-countryman as Mr Herron lives in Europe and endeavors to interpret the mind of America to Europeans. Indeed, a good many Americans who have never been out of their own country will do well to read Mr Herron's book and gain thereby a less superficial understanding of the policy of this government toward the world war during its first two years and upon other matters."
+ N Y Times 22:359 S 23 '17 900w

HERSEY, HAROLD. Do's and don'ts in the army for officers and privates; an introd. to military science. *50c (2½c) Britton pub. 355 17-24260

This small book, made to fit the pocket, has chapters on: The duties and deportment of officers; The duties and deportment of enlisted men; The officer's equipment; An enlisted man's equipment; Hygiene; Miscellaneous information; Discipline and morale. The author says that he has "merely endeavored to help the beginner find his way through the tortuous mass of detailed knowledge he must acquire—as well as furnish ready reference for the more experienced."

HESLER, LEXEMUEL RAY, and WHETZEL, HERBERT HICE. Manual of fruit diseases. (Rural manuals) il *$2 Macmillan 632 17-9694

"Fruits are arranged alphabetically from apple to strawberry and under each the known diseases are grouped in order of importance. Symptoms of each disease are given, the cause described, and the best remedy suggested. Descriptions are popular; technical terms are all explained in a glossary. The final chapter is devoted to the preparation and application of fungicides. Short bibliographies given after each disease." (A L A Bkl) The authors of this manual are the professor and the assistant professor of plant pathology in the New York State college of agriculture, Cornell university.

"This book with Slingerland's 'Manual of fruit insects' (Booklist 11:205 Ja '15) forms a very practical guide for the doctoring of fruit trees."

+ A L A Bkl 13:434 Jl '17

"Discusses the subject from an essentially New England viewpoint, omitting from all consideration fruits and diseases that are of major interest in many states and nearly all that are of interest in our tropical possessions. The discussion of such diseases as are treated is in many instances from a local viewpoint rather than of a general nature. This is especially obvious in the treatment of such diseases as apple rust and pear blight. The illustrations are poor. . . . Assuming a central New York viewpoint and interest, the book may be said to give a very complete presentation of what is known of fruit diseases, with valuable lists of references to original sources of information. It is, as the authors announce, the first American text to deal wholly with diseases of fruits, and here for the first time are brought together with comprehensive discussion many obscure and little-known diseases. The facts presented are well selected, and the book constitutes a valuable addition to the literature of plant diseases." F. L. Stevens

+ Bot Gaz 64:254 S '17 240w

Cleveland p95 Jl '17 30w

+ Ind 91:297 Ag 25 '17 50w

St Louis 15:174 Je '17

HEUSSER, ALBERT HENRY. Land of the prophets. il *$2.50 (3½c) Crowell 915,69 16-23378

The author's advice to those who wish to visit Palestine is to "see Egypt first." Our own home land, he says, is so attractive that Palestine suffers by comparison, but "after the burning yellow sands of the Sudan, Syria and Judea will seem to you, as to the Israelites of old, a 'goodly land, beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth.'" The author is a lecturer for the Department of education of New York city, and his chapters have much of the informality of the spoken lecture. Contents: Port Said to Beyrout; Damascus; Galilee; Nazareth and Samaria; Ancient Jerusalem; Round about Jerusalem; Jericho and Petra; Bethlehem and Jaffa. There are many illustrations from photographs and a map.

HEWES, AMY. Women as munition makers, and Munition workers in England and France, by Henriette R. Walter. *75c Russell Sage foundation 331.4 17-28208

The first ninety-two pages of this book are given to a study, by Amy Hewes, professor of economics in Mt. Holyoke college and former secretary of the Massachusetts minimum wage commission, of conditions under which women were making munitions, in 1916, in Bridgeport, Connecticut. "Two articles giving the main results of the inquiry have already been published in advance of this report. . . . The second of these articles, that dealing with the munition industry, was submitted in manuscript, in advance of publication, to officials of the Remington arms-union metallic cartridge company for their criticism. This procedure, customary in industrial investigations made by the Russell Sage foundation, was the more necessary in this case, because of the previous refusal of the company to give the Foundation the desired information. In the conferences which followed the reading of the manuscript, some statements were challenged, others verified, and additional material was obtained, especially regarding changes made after the field work of the investigation was completed. In response to the suggestion of the company that no study could be accurate which was not based on data obtained in the plant itself, the Foundation offered to make such a supplementary inquiry before publishing the report. This offer was refused." (Introd.) The second section of the book (sixty-three pages) is by Henriette R. Walter, investigator for the Division of industrial studies of the Russell Sage foundation, who, under the caption "Munition workers in France and England," summarizes reports issued by the British ministry of munitions. There is a bibliography of three pages.

Reviewed by Edith Abbott

Am J Soc 23:531 Ja '18 370w

A L A Bkl 14:76 D '17

"Although Miss Hewes's study is confined to the subject of women as munition-makers, its social and economic findings apply generally." H. M. Kallen

* Dial 63:336 O 11 '17 1400w

Ind 92:193 O 27 '17 80w

HEWLETT, MAURICE HENRY. Thorgils. *$1.35 (3½c) Dodd 17-5127

Like "A lover's tale" and "Frey and his wife" this is a Norse romance. It is the story of Thorgils of Iceland who sailed with Eric the Red and voyaged to Greenland, where he endured unnumbered hardships. Thorgils lacks the dash of some of Mr Hewlett's other Norse heroes, notably that Gunnar who married the wife of Frey, but he is a man of might who wields great power by the force of his character.

A L A Bkl 13:354 My '17

"Mr Hewlett seems to tell his tale without effort or self-consciousness, with a bare vigour which fits his theme; with hardly a trace of verbal archaism." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 45:209 Ap '17 430w

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 14 '17 1350w

"An effect of virility and massive simplicity is produced with the art that is his own; yet the result is not all that we could ask from an author so gifted. It is at once too detached, and too harmonious with the stormy note of today. We feel we have almost a right to demand from Mr Hewlett that he either beguile our troubled eyes with a lovelier vision, or give us substance of hope and inspiration for the present."

+ Cath World 105:403 Je '17 220w

"There are no descriptions, or conversations, or character studies. That is certainly a very different sort of writing from 'Richard Yea and Nay,' or 'The queen's quair,' and people nowadays will not like it so well. Yet, like it or not, the result is much the same; out of the book there emerges a pretty definite figure." E. E. Hale

+ Dial 62:189 Mr 8 '17 650w

"We seem to visualize the Norse people, their customs and picturesque life."

+ Lit D 54:1087 Ap 14 '17 180w

+ Nation 104:368 Mr 29 '17 380w

HEWLETT, MAURICE HENRY—Continued

"A little saga of the northland, very perfect in its reticence and simplicity and human appeal." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 104:404 Ap 5 '17 110w

"Those who like stories of adventure that deal with simple, hardy, brave men and women will find 'Thorgils' an entertaining tale."

+ N Y Times 22:51 F 11 '17 350w

+ R of Rs 55:664 Je '17 50w

"With its lovmaking and fighting, its ship-building and sea sailing, the story makes a capital book for boys, who, unconscious of being instructed, might well be prepared by reading it for the reading of the saga stories."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p212 My 3 '17 370w

HICHENS, ROBERT SMYTHE. In the wilderness. il $1.50 (1½c) Stokes 17-5984

Dion and Rosamund Leith spend the first months of their married life in Greece and when they return to England they bring with them something of the Greek spirit. In Rosamund, however, there is a touch of the ascetic. She had once contemplated a religious life, and after the birth of her son she bestows on him all the fervor and devotion of her nature. The tragedy of their life together comes after the death of this child. She holds the father responsible and turns from him. Another woman who has always loved Dion steps in at this crisis, but the danger of losing her husband awakens Rosamund. The later scenes of the story are laid in Constantinople.

+ Ath p102 F '17 50w

"It runs to nearly six hundred black pages, perhaps four hundred of them frankly through the mire. Mr Hichens is a master of the portentous style. All of his virtuous parts are done in it and are, to tell the truth, pretty dull going: the first book of the present story, before we get comfortably into the mud, is deadly." H. W. Boynton

— Bookm 45:205 Ap '17 470w

"If 'In the wilderness,' were shorter, it would unquestionably be more forcible. Its nearly six hundred closely printed pages have a lifelike story to tell and an important problem to solve, but their sum and substance could easily be compressed within a third of that space with no loss to either the story or the problem." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 25 '17 1400w

"Now and again one has a sense of surfeit. The relentless analysis confuses and fatigues. . . . Such, however, is the artfulness of Mr Hichens that one reads his book to the end and lays it down satisfied to have witnessed an achievement fine of its kind." Alice Bishop

+ — Dial 62:313 Ap 5 '17 670w

"It is a pitiful hero who is so absolutely at the mercy of any woman, bad or good. The novel, however, is worth reading for its marvelous descriptions of Athens, Olympia, Constantinople and a little cathedral town in England."

+ Ind 90:254 My 5 '17 200w

"It exerts a definite and compelling fascination. The hours pass along as one reads, and time seems not to be. . . . It is three years since Mr Hichens last gave a novel to the reading public; the present work has no note of hurry in it; it is ripe work, carefully finished and thoroughly felt."

+ N Y Times 22:53 F 18 '17 1500w

+ Outlook 115:622 Ap 4 '17 50w

"The most satisfying love story Robert Hichens has written."

+ R of Rs 55:555 My '17 80w

"Written with all Mr Hichens's usual subtlety and dexterity."

Spec 118:568 My 19 '17 90w

"The story commands the reader's closest attention. Except for the 'scarlet' nature of Mrs Clarke, it is largely free from those hectic qualities which have marked several of Mr Hichens's recent novels."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 Mr 18 '17 380w

"The theme that Mr Robert Hichens has chosen is the egoism of the religious mystic, and he has developed it in a way to bring out his own talent for describing the East and for suggesting the occult."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p68 F 8 '17 850w

HIGGINS, SYDNEY HERBERT. Dyeing in Germany and America; with notes on colour production. 2d ed $1.75 Longmans 567.2 Agr17-505

"About thirty pages larger than the first edition which appeared in 1907 as 'a report to the electors of the Gartside scholarship of the University of Manchester on the results of a tour in the United States of America and Germany in 1905-1906.' Intended to give a general survey of dyeing and its allied industries in the two countries. The text has been changed slightly and three chapters have been added, German and English flannelettes, instruction in dyeing, and a continuation of the chapter on Colour production."—A L A Bkl

A L A Bkl 13:459 J1 '17

"The author has been for nine years demonstrator in the dyehouse of the Manchester school of technology and in addition works as chemist and manager."

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 25 '17 130w

"The author has gained much practical experience in dye and bleach works, the results of which are embodied in the new volume. This has added considerably to its value, particularly in the sections dealing with mercerisation and bleaching. . . . The new edition of the book has been largely rewritten throughout, with great advantage. The concluding section deals with the future prospects of the dye-manufacturing industries in Britain, France, and the United States." W. M. G.

+ Nature 99:303 Je 14 '17 530w

HIGGINSON, MRS ELLA (RHOADS). Alaska, the great country. new ed il $2.50 Macmillan 917.98 17-12395

"Mrs Higginson's notable book on 'Alaska,' first published nine years ago, has been revised, new material has been added, and the story of 'the great country' has been brought down to date. The body of the book, which deals with the scenic beauties, early history, native customs, resources, and the charm of the country, the author has not changed. But in a supplementary chapter she tells what has happened during the past ten years, and what is the present condition in railroad development, in commerce, mining, in the fishing and agricultural industries. . . . The work has a map and half a hundred illustrations from photographs."—N Y Times

"Anyone who has visited Alaska will appreciate the enthusiasm which colors every page of this delightful volume."

+ Cath World 106:545 Ja '18 120w

"Mrs Higginson's descriptions and her photographs of ill-tipped points, of swirling rapids, Eskimos in their parkas, and dog teams harnessed for their run across the frozen spaces, all make one long poignantly for bracing northern air and life among hardy, simple people."

+ Dial 63:350 O 11 '17 260w

— N Y Times 22:229 Je 17 '17 180w

"Although the material presented is rather unsystematically put together and the style of presentation rather disjointed and unliterary, the book contains such a vast amount of information that it has met with considerable favor, necessitating a number of reprintings. Unfortunately this 'new edition with new matter' is produced in the easier and less expensive way of reprinting from the old plates the body of the book and adding a chapter at the end. In this latter is thrown together in an even more formless manner than is employed in the body of the book and, in a way of presentation that is, from the literary point of view, decidedly crude, the necessary information about the development of the last ten years. The original index is reprinted, and thus the new material is not indexed."

— + Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 29 '17 250w

HILL, DAVID JAYNE. Rebuilding of Europe. *$1.50 (3c) Century 327.4 17-28774

Dr Hill, former university professor, has been minister to Switzerland and to the Netherlands, and ambassador to the German empire. In this book, based on lectures delivered at Johns Hopkins university, he argues that "the great war is a revolution against the alleged rights of arbitrary force, rendered necessary by the failure to reach the goal of a secure international organization by an evolutionary process"; that the war was caused by "economic imperialism"; that its main issue is "the right of people to dispose of themselves," that no permanent peace can coexist with the old European idea of state sovereignty. Dr Hill tries to show that the real enemy to be destroyed is not "any particular form of mere state organization," but this "dogma that the state is a licensed brigand." Various forms of international organization are discussed, and the author concludes that while "a general international government" is neither possible nor desirable, we may reasonably expect the formation of "a strong, but limited, group of powers, each willing to sacrifice something of its own sovereignty for the purpose of insuring peace and equity." The last chapter deals with "America's interest in the new Europe." Five chapters were in part printed in the Century Magazine for 1917.

Bookm 46:286 N '17 50w

"An illuminating and forceful presentation of the war, regarded as a revolution against economic imperialism."

+ Cleveland p2 Ja '18 50w

"A very helpful exposition of the forces and conditions that have been prevailing in Europe and which must be taken into account when a definite plan for the reconstruction of civilization is undertaken after the war. The story is simple and direct, and the presentation is that of the trained scholar and publicist. The book deserves wide reading."

+ Educ R 54:531 D '17 90w

"No man in America was probably better equipped than Dr Hill to treat the momentous topic discusst in this volume. . . . He understood the German people and the German mind. He could analyze feelings and facts with rare intelligence and sure skill. He speaks, therefore, as one having authority."

+ Lit D 55:42 D 1 '17 600w

"To the socialist reader the treatment of the subject will necessarily appear vague." Joshua Wanhope

— N Y Call p19 D 15 '17 900w

HILL, JANET (MCKENZIE) (MRS BENJAMIN M. HILL). Cakes, pastry and dessert dishes. il *$1.50 Little 641.5 17-24721

The editor of the Boston Cooking School Magazine has added another to her already substantial list of cook-books. The publishers have given large, clear type and over sixty enticing illustrations reproduced from photographs. The index carries over 500 entries which include the old favorite cakes and desserts as well as many less-known ones.

"A tantalizing collection of recipes to be published in war times. However, it contains bran cookies as well as a twelve-egg torte. There are brief general directions at the head of each chapter which are useful and the recipes are easy to follow."

+ A L A Bkl 14:80 D '17

"A boon indeed to young and old planners of meals. Carefully indexed, attractively illustrated and admirably printed and bound, a most satisfactory production in every particular."

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 13 '17 110w
R of Rs 56:554 N '17 50w

"Since desserts are now reckoned among the luxuries of life in many households, the possessor of this book will be obliged to wait some time perhaps before she will feel that all the recipes may be added to her list of available favorites. This does not mean that all the recipes are unduly extravagant, for there are many of moderate cost."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 O 28 '17 170w

HILL, JOHN ARTHUR. Psychical investigations; some personally-observed proofs of survival. *$2 (2½c) Doran 134 17-13827

Mr Hill has written other books on psychical research. He tells us: "at the beginning of my investigations, my prejudices and wishes were opposed to the conclusions which the facts gradually forced upon me. If I am now biased in favour of the belief in personal life after death, it is objective fact, not subjective preference, that has brought it about. And my judgments have not been hasty. I have worked at the subject for over eleven years." (Preface) About one-half of the book is given up to verbatim reports of sittings with three different mediums, A. Wilkinson, Tom Tyrrell, and A. V. Peters. At one of the meetings with Mr Peters, occurred some of the incidents related by Sir Oliver Lodge in "Raymond." Several chapters deal with the methods employed in psychical research. Other chapters deal with: Immortality; Home mediumship; Telepathy and survival; Psychical phenomena in earlier times; Pre-existence and the nature of the after-life; Psychical research and religion.

N Y Times 22:281 J1 29 '17 530w

"The special interest of this volume is to be found in the fact that it deals, not with alleged messages from important or well-known people, but with communications, or what profess to be communications, from very ordinary and very often rather dull types of deceased humanity. It is not a book from which any spicy or sensational quotations are to be drawn. Nevertheless, open-minded investigators will find it worth perusal."

+ Spec 118:613 Je 2 '17 350w

"An investigator as careful and open-minded as Mr Hill is entitled to the opinion based upon his experience, and is justified in his endeavour to show that the conclusion to which his experience leads him, a decision in favour of the reality of spirit communications, is not incompatible with philosophy or religion."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p150 Mr 29 '17 1000w

HILL, MARION (HILL) (MRS CHARLES R. HILL). McAllister's grove. il *$1.40 Appleton 17-13950

"This new novel is a delightfully written little story of a girl, a man, and an orange grove. Laurie McAllister—full name, Annie Laurie—had saved a little bit of money; her aristocratic old grandfather and only living relative suffered greatly from the cold of New York winters, and the advertisements about Florida were most alluring. . . . To Florida they went, she and her grandfather, who in Scotland was 'The McAllister,' and there she discovered that the grove was in an utterly forlorn and neglected condition, the trees having been starved for years. . . . Though she soon learned that the number of ills to which flesh is heir are as nothing compared with those which are the natural inheritance of an orange grove, she struggled along, and while she would certainly have been beaten had it not been for Charles Roycroft and his chivalrous sacrifice, she won out at the end."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 13:450 J1 '17

"A story both cleverly conceived and cleverly told, with a refreshing spontaneity and sincerity."

+ Boston Transcript p9 J1 14 '17 420w
Cleveland p103 S '17 60w

"An unusually well-written story which does not put too heavy a strain upon the reader's credulity and which has a vivid charm by way of local color and much genuine humor."

+ Dial 63:74 J1 19 '17 120w

HILL, MARION—Continued

"The book contains an interesting account of the growing and packing of oranges."
+ N Y Times 22:211 My 27 '17 400w

HILL, WILLIAM ELY. Among us mortals; pictures and legends by W. E. Hill; text by Franklin P. Adams. *$1 Houghton 817 17-30263

Mr Hill's profession, so Franklin P. Adams says, is helping make the world safe from hypocrisy. The collection of drawings offered in this volume shows some of his best efforts in that direction. Mr Adams says in his "Preface to a preface," "Hill is popular, by which I mean universal, because you think his pictures look like somebody you know, like Eddie, or Marjorie, or Aunt Em. But they don't; they look like you. Or, if you prefer, like me." When the reader finds himself, somewhere in the group, surely the great disillusioning comes. Perhaps one may be the lady laughing at a Ford joke, or one of the two faculty wives having the time of their lives pulling Mrs Prexy to pieces; or perhaps one may be the young man who makes an unfortunate break, or the artist who discovers that the only one of his pictures sold has been hung upside down. It is the sort of glass Cassius would be to Brutus—one that "reveals that of yourself which you yet know not of."

"Unmistakably American."
+ A L A BkI 14:157 F '18

"These drawings have attracted much attention in the New York Tribune, striking a new and very penetrating note in American caricature."

+ Dial 64:36 Ja 3 '18 60w

"Solving the problem of Yuletide—what to give for Christmas—is a difficult matter. . . . 'Among us mortals' is the kind of book which can be sent to anybody with perfect safety. The wisest will laugh at Hill's pictures and F. P. A.'s nonsense, and the foolish will take it seriously." L. G.
+ N Y Call p14 Ja 5 '18 230w

HILLS, RALPH WINCHESTER. Machine drawing. (Industrial education ser.) il *$1 McGraw 744 17-19718

"Machine drawing' is the title of a new book on this subject prepared in the extension division of the University of Wisconsin, by Ralph W. Hills, instructor in mechanical drawing. "The material in this volume is the first half of the instruction papers as developed and used by the extension division. . . . The second volume will be devoted to the more specialized lines of work." The author avoids needless technicalities and begins at once with 'real drawings.'"—School Arts Magazine

N Y P L New Tech Bks p12 JI '17 50w
Pittsburgh 22:651 O '17

"He pays no attention to perspective effects when sketching freehand, and but little to pleasing arrangement of sheet. It is a reliable guide to mechanical drawing."

+ School Arts Magazine 17:94 O '17 160w

"The text and problems have been carefully prepared and arranged so as to develop speed, accuracy, neatness, and a knowledge of the best drafting room practices." The above quotation from the preface is thoroughly justified. Supplementing the chapters on principles and those on detail and assembly drawing there is one on Technical sketching that should prove valuable."

+ School Arts Magazine 17:228 Ja '18 130w

HINDU mind training; by an Anglo-Saxon mother; with an introd. by S. M. Mitra. *$3.50 Longmans 371.4 E17-302

"The author, dissatisfied with various western systems of mind training . . . turned her attention to the ancient Hindu system of mind training, into which she was initiated by the writer of the introduction to her book. The system largely depends upon unconscious or preconscious cerebration. . . . By a series of psychological questions and answers on subject-matter previously narrated, the pupil's mind is prepared, the author states, to receive facts, to interpret them correctly, to distinguish facts from opinions, to reason accurately, to differentiate between the logic of words and the logic of facts, and to make practical use of the information so gained. Character is in this way developed. The book contains many examples of this method of training receptive minds." (Ath) "Mr Mitra is an Indian writer and teacher of much ability, whose works are well known to those who study Indian thought and politics. . . . In an introduction he explains the advantage of the procedure, and also devotes some pages to a comparison between Hindu and Western philosophic thought while he appends, at the close of the book, an essay instituting a comparison between the analytic psychology in ancient Sanskrit literature with that to be found in La Rochefoucauld, under the title 'Franco-Hindu psychical affinity.'" (The Times [London] Lit Sup)

Ath p96 F '17 150w

N Y Br Lib News 4:103 JI '17

Pittsburgh 22:692 O '17 40w

"A careful perusal of the Hindu stories impressed upon the young in the course of an Anglo-Saxon Mother's many trials will produce in most minds trained in philosophic thought a profound conviction that neither Hindu philosophy nor Hindu morality is suitable for inculcation in this country. The logical deductions are too divergent from our whole social and moral system. . . . This book, if it cannot be regarded as an educational gospel, will do something to provoke interest in Indian moralities."

Sat R 123:sup6 My 19 '17 420w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p58 F 1 '17 220w

HINES, JOHN CHESTERFIELD (JACK HINES). Blue streak. il *$1.35 (3c) Doran 17-25860

Ten stories for young and old of ice bound Alaskan trails whose central figures are fearless, heroic, obedient wolf dogs. These malamutes have a sympathetic champion in the writer who tells of the kind of dog devotion that can lavish the love of a life time upon a supreme effort to save a master; or that can starve and die if need be, in the traces of duty. It is this sort of creature that hears his master exclaim, "What dog words are there that I can bark or howl long enough to proclaim what you are!" The half wild, half domesticated friend and servant of the lonely trapper and miner is well-nigh immortalized in these chapters that proclaim the blue streak in dog nature.

"All of them are vigorous human tales of the Yukon, and they are written obviously by a genuine lover of dogs. Boys will enjoy the adventurous aspect of these stories; and yet the best one of them all does not deal with adventures, but with a trial."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 2 '18 230w

"The stories are convincingly written because they are not well written. If done in a facile style they would probably be accepted as merely entertaining. But the very faults of redundancy and sentimentalism and occasional failure of action are faults natural to a story-teller who is engaged rather in showing the bravery, beauty, and cleverness of his beloved thoroughbreds than in producing a finished tale."

+ N Y Times 22:414 O 21 '17 180w

"Mr Hines reveals himself a delightful storyteller. He does not waste words, but drives straight at the point he intends to illustrate."
+ Springfield Republican p17 N 4 '17 230w

HINKSON, KATHARINE (TYNAN) (MRS HENRY ALBERT HINKSON). Middle years. *$3.50 Houghton (*10s 6d Constable & co., London) (Eng ed 17-11336)

"Katharine Tynan's' earlier volume of reminiscences agreeably whetted the appetite of her readers for further memories, and this record of what she calls 'the middle years' eclipses its predecessor in the interest and variety of its contents. In it she describes the close of her girlhood in Dublin and some twenty years of married life spent in England before her return to Ireland shortly before the war. In a sense it is the story of an exile from Erin, because she was never Anglicized, Ireland remained the true home of her heart, and her most intimate friends were Irish or people with Irish affiliations. But though Irish to the core, a devout Roman Catholic, and an intense admirer of Parnell, she does not harbour any anti-English animosity."—Spec

+ A L A Bkl 13:399 Je '17

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ap 4 '17 670w

"The real centres of interest are about the Meynells, Francis Thompson, and Lionel Johnson. . . . And those to whom these names already mean much as the names of leaders in modern letters, will find that their affection deepens in proportion to their more intimate, familiar acquaintance with the objects of that affection."

+ Cath World 105:535 JI '17 600w

"Her record conveys the impression that she has been delightfully busy, tirelessly interested, and exuberantly happy. Her prime gifts, which richly flavor the volume, are her Celtic blood, her quick warm sympathies, her affection for almost all kinds of men and women and all kinds of flowers and pets."

+ Nation 105:459 O 25 '17 680w

"Those who read 'Twenty-five years: reminiscences' were persuaded that Miss Tynan lives a most enviable life; those who read 'The middle years' will be convinced of it. It is a charmingly intimate talk with the author about all her friends, and unconsciously she conveys to us a very lovable portrait of her own cheery self."

+ N Y Times 22:139 Ap 15 '17 1400w

"It is really as a novel, veraciously and graciously picturing life, that one reads 'The middle years.' The story is a true one, of course, but its spirit is more important than its facts. Even in the fuller portraits, what one thinks of is friendship and character, rather than the details of the picture."

+ No Am 206:131 JI '17 830w

R of Rs 55:667 Je '17 70w

"These chapters abound in generous and affectionate tributes to those who were near and dear to her, who shared her ideals, encouraged her in her work, and applauded her successes. Her early days in London brought her in contact with many remarkable people in the literary world, and the letters from Mr W. B. Yeats, from 'Æ' (Mr George Russell), from Francis Thompson, and from Mr George Wyndham would alone make the book cheap at double the price."

+ Spec 118:272 Mr 3 '17 1900w

"Against Katharine Tynan herself the accusation of having substituted literature for life cannot be brought. One learns enough of the woman and the mother to see that her life has been full and very human. There is a mellowness about the last chapters that leaves one warmed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p579 D 7 '16 1100w

HIRSCH, MRS CHARLOTTE (TELLER).
Diary of an expectant mother. il $1.25
(2½c) McClurg 618.2 17-12627

This is the story of a woman who wanted children but feared the months of waiting before the birth of her first child, and who did not know how to live hygienically under such conditions. In addition to much advice as to her personal life, the nursery, the baby's outfit, etc., are considered. The book is exceedingly popular in style.

"As a volume for the perusal of other expectant mothers we can heartily recommend this work. It is not loaded with technicalities, and is in no sense a treatise on obstetrics and maternity generally, but rather a sane and excellent preventive against needless worry, while at the same time emphasizing the natural character of the episode of motherhood and recommending the simple, sensible course that should be pursued during the period." J. W.

+ N Y Call p14 S 9 '17 370w

HITCHOCK, ALFRED MARSHALL. Over
2 Japan way. il *$2 (3c) Holt 915.2 17-31433

An informing, entertaining book about Japan, handsomely illustrated, which is made up of the impressions of an American tourist with eyes wide open. After six days of "monotonous blue" he lands and claims the reader for companion while he runs the gamut of first sensations, which he remarks, "are cause for grayer hair about the temples." The rikisha, the tram, the bewildering sights thru "wide streets, narrow streets, narrower street, alleys barely wide enough for a wheelbarrow, dark places and still darker suggest treachery, ambush." He tells about the inns and hotels, he visits schools from the kindergarten to the university, goes shopping, attends a play, beards a volcano, visits shrines and sacred places and touches the high spots of Japanese scenery. He records lightly his experiences and their play upon his emotions.

"The author writes in an intimate, conversational style. Everything is given with a running fire of humorous side remarks that entertain as well as instruct."

+ Lit D 56:40 Ja 12 '18 160w

"The quaint, genial, shrewdly humorous observations of Mr Hitchcock serve to make this an unusual book of travel. No attempt is made to pass over the submerged side of life as seen in the segregated parts of the large cities and in the daily grind of industry."

+ N Y Call p14 Ja 26 '18 450w

"Despite obvious drawbacks, the author conveys a distinct and convincing impression of the Japanese scene. He is frankly an outsider and gives his views with some humor, appreciating that his sincerity is not to be confounded with the profundity of the research student."

+ N Y Times 23:10 Ja 13 '18 200w

"In text and illustration this latest book on Japan seems in some respects the best of the short accounts."

+ Outlook 117:654 D 19 '17 30w

"Entertaining travel sketches embellished by a series of beautifully reproduced photographs."

+ R of Rs 57:219 F '18 20w

"He has not added much to the substance of our knowledge about Japan, but he has written a book of travel sketches, in which impressions are expressed gracefully and ingratiatingly. There is a graphic touch in his words, and the reader is able to share the images and ideas in the author's mind."

+ Springf'd Republican p13 F 3 '18 370w

HITSCHMANN, EDUARD. Freud's theories of the neuroses; auth. tr. by Dr C. R. Payne, with an introd. by Ernest Jones. *$2
Moffat 130 17-4719

"What may be called the orthodox or strict Freudian conception of neurotic conditions, briefly set forth by Hitschmann, holds that the neuroses originate in the sex life of the individual, the form of the nervous disturbance differing in accordance with the strain that the sex life has undergone. There are 'true neurasthenia' types resulting [from four causes]. Freud's 'psychoanalytic' method of treating these conditions is explained and a chapter is devoted to his views regarding prophylaxis." (Survey) "At the end of the book there is a useful chronological review of Freud's works from 1893 to 1910, as well as a catalogue of Freudian literature in English." (N Y Times)

"Hitschmann's book is aimed primarily at physicians, although it is by far the most readable, and most clearly expressed of the three. [The other two referred to are Adler's 'Neurotic constitution,' and Pfister's 'Psychoanalytic method']" Wilfrid Lay

+ Bookm 45:199 Ap '17 50w

"The translation, like all of Dr Payne's translations, is accurate, lucid, and in excellent style."

+ N Y Times 22:331 S 9 '17 320w

HITSCHMANN, EDUARD—Continued

"An interpretation of Freud which adds little, either in reasoning or examples, to Freud's own statement of his theories."

Springf'd Republican p6 F 20 '17 150w

Reviewed by R. S. Woodworth
Survey 38:361 J1 21 '17 200w

HOAR, ROGER SHERMAN, Constitutional conventions. *$2 Little 342.7 17-16733

A collection of all of the available law and precedent relating to the nature, powers and limitations of constitutional conventions. The book has been prepared by a former state senator of Massachusetts who was a member of the commission to compile information and data for the use of the Massachusetts convention now in session. With authority and thoroughness the writer answers questions of this character: What gives validity to this method, so frequently used to amend our state constitutions? Is the convention, once launched, subject to either legislative, executive, judicial or even popular control? Is the convention bound by law, or even by the constitution? Can it control the other branches of the government? Can it create a new constitution, without submitting it to the people for ratification? All of these questions, and many more like them, are answered in this book, the only modern and up-to-date text-book on the subject.

"A reliable textbook on a subject which has seldom been treated at any length."

+ A L A Bkl 14:113 Ja '18

Reviewed by J. Q. Dealey

+ Am Pol Sci R 12:143 F '18 440w

Ind 92:487 D 8 '17 30w

"For the statesman, the lawyer, and the student of public affairs, even for the courts, indeed, there is a wealth of useful information within the covers of this book. He has not been altogether successful in keeping to the rôle of non-partisan. Between the lines it is easy to detect, in many instances, Mr Hoar's own political leanings. His progressivism refuses to stay in the background. Yet this is, after all, a small blemish."

+ Nation 106:117 Ja 31 '18 400w

"Mr Hoar's careful analysis of the various problems arising whenever a revision of a state's fundamental law is undertaken, is applicable in every state, and will, no doubt, be the standard treatise for many years to come."

+ R of Rs 56:326 S '17 200w

"The index is of special value. The author's opportunity to produce such a work reliably has been a public advantage."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 4 '17 330w

HOBHOUSE, LEONARD TRELAWNY, Questions of war and peace. *3s 6d T. Fisher Unwin, London 940.91 (Eng ed 16-16727)

"There is, as might be expected from a thinker so able as Dr Hobhouse, much that is suggestive in these three papers, two of which—"The soul of civilization" (reprinted from the Contemporary Review) and 'The hope of the world'—are in the form of dialogues. In the first the writer shows how he has come to regard the war as an inevitable clash between two separate civilizations, with two religions, and expresses his belief that there will result from it a more genuine feeling both about nationality and about public right. The second covers much ground—views of the war and its problems, of the conflict between freedom and state control, &c. . . . The third paper gives the substance of an address at the National liberal club on January 18 [1916], of which the chief feature is the author's plea that the existing alliance may form the basis of a much wider one, may point to 'the ultimate ideal of internationalism at two or three removes.'—The Times [London] Lt Sup

"'The hope of the world' is especially interesting. . . . One will go far to find a better brief of discussion of the militarist state, the prospects of democracy, the 'laws' of human society, and, in general, the 'hope of the world.'"

+ Nation 104:48 Ja 11 '17 300w

Nation 105:297 S 13 '17 450w

N Y Br Lib News 3:187 D '16

"In these brilliant Platonic dialogues on current questions Professor L. T. Hobhouse, the Martin-White professor of sociology in the University of London, has provided us with a delightful entertainment. This can be safely said without committing ourselves to Mr Hobhouse's conclusions. He handsomely admits that he was wrong in the past about Germany and that he misjudged Lord Grey of Falodon's policy."

+ Spec 118:17 Ja 6 '17 1350w

The Times [London] Lt Sup p311 Je 29 '16 190w

HOBSON, JOHN ATKINSON, Evolution of modern capitalism. il *$1.75 Scribner 331 17-13332

"In this revised edition of his well-known work the author has included a long supplementary chapter, the first part of which deals with industrial and commercial movements during the decade preceding the war. Some of the new economic facts and forces revealed by the experiences of the war, the problems they contain, and the tendencies they exhibit are then set forth, as a contribution towards a speculative forecast of capitalism in the early future."—Ath

Ath p96 F '17 70w

Dial 63:457 N 8 '17 330w

+ N Y Times 23:3 Ja 6 '18 930w

HODGE, HAROLD, In the wake of the war, parliament or imperial government? *$1.50 Lane 328 17-21846

"The late editor of the Saturday Review makes the same allegations about the impotence of the House of commons, the nullity of the rank and file of M.P.'s, etc., as raised such a storm of contradiction when they were made by Messrs Belloc and Chesterton in 'The party system' and 'The servile state.' He is concerned, however, less with the affairs of the United Kingdom than with the future of the empire; and he proposes to take imperial matters out of the hands of what is mistakenly called the Imperial Parliament, and put them under a separate and independent body. After considering various plans he concludes that, party government being a failure, the best solution would be for the crown . . . to appoint a council of ten, five citizens of the Dominions, and five citizens of the United Kingdom. . . . In order that it should reflect the will of the citizens of the empire, it should consult them by means of referendum."—Ath

Ath p408 Ag '17 270w

Boston Transcript p9 D 8 '17 580w

"'In the wake of the war,' is well written in point of style. . . . Mr Hodge is sick of parties and believes they have had their day. . . . We go gaily along the path of criticism with Mr Hodge. It is when he arrives at the unmapped region of reconstruction that we reluctantly part company. He proposes to strip Parliament of the powers and duties which make it interesting and respectable and to hand these over to an Imperial council of ten, nominated by the king, and armed with the referendum. To this scheme we object: (1) That Parliament will not allow itself to be stripped. (2) That the king cannot appoint anybody of his own motion. (3) That the referendum in Australia and in the United States (v. the Oregonian constitution) has been a failure. . . . We think our author is mistaken in supposing that the Colonies would agree to the common management of imperial affairs."

+ Sat R 124:29 J1 14 '17 950w

"Whatever scheme may be adopted for imperial government, it will certainly not be Mr Hodge's."

— Spec 119:121 Ag 4 '17 170w

HODGES, GEORGE. Religion in a world at war. *$1 (5½c) Macmillan 252 17-14691

Eight short sermons or essays on the relation of Christianity to war, and, more especially, to the present war, by the dean of the Episcopal theological school at Cambridge, Mass.

A L A Bkl 14:74 D '17

+ Bib World 50:375 D '17 80w

Cleveland p102 S '17 40w

"From the standpoint of practical homiletics, as a source of comfort or encouragement, or as a stimulus to action, Dean Hodge's sermons on the war are rather unimpressive. As the reflection of a point of view they are significant. . . . It is evident that Dean Hodges finds the whole subject of the war embarrassing and difficult. The effect of facing his difficulties frankly is, however, to give us a sane and courageous expression of what, it seems, must needs be the attitude of a Christian minister towards the war."

+ — Nation 105:431 O 18 '17 550w

"The book really demands no review—it is little more than a collection of drab and conventional biblical paraphrases justifying America's participation in the war." Bertram Benedict

— N Y Call p14 Ag 19 '17 1350w

"This is a book for the nation. It clarifies and confirms our national confession, 'In God we trust.'"

+ Outlook 116:412 JI 11 '17 60w

"A most stimulating book that can be read to mental, moral, and spiritual profit."

+ R of Rs 56:329 S '17 150w

HODGSON, RALPH. Poems. *75c Macmillan 821 17-14542

This collection of twenty-five poems is a reprint of the verses which, before the war, used to appear at intervals in England in tiny booklets with mustard-colored paper covers and decorations, plain or colored, by Mr Lovat Fraser. The writer was recently awarded the Edward de Polignac prize.

A L A Bkl 14:86 D '17

"There is in his verse a vein of blunt and unsophisticated enthusiasm for ideals."

+ Ath p401 Ag '17 1100w

"Mr Hodgson has a place of his own among the minor poets of to-day. None writes more naturally; none has such an objective, simple, and direct style, or aims less at mere literary effects. His is the poetry, not of ideas, but of sights, sensations, raptures. In forms that appear artless because they are such excellent art, it is the spontaneous expression of the lyric ecstasy of life and action, and of the natural faith of one who joys in his being as a particle in a glorious universe, untroubled by the mystery of existence."

+ Ath p413 Ag '17 200w

"What gives Mr Hodgson his distinction is his subtle fancy which may be seen at the finest in 'The song of honor,' 'The bull' (which is a rather wonderful piece of realism) and 'Babylon,' as well as in some of the brief lyric catches where a single idea is caught like a bee in a flower. In the whole volume there are only twenty-five titles and in spite of the above-mentioned faults they will be prized by all lovers of poetry."

+ Boston Transcript p7 JI 11 '17 350w

+ Cleveland p121 N '17 170w

"Mr Hodgson is that rarity in these times, a poet of very small production, and of production on a uniformly high level. . . . His chief value lies in what he has to say. There are two arts in poetry: the art of precisely saying what one has in mind; and, even more important (though less regarded), the art of excluding from one's conception all that is not of pure value. It is particularly in this latter respect that Mr Hodgson excels. The most arresting feature of his work, however, is the fact that though he is essentially a lyric poet he is none the less essentially objective,—never, or seldom, speaking in his own voice, or developing, psychologically, any personal or dramatic viewpoint."

Conrad Aiken

+ + — Dial 63:150 Ag 30 '17 1700w

"There is not a page in this book that is not beautiful; to come upon a volume of this sort is a real pleasure to the critic wearied with much technically excellent, but commonplace perfunctory, verse. . . . Most readers will agree with the London Nation in calling 'Eve' 'the most fascinating poem of our time.'"

+ Lit D 55:32 Ag 11 '17 1400w

"Mr Hodgson is something of a blend of Davies' naïveté and de la Mare's melodic magic; he is less distinctive than either. 'Eve' has some undoubted elements of greatness; 'The bull,' the short 'The mystery,' 'After,' and other poems possess great beauty or some striking quality." Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p15 JI 22 '17 200w

+ R of Rs 56:217 Ag '17 170w

"That the original queer and charming booklets—original in every sense of the word—will always be treasured and preferred by those who possess them we take to be certain. But in the new volume the poems stand the test of collective and separate presentment well, and promise, it seems to us, to endure as long as anything of our time whether as a rounded achievement on a small scale or as earnest of larger things to come. . . . It is the unfailing suggestion of vastness and the beyond, coupled with the insistently vivid realization of the present and the immediate, which gives Mr Hodgson's work perhaps its most characteristic distinction."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p283 Je 14 '17 1450w

HOHENZOLLERNS through German eyes. 1s Hutchinson, London 741

"The book consists of a series of cartoons, all dealing with the Kaiser and the Prussian royal family, selected from the well-known Munich comic paper Simplexissimus, from November, 1903 [March, 1906?] to May, 1914. The paper made it its main business to attack the imperial government, German militarist ideals, and clerical sycophancy."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"To readers unfamiliar with the latitude in respect to criticism of the German emperor and his family permitted, at all events prior to the war, in some of the German satirical journals, this collection of cartoons will be a revelation."

Ath p360 JI '17 80w

"The paper [is] universally known for the excellence of its draughtsmen, amongst whom O. Gulbransson is perhaps the cleverest of all. . . . It is rather surprising that material which gives such striking corroboration from the German side to much in our representation of the Kaiser and his entourage, should not have been brought before the British public till now. From the outbreak of the war Simplexissimus has been as strongly nationalist as before it was rebellious."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p269 Je 7 '17 500w

HOLCOMBE, ARTHUR NORMAN. State government in the United States. *$2.25 (1c) Macmillan 553.9 17-51

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"This will be useful as a reference work or text for advanced students."

+ A L A Bkl 13:428 JI '17

"The work shows a careful study of the great mass of material and a systematic organization of the data, forming the most important single contribution thus far made to the whole subject." J. A. Fairlie

+ — Am Pol Sci R 11:344 My '17 650w

"An excellent survey of the whole field of state government, its history, tendencies and needs. There is less detail on the administrative side than in Mathews' 'Principles of American state administration,' but the discussion of political reforms is much fuller."

+ Cleveland p68 My '17 50w

HOLCOMBE, ARTHUR NORMAN—Continued
 + Educ R 54:97 Je '17 60w
 + Engln News-Rec 78:151 Ap 19 '17 180w
 + Ind 90:252 My 5 '17 130w

"The tendency of modern reformers is to concentrate attention upon a single measure and to ignore its effect upon the general system of which it forms a part. Works such as this serve, with those who will attend to them, to check this tendency, and therein lies their special merit."

+ N Y Times 22:127 Ap 8 '17 120w
 + R of Rs 55:444 Ap '17 50w
 + Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 14 '18 850w

"Very interesting, and by no means without instruction for ourselves, is Mr Holcombe's account of the working of the party system and of the efforts made by the sovereign people to escape from the tyranny of the 'machine.' Of special value is the light which Mr Holcombe throws on the working of the most recent experiments in the initiative, referendum, and recall. The book is not light reading, though of absorbing interest."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p153 Ap 5 '17 1800w

HOLDICH, SIR THOMAS HUNGERFORD. Political frontiers and boundary making. *$3.25 Macmillan 320.1 16-23414

"It has been the lot of Sir Thomas Holdich to give practical consideration in many parts of the world to problems of boundary settlement. . . . His present aim is governed by the fact that among the few writers who treat of this important subject he can find no authoritative opinion based on practical experience, no elementary work in which the stern needs of political discretion are shown to be at variance with the sentiments cherished by idealists. . . . The sovereign purpose of a national frontier is to promote friendly relations between neighbour states by putting a definite edge to the territorial and political horizon of both; then trespass cannot be easy in a time of excitement, and secret planned aggression has natural difficulties to overcome before it can do harm to a peaceable country. Sir Thomas Holdich considers these conditions in boundary-making, and shows how they may be made real—or as real as human nature will permit them to be—in a statesmanly choice of a frontier."—Sat R

"It is with the major premise that most readers of the volume will be tempted to quarrel. . . . Apart from the particular theory upon which the volume rests there is much that is of value in the author's description of the geographic features of boundary lines, and the chapters upon the delimitation of frontiers in Asia, Africa and South America will be read with particular interest." C. G. Fenwick

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:354 My '17 450w

Reviewed by C. L. Jones

+ Ann Am Acad 71:237 My '17 320w

"Sir Thomas Holdich has known these frontiers from their first formation in the seventies of last century, and is probably better qualified to write of them than any other man alive. The descriptions in his book will be of permanent importance, but the book ranges far from the Pamirs and Andes over broad fields of political theory and the European war, and here it will not go unchallenged."

+ Ath p23 Ja '17 1600w

"The author, who served on the Afghan, Asmar, and Argentine-Chile Boundary commissions and was superintendent of frontier surveys of India, here speaks with authority on a theme of timely interest."

+ Cleveland p147 D '16 30w

"His book is easily the best discussion of its subject that exists in the English language. I can only hope that in a second edition it will be given the illustrative maps it so badly needs." H. J. Laski

+ Dial 62:96 F 8 '17 70w

"The great blemish in his book is the conspicuous absence of index and maps."

+ Nation 104:405 Ap 5 '17 1400w

N Y Br Lib News 3:187 D '16 40w

St Louis 15:8 Ja '17

+ Sat R 122:350 O 7 '16 1300w

"A brave, a breezy, a timely, and a suitably optimistic book. . . . His conclusions are extremely interesting, they are expressed in admirably clear and striking phrases, they are enlivened by vivid and captivating pictures of the wild hill tracts."

+ Spec 117:sup529 N 4 '16 1000w

"He invariably approaches the subject of which he is a master without any marked political prepossessions. Sir Thomas Holdich is a geographer, and not a politician. Yet no frontier-maker can be indifferent to political considerations; and so he tells us that in dealing with problems of boundary settlement his object has been 'to ensure peace and good will between contiguous peoples by putting a definite edge to the national political horizon, so as to limit unauthorized expansion and trespass.'"

The Times [London] Lit Sup p483 O 12 '16 1500w

HOLDSWORTH, JOHN THOM. Money and banking. *$2.25 (1½c) Appleton 332

17-24253

The first edition of this work was published in 1914. Of the changes in the new edition, the author says, "the most significant, perhaps, are those involving clearings and collections. Federal reserve currency and foreign finance. . . . The discussion of these changes and developments has been introduced with the least possible disturbance to the textual arrangement, but on nearly every page some revisions have been made; many sections have been rewritten, entire new sections have been added; and the last chapter, on the Federal reserve system, has been rewritten in the light of its development to date." (Preface)

"The revision is well designed to render the book even more acceptable as a text than was the first edition three years ago." C. A. F.

+ Am Econ R 7:882 D '17 170w

R of Rs 57:220 F '18 50w

HOLLAND, RUPERT SARGENT. Blue heron's feather. il *$1.25 (1½c) Lippincott 17-28759

A story of old New Netherland. Nicholas Tappan, silk merchant of Amsterdam, decides to send his son Peter to the new world in company with Derek Keft, who is to act as superintendent of the vast estate recently acquired along the Hudson. Peter looks forward to new adventures and is not disappointed, for very shortly after his arrival, he is taken captive by Indians. Fortunately he had earlier won the friendship of Manawok, a young brave, who now intercedes for him. Peter learns Indian ways, and after his return to his own people takes a stand for justice and friendly relations toward the red men which results in an unbroken peace between the Dutch and the Mohawks.

Reviewed by J. Walcott

+ Bookm 46:496 D '17 70w

"One of the most excellent stories of Indian days in the Colonies is that of 'The blue heron's feather.'"

+ N Y Times 22:466 N 11 '17 100w

HOLLEY, HORACE. Divinations and Creation. *$1.25 Kennerley 811 17-9237

Mr Holley's small volume of post-impressionist poems called "Creation" was published in 1915. This group of poems is included as part 2 of this new book. Part 1 consists of an entirely new group, also some of its individual poems have appeared in Poetry, the Smart Set, the Forum, the Masses and other magazines.

"Between vain sublimities Mr Horace Holley now and then achieves a quiet success. 'The orchard' is a specimen." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 105:245 S 6 '17 100w

"His first little book was passionately arresting. And now we find the same extraordinary individuality revealing itself in 'Divinations,'" which, though it may lack much of the author's earlier impassioned beauty shows a more constrained power and flexibility."

+ N Y Times 22:201 My 20 '17 450w

"Miss Harriet Monroe has selected three of these poems for her anthology of 'new poetry,' and W. S. Braithwaite has included 'Cross patch' and a sonnet, 'The orchard,' in his anthology for 1916."

+ R of Rs 55:439 Ap '17 180w

HOLLINGWORTH, HARRY LEVI, and POF-FENBERGER, ALBERT THEODOR. Applied psychology. *$2.25 (3½c) Appleton 150 17-28082

Untechnical in treatment this volume, by two Columbia university men, offers to men and women of every walk of life assistance towards a dignified and prosperous existence. It is an efficient instrument in producing success in life. The discussions all aiming to assist in systematizing a field hitherto vague and unorganized, include the following chapters: Efficiency and applied psychology; Influence of heredity upon achievement; Family inheritance; Efficiency and learning; Influence of sex and age on efficiency; Environmental conditions [two chapters]; Work, rest, fatigue and sleep; Drugs and stimulants; Methods of applying psychology in special fields; Psychology and the executive; Psychology in the workshop; Psychology and the market; Psychology and the law; Psychology for the social worker; Psychology and medicine; Psychology and education; The future of applied psychology.

Cleveland p7 Ja '18 20w

"There is little evidence that Messrs Hollingworth and Poffenberger value highly any other kind than business success. We are rarely offered a more naive revelation of psychological science serving as the handmaid of commercial exploitation."

— New Repub 13:323 Ja 12 '18 620w

"For the social worker, teacher or parent the book should be valuable in presenting the latest scientific word on many modern problems. It is written very simply and is free from many technical terms."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 N 25 '17 160w

"This new book is the best that has yet appeared in bringing the results of many experiments and excursions in this field within two covers." F. A. Manny

+ Survey 39:267 D 1 '17 310w

HOLLINGWORTH, HARRY LEVI, and POF-FENBERGER, ALBERT THEODOR. Sense of taste. il *$1.25 Moffat 152 17-14044

"The sense of taste' is a book of two hundred pages by two members of the faculty of Columbia university. It is one of a series in preparation by Moffat, Yard & Co., with the title 'Our senses and what they mean to us.' It is edited by G. Van N. Dearborn, who contributes an introduction to this volume, which is, as he truly says, 'at once interesting and scientific up to the hour.'"—Nation

+ Dial 63:409 O 25 '17 200w

"While it does not purport to solve any of the riddles still presented by this sense, it gives an excellent summary of present knowledge, the writers who have done most to elucidate the subject being, with one exception, duly cited. The authors are more careful than their predecessors in not claiming for the sense of taste what belongs to the allied sense of smell."

+ Nation 105:347 S 27 '17 400w

"This first volume in the new series presages an interesting and well-coordinated attempt to synthesize an exposition of the sensory apparatus and its psychologic reflexes."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 S 5 '17 300w

HOLME, CHARLES, ed. Art of the British empire overseas. (International studio. Special winter no., 1916-17) il *$3; pa *$2.50 Lane 759 17-15451

"Mr Holme has gathered reproductions of twenty-three pictures by eighteen Canadian artists (one being in color), forty by twenty Australian artists (three in color), twenty-nine by New Zealand painters (five in color), and twenty-three by South African painters. Each section has a brief account of the development of the artistic expression in these four quarters of the world and the outlook for the future. Mr Eric Brown, director of the National gallery of Canada; Mr James Ashton, a prominent painter of Australia; Mr E. A. S. Killick, secretary of the New Zealand academy of fine arts, and Mr Edward Roworth of Cape Town, speak with authority of their respective countries and give many interesting biographical details of the artists represented, besides pointing out the difficulties under which they labor."—Boston Transcript

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 9 '17 410w

Cleveland p113 S '17 20w

Ind 92:488 D 8 '17 50w

Pittsburgh 22:651 O '17 20w

Pratt p29 O '17 30w

+ Springf'd Republican p15 J1 22 '17 750w

HOLME, CHARLES, ed. Arts and crafts. (International Studio, Special number) il *$3; pa *$2.50 (6½c) Lane 740 17-6662

A review of the work executed by students in the leading art schools of Great Britain and Ireland. The London and the provincial schools of art are treated separately, the first by W. T. Whitley, the second by the head master or some other person connected with each school. The illustrations have been chosen to show many lines of work.

A L A Bkl 13:300 Ap '17

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 19 '17 260w

"Especially useful to American supervisors and teachers. The pictures, to be sure, of work done by the students demonstrate no marked superiority over the output of American schools of similar scope; they show, indeed, a few things which a rigorous censor might have left out."

+ Nation 105:608 N 29 '17 140w

"The text is highly illuminating, enabling the reader to gain a clear idea of the activities of the schools and also the underlying intention governing these activities which is to develop home talent to a degree that will make unnecessary foreign importations of design. The chapters on the provincial schools are even more interesting than those given to the schools of London."

+ N Y Times 22:85 Mr 11 '17 350w

"Of intense interest both to students and teachers in this country for purposes of comparison and the stimulation of effort."

+ R of Rs 55:557 My '17 110w

+ Springf'd Republican p15 F 4 '17 420w

"There is any amount of talent evident in the works illustrated in this book and a good deal of skill: but both seem aimless. The objects are produced rather for competitions between students than for human beings to use. They do not express the real tastes, the real values, of anyone in particular. Therefore, they are likely to fail economically no less than artistically."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p635 D 28 '16 650w

HOLMES, JOHN HAYNES. Life and letters of Robert Collyer, 1823-1912. 2v il *$5 Dodd 17-30357

A full and well-rounded story so told that the great Unitarian divine "speaks for himself and thus reveals the fibre of his soul." Rev. John Haynes Holmes, one of the foremost leaders of liberal thought of today, has found his task a thoroughly congenial one. Associated in the ministry with Dr Collyer, Mr Holmes says, "He was my colleague, my friend, my brother, my father in the spirit." The materials used in the preparation of the biography include Dr Collyer's autobiography; his own writings; autobiographical lectures; his letters; three scrap-books of newspaper and magazine clippings; pamphlets, programs, leaflets and newspapers and magazines covering periods of Dr Collyer's career. The man whom Mr Holmes holds up to view is Robert Collyer "the blacksmith, preacher, lecturer, author, public leader, but always radiant of spirit, full of grace and truth, touched with the potency of love."

HOLMES, JOHN HAYNES—Continued . . . . .

"Dr Holmes, whose pages, although written in a more sentimental manner, also make, as do Mr Hale's, a graphic portrayal of his subject and cause the very man himself to stand forth a vital, radiant being, discusses very interestingly Dr Collyer's relation to his time and the reasons for his wide and potent influence."

+ N Y Times 22:553 D 16 '17 500w

"It is hardly to be wondered at if the biographer, in the lawful enthusiasm of his task, may sometimes seem open to the charge of hero worship. At the same time one discovers, briefly, in the summary, that this idol had toes, if not feet of clay, which were usually well shod and covered from general gaze."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 31 '17 650w

HOLMES, JOHN HAYNES. Religion for to-day; various interpretations of the thought and practise of the new religion of our time. *$1.50 (1c) Dodd 252 17-5458

Thirteen addresses, delivered first as sermons in the Church of the Messiah, New York city, and elsewhere, make up this volume. Each has been selected, the author says, "because of its own especial character as a representative expression of radical thought on religious questions of the day." In the first essay the essential characteristics of the religion of the future are summed up: it will be a scientific religion, doing away with the old antagonism between science and religion; it will be based on ethical values rather than on theological beliefs; it will stress social rather than individual morality. The last three sermons were preached shortly after the outbreak of the war and reflect the author's uncompromising attitude on the subject of force.

A L A Bkl 13:373 Je '17

Boston Transcript p8 F 28 '17 480w
 Cleveland p67 My '17 40w

"Every reader who is possessed of the social passion and who has seen the social vision will sit up at night to read this book and will go around lending it to his acquaintances. It is the real thing." L: A. Walker

+ N Y Call p14 Ap 15 '17 480w

"Trenchantly, yet constructively critical in his attitude throughout, Dr Holmes strives to give enough of the other side which he criticizes to present it fairly if not fully. Especially incisive and conclusive are his social applications of religion to the conditions of life and labor which demand both its destructive and reconstructive power. Dr Holmes is an absolutist in his uncompromising stand for the ultimate ideal of peace as applicable to a world at war, but he fails to show how it could have been, or be, applied by the peoples facing a war-rampant nation on a rapid march for world conquest." G. T.

+ Survey 39:264 D 1 '17 470w

HOLT, ANDREW HALL. Manual of field astronomy. il *$1.25 Wiley 522 17-866

"This textbook for use in civil engineering courses bases its principal claim upon conciseness, and yet completeness, in its treatment of fundamentals. On the whole, the object of the author has been obtained, and practising engineers who only occasionally have to make astronomical observations will find it especially helpful. The treatment of the oft-times confusing conceptions of the measurement of time is given particular attention, with many illustrative problems solved in excellent form. . . . The main text occupies about 76 pages, the appendices on spherical trigonometry and solar attachments for transits about 11 pages, tables about 12 pages, and the sample field notes 20 pages." (Engin Rec) The author is instructor in civil engineering in the University of Iowa.

"Clearly and concisely written and much more complete than the usual college-student manual."

+ Engin N 77:436 Mr 15 '17 90w

"The illustrations and diagrams are clear and well-conceived, the method of presenting the successive operations is logical and the sample field notes show just how best to avoid confusion and error in the important matter of records."

+ Engin Rec 75:276 F 17 '17 220w

N Y Br Lib News 4:27 F '17
 N Y P L New Tech Bks p8 Ja '17 60w
 Pittsburgh 22:656 O '17 20w
 St Louis 15:141 My '17

HOLT, LUCIUS HUDSON, and CHILTON, ALEXANDER WHEELER. History of Europe, from 1862 to 1914. *$2.60 (1½c) Macmillan 940.9 17-31435

A narrative of the chief events of European history from the beginning of Bismarck's chancellorship to the outbreak of the great war in 1914. Throughout the narrative "emphasis has been laid upon those events which have affected international relations. The narrative of the domestic politics of the separate states has been curtailed, except where such politics had a distinct bearing upon the part which a state played in international affairs. The alliances and the conflict of interests which have brought about the present great war have been discussed in detail. The characters and methods of those statesmen who have had the greatest influence in international issues have been developed at length. It has been our plan thus to give the reader a conception of a true history of Europe rather than to present an aggregation of histories of the separate European states." (Preface)

HOLTZ, MATHILDE EDITH, and BEMIS, KATHARINE ISABEL. Glacier national park: its trails and treasures. il *$2 (4c) Doran 978.6 17-14959

One may travel thru Glacier park on foot, on horseback, by automobile, or, to some extent, by motor boat. The authors of this guide chose the horseback way, but there is plenty of information in their book for those who prefer one of the other means of travel. The chapters are: Nature's great play-ground; Hotels and chalets; On the Mount Henry trail; Trails and roads; The old Trois trail; Piegan pass—the flower pass; The flower fields of Glacier national park; Some mountain lakes; On glaciers; Types of tourists; A day with the Blackfeet; Some Blackfeet legends and Indian names; Blackfeet historical pictographs. The photographic illustrations are exceptionally good. There are end maps and an index.

"Personal, readable descriptions. Well illustrated and has a United States geological survey map."

+ A L A Bkl 14:56 N '17

+ Cleveland p113 S '17 30w

+ Cleveland p138 D '17 30w

+ N Y Times 22:229 Je 17 '17 230w

"Taken all in all, the book and the park are bound to add to the emphasis of the slogan, so timely just now, "See America first."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 28 '17 350w

HOPKINS, TIGHE. Romance of escapes: studies of some historic flights, with a personal commentary. il *$3 (3c) Houghton 940 (Eng ed 17-12964)

In an introductory chapter (Part 1), "On the art and mystery of escape," the author reviews briefly many notable escapes. In Part 2, he selects some noteworthy escapes for description in detail, namely: the escapes of Casanova from the Inquisition; the Polish exile Pietrowski's journey out of Siberia; the Irish midshipman O'Brien's three exciting efforts to get out of a French prison in the days of Napoleon; the escape of Morgan of the Rough-riders in the Civil war; Haldane's flight from Pretoria in the Boer war; Louis Napoleon's flight from the fortress of Ham; the adventures of James Choyce "prisoner of war in two worlds"; Louvet's 165 days run for life from the vengeance of Robespierre; the escape of the Empress Eugénie from Paris; the hazards of John Mitchell, Irish "forty-eighter, between Tasmania and San Francisco; and the adventures of De Buquoit, who claimed to be "the first man who broke the Bastille in 1709."

"In Casanova's and Buquoit's accounts of their exploits the author considers that much may be regarded as apocryphal. The want of an index is a serious defect in a book of this kind."

Ath p485 O '16 180w

"Mr Hopkins's retelling of some famous episodes will interest young readers and old alike."

Spec 117:sup685 D 2 '16 150w

HOPKINS, WILLIAM JOHN. Clammer and the submarine. *$1.25 (2½c) Houghton 17-25435

Adam and Eve, the clammers, are already well known to readers of the author's other leisurely stories of the Massachusetts coast. They appear again in this story, which is complicated somewhat by the love affairs of their friends and by the approach of war. In the end Adam enlists in the navy.

"Not as spontaneous as the earlier works."

+ — A L A Bkl 14:131 Ja '18

"Its author comes perilously near being a professional purveyor of sentiment. His Adam and Eve of the clam-beds become a trifle cloying. In the end Adam rouses himself from his amiable long-shore loitering and maundering, to enroll himself in the navy. But that act, also, he sentimentalizes."

— Nation 105:540 N 15 '17 250w

"Mr Hopkins's original 'clammers,' Adam and Eve, are always pleasant to meet, and always a sense of humor and a spirit of refinement are in his stories. Adam's awakening to patriotism and war service is true and fine."

+ Outlook 117:432 N 14 '17 30w

"Mr Hopkins deserves a high place as a sentimental writer, using that term in its best sense. The present volume worthily sustains the author's reputation and provokes a call for more."

+ Springf'd Republican p19 D 2 '17 250w

HORNBECK, STANLEY KUHL. Contemporary politics in the Far East. *$3 (2½c) Appleton 950 16-18764

For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"Professor Stanley K. Hornbeck has given us a really valuable study in the field of Far Eastern politics. He has rarely permitted his feelings to affect his judgment. For the period it covers, his book will win a place as a sound and useful work of reference." P. J. Treat

* + Am Hist R 22:654 Ap '17 800w

+ J Pol Econ 25:958 N '17 600w

"He understands what so few writers on the Far East understand about Japan, that the greater half by far of her so-called aggression and imperialism is self-defence and exaggerated caution. . . . Regarding China, particularly with respect to her domestic conditions, he is not so far-seeing. . . . His book, in the best tradition of American liberalism, vigorous, realistic, hopeful, broadly planned, and trenchantly written, is the most serviceable contribution in recent years towards America's proper understanding of her responsibilities in the Far East."

+ Nation 104:681 Je 7 '17 650w

"There have been hundreds of books about the Far East in which a few grains of fact have been blown on hot air blasts of personal opinion. Beside them Mr Hornbeck's wealth of information and judicial, temperate attitude make a volume for which American readers should be grateful."

+ N Y Times 22:169 Ap 29 '17 760w

"Dr Hornbeck has lived long enough in China to interpret her views to the West; he has not become so immersed in the current of politics as to forget his academic training or miss the sources of this current in the past." F. W. Williams

+ Yale R n s 6:661 Ap '17 870w

HORNE, HERMAN HARRELL. Teacher as artist; an essay in education as an æsthetic process. (Riverside educational monographs) *70c (7c) Houghton 371.1 17-6150

"In the following pages the first essay raises the question whether the art of teaching may in a measure become one of the fine arts, and answers in the affirmative, under certain conditions. What these conditions are the second essay attempts to set forth." (Preface) Teaching is first tested by Professor Tufts' definition of art: "Any activity or production involving intelligence and skill." Next it is subjected to the test of fine art: "An activity or product of activity which has æsthetic value or (in the broadest sense of the term) is beautiful."

A L A Bkl 14:42 N '17

"Two thoughtful, thought stimulating essays."

+ El School J 17:533 Mr '17 20w

Ind 91:295 Ag 25 '17 60w

"The teacher can find in this book some fine inspiration, and the lay-reader can learn how much and how little, in his private moods, the teacher can think of himself and why."

+ Nation 104:544 My 3 '17 330w

Pratt p11 '17 30w

"The chapter entitled 'Shriving the inartistic teacher' offers considerable food for thought."

School R 25:302 Ap '17 12w

HORNER, WARREN MURDOCK. Training for a life insurance agent. (Lippincott's training ser.) il *$1.25 (7c) Lippincott 368

17-13557

"This book is written, primarily, for those directly interested in the life insurance business, but in a non-technical manner so that it may be of value to laymen, especially those interested in salesmanship." (Intro.) The book is published in a series the aim of which is to help those "who want to find themselves," and it sets forth the necessary qualifications and training for life insurance as a business, with a special chapter on The woman in life insurance. The author is general agent for the Provident life and trust company of Philadelphia in Minnesota, Iowa and the Dakotas.

"Brief and vigorous suggestions for making a success of life insurance."

+ A L A Bkl 14:6 O '17

+ Cath World 105:408 Je '17 100w

+ Cleveland p112 S '17 10w

Ind 90:352 My 19 '17 40w

"The training of a life insurance agent is not the principal topic of the book in spite of its title. The early chapters explain the qualifications and personal characteristics necessary to success as an agent, but the remainder discuss methods of selling insurance and agency organization."

N Y Br Lib News 4:105 Jl '17 50w

HORSCH, JOHN. Menno Simons; his life, labors, and teachings. $1.25 John Horsch, Scottsdale, Pa. 16-6143

A biography of Menno Simons, the 16th century religious leader from whom the Mennonite movement took its name. "That Mr Horsch had almost virgin soil to break is probably due to the fact that the material for a real biography of Menno is so slight. . . . He has been compelled to devote most of his space to an account of Menno's opinions and extracts from his writings. To this he has added refutations of many things falsely charged against Menno, most of them quite convincing; and dis-

HORSCH, JOHN—Continued

discussions of the relation of Menno to other radical leaders of the time, like Melchior Hofmann and John of Leyden."—Am Hist R

"This is a welcome addition to religious literature, since there is no other life of Menno available in any language. . . . The historical value of the book is very considerable, the author's diligence is exemplary, and a quantity of material has been brought together from various sources that has never before been printed in English. . . . The author's diligence and good sense are more in evidence than his literary skill. The book is unnecessarily jejune and dry, because of the great preponderance, in parts, of quotations from documents, the interest of which to a reader is in inverse ratio to their value to a student of history. It is to be feared that this quality will limit the numbers of readers unduly." H: C. Vedder

+ — Am Hist R 22:699 Ap '17 400w

"The author is to be commended for the dispassion with which he sets forth events and issues which have been storm centers of controversy. As much may be said for the dignified manner in which he represses all hero-worship. One could wish that such a fine-spirited, well-balanced, and informing biography had found expression in style a little more polished and animated." P. G. M.

+ — Am J Theol 22:150 Ja '18 460w

HOTBLACK, KATE. Chatham's colonial policy. *$2.50 Dutton 616 17-3073

"Miss Hotblack's thesis is a study of how Pitt attempted to make commerce flourish by war. . . . The plan of the book has enabled her to give a very clear outline of Pitt's policy. He is followed successively through the affairs of the African colonies, Canada, the West Indies, and so on, and the commercial side of his work as secretary for the Southern department is well brought out in four very interesting chapters. Similar treatment of the Northern department, over which Pitt's control seems to have been as complete as over the Southern, and an important chapter on the Stamp act, complete a valuable piece of research. An appendix contains some hitherto unpublished letters."—Ath

Reviewed by C. E. Fryer

Am Pol Sci R 12:133 F '18 400w

"Miss Hotblack has enabled the reader to form a much better judgment on the value of Pitt's work than was possible before."

* + — Ath p234 My '17 2000w

Boston Transcript p9 O 17 '17 600w

"Her book will be useful to all who want to know more of the motives and principles of the creator of British imperialism."

+ Spec 118:729 Je 30 '17 1450w

HOUGH, EMERSON. Broken gate. il *$1.50 (2c) Appleton 17-21973

"Aurora Lane has been for twenty years the milliner and dressmaker of the village. . . . Years before, unwed, she had borne a child; she had sent it away and had said that the infant had died. Pursuing her way quietly and modestly, and earning her scanty living by hard work, she had ever since lived in the village, generally ignored, but secretly respected and outwardly scorned by most of its people. But the child had not died, and when the story opens he has grown to a fine, vigorous young manhood and comes to the village to see his mother. She and her one friend, a crippled woman, have together saved and scrimped and educated the boy, while he has believed himself to be an orphan. He strikes a man on the street who insults his mother, soon after learns from her all the bitter truth, is arrested for assault, and for the next three days the town is in a ferment of excitement and unprecedented happenings. They reach their climax when a man is mysteriously killed, the boy is arrested for the murder, and a mob, seeking to lynch him, is foiled of its purpose and rushes to ravage his mother's home."—N Y Times

"It is modern and American enough in scene and detail, but begins with a fantastically improbable situation, and carries the reader's credulity and sensibility from strain to strain."

H. W. Boynton

+ — Bookm 46:341 N '17 70w

"It is a fine opportunity for pathos, and the author may be counted on to make the most of it."

— Dial 63:647 D 20 '17 90w

"It is realistic, small-town melodrama, swift and sharp in its movement, but, notwithstanding its many events crowding close upon one another's heels, its interest is chiefly emotional. . . . Although there is much in the story that the author has failed to make convincing, it has qualities of invention and construction that hold the interest."

+ — N Y Times 22:302 Ag 19 '17 670w

"In 'The broken gate' Emerson Hough is no longer on the solid ground of historical fact. Consequently he flounders between melodrama and tragedy. . . . The story hardly attains the standard set in Mr Hough's preceding romances."

— Springf'd Republican p15 S 16 '17 320w

HOUGH, EMERSON. Man next door. il *$1.50 Appleton 17-4711

"Pyramus and Thisbe in the terms of Chicago's North Side and the twentieth century, with the regrettable omission of the lion, is the theme of Mr Emerson Hough's new novel. . . . Curly, the ex-foreman of the Circle Arrow ranch, tells the story of Old Man Wright's removal to Chicago, of the breaking-in of the fair Bonnie Bell Wright to millionaire row, of the building of the wall, and of the man on the other side thereof."—Dial

"Told in cowboy dialect."

A L A Bkl 13:354 My '17

"Except for the fact that the story is told in an entertaining way, there is very little in the plot of Bonnie Bell's attempt to make a place for herself in the best circles of Chicago which would attract the attention. . . . The excitement lies really in the almost fatal attempts at diplomacy which Curly makes and the calamity which is barely averted."

Boston Transcript p8 My 19 '17 400w

"Untrue, insignificant, and generally uninteresting are the terms we must reluctantly attach to Mr Hough's latest excursion in the realms of fiction."

— Dial 62:247 Mr 22 '17 140w

N Y Times 22:63 F 25 '17 430w

Reviewed by F. M. Holly

Pub W 91:206 Ja 20 '17 320w

HOUGHTON, BEATRICE YORK. Shelleys of Georgia. il *$1.35 (1½c) Lothrop 17-23649

"Captain Gabriel Shelley, his lovely young second wife Madge, and his beautiful daughter and only child Rose are 'The Shelleys of Georgia' of the title. The story is principally concerned with the love affairs of Rose, and with the innocent and successful plot by means of which she redeemed the man she had once loved, brought happiness to a much injured woman, and secured the future of a baby which but for her might have been a very unfortunate child indeed. The date of the tale is the time of the Spanish-American war."—N Y Times

"The novel is entertaining if not very plausible, and presents a rather interesting scheme for the care of those children who for one reason or another become the especial wards of the state."

— — N Y Times 22:336 S 9 '17 220w

HOWARD, KATHARINE. Two plays, and a rhapsody. pa 60c Katharine Howard, Lee apartments, B and 9th st., San Diego, Cal. 812 17-65

The two plays are allegorical. In the first, The house of future, a series of thirteen brief scenes, the life of a woman who lives on in the lives of her children is pictured. In the house of life, two persons, a man and a woman, move thru the rooms of the house, tasting the experiences it offers and in the end coming out on the roof to find peace and quiet under the stars. The rhapsody describes the vision of a poet who has sought eternal youth.

"Mrs Howard's inspirational works, 'Eve' and 'The book of the serpent,' are well known both in this country and in England, and a collection of poems of childhood, 'The little god,' has had generous appreciation. The two little of her last volume in literary style are similar to her moyen-age play, 'Candle flame.' Over all of them there is a glamor, a rhythmic beauty peculiar to her poetic prose."
+ R of Rs 55:441 Ap '17 150w

HOWARD, MARGARET WILLET. Practical cookbook. 72c (2c) Ginn 641.5 17-11592

"This book presents a rather large collection of tested and economical recipes, in such a manner as to show their relation to one another and to the whole question of balanced meals. . . . The book has grown out of many years of classroom work, and the arrangement is designed, by omitting all unnecessary directions, to force the student to reason out the recipes for herself. But it is a cookbook, not a text-book, and laboratory directions and explanatory text are purposely omitted." (Preface) The chapter headings will show the general arrangement: Water; Mineral salts; Starch; Sugar; Proteids; Fats and oils; Frozen desserts; Canning and preserving; Food for invalids; Unclassified recipes; Selection of food.

HOWARD, WILLIAM LEE. How to rest. *$1 (3c) Clode, E: J. 613.7 17-11348

This little book on "food for tired nerves and weary bodies" aims "to aid in the prevention of brain fatigue, body weariness and nervous exhaustion." (Foreword) Dr Howard does not "deal with or refer to real diseases of the brain and nerves—organic troubles, [but tries] to point out the many little symptoms showing the necessity of brain rest and nerve nourishment." (Foreword) There is a chapter on "How to prevent nervousness in children."

HOWE, FREDERIC CLEMSON. High cost of living. *$1.50 Scribner 338.5 17-29210

"Early in the book, the reader is introduced to the outstanding facts bearing on the present problem—the rapid increase in the price of food, its stationary or decreasing gross production, the discouragement of farmers, the rural exodus, and the alarming relative increase in tenant-farming under conditions making for exhaustion of the soil, under-production and class division of society. . . . The present emergency turns out to be no more than an accentuation under the stress of war of conditions brought about by causes which have long been operative in peace times. . . . Some of Mr Howe's recommendations are for organized collection and storage of farm produce under the control of state departments of markets and collective marketing; terminal markets owned by state or city, with adequate cold storage and refrigerator provision and public auctioneering under state control; local public abattoirs, municipalization of milk distribution or public milk-receiving stations delivering to local depots for retail sale over the counter, etc. . . . All this is in addition to more fundamental changes which he advocates to free the access to land, such as land taxation, direction of immigrants, opening up of new farming areas, suppression of trading in futures and extension of rural credits."—Survey

"Most valuable and timely work." Archibald Henderson

* + Bookm 46:468 D '17 2800w

"Mr Howe has made one of the most important contributions to the subject ever offered. With his usual comprehensiveness he discusses with clearness and force every important phase of the situation."

+ Boston Transcript p10 D 8 '17 210w

"The student and serious reader will find this book a mine of valuable information representing progressive legislation."

+ Ind 92:344 N 17 '17 300w

+ Outlook 117:433 N 14 '17 50w

"Goes to the very root causes of the food crises. One does not need to be a student of economics to understand Mr Howe's book."

+ Pittsburgh 22:832 D '17 50w

+ — Survey 39:297 D 8 '17 580w

HOWE, LUCIEN. Universal military education and service; the Swiss system for the United States. 2d ed il *$1.25 (5c) Putnam 355.07

The first edition, issued in 1916, had chapters on: Why any preparation? What preparation is adequate? How shall we prepare? The Swiss and Australian systems; Military education already begun; Supposed disadvantages of universal military education; Advantages of universal military education to the nation; Advantages of universal military education to the individual; Military education—not training—of advantage to girls; But what if—? Conclusion. In the second edition brought out in 1917, there are no changes in the text. An appendix is added, bringing the book up to date.

A L A Bkl 13:244 Mr '17

"Whether one agrees with his opinions or not there is no gainsaying the fact that Mr Howe has expressed them with brevity, clearness and vigor."

+ Am Pol Sci R 11:594 Ag '17 100w

Cleveland p148 D '16 30w

"Dr Lucien Howe has some definite notions on preparedness and expresses them with emphasis and directness."

Educ R 52:530 D '16 20w

N Y Br Lib News 3:168 N '16

Pittsburgh 22:219 Mr '17 20w

St Louis 15:139 My '17 10w

HOWE, MRS SONIA ELIZABETH, ed. False Dmitri; a Russian romance and tragedy, described by British eyewitnesses, 1604-1612. il *$2.25 947 A17-978

"An extremely interesting collection of reprints from contemporary reports bearing on the social and political revolution which convulsed Russia from 1598 to 1613, i.e. from the extinction of the old dynasty founded by Ivan Kalita (1328-1341) till the election of that of the Romanovs. In this period Dmitri or Demetrius, who claimed to be the son of Ivan the Terrible by his fifth wife, and actually reigned as tsar from 1605 to 1606 and was a most enlightened ruler, played a principal part. The book really forms a sort of appendix to the authoress's 'A thousand years of Russian history.'"—Eng Hist R

"It is largely from narratives written by British residents in Moscow in the early years of the seventeenth century that her material is derived. These narratives are reproduced. While their archaic forms and methods of literary construction are somewhat taxing upon the patience of the modern reader, they do not fail to hold attention or to stir the reader's emotions." H. S. K.

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 18 '16 200w

"The collection has been ably arranged and edited, and contains some interesting contemporary portraits (incidentally, those of Boris Godunov and Vasilii Shuiski are known to be purely fictitious) and illustrations, and forms a valuable addition to the growing number of books on Russian history." N. F.

+ Eng Hist R 32:152 Ja '17 200w

N Y Br Lib News 4:15 Ja '17

"Absorbingly interesting, a valuable book for the student."

+ N Y Times 22:67 F 25 '17 600w

Spec 117:242 Ag 26 '16 170w

The Times [London] Lt Sup p340 J1 20 '16 1550w

<sup>2</sup> This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

HOWE, MRS SONIA ELIZABETH. Some Russian heroes, saints and sinners; legendary and historical. il *$2.50 Lippincott 947 17-15658

"Some Russian heroes, saints, and sinners" supplies an interim study between legend and history. It would find its place between Mr Wilson's song cycles and Mrs Howe's earlier and more prosaic volume "A thousand years of Russian history." In our own life and literature the stories of Arthur and the Graal and Lancelot and Merlin, so little known to Russian readers, are of a legendary kind similar to the stories of Ilya Muromets and Sviatogor, which we are now beginning to know. Thus Mrs Howe gives Dmitri Donskoi, Alexander Nevski, Oleg the Wise, and other famous Russian characters and stories.—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Bibliography (6p.)."
A L A Bkl 13:443 J1 '17

"The illustrations are rarely interesting. The quaint initial and tail pieces are from ancient Russian MSS. The plates are copies of famous historical paintings."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 6 '17 300w

"Mrs Howe's easy style makes her history eminently readable, while detracting naught from the scholarship evident in every sketch. A lover of Russia's past, she makes no attempt to condone the evils and excesses of Russia's sinners, nor to exaggerate the saintliness of her spiritual leaders. This balance of scholarship and restraint makes the book a genuine contribution to the growing mass of books on Russia. She is especially happy in her studies of Ivan the Terrible, the Boyarynia Morozov and the False Dimitri."

+ Cath World 105:334 S '17 460w

"She has the gift of painting her characters with vividness, almost as if she had known them face to face."

+ Dial 62:529 Je 14 '17 280w

"Mrs Howe, a Russian woman married to an Englishman and resident now in England, has already given us two valuable books about her native land. 'Some Russian heroes, saints and sinners' is a study of permanent types in Russian character. The pictures of heroes, sinners, and saints are chronologically arranged."

+ N Y Times 22:337 S 9 '17 650w

"Very readable book."

+ Spec 118:276 Mr 3 '17 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p562 N 23 '16 60w

"The illustrative work being Russian is full of the Russian spirit, and helps immensely."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p607 D 14 '16 400w

HOXIE, ROBERT FRANKLIN. Trade unionism in the United States; with an introd. by E. H. Downey. *$2.50 (3½c) Appleton 331.87 17-29740

A book on trade unions that "fills a gap long since recognized in the treatment of labor problems. It does for America what Webb's 'Industrial democracy' does for England, and more, for it excels all treatises in its masterly analysis of the psychology of wage-earners, as seen in the policies and methods of unions. Furthermore, Hoxie's classification of unions for the first time brings out scientifically the great difference in unions, permits one to see the very complex character of the labor problems and warns against those sweeping generalizations that pretend to offer simple solutions. This leads the author to build up a truly constructive method of dealing with all labor problems according to the actual conditions." (J. R. Commons)

"As the first student of trade unionism who perceived that, besides varying in type as to organization or structure, labor groups have functional differences through which a clearer understanding of the phenomenon might be secured, the late Prof. Hoxie occupies a unique position in his particular 'guild.' A close study of the application of the theory inevitably clears thinking and results in a saner attitude toward the problem."

+ Engin News-Rec 80:132 Ja 17 '18 330w

"It seems clear that Professor Hoxie had not yet found time to think out trade-union method in terms of his leading principle. It remains to be seen whether the conception will bear fruit in other hands. Apart from this novel fundamental idea, the book is interesting and suggestive. The glimpses of Professor Hoxie's method as a teacher are peculiarly attractive and will deepen the sense of loss suffered through his early death."

+ Nation 105:696 D 20 '17 340w

"It will be long before we have a better book to supersede it. For the qualities that distinguish Hoxie's work are exceedingly rare in scholarship. Where other scholars strive earnestly to deal in certitudes, it was Hoxie's zeal to preserve an open mind. His devotion to openmindedness is infectious." Alvin Johnson

+ New Repub 13:319 Ja 12 '18 1650w

"The value of a sympathetic attitude on the part of the investigator of an institution is seldom seen to greater advantage than in this important work, which will be indispensable to the student of labor conditions in America."

+ Outlook 117:516 N 28 '17 80w

"Even though he did not live to see his studies brought out in book form, the work unquestionably stands out as one of the most complete treatises on trade unionism in this country."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Ja 18 '18 470w

HUARD, FRANCES (WILSON) (MME CHARLES HUARD). My home in the field of mercy. il *$1.35 (2½c) Doran 940.91 17-29627

Mme Huard here continues the story told in "My home on the field of honour" by describing the transformation of the Château de Villiers into "Annex No. 7," a hospital for French wounded. After "ten days of shoveling out and burying the filth" that had been her "most cherished possessions," she was cheered by the arrival of Mme Guix, the nurse, the sergeant-in-firmer and his four assistants. Then the sick and wounded began to come in. We are told "how they were taken care of, healed, amused, humored, and set to work according to their capacity"; (N Y Times) how the number of beds was increased from 45 to 120, and typhoid patients, some in the worst stages of the disease, were taken in, and how Mme Huard made the trip to Soissons, then under fire, to get tobacco for her patients from Mme Macherez, who risked her life for Soissons when the Germans entered it. The episode of ten-year-old Elvire, "mad with a terrible remembered experience and shrieking at the sight of a man in uniform," stands out unforgettably, as does also the picture of Mme Huard, driving off to Paris to have her appendix removed, cheered on by her helpers "all standing on the steps waving a fond adieu, and for want of something more appropriate shrieking 'Vive la France!'"

+ A L A Bkl 14:123 Ja '18

"The book is rather carelessly written but interesting and dramatic."

+ Cleveland p130 D '17 60w

"Her book is a wonderful record."

+ Lit D 55:44 D 8 '17 130w

"A book that is breathlessly interesting, full of fun in spite of all the danger and the tragedy, lightened with the most delicious pen pictures of the French poilu in all sorts of situations. It is a book worth having written and deeply worth the reading. The illustrations by Charles Huard are exquisite drawings, vignettes of battle scenes, characters in the story, visions of France as she looks today."

+ N Y Times 22:492 N 25 '17 1100w

Outlook 117:521 N 28 '17 40w

Pittsburgh 22:826 D '17 50w

R of Rs 57:101 Ja '18 90w

"Mme Huard does not dwell on unpleasant details. With an American sense of humor— for she is the daughter of Francis Wilson, the comedian—and with also a touch of dramatic sense, she lightens her book with the quaint sayings and doings of the people around her."

+ Springf'd Republican p17 D 9 '17 850w

HUBBARD, GILBERT ERNEST. From the gulf to Ararat; an expedition through Mesopotamia and Kurdistan. il *$3.50 Dutton 915 (Eng ed 17-9114)
For descriptive note see Annual for 1916.

"The author has incidentally furnished us with a careful description of those regions in Mesopotamia and Persia that have been fought over by the British, Russian, Turkish, and German armies." W. G. Tinckom-Fernandez
+ Dial 63:394 Oct 25 '17 1150w
+ N Y Times 22:539 D 9 '17 80w

HUDSON, CHARLES BENJAMIN. Royal outlaw. *$1.50 (1½c) Dutton 17-17619
This is the story of the early life of David, beginning with his flight from Saul, who tries to take David's life, picturing his career as an outlaw, and ending with his coronation as king of Israel. The author has filled out the biblical outlines with incidents of his own imagination. "David is portrayed as a young man of quick temper and lightning decision, and as an extremely resourceful military commander." (Springf'd Republican)

"Delightfully human book . . . portrays an interesting period in Hebrew history with accuracy and sympathy. It is a nice combination of Bible facts and the author's fancy, a spirited tale of adventure and romance charmingly written."
+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 15 '17 200w

"Unfortunately, the author appears to have felt that to accomplish his purpose he must eliminate from the incomparable romance its inner significance. The hand with which he has removed the veil of symbolism was curiously maladroit and lacking in ordinary veneration for a literary masterpiece."
— Cath World 106:693 F '18 220w

+ Ind 91:189 Ag 4 '17 50w
"A perfectly corking story, without a single moral or sign of a moral about it. It is human, and not only credible, but almost convincing. David is a hero after the heart of men and women. . . . It will make a thrilling film." L. A. Walker
+ N Y Call p15 J1 8 '17 340w

"As for adventures and perils and hair-breadth escapes and all manner of fighting, it would be hard to find more of them in any single novel that has been written in many a day. . . . Humor enlivens the pages."
+ N Y Times 22:265 J1 15 '17 620w

"A very interesting tale told with spirit and in close adherence to biblical facts. But the principal service it performs is to present David as a man with human passions as well as a writer of poetry."
+ Springf'd Republican p15 Ag 19 '17 350w

HUDSON, WILLIAM HENRY. Crystal age; with an introd. by Clifford Smyth. *$1.50 Dutton A17-174

"The crystal age" was published in the eighties. An edition was brought out in America in 1907 and was reviewed in the Digest at that time. The present revival of interest in W. H. Hudson has called for a reprint. "In 'A crystal age,' the author visits and describes for us a no man's land. It may be England, it may be South America, it may be any other country on the face of the globe. Its people and incidents may be of the past, the present or the future. As he himself describes his story, he has written in it 'a dream and picture of the human race in its forest period.' . . . Although the country and the people of 'A crystal age' are obviously of mythical origin, they are visualized none the less vividly by Mr Hudson. We see them as they are, and their manners and customs are explicitly described. Over and around them all, however, is thrown a romantic glamour that is wholly Mr Hudson's own." (Boston Transcript)

A L A Bkl 13:274 Mr '17

"After reading one of Hudson's books one feels toward him a personal debt so great that one can discharge some small part of it only by handing on to others the news of what he is and does." F. F. Kelly
+ Bookm 45:84 Mr '17 850w

"It is of course easily discernible whence Mr Hudson drew his scheme for the social order of this strange gathering of men and women. A student of nature, he saw in the life of the bee a theme for the creation of a human community after their fashion, and he has therefore made 'A crystal age' a perfect analogy between the two. If we read it with that knowledge in view, we have a perfect scientific study; if we read it simply as a story, we have a narrative complete in substance and beautiful in form." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 3 '17 1400w

"Hudson gives us 'literary opium' in its most delightful form, in words so musical that at times one almost forgets the sense."
+ Ind 89:506 Mr 19 '17 150w

"In the majority of Mr Hudson's books—always excepting 'Green mansions'—the naturalist seems more to the fore than the artist. Here the latter controls the former's abundant wealth. Nature certainly serves as a well-known and well-loved background. . . . Yet the striking thing is rather the artistic and dramatic unity of the volume: the unity of the story, which moves on, picking up anticipations, opening new vistas, down to its poignant close; and the consistency of the character development as seen in the invading Englishman, who quietly acquires a soul as the action progresses."
+ Nation 104:340 Mr 22 '17 600w

"W. H. Hudson is one of the very great writers of English."

+ N Y Times 21:575 D 31 '16 800w

Pittsburgh 22:649 O '17 90w

+ R of Rs 55:554 My '17 140w

"Has too little story, and is too leisurely and too visionary for most novel readers, but both the subject and the fine style of its writing will endear it to some, especially those who liked 'Green mansions.'"
+ Wis Lib Bul 13:158 My '17 80w

HUDSON, WILLIAM HENRY. Idle days in Patagonia. il *$1.50 (2½c) Dutton 918.2 A17-394

The author went out to Patagonia to make a study of its bird life. An accident shortly after his arrival rendered him quite helpless for a time and limited the field of his researches. But out of the idle days which resulted from his change of plans grew these sketches, perhaps more intimate because of their narrower range. He writes of Life in Patagonia; Snow, and the quality of whiteness; Bird music in South America; Sight in savages, etc. The book was published some years ago by D. Appleton and company, but has been out of print.

+ A L A Bkl 13:364 My '17

"Its charm, as in everything Mr Hudson writes, is varied, and it appeals to the reader through his understanding of nature, through his reflections upon the lives of men and beasts as he encounters them, through his many interpolated anecdotes, through his visualization of everything he sees, and through the grace of a remarkable and unpretentious English style. Its manner is no less attractive than its substance." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 14 '17 1000w

+ Cath World 105:404 Je '17 140w

+ Ind 91:33 J1 7 '17 140w

+ Nation 104:526 My 3 '17 1000w

Reviewed by Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p15 My 20 '17 220w

HUDSON, WILLIAM HENRY—Continued

"Full of exquisite prose-poetry, of careful observation, of keen, live interest in all the life of those 'idle' days."

+ N Y Times 22:95 Mr 18 '17 770w

+ R of Rs 55:555 My '17 80w

"The total effect of the book is something the same as if John Burroughs and Joseph Conrad had collaborated—and in a field almost of Conrad's choice."

+ Spring'fd Republican p6 My 14 '17 900w

"The chapter which especially caught my attention in the 'Idle days in Patagonia,' as it probably has that of most readers of the book, was the thirteenth." Arthur Colton

+ Yale R n s 6:856 JI '17 1350w

HUESTON, ETHEL. Sunny slopes. il *$1.40 (2½c) Bobbs 17-22006

Excepting Connie, the daughters of the parsonage are now all married, and in this volume Connie finds her way through her literary ventures to a cowboy husband. Connie was always the "different" one of the family. But Connie's affairs are only incidental to the main thread of the story which is concerned with gay little Carol, now the wife of a Presbyterian minister and his mainstay while he fights tuberculosis in New Mexico and Colorado. "It is in New Mexico that they see the 'sunny slopes' of the mesas and learn to fight the battle for cheerfulness, to keep in the sunshine and avoid the shadows." (N Y Times)

"Simple, a trifle sentimental and will be popular."

+ A L A Bkl 14:26 O '17

+ N Y Times 22:326 S 2 '17 280w

"In spite of the story's sad trend, it is the reverse of gloomy."

+ Spring'fd Republican p19 D 2 '17 290w

HUGHES, JAMES LAUGHLIN. Training the children. *60c Barnes 173 17-10692

Seven brief chapters on the training of children thru self activity. Thruout, the author contrasts this new idea of training with the old idea of coercion and repression. He writes of: The child's achieving tendencies; Training through doing; Negative and positive training; Coercion; The child's need of freedom; The "bad" boy; Some common mistakes of the old training. The author was for many years chief inspector of schools in Toronto. He is author also of "Mistakes in teaching." "Teaching to read," etc.

"Here in a tiny volume, entirely within the means of any one, so far as cash or time value to be expended is concerned, we find just such a clear exposition of the eternal principles of education and the relative values of free activity and development contrasted with the negative and coercive ideal' of old times, as we long to inject into the consciousness of that great majority of adults who, as Dr Hughes aptly says, no longer defend harsh methods of disciplining children, but still retain their faith in the old ideal." J. L. Hunt

+ Survey 38:575 S 29 '17 480w

HUGHES, RUPERT. In a little town. il *$1.35 (1c) Harper 17-8348

The author's earlier books have been novels of city life. This is a book of small town stories. The author, however, staunchly protests against the idea that there is any essential difference between a big town and a small one. "A village is simply a quiet street in the big city of the world. Quaint, sweet happenings take place in the avenues most thronged, and desperate events come about in sleepy lanes. People are people, chance is chance." The scene of the stories is close to the Mississippi. The titles are: Don't you care! Pop; Baby talk; The mouth of the gift horse; The old folks at home; And this is marriage; The man that might have been; The happiest man in Ioway; Prayers; Pain; The beauty and the fool; The ghostly counselors; Daughters of Shiloh; "A" as in "father."

"Clever, often amusing, and often keen."

+ A L A Bkl 13:403 Je '17

"It is only that Mr Hughes is at times banal and even cheap in his style, and he is surely inexcusably flippant; it is that we must resent the lack of distinction in writing where the matter cries aloud for sincerity and dignity. The collection is much too good not to be very much better. As it stands, it is always thoroughly readable, and often extremely diverting."

— + Boston Transcript p6 My 2 '17 370w

"The promise is not fulfilled. The stories contain excellent material, hastily handled. These cheerful, ordinary, humanly vulgar folk fail to arouse interest because their creator writes of them but not for them. They are crude snapshots rather than artistic photographs. 'And this is marriage' strikes the highest note."

— + Dial 62:402 My 3 '17 120w

+ Ind 90:471 Je 9 '17 120w

